On the cause coming on for further directions, the Master of the Rolls (in his judgment, which is not reported) said:—"I should have been very glad if I could have come to an opposite conclusion from that which appears to me to be the plain and manifest meaning of the will, but I am of opinion that the words of this will admit of no doubt or ambiguity; and that this is a clear instance of an annuity being given for life only. Now the distinction I apprehend is quite clear, which is this: where there is a fund producing a permanent income, and the produce of that fund is given, then that is a permanent annuity; but where an annuity is given to be secured upon a permanent fund, then it is only an annuity for a person's life. Now the question in this case is, what is given? The testator gives in the first place all his property to his executors, which does not in my opinion affect the question at all until you come to the words 'I desire.' He says, 'I desire that my executors shall purchase annuities for each of my two sisters of 100*l.* a year each.' Now, if it had stopped there, no question whatever could have arisen if what was given to them was an annuity; and it appears to me the more important to stop there because you must look to what the gift is. In all the cases which have been cited, there was a gift of the fund itself which was producing a perpetual sum; and therefore the important distinction between the two, if you stop at this place, is, that in the one place you are giving the produce of a fund which is a permanent and existing fund, and in the other you are giving an annuity; and the only words upon which this can be supported, if at all, are these: 'the said annuities to be purchased in the British Funds.' Well, the fund, if I have come to a right conclusion, is a sum for life; how is that then to be secured? It is to be secured by purchase 'in the British Funds;' but that is not giving the produce of a sum of money in the British Funds belonging to the testator to these persons for an indefinite period, which is a different thing; but it merely describes in what manner this annuity is to be turned into the produce of a fund which does not exist. If he had intended to have given them so much stock as would produce 100*l.* a-year, a very different set of words would have been employed, according to the ordinary acceptation of the words used by persons in ordinary parlance. If he had stated that he had certain money in the Funds, and that he had given that to his executors, to be divided into certain proportions, and to pay 100*l.* a-year to Mrs. Burns and Mrs. Fitzpatrick, another question might arise. But the question here is, whether it being in the first instance, upon the earlier authorities and upon the ordinary meaning of the words, a clear annuity for life, the fact that that annuity is to be purchased out of a permanent income enlarges that into a permanent annuity. Now, I am of opinion that it does not; and that the case of Heron v. Stokes, and no other case that I am acquainted with, or that has been cited, amounts to a decision to that effect; the will merely states how that annuity is to be secured. The fund might become permanent without the annuity itself becoming permanent. The words of the residuary gift do not affect in my opinion that conclusion. He has directed that all the residue of his property shall be turned into an annual income for a permanent corporation. No doubt that is a perpetual gift; it is an annual income to go on as long as that corporation exists, it is a gift of it entirely to that corporation. There may be a question upon that, whether he thought that the corporation would have the power of disposing of the corpus of the fund; that may have been the intention of the testator, and he only intended that they should have the disposal of the fund as long as the corporation lasted; and in that view the words used by the testator have a plain and intelligible meaning. I should have been very glad to have come to a different conclusion; but I entertain no doubt that this is an annuity for life, and not a permanent annuity to these ladies; and, of course, if it is so to them, it is so as to all the others." From that decision Mrs. Byrne alone appealed.

Elmsley and Riddell appeared for the appellant, and relied on the authority of Heron v. Stokes, 2 D. & W. 89, since confirmed by the House of Lords.

Rompell and Cairns, in support of the decree, contended that the words of the will only gave an annuity simpliciter, which by law was only for life, and that the direction to purchase it "in the British Funds" was only an indication of the mode in which it was to be secured. Every annuity must have a fund out of which it was to be paid. The only case in which the court had held that an annuity was perpetual was where the annual produce of a portion of a fund was given, and which in effect carried with it that particular part of the fund itself: (Wilson v. Maddison, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 372; Rawlings v. Jennings, 13 Ves. 19; Innes v. Mitchell, 6 Ves. 464; Clough v. Wynne, 2 Mad. 188.) All that the testator meant by the direction to invest in the British Funds was to place the annuities on a safe footing; he could not intend to give sums in gross capable of producing such annuities. The bequests of legacies in other parts of his will proved that he very well knew how to give sums in gross when he so desired. The residue of the testator's property, subject to the payment of the legacies and annuities, was by his will directed to be laid out in the purchase of an annual income for the benefit of the cancer ward in the Middlesex Hospital. Elmsley replied.

The Lord Chancellor and the Lords Justices took time to consider their judgments, which they delivered later in the day.

Lord Justice Lord Cranworth.—In this case I do not concur with the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Justice Knight Bruce; and it has been arranged between us that I, as the junior judge, should state my reasons first. The question is, whether or not a certain annuity given by the will of this testator is for life, or whether the annuitant is entitled absolutely to the fund which produces it. The Master of the Rolls has decided that she is entitled to a life annuity only. The appellant contends that it is a gift of the corpus of the fund in perpetuity; but is the annuity given merely for life or in perpetuity? Suppose there had been no direction to purchase in the British Funds,—how would the case have stood if the testator had said, "I desire that an annuity shall be purchased of 100*l.*"? I should have thought that in such a case the annuity would be for the life of the annuitant only. This I thought was settled by Lord Cottenham in the case of Blewitt v. Roberts. The general rule is there laid down—it is one universally received—that the gift of an annuity simpliciter is for life only. That being so, is the case altered by what follows—"the said annuity to be purchased in the British Funds"? That direction does not appear to me to alter the case. It appears to me that the direction might be satisfied by the purchase of a Government annuity, which is authorised by the Act of Parliament. The Act regulating the purchase of life annuities does not charge them upon any of the Funds ordinarily so called, but charges them upon the Consolidated Funds of the country. I confess that I think, in construing a will like this, we must understand the party to have used "British Funds" in the very popular sense of "British securities;" that the party was to have her annuity of 100*l.* secured to her by the British Government, as contra-distinguished from any of the other funds in which it seems he had property—in Dutch Funds, Neapolitan Funds, and so on. Although that is the interpretation which I should have put upon this will, independent of authority, I should at once have yielded that opinion, if I had felt that it was adverse to decided cases, and more particularly if it was adverse to the case which has been so much commented upon, Heron v. Stokes. I confess I do not think that case governs this. In that case the language appears to me to have been materially different; it is, "My will is, whatever I die possessed of, or in any way entitled to, together with whatever property my wife may be in any way entitled to, shall produce to my wife an annuity of 100*l.* per annum; to each of my daughters 100*l.* per annum, for themselves and their children." Now with reference to the annuity of the wife, what my Lord Chancellor of Ireland decided, and the House of Lords held he rightly decided, was this—that what was given to the wife was such an amount of property as produced 100*l.* a year. But that I conceive depends upon the particular language. Now, what the House of Lords held to be the meaning of that bequest was this, that so much property was given to the wife—so much corpus of the property as produced 100*l.* a year. I do not say whether that would have been the construction, independent of that which I may now call supreme authority, I should have adopted. I rather believe it is. In this case you are to look to see whether what is given to the party is corpus, producing a particular annuity, or the particular annuity itself. The House of Lords, in the case of Heron v. Stokes, considered that the corpus and not merely the annuity was given. I yield to that construction, even if it is not that which I should have adopted, but I do not think it governs the present case, because the present case is to purchase an annuity, which would be only a gift of an annuity, according to the case of Savory v. Dyer, decided by Lord Hardwicke. I do not think that a direction to purchase in the "British Funds" means more than that it is to be a British security, and nothing less—not any private security, not any security of any foreign state; and that view of the case, which accurately explains my view, is somewhat confirmed to my mind by the residuary gift. The residuary gift is clearly meant not to be a life interest only—it could not be; for it is given to a corporate body, or at least to a body to have a perpetual existence, the Middlesex Hospital: and it is this: "I desire that the residue of my property shall be laid out in the purchase of an annual income in the Three per cent. Consols," not saying there, as was said before, "in the British Funds;" but it is pointing to a perpetual fund. That of itself would have been of very little weight; but it somewhat tends to confirm the view that I have taken of this case. I am of opinion that the decision of the Master of the Rolls is correct. I thought it my duty to state this, in justice to the parties. I will not say that I have no doubt,—if I had no doubt, I ought to have withdrawn my opposition; but it is very probable that my view of the case will turn out to be incorrect.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—I am not sure that I differ from the Master of the Rolls or from my Lord Cranworth in the view which either of those learned judges have taken of this case, excepting in a single point, namely, the applicability to it of the case of Heron v. Stokes as an authority: and I particularly wish to be understood as guarding myself from being understood to intimate how I should have been disposed to deal with the present case, if that of Heron v. Stokes had not existed. The case of Heron v. Stokes as to this point had the concurrence and decision of very high authority—of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland first, and of the House of Lords afterwards—and it was held by both. We must assume it to have been the opinion of the House of Lords, because it seems to have been so expressed by every noble and learned lord who gave an opinion upon the subject, that the wife of the testator, as she was held to take a perpetual annuity under the will and codicil, would have taken a perpetual annuity under the will alone, independent of the codicil. I feel myself unable to say (as that must be taken to have been a right decision, and probably was such) that this lady does not also take an absolutely perpetual annuity, and, therefore, upon the authority of Heron v. Stokes—repeating that I do not mean to intimate what I should have held if that case had not existed—I feel myself bound to say that this lady does take a perpetual annuity.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case turns upon the true construction of this testator's will, and the question upon it is to be governed by the rules of law; I do not apprehend that the general rule of law admits of any doubt. It is perfectly settled and agreed upon that if an annuity be given simpliciter to one generally, a life interest only passes. It is equally, I believe, undisputed that if an annuity be directed to be provided out of the proceeds of property or out of property generally—if an annuity is to be brought into existence by the application of property, and that is given to a party generally, the party would take property appropriated to purchase the annuity, and therefore would take the annuity in perpetuity if it were purchased. In the case of Heron v. Stokes, the gift was much more difficult to manage than the gift here would be, according to the construction which I think it ought to receive. In that case what did the testator, by the gift to his wife and daughters, mean? Might it not mean one of two things—either that they should set apart so much of the property as would produce 100*l.* a year: or that they should provide for it out of the proceeds, which would be the more rational intention or construction—not to set it apart? You cannot set apart any given property just to the amount that would produce 100*l.* a year; but you may raise so much money as will purchase 100*l.*, the exact sum; and therefore the more probable and proper construction of that is, that an annuity was given to her of that amount, to be produced by the application of a portion of the property. It was upon that ground that I thought the words were sufficient to create a perpetual annuity; and I suppose upon the same ground, for no other was mentioned, the law Lords who advised the House when the case went up by way of appeal, decided the case—they all seriatim expressed their opinion in favour of the same construction. Now, if upon this will you could find an intention expressed, not simply to give an annuity to this lady in mere words of donation, but that an annuity should be purchased for her, and that the money with which that purchase is to be made is to come out of the corpus of the property, then I apprehend it is an annuity which is to exist in the way in which it is to be purchased, namely, general and perpetual: that in effect, therefore, it would cost 8,000*l.*,—that sum must be invested to produce the annuity. The party entitled might take the annuity, or he might elect to take the principal sum which would be required to be invested in order to produce it. The simple question upon the construction of this will is, what was this testator's intention? Now I wish to observe that what this Court may decide upon this question has not the slightest bearing, in point of authority, against the general decision of the Master of the Rolls. We are expressing no opinion against the decision of the Master of the Rolls upon the other annuities; our attention is directed, as it ought to be, only to that particular case which has been selected, manifestly from the whole list, as a favourable case to bring by way of appeal to this Court. We give no opinion whatever as to the decision with regard to the other annuities, some of which may very probably be considered to stand upon very different grounds. Now this testator nowhere in the course of his will adds to any of his gifts words of limitation; and it was only with reference to a married woman in the first instance, when he gives her 3,000*l.*, that she is to have it "to hold the same independent of her husband" and to be disposed of by her will properly signed and executed. That is the only instance throughout this will in which he looked to any act of the party; for in every case of landed property to be sold, he uses no words of inheritance. He says that "an annual income shall go to the cancer ward"—no words of perpetuity; in no one instance does he use words of limitation in the gift to the party, or words of perpetuity. But we have this no doubt by the common intention, which has been so often stated. To give a man your house you mean him to take it absolutely for ever, just as if you gave him your horse; and in the case of a disposition of a house, the effect of passing the inheritance, unless the gift is restrained, certainly meets the general impression of the public, and makes now a gift of a house just as operative to pass the inheritance as the gift of a horse in passing the absolute interest in it; and that authority of Parliament, in giving effect to what was the general impression of mankind, ought to have an influence in cases of this kind, where the will is fairly open to the construction that the absolute interest does pass, if (although the words were used generally) you could collect the intention. Now, how was the property disposed of? Having given the legacies in the way I have mentioned, he proceeds: "I leave to my sister Jane Symes, and the Rev. Mr. Lazier, husband of the aforesaid Frances Lazier, the sum of 1,000*l.* each." He gives to them a legacy also, and then he proceeds: "I desire that my executors shall purchase annuities for each of my two sisters, &c. of 100*l.* a year each, the said annuities to be purchased in the British Funds." Now he does not stop there, because, if you look to the subsequent part of the will, after having given other legacies and annuities, he says, "I direct my landed property at Otham to be sold by auction, and the produce thereof to go to the carrying out of the aforesaid annuities and legacies." Now, how is the produce to go to carrying out the aforesaid annuities and legacies? The annual proceeds of the landed property is not dedicated to the payment of the annuities and legacies; but the landed property, without words of inheritance, is to be sold, and the produce is "to go to the carrying out of the aforesaid annuities and legacies." What is meant by "carrying out the aforesaid annuities and legacies"? He did not mean that there was to be a continual payment of the annuities, but he meant that a certain portion of that produce should be applied to the purchase of annuities for these two ladies in the British Funds—that was his intention. He then says, "And should the produce of the same be not found sufficient for that purpose," that is, for the purpose of producing the annuities and the legacies, "I desire that the remainder," that, is the money wanted, "shall be made up from my personal property." He then directs all his personal property, which he mentions that he has abroad, to be sold, actually to be converted into money. "After the above annuities and all legacies have been paid and effected, I desire the remainder of my personal property shall be laid out in the purchase of an annual income in the Three per cent. Consols, for the benefit of a cancer ward in the Middlesex Hospital." Now, observe what the effect of that is, that should the real estate fall short of being sufficient to effect the annuities, that is, to purchase the annuities, and carry out the aforesaid annuities and legacies—carrying out the legacies is to pay them, carrying out the aforesaid annuities is to make a purchase of them—then he resorts to his personal estate, and then so much is to be taken from the personal property as will effect the annuities and pay the legacies. The words are not exactly accurate in that latter sentence; but, of course, that goes for nothing—the sense is manifest, and what words come first and what words come last in such a sentence is utterly unimportant. Then he says, "I desire the rest of my personal property shall be laid out in the purchase of an annual income." Has he not, therefore, whatever be the effect in law of particular annuities falling into the residue, expressed as clearly as a man could express an intention, that these things shall be all separated from the corpus of the property, and what remains after paying the legacies and effecting the annuities shall be money in hand to invest in Consols; and if that be so, then there must have been annuities to be purchased, and purchased with the produce of the estates. Without entering into the consideration of the question as to the purchase in the British Funds, it is a case in which the testator has given an annuity to be purchased out of the produce of his estate, and the rest of his estate is to be applied to another object; therefore the produce of his estate is in this view altogether cut off from the rest of the property and dedicated to this particular purpose; and if an annuity be dedicated to a particular purpose out of a man's estate, I hold it to be clear law that that individual would take the absolute interest, because it is in effect a dedication of a portion of the corpus of the man's property to produce the particular benefit. Then a difficulty arises, or is supposed to arise, upon the direction to purchase "in the British Funds." I do not feel that difficulty, looking at the general import of this will. In Stokes v. Heron there was more difficulty in holding upon the words that there was a general intention which would pass the annuity perpetually than there is upon the words of this will. Now then, as to the particular trust, he says, "I direct that my executor shall purchase annuities for each of my two sisters," naming them, "the annuities to be purchased in the British Funds." You will observe that there is no direct gift to the parties of an annuity; it is not a simple gift of an annuity, but it is a gift by way of direction to purchase the annuity for them,—not a word said about their lives. Now, where is the improbability in a general case, if you direct with the proceeds of your property that an annuity is to be purchased, that that is to be an annuity which the party is to take as perpetual? and it is to be supposed that when a testator "desires his executors to purchase an annuity in the British funds," that it means in the Government Funds, out of which you make a purchaseable annuity. I can see nothing upon the face of this will, and I speak with the most unfeigned respect and deference to the opinion of my Lord Justice Cranworth, to confine it to a life interest, and I have looked at every other part of the will which tends to a contrary construction. I must find something specific to compel the court to say that buying in the British Funds an annuity for these parties means, to buy a Government annuity under particular Acts of Parliament. Those Acts of Parliament are fenced round with all sorts of difficulties, and I cannot think that this testator had any such intention; if he had he would have so expressed it. Nothing would have been more easy than to have said "buy for her life," if he had meant it; then the words would have been "in the Government Funds." Now I must give (as I have always endeavoured to give in other cases) a sound and sensible construction to the words which are here used. What is the meaning of "British Funds"—can it mean that which is contended for? What is the nature of that? The Commissioners for the reduction of the National Debt are authorized to take stock from persons willing to treat with them, or to take money from such parties, which money is to be converted into British stock; and when they have got that British stock, of course it goes in satisfaction of the National Debt, and then the purchaser is to have—what?—an annuity secured upon the Consolidated Fund. You may give British Funds in exchange by the express direction of the Act of Parliament for such an annuity; but no man can predicate that a charitable annuity is payable out of British Funds in the sense that is here used. "British Funds" does not mean British money, because there is no such thing. "British Funds" of course means the public funds. This testator had got funded property in other countries, and therefore he says "British Funds," and not foreign. "The Funds" means in common parlance (I must give to the expression its national import) the Funds of England, "British Funds." Then if a man buys such an annuity of the Government, he has not bought an annuity in the British Funds, but bought an annuity that is payable out of the Consolidated Fund. Now, the Consolidated Fund is money raised by the authority of Parliament to pay the British Funds themselves. The British Funds are nothing but perpetual annuities, redeemable, and the very money out of which these annuities had been purchased would have been payable—not out of British Funds, public property—but out of the very accumulation of the Consolidated Fund, applicable to the payment of the debts; and therefore it is so clearly contradistinguished the one from the other, that I cannot consider this gentleman by any latitude of language as applying "British Funds" to a Government annuity. Then there is this difference between "British Funds" and "Consolidated Three per cents. for the benefit of a cancer ward." He wants to produce for each of these ladies a particular annuity; he therefore says, "Buy that annuity in the British Funds." To him it is indifferent whether it is bought in the Three, Four, or Five per cents.—"buy that annuity." But when he comes to deal with the residue, which is a fund applicable, wholly so, to the particular charity, he designates the fund "the Three per cents." There he is indifferent, because it is to have that income for ever. In the other case, "I desire you will buy an annuity for each of those persons out of the produce of my property before you divide the residue of that property, and buy it in any of the British Funds." "British Funds" is used there in its ordinary and proper sense. You cannot buy a life interest in a property; you must buy the particular amount of stock which would produce, for example, 100*l.* a year; when that is bought, it is a perpetual annuity; when that is bought, that is the subject which is given to these ladies, so that he has directed that to be purchased which will endure perpetually, and he has given the subject so directed to be purchased for this lady without confining her to a life interest. That is my clear opinion—my clear and confident opinion. I cannot restrain the expression of that opinion, because I so strongly entertain it, but I need not again repeat it. I say it with the greatest possible respect and deference to the opinion entertained by my Lord Justice Cranworth, and the doubt expressed by my Lord Justice Knight Bruce. I think it may be accounted for. I should not be at all satisfied that the Master of the Rolls might not himself have agreed with the court in his construction, if this particular case alone had been brought before him. I am not at all satisfied of that.

Elmsley—Each of the cases were argued separately.

The Lord Chancellor—The Master of the Rolls was influenced by the argument on the whole will. I wish it to be distinctly understood that the opinion of the court is expressly confined to the case now before it. Reverse so much of the decree of the Master of the Rolls as regards this particular annuity, and with that declaration remit the cause back to his lordship.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by Owen Davies Tudor, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

(Before the Lords Justices.)

Friday, Nov. 5.

Re Thomas Wylde's Estate, and re The Trustee Relief Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 96).

Will—Construction—Tenancy by entirties—Bequest to husband and wife and a third person.

A bequest of 700l. having been made by a testator to A. and B. his wife, and C. a third party, and a subsequent bequest of 200l. to C. and 200l. to A. and 200l. to B.:

Held, that A. and B. his wife were entitled only to a moiety of the 700l. between them, and that C. was entitled to the other moiety.

In this case, which by their lordships' permission was transferred to them from the paper of one of the Vice-Chancellors, the testator, Thomas Wylde, by his will, dated March 1788, gave and bequeathed unto the trustees therein named, and the survivor of them, and the executors and administrators of such survivor, the sum of 700*l.* upon trust that they the said trustees, or the survivor of them, should lay out and invest the same in their names, or the name of the survivor of them, in Three per cent. Bank Annuities, and from time to time pay the interest, dividends, and produce thereof to, or otherwise permit and suffer his sister, Sally Eaton, the wife of Joseph Eaton, to receive the same for her [illegible] for her separate use, benefit, and disposal, [illegible]ent of her then present or any future husband, and his receipt and receipts alone to be sufficient discharges for the same; and from and after her decease the said testator gave and devised the said 700*l.*, or the stocks or funds in which the same should or might have been laid out and invested, unto and amongst John Collins and Catherine his wife, and William Lea, the cousin of the said testator, in equal shares and proportions; and the said testator gave and bequeathed unto his said cousin, William Lea, the sum of 200*l.* of like lawful money; and he gave and bequeathed unto the said John Collins the sum of 200*l.* of like lawful money: also he gave and bequeathed unto the said Catherine Collins, the wife of the said John Collins, the sum of 200*l.* of like lawful money. And as to all the rest, residue, and remainder of his estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, he gave and bequeathed the same unto the said John Collins and Catherine his wife, their executors, administrators, and assigns for ever.

In 1851 Sally Eaton, the tenant for life, died, and the 700*l.* was then paid into court by the trustees under the provisions of the Trustee Relief Act. The object of this petition was to obtain payment to the parties interested out of court of the 700*l.*; and the question for the decision of the court was, whether John Collins, and Catherine his wife, and William Lea, were each entitled to a third of that sum, or whether the two former were only entitled to one moiety, and William Lea to the other moiety.

W. W. Cooper contended that the 700*l.* ought to be divided into thirds (Warrington v. Warrington, 2 Hare, 51; Paine v. Wagner, 12 Sim. 188), as John Collins and his wife took as tenants in common: (Lewin v. Cox, Serjt. Moore, 558, pl. 759; Attorney-General v. Bucchus, 9 Price, 30; 11 Price, 517.) A different construction might be contended for by the other side upon the authority of Bricker v. Whatley, 1 Vern. 233; 4 Vin. Ab. 154, tit. "Baron and Feme," M. a. 1, pl. 9; Gordon v. Whieldon, 11 Beav. 170; but those cases were clearly distinguishable, and turned upon special circumstances.

G. W. Collins, in the same interest, cited Lewin v. Cox, Cro. Eliz. 695; 1 Vern. 32.

Follett and Kinglake, for William Lea, insisted that the 700*l.* was not to be divided into thirds; that the husband and wife were to be considered as one person only; and that they were therefore only to be held entitled to a moiety. The rule is thus stated by Littleton, lib. 3, c. 3, s. 291, p. 187*a*: "Also, if a joint estate be made of land to a husband, a wife, and to a third person, in this case the husband and wife have in law, in their right, but the moiety, and the third person shall have as much as the husband and wife, viz. the other moiety, &c.; and the cause is, for that the husband and wife are but one person in law, and are in like case as if an estate be made to two joint tenants, where the one hath, by force of the jointure, the one moiety in law, and the other the other moiety, &c. In the same manner it is, where an estate is made to the husband and wife, and to two other men; in this case the husband and wife have but the third part, and the other two men the other two parts, for the above cause." (Anon. Skin. 182; 4 Vin. Ab. 154, pl. 10; Bricker v. Whatley, 1 Vern. 233; Back v. Andrew, 2 Vern. 120; Atcheson v. Atcheson, 11 Beav. 485.) The cases of Paine v. Wagner, 12 Sim. 188, and Warrington v. Warrington, 2 Hare, 54, although they in some degree encroach upon the rule as laid down by Littleton, are clearly distinguishable from the present case; and if they are not they ought not to be followed, in contravention of the old and well-established rule.

W. W. Cooper, in reply, contended that the rule as laid down by Littleton was not of universal application, and was to be confined to matters of tenure, and not extended to bequests of personal estate. The construction ought to depend upon the intention of the testator, which may be inferred with sufficient accuracy from the fact of his afterwards giving legacies of 200*l.* each, to husband, wife, and William Lea. And moreover in the gift of the residue, where the testator meant a joint tenancy, words of distribution, as "between," or "amongst," are not used.

Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—Whatever may be the state or the rule of the civil law on questions of this description, I do not think the construction of a will of personalty in this respect is governed by it; I mean, of a will of personalty where husband and wife are concerned, the rights of husband and wife in respect of personalty standing by our law in a position so peculiar as they do. According to the rules and principles of that law, whenever a gift is made to husband and wife, the presumption is that it is given to one person, and that they take as one person; I say presumption, because the nature and context of the instrument may be such as to render a different interpretation necessary; but it lies on those who assert that they take as two rather than one to demonstrate that from the nature and context of the instrument. In my opinion that is not done here. The context affords a plausible argument of more or less weight either way; perhaps not of much strength either way; but not so that, in my opinion, the balance is in favour of that which would not be the ordinary construction. The consequence is that, in my opinion, the primâ facie interpretation must remain as the interpretation absolutely right. Nor do I see how, in this particular will, a different construction could be adopted without substantially contradicting the case of Bricker v. Whatley, 1 Vern. 233. My conclusion in this case may possibly be consistent with the cases of Warrington v. Warrington, 2 Hare, 54, and Paine v. Wagner, 12 Sim. 188. I am not sure that it is not. Viewing the state of the law as I do, and having regard to the case of Bricker v. Whatley, I am of opinion that I have no choice open to me in the matter, but that I must determine that the husband and wife take only a moiety of the fund, and must leave the other moiety to Mr. Lea.

Lord Justice Lord Cranworth.—I at first felt some difficulty as to the proper conclusion upon this question, but after some fluctuation my mind has arrived at the same conclusion as that of my learned brother, and upon nearly the same ground. Starting with a devise of lands, we find that where a joint estate is made by will to a husband and wife, and to a third person, in that case the husband and wife have, in their right, but the moiety—that is, as to an estate in joint tenancy; but I think it follows irresistibly, from the observations of Sir James Wigram, V. C., in his judgment upon the case of Warrington v. Warrington, 2 Hare, 56, that precisely the same reasons apply where the gift creates a tenancy in common. The whole question is, what is the part or share described by the terms of the gift; and where that is once ascertained, it matters not whether the tenancy be joint or common. I take the rule to be, in all cases with regard to land, that which is laid down, as to a joint estate therein, in Littleton, s. 291, viz., that "if an estate be made of land to a husband and wife, and to a third person, in this case the husband and wife have in law, in their right, but the moiety." That being the point from which to start with regard to estates in land, all convenience is in favour of construing the same words in the same way with respect to personal property as with respect to real property. The onus of showing that a different construction should be adopted is on the side contending for that construction. Now, I do not think the parties can possibly show it. On the contrary, the case of Bricker v. Whatley, 1 Vern. 233, as far as it goes, is a distinct authority to show that the same rule of construction is to be adopted in both cases. I confess I was at first very much struck with the decision of Sir James Wigram, V. C., in the case of Warrington v. Warrington, 2 Hare, 54, and I felt a difficulty in seeing a distinction between that case and the present. The distinction is very fine between that case and Bricker v. Whatley, 1 Vern. 233, as Sir James Wigram, V. C., himself thought. I think, however, that there was a distinction between the two cases. The ground upon which the Lord Keeper relied in Bricker v. Whatley was, that the use of the two "ands" occurring in the enumeration of the legatees was not the ordinary form of expression, if it was meant that all the legatees named were to participate equally; but that, according to the ordinary construction of a sentence so framed, the "and" occurring before the names of Stephen Whatley and Hester his wife must be taken to mean that the persons following it were meant to take, as if they were one person only, the same interest as each of the legatees previously named; the second "and," which occurred between the names of the husband and wife, being merely a sub-copulative, showing that the two were to be treated as one person in the distribution of the benefit given, just as they would have been, according to Littleton, had the case been one of a devise of land. There being, therefore, that distinction between the cases of Bricker v. Whatley and Warrington v. Warrington, the latter case is not in the way of the application of the original doctrine laid down by Littleton. The case, indeed, of Paine v. Wagner (12 Sim. 188) is difficult to be got over; but that is a case to which one cannot look as to a binding authority, when one considers the anomalous character of the will there, and the difficulty of finding a meaning in it at all. That being so, we are thrown back upon the original rule, as stated by Littleton and the earlier decisions; and by the law as there laid down we are bound to hold that the husband and wife, whether taking as joint tenants or as tenants in common, are entitled only to one moiety between them in the bequest in question. It is by no means unlikely that the result thus stated is contrary to what the testator intended; and not the less so, possibly, from the circumstance that a legacy of 200*l.* is afterwards given seriatim to each of the same legatees. This, however, is mere conjecture, and is not a ground upon which to rely.

Blann v. Bell.

Will—Construction—Gift of dividends of stock—Life interest—Gift of residue—Conversion—Enjoyment in specie.

A. by will gave the residue of his estate and effects, whether consisting of freehold, leasehold, or copyhold estates, money in the public stocks or funds, and all other moneys or securities for money, upon trust to pay the dividends of 1,500l. Three per cent. Consols, to B. for life; and after her decease then he directed the dividends arising from the said stock to be equally divided between C. and D. and the survivor of them. In a subsequent part of his will as to all the rest, residue, and remainder of his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates, and all other his estate and effects, the testator declared the trust to be to pay the dividends, interest, rents, profits, and annual produce thereof to C. for life, and after her decease upon other trusts therein mentioned. The testator was at the time of his death possessed of leaseholds, shares in canal and assurance companies, and Dutch bonds. B. and D. died, leaving C. surviving them:

Held, affirming the decision of the court below, First, that C. having survived D. was only entitled to a life interest in the dividends of the 1,500l. consols. Secondly, that C. was entitled to enjoy in specie the leaseholds comprised in the gift of the residue, but that the shares and Dutch bonds were to be converted.

This was an appeal from the decision of the late

COURT OF APPEAL.

Vice-Chancellor Parker upon two questions of construction, which arose out of the will of Thomas Blann; the first was whether Edith Blann had become entitled absolutely to the capital of, or to the dividends only during her life, of 1,500*l.* Three per cent. Reduced Bank Annuities; the second question was whether Edith Blann, who was also tenant for life of the residue, consisting of leaseholds, Dutch bonds, and shares, was entitled to enjoy the income thereof in specie, or whether the residue was to be converted. The testator, Thomas Blann, made his will as follows:—"I desire that all my just debts, funeral expenses, and the charges of proving this my will, be fully paid and satisfied; and I nominate, constitute, and appoint my dear wife, Edith Blann, and my friends, John Thomas Bell, of Russell-square, in the said county of Middlesex, Esq., William Manser, of the town of Hertford, gentleman, and John Robert Bell, of Russell-square aforesaid, Esq., joint trustees and executrix and executors of this my will; and I give to each of them, my said wife, Edith Blann, and the said John Thomas Bell and William Manser, the sum of 200*l.* as an acknowledgment for their trouble; and I give to the said John Robert Bell the sum of 800*l.* as an acknowledgment for his trouble; I give and bequeath to my said wife, Edith Blann, all my household furniture, plate, linen, china, books, and wearing apparel to and for her own use and benefit absolutely; I give and bequeath to Thomas Cadmore, of Lea-bridge, Essex, lockman on the river Lea, the sum of 200*l.*; and as to all the residue of my estate and effects, whatsoever and wheresoever, whether consisting of freehold, leasehold or copyhold estates, money in the public stocks or funds, and all other moneys or securities for money, I give, devise, and bequeath the same to my said wife, Edith Blann, and the said John Thomas Bell, William Manser, and John Robert Bell, their heirs, executors, and administrators, and I direct them to stand and be possessed thereof upon the trusts following, that is to say, upon trust to pay the dividends of 1,500*l.* Three per cent. Reduced Bank Annuities, to Mrs. Sarah Twitchin, of Courage Farm, near Newbury, Berkshire, for her life, independently of any husband, and free from his debts or control; and at her decease I direct the dividends arising from the said sum of 1,500*l. Three per cent. Reduced Bank Annuities, to be equally divided between my said wife, Edith Blann, and my niece, Frances Rayner, and the survivor of them:* and upon trust to pay to Mr. Robert Green, of Shacklewell-lane, Kingsland, gentleman, the dividends of 2,000*l.* Three per cent. Reduced Bank Annuities, for his life; and at his decease I direct the dividends of the said sum of 2,000*l.* Three per cent. Reduced Bank Annuities, to be equally divided between my said wife, Edith Blann, and my said niece, Frances Rayner, and the survivor of them: and upon trust to pay to Mrs. Ash, formerly Druce, of Loughborough, Leicestershire, the dividends of 1,000*l.* Three per cent. Reduced Bank Annuities, for her life, free from the control, debts or engagements of her present or any future husband, and for which her receipts alone shall from time to time be a good and sufficient discharge; and at her decease I direct that the dividends of the said sum of 1,000*l.* Three per cent. Reduced Bank Annuities, be equally divided between my said wife, Edith Blann, and my said niece, Frances Rayner, and the survivor of them: and upon trust to pay Mr. James Cole, of Hertford, schoolmaster, the dividends of 2,000*l.* Three per cent. Reduced Bank Annuities, for his life; and at his decease I direct the dividends of the said sum of 2,000*l.* Three per cent. Reduced Bank Annuities, to be equally divided between my said wife, Edith Blann, and my said niece, Frances Rayner, and the survivor of them: and upon trust to pay to Frances Rayner, of Bayford, in the county of Hertford, spinster, my niece, the dividends of 8,000*l.* Three per cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities, for her life, free from the control, debts, or engagements of any husband, and for which her receipt alone shall from time to time be a good and sufficient discharge to my said trustees: and upon trust, in case of the death of the said Frances Rayner leaving issue lawfully begotten, to hold and stand possessed of the said sum of 8,000*l.* Three per cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities, for the benefit and advantage of all and every the child and children of the said Frances Rayner lawfully begotten, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike, on their respectively attaining the age of twenty-one years; and in the meantime, and until they shall respectively attain that age, to apply the dividends for or towards their respective maintenance, education, and support; and if but one, then in like manner for such only child: and as to all the rest, residue, and remainder of my freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates, and all other my estate and effects, subject to such power of appointment as is hereby vested in my said wife, upon trust to pay the dividends, interest, rents, profits, and annual produce thereof to my said wife, Edith Blann, or otherwise permit and suffer her to receive, take, and enjoy the same for and during the term of her natural life, free from the control, debts, or engagements of any future husband, and for which her receipts alone shall from time to time be a good and sufficient discharge. And from and after the decease of my said wife, I give the sum of 10,000*l.* sterling, part of the said residue, to such person or persons and in such manner as she, my said wife, shall, by her last will and testament, direct and appoint: and from and after the decease of my said wife, upon trust, as to such residue of my estate and effects, subject to such power of appointment as aforesaid, to pay the interest, dividends, and annual produce thereof to my said niece, Frances Rayner, during the term of her natural life, free from the control, debts, or engagements of any husband, and for which her receipt alone shall, notwithstanding her coverture, be from time to time a good and sufficient discharge to my said trustees:" and from and after the decease of the survivor of them, the said Edith Blann and Frances Rayner, then upon trust to divide such residue amongst all and every the child and children of Frances Rayner equally, as and when they attained the age of twenty-one years, with maintenance meanwhile, as therein mentioned: and in case Frances Rayner should die without issue who should live to attain twenty-one, then upon trust, from and after the decease of the survivor of Edith Blann and Frances Rayner, to divide among any child or children of Edith Blann by any future husband the sum of 4,000*l.*, as and when they should respectively attain the age of twenty-one years, and in the meantime to stand possessed thereof for their benefit and advantage; and also to pay to Elizabeth Ann Webb the sum of 4,000*l.*, and to Henry Twitchin, of Courage Farm aforesaid, the sum of 4,000*l.*, and to John Robert Bell the further sum of 2,000*l.* "And as to the residue and remainder of my estate, in the event of my said niece Frances Rayner, dying without issue lawfully begotten who shall live to attain the age of twenty-one years, then from and after the decease of the survivor of them, the said Edith Blann and Frances Rayner," the testator gave the said residue to certain charities mentioned in his will.

The testator, Thomas Blann, died in the year 1846, and his will was proved by his executors. Afterwards Mrs. Sarah Twitchin died. Mrs. Edith Blann thereupon filed a bill for the administration of the testator's estate, insisting that she was entitled for life to the income of the testator's residuary personal estate in specie. The Master, by his report, found that the testator's personal estate undisposed of consisted of three shares in the Brecon and Abergavenny Canal, declared to be personal estate by the company's special Act; sixty similar shares in the Kennet and Avon Canal; 193 bonds for 1000 guilders each, in the Dutch Ten per cent. Stock; twenty shares of 50*l.* each in the Eagle Life Assurance Company, on which 5*l.* a share had been paid; a leasehold house and premises at Maida-hill, held for a term of years at a yearly rent of 13*l.*; and a leasehold interest in a stream of water, held for a term of years at an annual rent of 15*l.* Before any further proceedings were taken in the cause, Frances Rayner (then the wife of William Thomas Arnold) died without issue, leaving her husband her surviving. A supplemental bill was then filed, and upon the cause being heard before the late Vice-Chancellor Parker, his Honour was of opinion that Mrs. Edith Blann was only entitled to a life interest in the dividends of the 1,500*l.* Three per cent Reduced Bank Annuities; and that she was entitled to enjoy for life in specie the leaseholds of the testator, but that the canal and assurance shares, and Dutch Bonds, were to be converted, and the produce invested in the funds. From this decision the plaintiff appealed.

Malins and W. A. Collins for the appellant, contended in the first place, that the gift of the dividends of the 1,500*l.* Three per cent. Consols. to Edith Blann and Frances Rayner, and the survivor of them, gave an absolute interest in the stock to the former upon the death of the latter. That as the gift of the rents of that estate passed the fee, so the unqualified gift of the dividends of stock would confer an absolute interest in the stock: (Clough v. Wynne, 2 Mad. 188; Humphrey v. Humphrey, 1 Sim. 536 N. S.) [Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—A sum of Government stock is but a permanent annuity, the absolute property therein consisting only in a right to receive the dividends]. The gift of a previous life interest in the dividends to Mrs. Sarah Twitchin does not render the gift of the dividends to the appellant less indefinite or unlimited. Moreover, the stock is not directed to fall into the residue, and the intention of the testator to confer an absolute gift must be clearly inferred from the fact that whenever, in other parts of the will, it was his wish to give a life interest, he has made use of express words to carry his intention into effect. Secondly, the appellant was entitled to enjoy the residue for her life in specie. That although according to the rule laid down in Howe v. The Earl of Dartmouth, 7 Ves. 137, in the absence of any express or implied intention of the testator, perishable property given to persons in succession ought to be converted in such a way as to produce capital bearing interest, and put in such a state that the others may enjoy it after the decease of the first; nevertheless, when it can be gathered that it was the intention of the testator that the property should be enjoyed in specie, that intention must be carried into effect, and of late years the authorities showed that the courts had leant more than formerly against conversion. That in this case, in the gift of the residue, the leaseholds being specifically mentioned and the direction to pay rents clearly showed that with regard to them there was to be no conversion,—that they were to be enjoyed in specie; and that being so, it might be inferred that it was the intention of the testator that the other property constituting the residue was to be enjoyed by the appellant in the same manner: (Hinves v. Hinves, 3 Hare, 609; Sutherland v. Cooke, 1 Coll. 498; Alcock v. Sloper, 2 My. & K. 699; Daniel v. Warren, 2 Y. & C. 290; Oaks v. Strachey, 13 Sim. 414; Burton v. Mount, 2 De G. & S. 883.) The cases of Mills v. Mills, 7 Sim. 501; Vaughan v. Buck, 1 Ph. 75; and Bethune v. Kennedy, 1 My. & C. 114, can scarcely be considered binding on the court, as being contrary to the spirit of the recent decisions.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—With regard to the question of conversion, we have upon this will no difficulty whatever. Whether the cases of Burton v. Mount, Daniell v. Warren, and Hunt v. Scott, 1 De G. & S. 219, were or not correctly decided by me, this will, I think, certainly exhibits an intention of retaining the property in specie. It would be very dangerous to break down the useful general rule laid down in the case of Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, 7 Ves. 137, upon slight grounds. It would introduce great room for uncertainty and difficulty in the administration of estates. Perhaps some decisions have broken into the rule of Howe v. Lord Dartmouth upon grounds too slight; but upon this it is unnecessary to give a judicial opinion. To this will, the observation—part, if not the whole of the observation,—I made in the case of Sutherland v. Cooke, 1 Coll. 498, applies, viz., that it lies upon those who assert that any part of the property is not to be converted to show it. I am of opinion that it has not been shown here, except as to the leasehold, and as to that in a manner not leading to the inference that the same rule is therefore to apply to the other parts of the personal estate. As to this question, I concur in the view taken by the Vice-Chancellor.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—Primâ facie, where the gift of residue is to a person for life, and then to others in succession, the rule laid down in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth is to prevail. There may be circumstances in the case which take it out of the general rule; but I am of opinion that no such circumstances exist here. On the contrary, if the whole will were spelt for the purpose of finding out the intention on this part of the case, I think there is that in it which might furnish an argument that the testator intended the general rule to be observed. From the circumstance that the testator directs the trustees to pay, after his wife's decease, a sum of 10,000*l.* sterling according to her appointment, it might be argued that the testator considered money to be the form in which his property would then exist. Upon that, however, it is unnecessary to rely; for I think with my learned brother that primâ facie the general rule is to prevail. Upon the other question in the case I feel more doubt.

Walker and Gifford, for a charity interested in the residue, contended that Mrs. Blann only took a life interest in the 1,500*l.* stock: (Cooke v. Bowler, 2 Kee. 56, Pemberton arguendo; Innes v. Mitchell, 6 Ves. 464.)

Bacon, Willcock, J. Russell, Younge, E. F. Smith, and Little, for other parties.

Malins, in reply, cited Blewitt v. Roberts, Cr. & Ph. 274.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—The only question upon which the court is now to give its opinion is as to the bequest of 1,500*l.* stock. There are several other legacies upon which, perhaps, the same question arises; but this legacy is the only one under consideration. Upon this question I have come to the same conclusion as the Vice-Chancellor, and very much upon the same grounds. The point is this:—The legacy arises in this way. [His Lordship stated the facts.] The contention is, that the gift of dividends is equivalent to a gift of the capital of the stock, on the well-known rule of construction adopted generally by this and other courts, founded, I believe, on the old feudal law, that a devise of the rents and profits of real estate carries with it the property in the land, inasmuch as the whole beneficial interest in realty consists in the right to take the rents and profits. The same is the case, as pointed out by my learned brother, with that description of personal property called Government Stock, for there nothing exists but the right to receive the dividends. The rule, however, is not confined to a sum of stock, but applies equally to a sum of money. A gift of the dividends of 1,000*l.* carries with it the capital sum of 1,000*l.* The question is, whether the rule is applicable to the present case; whether, in this case, the direction to pay the dividends, &c. to "the wife and niece, and the survivor" (whatever "survivor" may be supposed to mean), indicates that the corpus of the fund is to be taken, or only the dividends, for the life of the survivor. Upon this I have come to the conclusion that the Vice-Chancellor's construction is the right one, and for this reason the rule is one which has been adopted for convenience, and ought not lightly to be departed from. It was acted upon in Humphrey v. Humphrey, and is the correct principle, unless there be something to show that the rule is inapplicable to the particular case. Here it is almost impossible of application, and for this reason—what did the testator give to the two to take equally between them? Clearly life interests only. That is not disputed. It is agreed that they take life interests only during their joint lives. It has happened, indeed, here, that one of the legatees died in the lifetime of the tenant for life; but the same interpretation must be adopted as if both had survived her. It is contended that if one died the other is to take the capital; but why so, if she only takes an interest for life during the joint lives? I think "dividends" here does not mean corpus; but interest as distinguishable from corpus. What is the survivor to take? Why, only the same thing as the deceased co-legatee. She stands in her place as to her half, and takes only the same interest as she did, namely, a life interest. I think that is the reasonable construction to be put upon this obscure clause; but, as the question is a very reasonable one to bring before the court, I think all the costs should be paid out of the capital stock.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—This appeal raised but two questions: one, the point of conversion. On that point we both delivered our opinions yesterday, in conformity with the view taken of that part of the will by the able and excellent judge whose loss we all deplore. Subsequent consideration has confirmed me in that view. The other point is as to the meaning, in this particular will, of this particular passage. [His lordship read the bequest of the dividends of the 1,500*l.* stock.] Sir J. Parker, V.C. held, that these words ought not to be considered as giving an absolute interest in the 1,500*l.* to the survivor of the two legatees in remainder. My learned brother is of the same opinion, as he has just declared and explained. Since that is so, and I have no other point of appeal before me, the total affirmance of the decree becomes necessary upon both the points. Upon this part of the decree, however, I have entertained very considerable doubt. Upon it my mind is not yet made up; and if it were material that my mind should be made up, I should have requested a postponement of the case for that purpose. It is not, however, material that it should, for the reason I have stated, and for the further reason that my learned brother is of opinion that, the appeal being reasonable, all the costs should be paid out of the fund. Therefore I do not think I ought to delay the final disposal of the case.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by J. MACAULAY, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Nov. 16, and Dec. 2, 3.

CLARK v. MAY.

Vendor and purchaser—Conveyance—Stamp duty—Apportionment of consideration money.

A purchaser of real estate and of a judgment debt, which represents the same property, at a particular price, has a right to apportion the purchase-money as he thinks fit, and to have a conveyance by two separate deeds, one comprising the real estate, and purporting to be in consideration of a certain sum; and the other comprising the judgment debt, and purporting to be in consideration of the residue of the purchase-money.

In a suit, in which the question in dispute resolved itself into a question of conveyance in the above form, an order was made accordingly, but no costs were given on either side.

This was a suit for specific performance of an agreement for the purchase of a judgment debt for 2,500*l.*, recovered by Philip May against Charles King and Henry Edmonds; and also of an interest in two fourth shares of certain freehold houses. The parties had concluded everything up to the time of conveyance, when they differed about the form of it, and the bill was filed. It appeared that Anthony Edmonds and Robert Edmonds were entitled to two fourth shares in four freehold houses in Prospect-terrace, Peckham Rye-common; and being so entitled, they, by indentures of the 25th and 27th of May, 1847, assigned all their property, except their shares in the said freehold houses, to the defendants Philip May and James Lawrence, in trust for the benefit of their creditors; and by indentures of the same date they agreed to convey all their interest in their two-fourth shares of the freehold houses to Charles King and Henry Edmonds in consideration of the sum of 2,500*l.*, and Charles King and Henry Edmonds thereby agreed to pay the 2,500*l.* to Messrs. May and Lawrence, to hold upon the trusts of the creditors' deed. The purchase-money, however, was not paid at the time mentioned in the agreement, and accordingly the trustees of the creditors' deed brought an action against C. King and H. Edmonds for the 2,500*l.*, which they recovered, with 56*l.* 4*s.* costs. Subsequently, to prevent execution issuing on the judgment so obtained, C. King and H. Edmonds released their interest in the estate to the trustees of the creditors' deed; and by indentures of the 17th and 18th of February, 1848, Anthony Edmonds and Robert Edmonds conveyed their interest in the estate to the trustees, upon trust to sell and apply the proceeds in satisfaction of the judgment debt, and subject thereto upon the trusts of the creditors' deed. Anthony Edmonds's share of the freeholds, however, had been mortgaged to its full value, and C. King and H. Edmonds afterwards became embarrassed. In 1851, the plaintiff, George Henry Clark, entered into an agreement with the trustees for the purchase of the share of Robert Edmonds, at the sum of 1,000*l.*; and by a subsequent arrangement it was agreed that the equity of redemption of Anthony Edmonds's share, and also the judgment against C. King and H. Edmonds, who were then in insolvent circumstances, and their judgment debt, therefore valueless, should be included in the purchase, but without the payment of any additional purchase-money. The contract for the purchase was signed on the 11th of March, 1851, and it was thereby stipulated that the purchase should be completed on the 25th of the same month. The plaintiff prepared his conveyance in the form of two separate deeds, for the purpose, as alleged, of keeping the title to the real estate distinct from the judgment, and he apportioned the purchase-money in two parts, stating 800*l.* to be the consideration for the real estate, and 200*l.* for the judgment debt. This form was at first agreed to by the solicitors for the defendants, and the deeds were engrossed; but afterwards the defendants refused to execute the deeds, on the ground that there were separate creditors of Anthony Edmonds who might claim his share of the proceeds of the judgment, if it should appear on the face of the deed of conveyance that the judgment debt had an independent value; but they offered to execute a single conveyance of the whole property sold, both the real estate and the judgment debt, or to execute separate deeds as proposed, provided that the conveyance of the judgment debt should be expressed to be for a merely nominal consideration. The purchaser, however, insisted on having his own form of conveyance, which not being conceded, he, on the 3rd of April, filed his bill for specific performance of the contract; but, on the case coming on for hearing, the only question between the parties was as to the form of the conveyance. Under these circumstances the court directed the case to stand over, to give each party an opportunity of preparing a draft conveyance in the form he was willing to adopt, and of tendering to the other. This was done; but, neither party being willing to waive his objections, the case came on to be heard.

R. Palmer and W. R. Ellis, for the plaintiff, contended that the purchaser was entitled to choose his own form of conveyance, and to require the vendor to execute it. If, indeed, it could be shown that injury was likely to result to the vendor, the case might be different; but here the injury suggested was a bare possibility, as the land and judgment were securities for the same debt. But it was a matter of importance to the purchaser to have his title deeds unconnected with the creditor's deed. Besides, with regard to the provisions of the Stamp Act, it was material to apportion the purchase-money in such a manner as to make the duty as low as possible; and by putting a substantial value on the judgment debt the ad valorem duty would be lessened. They cited Warren v. Howe, 2 Bar. & Cr. 281.

Russell and Hardy, for the defendants, admitted that a purchaser might choose his own form of conveyance, provided his doing so did not injure the vendor. Here, however, if a valuable consideration is stated as given for the judgment debt, and the joint creditors of Anthony Edmonds and Robert Edmonds were satisfied, the separate creditors of the former would claim his share of the purchase-money of the judgment debt. Then as to the stamp duty, that argument could have no weight; for the deed-stamp would be more than the ad valorem duty on the 200*l.*

The MASTER of the ROLLS thought the contest was as idle a one as he had ever seen brought into a court of justice. It was equally so on both sides; for it would have worked no injury to the plaintiff to take a conveyance in the form proposed by the defendants; and on the other hand, it would have produced no injury to the defendants to give it in the form proposed by the plaintiff. It was said by the defendants that if the purchase money was apportioned, there were separate creditors of Anthony Edmonds who would put the parties to trouble, and claim his share of the purchase money of the judgment debt; but he (the Master of the Rolls) thought the argument that had been addressed to him was conclusive on this point, viz. that the interest in the land and in the judgment represented the same property and could not be separated. He could not, on the other hand, see why the plaintiff wished to have the money apportioned, and he was at a loss to comprehend on what ground he would be benefited by it. It would make no diminution in the stamp duty; and indeed the argument as to the stamp duty was an afterthought, which he altogether disregarded, inasmuch as it was not brought forward at first. It would hardly be possible to avoid showing the title of C. King and H. Edmonds on the conveyance; but, whether or no, it was difficult to see how the plaintiff could be injured by it. The two solicitors met and got into a contest, and one of them said he would do nothing, and the other filed a bill. The case ought never to have come before the court. The purchaser must have the conveyance in the form he asks, and no costs on either side.

M'DONNELL v. HESELRIGE.

Settlement—Breach of trust—Binding effect of a voluntary declaration of trust by feme sole.

A single lady, in contemplation of a marriage not then actually agreed upon, conveyed a fund to trustees, upon trust for herself, until the solemnisation (if any) of the marriage, or in case there should be no marriage; and after the solemnisation (if any) of the same marriage, upon trust for her for life, for her separate use, exclusive of the contemplated or any other husband; and after her decease, in trust for her children; and in default of children, in trust for such persons as she should appoint; and in default of appointment, in trust for her next of kin. The contemplated marriage did not take effect, and the settlor afterwards married another gentleman, having previously prevailed on the trustees, to whom the fund was duly transferred, to sell out a portion of it:

Held, that the settlement applied to any marriage; that the settlor could not revoke the settlement previous to her marriage; and that the trustees had committed a breach of trust in selling out part of the fund.

This was a bill by the infant child of a lady who had, previously to a contemplated marriage which did not take effect, settled her property upon herself and children, to carry the trusts of the settlement into effect, and to compel the trustees to replace a sum, part of the settled fund, which they had paid to the settlor, at her request. It appeared that Isabella Heselrige, a single lady, by deed bearing date the 15th of March, 1834, reciting that she had a marriage in contemplation between herself and a Mr. John Taylor, but that it was not actually agreed upon, conveyed, among other things, the sum of 1,878*l.* Consols, to trustees, upon trust for herself, her executors, administrators, and assigns, until the solemnisation (if any) of the marriage, or in case no such marriage should be solemnised; and from and after the solemnisation (if any) of the same marriage upon trust thenceforth during her life for her sole use, separate and apart, and exclusive of the said John Taylor or any other husband with whom she might intermarry, with the usual clause restraining anticipation; and after her decease, in case she should marry and have children, upon trust for her children lawfully begotten as therein mentioned; and, in default of such issue, in trust for such persons and for such intents and purposes as she, either before or after such failure of issue, and as well when covert as sole, and notwithstanding her coverture by any husband, should by will appoint; and, in default of appointment, in trust for her next-of-kin (as though she had died intestate and unmarried) according to the Statute of Distributions. The fund was duly transferred to the trustees, but the intended marriage never took effect; and in 1836 Miss Heselrige married Francis M'Donnell, by whom, in 1838, she had one child, the plaintiff Isabella Elizabeth M'Donnell. Mrs. M'Donnell died immediately after giving birth to this child. It appeared that in May, 1834, soon after the execution of the deed and before her marriage, Mrs. M'Donnell requested her trustees to sell out 200*l.*, part of the trust fund, and they did so and paid the amount to Mrs. M'Donnell; but they still retained the rest of the funds in their hands, and paid her the dividends during her life. It turned out that the husband was unable to maintain his child, the plaintiff, who had been brought up by her grandfather, Edward M'Donnell, who as well as her father was a Roman Catholic. The trustees had refused to advance any money for maintenance (though they had power to do so under the trusts of the settlement), except upon the condition of the child being educated in the Protestant faith. The plaintiff accordingly, by Edward M'Donnell, her next friend, filed her bill praying that the trusts of the deed might be carried into execution, and that the trustees should be decreed to replace the sum of 200*l.* which they had sold out in breach of their trust.

R. Palmer and C. Barber, for the plaintiff, insisted that the trust was complete, and the trustees in selling out had committed a breach of trust. They cited Bill v. Cureton, 2 Myl. & K. 503; Countess of Strathmore, v. Bowes, 1 Ves. Jun. 22; Beatson v. Beatson, 12 Sim. 281.

Roupell and Cory, for the trustees, contended that this settlement only applied to the intended marriage with J. Taylor, and, even if it extended farther, that the fund was at the free disposal of the settlor till her marriage. They cited Page v. Horne, 11 Beav. 227.

Welch for the next of kin of Mrs. M'Donnell.

Bovill for Mr. M'Donnell.

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS said that in this case a deed had been executed by Mrs. M'Donnell, while a feme sole, which was only a voluntary settlement, and the question was whether a trust had been created under the circumstances of the case. His Honour was of opinion that, as soon as the stock was transferred into the names of the trustees, the relation of trustee and cestui que trust was duly constituted, and that the court was bound to execute that trust. Moreover the whole of the fund was, in his opinion—an opinion however at which he had arrived with regret—bound by the trust, and the settlor had no power to direct the disposal of it or any part of it before her marriage for any purpose other than in execution of the trusts. It plainly appeared from the deed itself, and the way in which it was worded, that it was intended to apply to any coverture, not merely that then in contemplation with Mr. Taylor. The conclusion, therefore, must be that on the transfer of the fund the trusts immediately attached, and the trustees were not justified in selling out any part of it; and they must therefore make it good with interest from the death of Mrs. M'Donnell. His Honour was of opinion that though the conduct of the trustees, with respect to the maintenance of the infant, might not have been justifiable, it was nevertheless a proper case to bring before the court; and he would not make the trustees bear the costs of the suit, except to the extent to which they were increased by the breach of trust in selling out part of the fund.

WATERHOUSE v. STANSFELD.

Mortgagor and mortgagee—Laws of Demerara.

In 1845 M. contracted for the purchase from G. of lands in Demerara, and in the following year he executed in England, and in the English form, a mortgage for securing to W. a sum of money lent for the purchase. G. then by deed executed the conveyance of the lands to M., but by accident some parcels were omitted, and then M. became bankrupt. The assignees entered on the lands comprised in the contract of 1845, and sold the whole, as well those which were contained as those which were omitted in the conveyance.

Mortgages cannot be made, according to the laws of Demerara, without certain formalities, which were not observed. And by the same laws the assignees of a bankrupt are the only persons who have power to sell his real estate:

Held, that the produce of the sale must be applied according to the law of Demerara; but there was no difference between the produce of the lands omitted from, and that of those contained in, the conveyance: and that where the law of a foreign country imposes restraints on the alienation of property, a contract in England cannot be enforced contrary to the foreign law, but that the lex loci rei sitæ must govern the whole transaction.

On the 11th of August, 1845, Mr. Wm. Grant entered into an agreement in writing to sell to Mr. S. B. Moody certain lands and houses in Demerara for 4,250*l.*, and it was stipulated that a conveyance should be executed at the time when the purchase-money should be paid. In October 1846 Mr. Waterhouse and another lent Mr. Moody 2,000*l.*; and by a deed dated the 10th day of that month, Mr. Moody executed a conveyance of all the premises contained in the agreement to Mr. Waterhouse and the other in fee simple in trust to secure the repayment of the 2,000*l.*, and further advances not exceeding 3,000*l.* This deed contained the usual words, "All the estate, right, title, and interest," &c. of Mr. Moody, and also a covenant for further assurance, and also that Mr. Waterhouse and the other might appoint a person to do all acts in Demerara necessary for giving full effect to the deed. On the same day a power of attorney was executed appointing Mr. Porter, of Demerara, the attorney both for Mr. Moody, and Mr. Waterhouse, and the other mortgagee, to carry the mortgage transaction into effect, and immediately afterwards the documents were sent to that colony. Soon after Mr. Waterhouse and his co-mortgagee lent 1,010*l.* to Mr. Moody, which he paid over as he had done the 2,000*l.* to Mr. Grant, and with other money completed the purchase-money of 4,250*l.* Mr. Grant, the vendor, was made acquainted with and acquiesced in the whole of these transactions. Upon the payment of the balance of the purchase-money Mr. Grant executed a conveyance to Mr. Moody, intended to include the whole of the property contracted for; but by some inadvertence when the document was before the officer of the court in Demerara, part of the parcels were omitted to be formally and completely passed. Before any complete conveyance could be executed Mr. Moody, as after mentioned, became a bankrupt. By deed, dated in January, 1847, Mr. Moody mortgaged the whole of the property contained in the contract of 1845 to Messrs. Thomson, Hankey, and Co. (subject to a former charge of 1,000*l.*) for securing 3,500*l.* and ther advances not exceeding 7,000*l.* Mr. Rose was was appointed, by both mortgagor and mortgagees, attorney to do all acts in Demerara to give effect to the deed. Messrs. Thomson, Hankey, and Co. in February 1847 instituted proceedings in that colony to stop the completion of the mortgage of 1846, and on the 18th of May they obtained an interdict or injunction for such purpose. On the 12th of the same month, Mr. Moody's bankruptcy took place, and Mr. Stansfeld and another were appointed assignees, and they, being made parties to the litigation in Demerara, set up the bankruptcy in bar to the proceedings, and therefore that matter was dropped. Then the assignees claimed and obtained from Mr. Grant a conveyance to them of so much of the property as had by inadvertence not been included in the conveyance to Mr. Moody; and they subsequently sold it for 1,394*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.*

The present claim was filed on Nov. 25, 1850, by Mr. Waterhouse and his co-mortgagee of 1846 against the assignees, praying a declaration of the court that the defendants might be declared trustees of the estates for the plaintiffs to the extent of 2,000*l.* and 1,010*l.* The affidavits filed in answer to the claim alleged that, by the laws of Demerara, to make a mortgage of land there effectual, the intention to effect the mortgage must be advertised for four successive Saturdays in the official gazette of that colony, and must be then passed before one of the superior judges; that, by the law of the colony, any creditor can prevent his debtor from giving any preference; and, further, that the law of England did not apply, for that the lex loci rei sitæ must, in such a matter, prevail.

The case was heard before the Vice-Chancellor, and, on the 14th of August, 1850, his Honour directed further inquiries to be made as to the law of Demerara on the four following points, namely: 1st, whether the plaintiffs acquired by the agreement of the 14th of August, 1845, or by payment of part of the purchase-money for the estate, or otherwise obtained, any lien upon the land for any and what sum; 2ndly, whether Moody, before his bankruptcy, or his assignees since, had the power to sell the lands free from the claims of any creditors; and, 3rdly, whether his creditors, or any of them, had the power to prevent such sale, or any interest in the proceeds of such sale further than generally as creditors. These questions were answered by the opinion of a late puisne judge and of a late solicitor-general in the colony, which was to the effect, that neither by the indenture of October 1846, nor by the payment of part of the purchase-money, nor in any other manner, had the plaintiffs obtained any lien on the land in question to the exclusion of the general creditors of Moody. That the assignees of Moody were the only persons competent to sell; that no creditor could prevent the assignees from selling; and that the assignees could have compelled Grant to execute any further assurance to them or their vendees; and that any creditor of Moody could have prevented Grant from executing any assurance to any person but the assignees or their vendees, by entering what in the law of Demerara is called an "opposition" on the court rolls, of which the judge would take notice when the conveyance should be brought to be enrolled. The Master made his report in conformity with this opinion against the plaintiffs, who took exceptions to the report; and those exceptions now came on for argument.

Bacon and Cairns for the plaintiff.—This court, having before it the person who has entered into a contract concerning land, and the money, the proceeds of the sale of that land, will enforce the equities of the parties to such proceeds, although it has no authority over the land itself. That principle was established, or recognized and acted on, in the case of Ex parte Pollard, 4 Deacon, 27. [THE VICE CHANCELLOR.—At the original hearing of this case I decided that Ex parte Pollard does not govern it. In Ex parte Pollard the lands were in Scotland, the mortgage being executed in England, and by the law of Scotland there was no anterior impediment to the mortgage being completed; but here the case set up is, that there is an anterior impediment to the execution of the mortgage, namely, that the intention to execute the mortgage must be advertised, and that any creditor of a man intending to mortgage his land can prevent him effecting that intention. The inquiries, I said at the hearing, were directed with a view also to ascertain whether the law of Demarara applies as well to the proceeds of real estate as to real estate itself.] The general creditor has no claim upon the land until he goes to execution. The assignees of Moody cannot now fall back on what would have been that gentleman's position if he had done all he was entitled to do to make his title complete. The case of an alien, who, although incapable of holding land, still may receive the proceeds of land directed to be sold, is an illustration of the point on which the plaintiffs insist.

Rolt and Lewin appeared for the assignees in support of the report.

Cairns was heard in reply.

Saturday, November 6.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The question in this case arises between the plaintiffs claiming to be mortgagees and the defendants who are assignees, as to the proceeds of the property, which was not legally and completely vested in Moody at the time of his bankruptcy. It was not on the present argument disputed that, as to the lands actually conveyed by Grant to Moody before his bankruptcy, the plaintiffs had no lien at all. Then is there any difference between the property in the hands of Moody unconveyed by Grant? The law of Demerara is clearly laid down in the able opinions which have been taken to this effect, that no debtor can alien his lands except by certain set forms, and with the consent, express or tacit, of his creditors. As soon as the purchase money was all paid to Grant by Moody or by the plaintiffs on his account, this property, though legally in Grant, was in fact the property of Moody; and the same forms would have to be gone through on a sale by him of the property, though not yet completely conveyed to him, as would have been necessary if it had been formally conveyed to him. There must have been an advertisement by Grant on the occasion of the alienation of the estate to Moody; and then Moody's creditors, or any one of them, would have had the power to intervene and prevent Grant from disposing of the estate in favour of any person but Moody or his assignees. Mr. Cairns said that no creditor would have such a power unless by taking out execution, that is, unless he had first proceeded to execution; but I do not read the opinion which has been taken in that manner. Mr. Downie, in his opinion on the case submitted to him says: "By the law of Demerara a general creditor of S. B. Moody had a right or interest in the lots in question after the contract of the 14th of August, 1845, and before a transport of them to Moody. The nature thereof was a common law right or interest, and that which every creditor has in the property of his debtor." All the creditors of Moody, then, had this right. And then, in the latter part of the same opinion, Mr. Downie says: "The right of a general creditor of Moody would, therefore, extend also to prevent a transport from Grant being made to any other person than the assignees of Moody, after his bankruptcy. The assignees, being the representatives of Moody as well as trustees for his creditors, a transport from Grant to them was compulsory on Grant." This was, therefore, the property of Moody in the hands of Grant, subject to all the rights and liabilities which attached to it, as much as if it had been already the subject of a transport or formal conveyance. When the law of a foreign country places a restraint upon the alienation of property there, a contract in respect of such property cannot be enforced against the lex loci rei sitæ. I am of opinion that the exceptions must be overruled. The argument for the plaintiffs passes by the consideration that the general creditors have something more than a possibility. Taking into consideration that the general creditors have got the benefit of the money advanced by the plaintiffs to complete the purchase, I think the justice of this case may be met by dismissing the claim without costs, and overruling the exceptions with costs. I do not see any substantial difference between the rights of the plaintiffs upon the portions of the land actually conveyed at the time of the bankruptcy, and the lands which were then unconveyed.

Re DAVENPORT'S TRUSTS.

Will—Construction.

A testator, by his will, gave a life interest in a sum of stock to the wife of his nephew G. At the date of his will, G. was living with a woman whom he had introduced to the different members of his family as his wife, and who was believed by them to be so. The testator believed that G. was married to this woman, but he was not personally acquainted with her. G. died without ever having been married:

Held, that the reputed wife was not entitled to the legacy.

Edward Davenport, by his will, dated the 26th of October, 1843, after various legacies, gave, devised, and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to trustees upon certain trusts for investment, and to stand possessed thereof upon trust for the testator's wife and her assigns during her life; and the testator directed that, as soon after the decease of his said wife as should be convenient, his executors should set apart and stand possessed of the sum of 1,000*l.* Three per cent. Reduced Annuities, upon trust to pay the interest and dividends thereof to his nephew George Charles Davenport for his life, and from and after his decease, in case his (the said G. C. Davenport's) wife should survive him, to pay the said interest and dividends to her for her life for her own sole, separate, and exclusive use and benefit; and from and after the decease of the survivor of them, upon trust to pay, transfer, and divide the said 1000*l.* Annuities unto, between and amongst all and every such one or more of the children of his (the said testator's) said nephew G. C. Davenport as should be then living, in equal shares and proportions as tenants in common, if more than one, and, if but one, then the whole to such only child. The testator died on the 30th of January, 1844, and his said will was duly proved. The testator's widow died on the 16th of June, 1852, and the said G. C. Davenport died in May, 1845. The trustees of the will, in consequence of the claim of the residuary legatees to this sum of 1,000*l.* Annuities, on the ground of G. C. Davenport's never having been married, transferred the sum into court under the Trustees Relief Act (10 & 11 Vict. c. 96). This was the petition of the residuary legatees, under the testator's will, for the transfer to them of the said sum of stock. It appeared from the affidavits that the person with whom G. C. Davenport was living at the date of the testator's will and by whom he had five children, was not his wife and that he was never married. The person with whom G. C. Davenport so lived was introduced to the different members of his family as his wife, and was believed by them to be so. It did not, however, appear that the testator had ever been personally acquainted with this person, although he believed that his nephew was married to her.

Malins and Springall Thompson, for the petitioners, referred to Kennett v. Abbott, 4 Ves. 802.

Beavan and Prendergast for other parties.

Chandless, for the reputed wife, contended that the testator had sufficiently designated the person for whom he intended this bequest, and that she was entitled to the benefit of it.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that it was a very hard case; but, as it appeared that the testator was not acquainted with the supposed wife of his nephew, he could not hold her to be so described as to be entitled to the legacy. Her costs however on this petition should be paid out of the fund.

Ex parte THE MAYOR AND CORPORATION OF CARLISLE.

Lands Clauses Act—Re-investment in land—Costs.

Land belonging to a corporation had been taken by a railway company, and the purchase-money paid into court. The corporation afterwards agreed to buy land for a larger sum, and proposed that the sum in court should be applied in part payment of this sum. The land being held under one title, the court ordered the company to pay all the costs, excepting the excess of stamp duty by reason of the larger amount of the purchase-money.

This was a petition by the Mayor and Corporation of Carlisle, for the confirmation of the Master's report approving of a purchase by them of land, and for consequential directions. It appeared that land belonging to the corporation had been taken by the Caledonian Railway Company, who, under the Lands Clauses Act, paid the purchase-money into court, and the same was laid out in the purchase of 896*l.* Three per cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities. The corporation afterwards contracted for the purchase of land at the price of 1,700*l.* and they proposed to make up this sum by means of the 896*l.* stock. By an order of the late V.-C. Parker, it was referred to the Master to inquire whether this was a proper investment, and the question of costs, which the company contended should be apportioned, was reserved. The Master having reported in favour of the purchase, the present petition was presented, and it prayed, among other things, that the company should pay all the costs of the purchase, of the former order, and of this application. The property proposed to be purchased was held under one title.

Deere Salmon appeared in support of the petition.

Bagshawe, for the company, offered to pay all the costs except the excess of the stamp duty on the conveyance by reason of the increase of the purchase-money beyond the 896*l.* stock.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR considered that this was a very fair offer, and he made an order accordingly.

Re THE NORTHAMPTON CHARITIES.

Corporation charities—Appointment of new trustees. Whether the Vice-Chancellor has jurisdiction to appoint new trustees of corporation charities, quære.

This was a petition under the Municipal Corporations Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76), and Sir Samuel Romilly's Act (52 Geo. 3, c. 101), for the appointment of new trustees of the above-mentioned charities, the estates belonging to which, had previous to the Municipal Corporations Act, been vested in the corporation of Northampton.

Baggallay appeared in support of the petition, and stated that the only question was as to the jurisdiction of this court to make the order. He suggested, however, that if the petition were entitled in the Trustee Act, 1850, the 32nd and 45th sections of that Act would enable the court to make the order asked by the petition.

Whitcomb, for the corporation and the present trustees, did not object.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR, however, doubted whether he had jurisdiction in the matter, and said that he should be unwilling to be the first to make an order which might be an encroachment upon another jurisdiction. The petition had better, therefore, be taken to the Lord Chancellor.

REG. v. THE YORK AND NORTH MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Railway—Obligation to complete line.

Where a railway, under the compulsory clauses of the Act of Parliament, has taken land on part of the line of railway authorised, and opened such part of the line for traffic, it is obligatory on them to complete the whole.

So held per Lord Campbell, C.J. and Crompton, J.; Dissentiente, Erle, J.

Mandamus to the York and North Midland Railway Company, commanding them to show cause why they should not complete a branch line from Market Weighton to Cherry Burton, in the East Riding of Yorkshire, pursuant to the 9 Vict. c. lxv. and the 12 and 13 Vict. c. lx., for making a branch line from York to Beverley, by way of Market Weighton and Cherry Burton.

Return.—That the part of the line from Cherry Burton to Beverley, three miles in length, had not been begun to be made; that the compulsory powers of purchasing land for making it expired on the 18th of July, 1851, before the writ issued; that Cherry Burton is a small village, three miles from Beverley, and that a convenient station could not be made there for Beverley; that the district is thinly populated, and that there are other means of convenient communication; that that portion of the line would be unremunerative, and that there were not adequate funds for making it.

Demurrer thereto.

By the 9 Vict. c. lxv., for enabling the York and North Midland Railway Company to make certain branch railways in the East Riding of the county of York, and for other purposes the Company were empowered to make a branch from the York and Scarborough line to Beverley, by way of Market Weighton, and passing through, among other places, the township of Cherry Burton; and the powers for the compulsory purchase of lands for the purposes of that Act were limited to three years after the passing of the Act, and expired on the 18th of June, 1849.

Then, by the 12 & 13 Vict. c. lx., for enabling the York and North Midland Railway Company to divert their railways between Market Weighton and Beverley, and Copmanthorpe and Tadcaster, the company were empowered to divert part of the line between Market Weighton and Beverley, and to abandon the parts rendered unnecessary by such diversion, and to make a line of railway from Market Weighton through Goodmanham, Elton, and Cherry Burton, and terminating by a junction with the then present authorised line of the said East Riding Branches No. 1 Railway, &c., referred to in the 9 Vict. c. lxv. By the 12 & 13 Vict. c. lx. the powers for the compulsory purchase of lands for the purpose of the act are limited to three years from the passing of the act (13 July, 1849).

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Tuesday, November 16.—ERLE, J.—On this record the material facts appear to me to be these:—The defendants had obtained an act of Parliament making it lawful for them to construct a railway from Market Weighton to Beverley, giving them the usual powers for the purpose, and they had completed and opened part of the line as far as Weighton, and had not begun the remainder of the line. As to three miles of this remainder nearest to Beverley the powers under the act had expired and the mandamus related to making part only of the remainder running through a thinly populated district ending in the village of Cherry Burton. One of the applicants was a landowner who had land on the line both between York and Weighton, and also between Weighton and Beverley, and part of his land had been used for the part of the line that was completed. On these facts the defendants contended that there was no legal obligation to complete the line of railways thereon; and in answer thereto the prosecutor alleged,—first, that the obligation was created by the statute alone; and secondly, by the statute together with the subsequent facts. The first ground is of wide application, and involves important consequences to valuable property. It assumes that all private Acts of Parliament, granting to the applicants powers of compulsory purchase of land and other powers for the purpose of executing a project represented to be beneficial to the public, impose the legal duty upon the grantees of doing all they are so empowered to do until the project is executed, and, in case of omission, make the grantees liable to indictment and an action at the suit of any party who is specially damaged, and also liable to be called on for the specific performance of their project by mandamus. If the duty is supposed to be created by statute, the question must be decided by the words of the statute as constituting a co-ordinate jurisdiction in itself, and also by the intention of the Legislature to be collected therefrom—and according to my understanding of the statute the legal duty to make the railway was not imposed thereby. The language in respect of making the railway is permissive, and not imperative; the distinction between permissive and imperative language being maintained throughout the statutes—imperative, when a clear duty is to be created, and permissive when under common understanding they would express the matter to be optional: that is, the company is permitted at their option to take lands, turn roads, make new roads, alter streams, and do other matters which are made lawful; but they are commanded to make compensation for lands taken, and to substitute new roads for those destroyed, and they are to perform other conditions relating to the exercise of the powers, and these matters are required from them. Also, where there is reason for departing from the usual course, and the duty of completing the railway is intended to be absolutely or conditionally imposed, imperative language has been substituted for permissive, and companies have been required to make their lines. The provisions that operations should not be commenced till the capital had been subscribed, and that the compulsory powers should be put an end to after the lapse of four or five years, if the railway is not then completed, indicate that the Legislature, instead of creating an absolute duty, granted a privilege to be observed at option, on a contingency within a limited time. The statute was passed on the assumption that the undertaking would be profitable, and that therefore the work would be willingly continued; but when the completion would be attended with loss, the general public interest is against the completion, though the interest of some of the adjacent landowners may be augmented. There seems to me to be no ground for the notion that the powers granted to the company ought to be regarded in the light of a consideration for undertaking an onerous duty. Generally speaking, they are no boon unless they lead to a profitable undertaking. Thus the powers of taking land and making compensation for damage, and restoring it at a less price if no railway is made, and the power of turning roads and streams, and of substituting a full restoration, give no advantage and are not desirable unless as a means to a profitable end. Every step in preparing for applying to Parliament is a loss consented to by the company for the grant of the powers to raise the labour and capital; but the privilege is granted by Parliament because the profit, if any, must be attained through the promotion of public convenience. Also equally groundless, in my opinion, is the notion that the consent of some of the landowners on the line is to be deemed as the consideration for each landowner on the line to demand an outlay of the company's funds for a part of his estate against the wish of many of his neighbours. Different landowners may have different rights. A landowner may oppose the Bill, and after it has passed insist on a sufficient value, or he may oppose the Bill till his consent is bought at the best price he can get for it, or he may resist to the utmost for the value of his land, or he may receive payment in shares. In the first and second instances it would seem to me that they have no ulterior right beyond the restoration of the land if no railway is made: in the last case there may be a specific loss against the others, as when they require the shares to be paid up, and the funds applied in the best possible manner; and the mandamus is so framed as to be a beneficial remedy for the enforcement of this and of other civil rights, resembling rights from contract. But the prosecutor in the present instance has no such rights, and relied partly, on the duty for which any one may indict, and partly on the having sustained special loss by not having the benefit of railway communication, for which an action would lie, and partly on the assumption of a quasi contract between the landowners and the company. But I think that neither of these points would support the writ; and the mere fact of being a landowner on the line is not sufficient to support the third. For these reasons I have come to the conclusion that the present writ cannot be sustained, on the first ground above mentioned, namely, that the statute alone creates the duty; and on the argument of this case that ground was not relied on. Then, was the duty in question created by the statute together with the subsequent facts, that is, by the statute followed by the exercise of some of the compulsory powers of the Act of Parliament? In disposing of this question, I beg to confine myself to the facts of this case; and though they are not sufficient to support it, still many cases may occur where the exercise of the compulsory powers may create a duty to be enforced by mandamus. Here, a part of the proposed line, as far as it was supposed profitable, had been made, and the residue is to be abandoned, not from any corrupt motives, nor with any deception or bad faith, but because Beverley had other communications to the district between Weighton and Cherry Burton, and that it would not pay the necessary expenditure to make it. Where the defendants have taken land, and have made and opened the railway, and where they have abandoned their project, and have taken no existing public road, but have merely left the district in its former state, in order to ascertain whether a duty arises upon these facts recourse must be had to the statute, for the facts taken by themselves are wholly inoperative. The statute might attach any legal consequences to them, but unless they have statutory force they operate as nothing. There is no command requiring the completion of the whole of the line if a part is begun, and no indication of an intention of the Legislature that this increased responsibility should arise from any exercise of the powers for making a part of the line. The supposition that the prosecutors consented to the Bill before Parliament in the expectation that the line would be completed is no origin for the legal duty to complete the line; and all considerations which might have arisen with respect to imposing the duty, if there are no words in the act that can justly be construed to create these considerations, do not authorise the Court to decide that such a duty was created. The obligation arising from taking the land to make the railway aforesaid was fulfilled by making a railway as far as the land is taken; and the owner of the land so taken does not, in my opinion, acquire a better right in respect of his land than other landowners on the line that has been abandoned. This brings me to the consideration of the main ground of contention of the prosecutors, namely, Lord Eldon's words in Blakemore v. The Glamorganshire Canal Company, 1 M. & K. 162, who, speaking of Acts obtained by companies, says: "I regard them all in the light of contracts made by the Legislature on behalf of every person interested in anything to be done under them, and I have no hesitation in asserting that, unless that principle is applied in construing statutes of this description, they become instruments of oppression. Such Acts of Parliament have become extremely numerous, and from their number and operation they so much affect individuals, that I apprehend those who come for them to Parliament do, in effect, undertake that they shall do and submit to whatever the Legislature empowers and compels them to do, and that they shall do nothing else; that they shall do and shall forbear all that they are thereby required to do and to forbear, as well with reference to the interests of the public, as with reference to the interest of individuals." Lord Eldon is supposed to have here laid down that companies can be compelled to do all they are empowered to do, but his words do not bear this meaning. He says, "companies shall do and submit to whatever the Legislature empowers and compels them to do," whereas he is supposed to say, "they shall do whatever the Legislature should empower and compel them to do." We cannot suppose that learned judge meant to construe words of permission into words of command, when they were not so intended; and the supposed principle was not laid down in the judgment he was pronouncing relating to the surplus water of a canal, because the duty of leaving it and the right to take it were created by the statute in question, and the point of the judgment was the meaning of "surplus water." The words occur in the judgment whether Mr. Blakemore's title to the water under the statute was affected by the quality of the right before the statute. This is answered in the negative, where the statute is the origin of a new right created thereby. If the learned judge regarded these statutes in the light of contracts, because rights created by such statutes are as original as rights created by contract, the observation is relevant and is assented to; and I understand the same remarks were applied to the concluding observation, which means that a company must be compelled to obey the law. Both positions are too obvious to require explanation. But if this learned judge is taken to mean that the words should receive a construction different from their ordinary meaning, on the ground that such statutes would be a source of the greatest oppression if construed as usual, I think the meaning has been misunderstood, and such a doctrine seems to me altogether erroneous. The attempt to introduce the incident of a special contract between the company and other persons leads to confusion in the reasoning, while the suggestion of the danger of the greatest oppression unless this principle of construction should be adopted against the company creates the utmost prejudice and feeling. This passage has been often cited, and the words "that the company shall do and forbear all they are required to do and forbear" are used in the other sense that they must do all the Act empowers them to do. In the latter case they were the foundation for the first decision in R. v. The Eastern Counties Railway, 10 A. & E. 531, where a writ was commanded for the completion of the whole line. It was again repeated when a peremptory mandamus was applied for and refused by reason of some informality in the first writ; but it was then accompanied with the observation that the case was in some respects new, and that its circumstances admitted of some doubt whether the power of the court ought to be applied. It is upon these authorities the application in the present instance for issuing a peremptory writ of mandamus to complete a railway is rested. On the other side, it is observed that Lord Mansfield, in Rex v. The Birmingham Canal Company, 2 Wm. Black. 708, whose a writ was applied for on stronger grounds than exist here, but refused, said,—"Because the act only imports an authority to the proprietors, not a command, they may desert and suspend the whole work, and à fortiori any part of it." In Rex v. The Severn and Wye Railway Company, 2 B. & Ald. 646, the defendants had destroyed the railway, it being a public highway which the applicant had used and required to use again. The writ commanding the reinstatement of it was in the ordinary course of proceeding; the right was admitted to be clear, and the only objection was, that the claimant had a remedy by indictment. Still, the court granted a mandamus to restore, and refused to grant it for maintaining the way after restoring it, although the company were empowered to maintain as well as make the line. On this review, there appears no precedent for issuing the writ now prayed for, and no instance has been cited, whether of indictment or action, on the supposed principle which is the foundation of the prosecutor's case. This absence of any precedent is equivalent to an authority against the existence of the principle; the occasions for bringing the principle into action, if it existed, having been extremely numerous. Cases at law, in which the principle has been under judicial consideration, have been mentioned above, and the cases in equity bear rather on the rights of shareholders inter se than on the duties of the company towards the public; and, on the whole, the balance of authority appears to be against the prosecutors. Considerations of convenience tend to the same conclusion. If the writ is refused, it will be for the Legislature in future to intimate by clear words what duty is to be created, and the law will be known. If the writ is granted, many questions relating as well to the rights and duties of directors, as also to the companies, by mandamus for enforcing specific performance of very complicated duties, will remain to be settled by the discretion of the Court. In the meantime the law will be left in uncertainty, and facilities for harassing by malicious litigation will be at the disposal of those who have ill-will against the company. In the present case there is a further defence on the ground that the mandamus requires them to complete a work which would probably remain useless. After expressing my opinion on the other grounds, I have only to say that I think our judgment should be for the defendants.

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—I have to observe that, this case having been argued before my brother Erle, my brother Crompton, and myself, my brother Crompton agrees in the judgment that I have to pronounce, which he has perused carefully, and in which he concurs. He is now occupied in the Bail Court, or he would in person express his opinion. The first question to be considered in this case is whether the writ of mandamus be good upon the face of it. The defendants having been incorporated by Act of Parliament in the reign of Will. 4, under the title of the York and North Midland Railway Company, obtained another Act of Parliament in the year 1846, which, reciting that it would be attended with local and public advantage if a railway were formed from the line of the York and Scarborough Railway, near the city of York, to Beverley, by way of Market Weighton, and that they were willing to execute the same, grants them for this purpose all the powers conferred by the former special Acts and by the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, with power to borrow additional sums of money, and enacts "that it shall be lawful for the said company to make and maintain the said railways and works in the lines and upon the lands delineated in the plans, and described in the books of reference deposited with the clerks of the peace, and to enter upon, take, and use such of the said lands as might be necessary for such purpose." It appears that the company actually made the branch as far as from York to Market Weighton, about two-thirds of the whole distance to Beverley, and so far it was opened to the public. And then, in the year 1849, they obtained another Act, to enable them to divert this line of railway from the former line between Market Weighton and Cherry Burton, a place about three miles from Beverley: this Act, reciting that it would be of advantage if part of the said line between Market Weighton and Beverley were diverted, and if the part rendered unnecessary by such diversion were abandoned, and the company were willing to make such diversion, grants all the powers of the former Act for making the diversion, and enacts that it shall be lawful for the said company to make and maintain the railway in the line and upon the lands delineated and described and certain new lands, and to enter upon, take, and use such of the said lands as should be necessary for such purposes. The mandamus, after setting out the material parts of these Acts of Parliament, alleges that, though a reasonable time for completing the railway mentioned in the last Act (that is, between Market Weighton and Cherry Burton) had elapsed, the company had not made it, and have abandoned all intention to make and complete it. Allegations are then introduced, that David Burton, one of the prosecutors, at the time of the passing of the Act of 1846, was and still is owner of lands over which that part of the railway was to pass and authorised to be abandoned by the Act of 1849, and that at the passing of the latter Act he was and still is owner of other lands which the line described in the Act of 1849 would pass over, as shown in the books of reference; and that John Leaming was and still is the owner of lands that the company were authorised to take, and that the portion of his lands there required by the company have been conveyed to the company for the purpose of the Act, and that the remaining portion of his lands were much lessened in value by the non-completion of the railway; and that the compulsory powers of the Act of 1846 have been duly extended for two years; and that Burton and Leaming are desirous that the line should be completed, the completion of the same being of great public benefit and advantage, by affording to the inhabitants of the towns of Beverley and Cherry Burton further means of easy and speedy communication with York and the north of England, Selby, and the west of England, and the inhabitants of the districts intervening between Market Weighton and Cherry Burton means of speedy communication with Beverley, Hull, Driffield, Scarborough, and Malton. The writ, after further alleging a request to the company by Burton and Leaming to complete the line mentioned in the Act, and their refusal to do so, proceeds to command the company to complete the railway from Market Weighton to Cherry Burton, or to show cause to the contrary. That portion of the line between Market Weighton and Beverley to which the mandamus applies is not to be considered a separate railway or a separate branch of a railway, but is clearly to be treated as if, in its present direction, it had been included in the Act of 1846; the powers for compulsory purchase for making it being extended to the 13th July, 1852, although the powers of compulsory purchase for making the remainder of the line from Cherry Burton to Beverley expired on the 18th of June, 1849. Under these circumstances, are the prosecutors prima facie entitled to this mandamus? To answer this question it is unnecessary to decide whether a company incorporated by an Act of Parliament, which says it shall be lawful for them to make a line of railway, are bound to make it, if they have never availed themselves of the extraordinary powers conferred upon them, and they have come to a resolution entirely to abandon the undertaking before they began to execute it. Even if it were conceded that, down to the time when the defendants (the railway company) in fact executed the extraordinary powers conferred upon them over the property and the lands of others, the power to do that is only permissive and discretionary, a different state of affairs arises when they have actually begun to execute these powers—when they have taken land by compulsion under the Act, and when they have made and opened a part of the railway. They are not in the situation of purchasers of the land, with liberty to divert it to any purpose; they are allowed to purchase it only for the purpose of a railway; and when they do purchase under the compulsory powers conferred upon them, and which they had when they served the notice that they required the land, I am clearly of opinion that they enter into a contract to construct the railway. It was only with a view to the construction of the railway that the compulsory powers were conferred, and there must be an obligation to take the land so obtained for that and no other purpose. But this contract with one individual landowner cannot be performed by merely laying the rails over a section of land taken from him. It was never intended that he should be left with a high mound or a deep cutting running in the middle of his estate, the latter leading from one to any other terminus. What, then, are the termini? Surely those described in the railway Act. The Legislature contemplated the completion of this railway when it passed the Act. The enjoyment of such a railway is part of the compensation given to the landowner for depriving him of his property against his will, and may in many cases be fairly taken into consideration in estimating the compensation he is to receive. A railway being partly made, the public have likewise an interest that it should be completed. The power given to cross ancient highways and to construct a railway would often be prejudicial to the public if only partially exercised, and the company capriciously, from interested motives, abandoned part of the specified line, and thereby deprived the inhabitants of particular towns and districts of the benefit which was intended for them. The interest of the shareholders is not considered in this particular mandamus: but I may here observe that as to the shareholders, the company may contract an obligation to complete a railway which they have begun; for not only have such shareholders a common interest in the undertaking that it should be completed, but, in particular cases, may have taken shares and paid calls with a view to the railroad coming to their localities, and they would be all much aggrieved if only part was constructed from which they can receive no accommodation. Is it not then the duty of the railway company to complete the line specified in their Act of Parliament,—they having represented to the Legislature that the making of the whole of it would be attended with local and public advantage, and that they are willing to make the whole, and they having obtained from the Legislature the powers which they have partially used on the faith of these representations? It is to be presumed that they have the means of performing these duties, for they have likewise represented to the Legislature that the funds which have been subscribed and which they are enabled to raise are sufficient for the purpose. The next question is, if they refuse, ought they not to be compelled to do their duty by a writ of mandamus? It is only necessary to observe that there is no other adequate remedy. Suppose that an action would lie against the company at the suit of the landowner whose land has been taken from him by the company and not used for the purpose of the railway, or suppose the railway, which ought to go several miles further to a neighbouring town, is left unfinished at the boundary of his estate and there stopped, the plaintiff could only recover damages without any specific relief. Again, if the company were convicted upon an indictment for disobeying the Act of Parliament, in this respect the Court would only impose a fine, without ordering the railway to be completed. The question really is whether it be a duty on the railway company to do the act; for if it be, a mandamus clearly is the appropriate remedy. We are in the constant habit of granting writs of mandamus to railway companies to do what is necessary for giving compensation for land taken or injured, or to do other acts according to the duties imposed on them, and no distinction is to be made between this and the act of constructing the railway. Supposing there were an Act of Parliament obtained in the usual form for making a railway from the town of A. to the town of B., the distance being ten miles, and the intervening land all belonging to X. and Y., and the company, having got possession of the requisite quantity of land under the compulsory clauses of the act, have actually completed the railway and opened it to the public, and then, resolving to abandon it, have removed the rails, leaving the mounds and deep cuttings remaining,—would not this court, on application, grant a mandamus to the company to reinstate it? For this Rex v. The Severn and Wye Railway Company, 2 B. & Ald. 646, is expressly in point, and I believe so far has never been questioned. Suppose the company I have imagined had made a railway for two-thirds of the line between A. and B., and had refused to go on, can there be the smallest doubt Lord Tenterden, Mr. Justice Bayley, and Mr. Justice Holroyd, on the same principle, would, at the suit of X. and Y., have granted a mandamus to complete it? Such a case would have been on all-fours with the present had this mandamus, before the contemplated diversion, been applied for to complete the railway from Market Weighton to Beverley. If part of the lands of the applicants had been taken by the company, and other parts were liable to be taken, there would have been a duty on the company to complete the line, and Burton and Leaming, being sufferers by the breach of duty, are entitled to a mandamus. Surely they are equally entitled to it, although it does not include the space between Market Weighton and Beverley, and that space is part of the line the company undertook to complete, and their powers for compulsory purchase respecting it were still in full force when the mandamus issued. Although, as yet there has not been any solemn determination that a mandamus will lie to complete the railway, there are many authorities to support the doctrine that there is a positive duty and obligation on which the mandamus rests. I begin with the case to which my brother Hill referred—The Birmingham Canal Navigation Company's case, 2 W. Black. 708, in which commissioners, being empowered to make a canal from a place called Newhall Ring to Birmingham, instead of beginning at Newhall Ring began in another part of the line; and, according to the marginal note, a mandamus to execute one-fourth part of the powers granted by Act of Parliament was denied, because they did all that was sufficient to have been done. The Court would not interfere as to the order in which the different parts were to be completed. Lord Mansfield said "There must be a strong case made out for awarding such a mandamus; the present is a very weak one." The reporter, Sir William Blackstone, who is not always accurate (as Lord Mansfield says), imputes these further words to Lord Mansfield: "The Act imports only an authority to the proprietors, not a command; they may dissent and suspend the whole work, à fortiori any part of it." But Willes and Blackstone (I am reading the words of the report), "Willes and Blackstone thought the application premature—that the court ought not to grant a mandamus to compel them to cut from Newhall Ring first, but if the commissioners had refused to make any cut to Newhall Ring at all, it perhaps might be a ground for a mandamus when the cut of the canal was finished." Therefore Lord Mansfield intimates an opinion that a strong case would warrant such a mandamus; and the other judges, properly thinking the application was premature, intimated a clear opinion that at least the company might be compelled by mandamus to complete the undertaking. I then come to the well-known passage in Lord Eldon's celebrated judgment, in Blakemore v. The Glamorganshire Canal Company, 1 M. & K. 162. We are told at the bar that the language is inapplicable, because he was then dealing with an application for an injunction; but the principle he lays down is equally applicable; for, after all, rights and obligations are to be inferred in the construction of such Acts of Parliament, whether the application be in a court of Equity for an injunction to prevent that being done which is forbidden, or in this court for a mandamus for the performance of a duty which the law imposes. Lord Eldon says: "When I look upon these Acts of Parliament, I regard them all in the light of contracts made by the legislature, on behalf of every person interested in anything to be done under them; and I have no hesitation in asserting that, unless that principle is applied in construing statutes of this description, they become instruments of greater oppression than anything in the whole system of administration under our constitution." He goes on further to say: "The parties are obliged to submit to the contract which the Legislature has made for them. The result is, that the contract shall be carried into execution; and the King's subjects are compelled to submit to it, upon the notion that it will be for the public good; but they are not compelled to submit to anything except what the Legislature has said shall be done." This doctrine has been recognised by every judge in Westminster Hall—in Courts of Common Law and Courts of Equity—for nearly thirty years, as often as the subject has been discussed; and it is wholly unnecessary to go through the long list of cases that have been cited in the argument, with a view to show that it has been so recognised and acted on. We have only to ask them whether the two applicants were interested in what was to be done under the Act of Parliament for making the line of railway from York to Beverley, and whether the company must not be considered, when taking their land under the Act of Parliament to have contracted with them to complete the line for the three miles and a half between Market Weighton and Cherry Burton. I cannot but think there is such a contract between the company and the owners of land that the company will apply the land to the purposes of the railway, and complete the line: if such is the case, a mandamus should issue to enforce it. Such is the view of the subject taken by Lord Denman, Mr. Justice Littledale, Mr. Justice Patteson, and Mr. Justice Williams, the judges of this court in 1839, when, in the case of R. v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company, a mandamus to complete the railway was first applied for; and though this is not a conclusive authority, because, for want of a particular averment that the company had abandoned their design to complete the railway, a peremptory mandamus was not awarded, it is entitled to much weight. When the return was discussed, all the arguments against a mandamus which could suggest themselves to the subtle mind of Sir William Follett, and which are repeated at the bar in the present case, were brought forward; and Lord Denman, after enumerating them, says: "We think it right so far to advert to these remarks, that we may wholly disavow them as having at all conduced to the judgment we are about to pronounce. We shall keep our minds open for the discussion of all such doubts on every proper occasion, but we do not yield to them, nor is it necessary to advert to them in coming to our present decision. We neither hold the court incompetent to enforce execution of an Act under the circumstances disclosed to us in the affidavits, nor think any of the reasons which we have enumerated are conclusive against making our mandamus peremptory. "The rule was made absolute, and the writ was directed to go, on the supposition that they had no intention to proceed bonâ fide with their works, and had, on the contrary, abandoned all intention to complete them. But the prosecutors of the writ have stated no such facts." "We can infer no fault; it must be distinctly charged; and the charge as it stands is quite insufficient, and falls decidedly below the case which we thought was made reasonably probable by the affidavits on both sides." This is the ground on which the judgment was given for the defendants; and though it was expressly said that these points appear to be open to argument, yet there seems reason to believe if the abandonment of a part of the line had been sufficiently averred in that case, a peremptory mandamus would have been granted. I may likewise observe, that in the case of Anstruther v. The East of Fife Railway Company, on appeal to the House of Lords from the Court of Session in Scotland, reported in the LAW TIMES of the 22nd May, 1852, the present Lord Chancellor (Lord St. Leonards) intimated a clear opinion that if a railway company have taken land under the compulsory powers conferred upon them, and have begun to make the railway, they ought to complete it. Assuming that for these reasons and on these authorities this mandamus can lawfully issue, and is good upon the face of it, I now proceed to examine the return the defendants have made. They mainly rely upon the statement that the line from York to Beverley between Cherry Burton and Beverley, which is three miles long, has not been made or begun to be made, and that the compulsory powers of purchasing land for taking it expired on the 13th of July, 1851, before this writ of mandamus issued. There is no allegation of the impossibility and want of power to purchase lands and complete that part of the line specified in the mandamus which is between Market Weighton and Cherry Burton, if there was an obligation imposed upon the company by the Legislature to complete the whole from Market Weighton to Beverley. But they cannot set up a want of power arising from their own neglect to do more than they are commanded to do by this mandamus as an excuse for not performing the duty which they do not deny they have the power of doing, namely, to complete the line between Market Weighton and Cherry Burton. They say it would be unlawful for them to go so far without going further. Cohen v. Wilkinson, 5 Rail. Cas., 748, is constantly cited as an authority in their favour; but when that case is examined, it appears to me that if it is to have any application to the present case it is in favour of the prosecutors. Where, a company being formed and incorporated to construct a railway from Epsom to Portsmouth, the directors resolved that they would make the line from Epsom to Leatherhead, and, they having entered into an arrangement with another company, the original line was to be abandoned, certain shareholders who wished the line to be adhered to filed a Bill for an injunction. Lord Langdale very properly held that the directors had no power to change the original design. This shows that the present defendants are altogether unwarrantable in resolving that they would apply the funds of the company to make the line as far as Market Weighton and no further, and that the original design of completing it to Beverley should be abandoned. The dispute there is between the shareholders and directors, who are charged with a breach of trust; and what is there laid down has hardly any application to a case like this, in which it is contended that a railway company has not performed the statute duty imposed on the property, and injury accrues to individuals not members of the company. This mandamus, instead of requiring the company to abandon the original design mentioned in the Act of Parliament, requires them to proceed in carrying it into effect. It can be no misapplication of the funds to make the line from Market Weighton to Cherry Burton, any more than it would be to keep them in their own hands at York or Market Weighton. Suppose the company were now to remove the rails from that portion of the line, Rex v. The Severn and Wye Canal would be a clear authority for a mandamus to restore it, and the argument that this is only part of an incomplete line would be as strong against the mandamus as with respect to that portion of the line between Market Weighton and Cherry Burton. The defendants further contended that Cherry Burton is a small village, three miles from Beverley; that a convenient station could not be made there for the inhabitants of Beverley; that the district is thinly populated; and that there are means of convenient communication from that to other places in England, irrespective of the railway to Beverley. But what weight can we attach to these assertions, contrary to what is declared in the preamble of the Act of Parliament, that it would be attended with local and public advantage if this railway were made. The company must have had to bring forward evidence to convince the two Houses of Parliament that the preamble was true, and that they were willing to execute their contract. If the prosecutors and the public are entitled under the Act of Parliament to still greater advantages when this mandamus shall be obeyed, it seems strange that the company should be permitted to allege their own wrong as a reason for withholding what is now claimed, and what may now be done. The company next allege that the portion of the line described in the mandamus would not be remunerative to the company. This is very likely to be true, or it would have been completed and open long ago; but no one can seriously contend that the company, having obtained powers to make a long line of railway, can at their pleasure make the parts that would be profitable and abandon the rest. Need I do more than repeat the futile language which follows in the return, "that the making of the same railway would be a useless expenditure of labour and money, whilst it would be destructive of the lands through which it would go for any agricultural or other useful and beneficial purpose?" It was hardly contended an issue could be taken on such an allegation; and it was hardly denied, although the making of a particular portion of the railway may not be profitable to the company, it may be of great benefit to individuals and the public that the whole should be completed. I have only further to notice the allegation of want of funds, in these words: "That all and every sum and sums of money applicable to the purposes of the said York and North Midland Railway Act, 1849, which can in reasonable probability come to the possession or be disposable by us the said company will fall short, by the very large sum of money of not less than 100,000*l.*, of the aggregate sum necessary for the making of the railway authorised by the said York and North Midland Act, 1849, and which we, the said company, are by the annexed writ commanded to make." I am not sure how far this part of the return is meant to be relied on; for the Solicitor-General, in arguing the question whether such an Act of Parliament only gives a permission and imposes an obligation, insisted that if there were an obligation, the want of funds would be no defence. Upon an application for a mandamus to complete the railway, where they clearly made out to the satisfaction of the Court that the company, although carrying out the design with good faith, was from unforeseen casualties left entirely without funds, I make no doubt, in the exercise of our discretion, we should refuse the application, and leave the parties to such relief as they may obtain by the interposition of the Legislature; and I am not prepared to say that, a mandamus having issued, there might possibly be a return of the absolute exhaustion of funds, and the impossibility of raising any, so as to amount to an answer but I am quite clear that this attempt at alleging a want of funds is wholly abortive. The defendants do not say, they have not funds in their hands which would be sufficient to enable them to do all they are commanded to do, which is, to complete the line from Market Weighton to Cherry Burton; they merely allege that there is a reasonable probability that they may not have funds for all the purposes of the Act of Parliament. Such a reasonable probability the prosecutors could not take an issue upon capable of being tried. I think that the plaintiff did well in demurring to the return, for, in my opinion, it affords no answer to the mandamus either by any separate answer or by its multifarious allegations taken together. I most heartily rejoice that these questions are on record, that it may be carried to a court of last resort. In the meantime, agreeing in opinion with my brother Crompton, I must pronounce that the judgment ought to be for the prosecutor for awarding a peremptory mandamus.

REG. v THE LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Railway—Obligation to complete line

Prima facie, there is an obligation on a railway company that has obtained an Act of Parliament to make a railway to complete such railway; and the company may be compelled to do so, by a writ of mandamus although the company may not have taken any step towards the formation of the railway

Mandamus to the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company to make and complete an extension of the Holmfirth branch of the Huddersfield and Sheffield Railway, pursuant to the 10 & 11 Vict c cxii

Return—That nothing had been done under the 10 & 11 Vict c cxii towards exercising the powers of the Act, by the company

Demurrer thereto

By the 10 & 11 Vict c cxii "An Act to enable the Manchester and Leeds Railway Company to make an extension of the Holmfirth Branch of the Huddersfield and Sheffield Railway the extension railway was directed to commence by a Junction with the intended Holmfirth branch of the Huddersfield and Sheffield Junction Railway and terminate at a point about 100 yards north of the New Church at Holmbridge in a field occupied by Barber in the township of Cartworth

By sect 15, after the expiration of five years from the passing of this Act (2nd July 1847) the powers for making the said extension "shall cease to be exercised, except as to so much of the same as shall then be completed"

By the 10 & 11 Vict c cxiii the name of the Manchester and Leeds Railway Company was changed to that of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company

Tuesday November 16—Lord CAMPBELL, C J—We have now to deliver judgment in the case of The Queen upon the Prosecution of Rawcliffe, against The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, where nothing had been done under the Act of Parliament towards making the railway

The Solicitor-General—In reference to this case I am instructed to inform the court that, since the argument was heard, an Act of Parliament has passed relieving the company.

Lord CAMPBELL, C J—We must give judgment

The Solicitor-General—Exactly so only I thought it my duty to inform the court of what has taken place

Lord CAMPBELL, C J—If they have got an Act they have pursued the right course We must give judgment on the mandamus

JUDGMENT.

Lord CAMPBELL, C J.—This case was argued before my brother Coleridge, my brother Crompton, and myself My brother Crompton, who has read my judgment, concurs in it My brother Coleridge has likewise read it, and he, being present, will state now how far he concurs in it After long and anxious deliberation, I have come to the conclusion that we are bound in this case to pronounce judgment for the prosecutor. Where the directors of a railway company have actually availed themselves of the extraordinary powers conferred on them at their own solicitation, and on their own representation, by getting possession of lands without the consent of the owners, and beginning the foundation of a railway which necessarily interferes with public as well as private rights, I have never been able to bring myself to doubt that there is a duty incumbent on them to complete the undertaking, and that we are empowered to compel the performance of this duty by mandamus. Whether, where a company have done nothing as between themselves and third parties, or the public, under their parliamentary powers, they may not wholly abandon the undertaking is a very different question. I was at first inclined to think that until they had actively interfered with public or private rights after the passing of their Act of Parliament, they are not to be considered as having entered into any contract, or incurred any obligation to execute the undertaking. Neither individuals nor the public necessarily suffer any severe injury by the scheme having been formed and repudiated, and neither the consideration nor the promise which constitute the contract or obligation can be said to be so apparent if the shareholders agree to dissolve the company as soon as the Act of Parliament has passed But my present opinion is, that the moment the Act receives the royal assent the contract and obligation attach, and that by the Legislature alone can the contract and obligation be subsequently dissolved. There is great difficulty in drawing any other line The notion that upon the passing of the Act there is a locus penitentiæ still allowed the company, is rather a gratuitous supposition and I know not on what principle we are to interpolate the condition, if companies avail themselves of the extraordinary powers, which they have obtained on the declaration that, they are ready and willing, at their own expenditure to execute a work declared by the Legislature to be greatly for the public benefit Regarding the transaction as a matter of contract, we may well conclude, as between companies and the owners of the land to be taken for a railway as well as with the public, the contract is absolute when the Act passes There is ample consideration in any prejudice which the landowners sustain in being subject to any liability to have their land forcibly taken from them and in the benefit they are to receive to the company The reciprocal consideration flowing, from the company is the expenditure which they are to incur and the benefit they are to confer by making and completing the railway In mutual consents are given through the medium of the Legislature It was argued at the bar that all these Act of Parliament only gave a permission to the company because the powers are limited to a certain number of years But this limitation seems manifestly to be introduced for the protection of the landowners without giving the company the power at their pleasure to abandon their undertaking For the landowners there is no locus penitentiæ for the instant the Act receives the royal assent the company have the compulsory power of purchasing all the lands required by them throughout the whole extent of the railways as specified in the books of reference and by which notice they may become the actual purchasers at any moment until the last period to which the power of compulsory purchase is limited expires Until then the landowner is deprived of his full rights of ownership and if the agreement to be compensated by the construction of the railway they would in many cases sustain a serious loss during all the time while the compulsory powers of purchase subsist, and they are prevented from alienating the land or leases inscribed in the book of reference and from applying it to any purposes inconsistent with the claim which may be made to them by the railway company During the whole of this time is the party to the contract to be bound and the other to be free? May not the public be considered privy to the contract? and may not the public be moved at the contract may be repudiated by the company at any time before it is acted on? The fact is stated it would be for the public benefit that a new line of communication should be open between certain towns and the privilege of making it is conceded to a company with extraordinary powers over highways and other public rights Competitors who were willing to construct a railway between the same termini or defend for the period of at least fifty years no similar scheme can be brought forward May it not reasonably be concluded then that the company is bound to perform their part of the contract as well in respect of the public as of the landowners A permission which works any prejudice to the party who grants it may well be the subject of a bargain with the grantee but it is granted at the request of the grantee, on the representation that he is about to exercise it for the benefit of the grantor, who cannot withdraw is not the fair inference that the obligation is reciprocal? Rash and reckless speculators in railway shares may thus be considerable losers, if when the shares suddenly fall to a discount they may, at their pleasure break off the concern but if a speculation of this sort is conducted on fair commercial principles, no real hardship can arise from the consideration that the contract binds the company as well as the landowners and the public The companies always declare their readiness and willingness to execute the work for the public benefit and they engage to find funds for the purpose If the calculations have been honestly and prudently made, there is hardly a possibility of any discovery before the work is begun, that it may not be advantageously carried into effect If in the progress of the work unforeseen difficulties arise—if a tunnel costs much more than might reasonably have been expected, or a bridge is swept away by an inundation—a new arrangement may be made under the sanction of Parliament Applications have been repeatedly made, of which an instance is stated by the Solicitor-General here to-day,—applications have been repeatedly made to Parliament with success by railway companies for leave to abandon the whole of their undertaking, or a particular branch of it. I cannot allow, therefore, that the apprehended ruin of shareholders should induce us to abstain from giving such Acts of Parliament the construction which may fairly be put upon them. We are to find out what is the just inference, from the nature of the transaction and the language employed In some of the Railway Acts we find the expression,—The company is required to make and maintain the railway in others "It shall be lawful for the company to make and maintain the railway." I do not believe a different meaning is really intended by these different expressions The rule for construing the language of Parliament upon this subject is to be found in Comyn's Digest, "Parliament," R 22 Words of permission and obligation shall be obligatory If a statute says a thing for the public benefit may be done it shall be construed that it must be done According to this rule, a railway is expressly declared to be for the public benefit, and these two forms of expression in the Act of Parliament for the same object are synonymous Reliance was placed by the defendants' counsel on the case of Innerarity v The East of Fife Railway Company, 1 M Queen , the case to which I before referred. But when that case comes to be explained it will be found to be no authority for them. There the special Act received the royal assent on the 16th of July, 1844 The company, having received deposits and calls but before commencing any works or having any note of plans on the 28th of March, 1849, came to a resolution to abandon the undertaking, and apply to Parliament for an Act to authorise them to do so On the 30th of May following the appellant made an application to the Court of Session in due form, "that the company might be interdicted from taking any steps or proceedings, having for their object the dissolution of the said company, and from returning or paying back to the shareholders the money advanced and paid by them into the said company in the shape of deposits or calls, and from violating the contract or agreement entered into between him and the company and from acting in any other way prejudicial to the interests of the plaintiff under the said contract or agreement or contrary to the provisions of the statute incorporating the said company." That was the form of interdict applied for and which was refused the appeal was against the interlocutor refusing the interdict The appellant's counsel at the bar of the House of Lords admitted that the interdict would have prevented the company from coming to Parliament for an Act authorising them to abandon the undertaking, but relied on the very questionable dictum of Lord Cottenham, in a case where a company had begun to make a railway, that the Court of Chancery may grant an injunction and stop the proceedings in Parliament contrary to the contract supposed to have been entered into That most distinguished judge for whose memory I have the profoundest respect, had a notion that the Court of Chancery was to be omnipotent. It further appears that the appellant had brought an action of declarator against the company for the purpose of having it found that the company had no right to abandon the undertaking, and that in this action judgment had been given against him Lord St Leonards therefore, in advising the House to dismiss the appeal, observed:

What is prayed for is a general injunction on the assumption that the right will be established, at the very period when the right has been devised, and the injunction is to be dissolved by a judgment against the appellant In the action of declarator the appellant prays that the company may be prevented asking Parliament for an Act to put an end to its property It is perfectly clear that the terms in which the injunction is sought would go to interdict such an application If such a person desires to oppose a projected measure in Parliament, he is at perfect liberty to do so, and he would be duly heard by the Legislature on the ground of his interest But, says Lord St Leonards, "to grant an injunction under the circumstances of the present case is impossible, and he afterwards goes on to observe 'that to support the appeal, the propriety of the interdict in all its parts, as prayed, must be proved,' and that "there was no pretence for saying that the appellant had any right to restrain the company from paying back the deposits to the shareholders." The affirmance of the judgment refusing the interdict, is no authority against this mandamus. The question that is now before us, is more nearly touched by the action of declarator in the Court of Session, which will be found in the note of Mr M Queen's report of this case, that is that in the action of declarator that very learned judge, Lord Wood decided that the action was not maintainable, but he proceeded solely on the ground that it had been commenced too late, and an Act had been passed by the Legislature authorising the company to abandon the undertaking. He says, "The compulsory power enabling the company to take lands expired in July 1849. In 1850 they applied to Parliament for leave to dissolve themselves, and, having proved to the satisfaction of the committee that the construction of the railway had never been commenced, and that it was expedient to abandon it, the Bill passed, directing the company to cease to exist, except for the payment of its debts, and that the company are absolutely released and discharged from all obligation and liability to make the railway. The action of declarator, therefore," says Lord Wood, "was intituled before the passing of the dissolving statute, but not till after the compulsory powers of taking the lands under the original Act had expired, so that the pursuer was clearly too late in bringing his action." His Lordship, however, goes on to intimate a pretty strong opinion. These are his words: "If a proper demand had been made whilst the compulsory powers subsisted, and within a reasonable time before there was a cessation, an action for that purpose timeously raised (that is, in time) would have been maintainable by the pursuer, and he might have been entitled to the decree now prayed against the defendants." Therefore we have the authority of Lord Wood in favour of this mandamus. Looking to the 10 & 11 Vict. c. cili. the special Act for making this extension, by an existing company which had previously made the line of railway to be extended, I doubt whether the company, in respect of an extension, are exactly in the situation of a new railway company, which had been created to construct a new railway, but have never availed themselves of any of the powers of the Act. But, supposing the defendants to be in this situation, I think that their return to the mandamus would be bad, as clearly showing that they have broken the contract and disregarded the obligation to construct the railway, which they are commanded to make. I have now to make a few observations on the form of the mandatory part of the writ, which was strongly objected to by the Solicitor-General, and which is said to command what is unlawful, by requiring the company to take all necessary acts and steps, both as to the purchase of lands and otherwise, for making and completing and to construct the company's said extension railway pursuant to the statutes in that behalf. Under the 4th and former sections of the Act 10 & 11 Vict. c. cili. power is given to raise a sum of money by the creation of new shares for making an extension and likewise to borrow on mortgage. If this money ought to have been raised by new shares on mortgage before the company proceeded to purchase under the compulsory powers, part of this writ requires them to do so. We must assume that the company have no difficulty in performing their undertaking. On arguing this objection we must assume that no obligation upon the company exists to execute the work, and to do all that is necessary for the purpose; they are in substance called on to take all the steps necessary for the completion of the railway in the order which the Act prescribes. Upon the whole, it appears to me that this writ of mandamus is valid in form as well as in substance; and, the only return to it being that the company, having taken no steps towards the making of the railway, are not bound to make any, I think there ought to be judgment for the prosecutor, with the award of a peremptory mandamus.

Mr. Justice ERSKINE, J.—I am of the same opinion, and as I have had an opportunity of reading and considering attentively both the judgments of my Lord now delivered, it is scarcely necessary for me to add more than my concurrence in the conclusion to which he has come, and, speaking generally of the arguments and the view of the authorities by which he has been guided to it, I should merely waste time in an attempt to repeat the former or to re-examine the latter. In the case now for decision it seems to me perfectly clear, if the writ has disclosed a prima facie case on which it can be supported, the return alleges nothing whatever to displace that case. The return can be no answer unless this can be maintained—that the defendants may make a representation to the Legislature, on which they are called upon to prove the truth, that it will be a great public benefit, that the railway shall be constructed for a particular distance and by a particular line, and that they are willing at their own expense so to construct it, and procure from the Legislature all necessary powers; and, most strange to say all, for that purpose that by this power they should in case, and for the whole number of years specified by the Act, take from the landowners on the line the free use of their property—impede all improvements—prevent all sales; that they should indirectly but effectually prevent the district from the admitted benefit of having a railway constructed by any other parties; and yet they, having thus procured the powers, given the undertaking, and occasioned the inconveniences above stated, may simply do nothing, retaining, however, all the power for the time specified. In this case the defendants allege no inconvenience, no impossibility of making the line, no want of means or funds; so that the bare and single circumstance of their having done nothing is relied on to relieve them from the obligation of doing anything. That very circumstance seems to me sufficient to show how entirely impossible it is to justify this return. The real question then is on the writ; and, after much consideration and some hesitation, I am of opinion that it discloses a sufficient legal right in the individual making the application, and sufficient obligation upon the defendants to render it valid. It alleges that the whistle of the projected line will pass through the township of W.; that Mr. Hinchcliffe was and is the owner of lands in C. through which the line will pass, and these lands are shown in the plans and his name included in the books of reference; and that he is desirous that the line should be made. He is therefore not merely interested as one of the public in the general benefits to result from the projected line; he is not merely one of the public in whose behalf the contract was made for the construction of the railway; but individually he has been affected in his property by the acts of the defendants. Ever since the statute passed at their instance, they have exercised a control over his lands, and he has been impeded in improving them, and substantially prevented from selling them. The only recompense for this is the specific performance of that which was originally contemplated by the parties and intended to be provided by the Legislature; none other would be complete, and to have this, in my opinion, he has a legal right. I therefore agree with my Lord that our judgment should be for the crown.

CAMPBELL, C. J.—Judgment for the crown and a right of peremptory mandamus. I would observe that this is certainly one of the most important cases ever argued in Westminster Hall, and it is certainly attended with considerable difficulty, and I earnestly hope that with all possible speed it may be brought before a higher tribunal.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THRELL v. ATHERTON and OTHERS.

Devise—Conversion—Real and personal estate—Cestuis que trust accelerating the enjoyment of trust funds.

A testator devised his real and personal estate to trustees, charging them not to sell, if they could avoid it, the real property till the end of nineteen years; but, if they should sell part, to apply the proceeds to pay off his mortgage debts, and to hold the residue till the end of the nineteen years, when the proceeds were to be paid to his children A., B. and C. in certain shares. The trustees declined to accept the trust. All the cestuis que trust then executed a deed of trust, by which they agreed to divide the property into two classes (1 and 2). Class 1 was to be sold immediately, to pay testator's debts. Class 2 was to be held by the trustees named, in trust for the purposes of the will, so far as not inconsistent with the trust deed, to pay the rents accruing to the parties as entitled under the will, and with power to a majority of the trustees to sell even within the nineteen years, at the end of which period, however, the property was to be sold absolutely, and the proceeds divided as the will directed. B. died before the end of the nineteen years.

Held, that under the trust deed there was a conversion out and out of class 1 from the date of that deed; but that there was a conversion of class 2 only at the end of the nineteen years, or, if sold before that period, then at the time of such sale; and that the intermediate rents of the part remaining unsold went to those entitled to the real estate.

Semble, under the will taken by itself, there was no conversion till the end of the nineteen years of that part of the real property which was then unsold, any conversion possible before that period being only for a certain limited purpose, that is, to pay debts of testator.

Robert Ferrie, builder in Glasgow, executed his will in 1837, by which he devised all his real and personal estate to trustees, on certain trusts therein specified. The real estate consisted of freehold houses in Glasgow, situated in St. Vincent-street, Renfield-street, Carlton-place, Buchanan-street, and Gordon-street. The 5th clause of the will was as follows:—"5th. It is my earnest desire and intention, that no part of my real estate (except that in Carlton-place) shall be sold until the eldest of my grandchildren, if any, shall attain the age of twenty-one years; or, in case of no grandchildren, until the expiration of nineteen years from the date of these presents; after which period, as the same may happen, and not sooner, if advisable by any reasonable means, the subjects may be sold, according to the judgment of the said trustees, and the free proceeds thereof divided and paid to and for behoof of my said children, their executors, &c., conform to their several rights and interest under this will; and in no event shall any part of the prices of my real estate, except that in Carlton-place, be divided or paid to my legatees, &c., until the period of division above written; and in every case the price of any subjects sold shall in the first place be applied in paying and clearing off the mortgage debts affecting that subject, and the residue of the price, if any, shall be applied towards paying other mortgage debts, until the whole shall be cleared off." The 6th clause provided, that, until the termination of the trust, and until the whole property should be sold, the trustees should divide and pay the free residue and proceeds of the same—one-fourth to his son William, one-fourth to his daughter Christian, and two-fourths to his son George. The 8th clause provided that, after the expiration of the nineteen years, and disposal of the real property, or such part thereof as might be necessary for the purposes of the [illegible] and payment of the whole debts, "the said trustees shall divide and pay, or dispose themselves of the whole free residue and remainder of the aforesaid trust subjects, and the proceeds thereof to and in favour of" the said children. The trustees were also empowered to borrow money on the security of the real estate. At the death of the testator, the trustees declined to act on account of the heavy debts on the estate, and the length of the period to which the power of sale was postponed. They accordingly advised all the parties beneficially interested, as there were no grandchildren, nor the prospect of any, to execute a trust deed, the object of which should be to accelerate the enjoyment of the fund. This was accordingly done in 1845. This deed recited the will of the testator—that his object had been to postpone the sale, in order to increase the value of the property; but that now it had been found that the property had reached its maximum value, and it was desirable to dispose of, at least, a large portion in order to pay the debts of the testator, which were heavy. They therefore bound and obliged themselves "to arrange and agree to the following mode of managing, superintending, and realising the whole of the trust property belonging to the testator." The deed then provided, in clause 2, that the whole of the property in St. Vincent-street, Renfield-street, and Carlton-place should be immediately sold, and the proceeds applied to pay testator's debts. The 4th clause provided that the whole of the free rents and proceeds of the remaining property in Buchanan-street and Gordon-street, so long as it remained unsold, should be divided and paid amongst the beneficiaries in the shares and under the provisions, restrictions, and limitations contained in the will. The 5th clause provided that the residue of the property in Buchanan-street and Gordon-street should be conveyed to five trustees, to hold to the uses of the will, so far as they are not inconsistent with this deed. The 6th clause provided that if a majority of the trustees appointed under this deed should, at any time before the end of the nineteen years, think it advisable to sell the property in Buchanan-street and Gordon-street, they should have power to do so, and to bind the minority, and, in the event of such sale, the shares of the price were to be paid to those designated in the will. The 7th clause provided that if the last-mentioned property should not be thus sold before the end of the nineteen years, then at such period it was to be sold in auction at the highest price it would fetch, and the proceeds divided in the shares specified by the will.

Before the end of the nineteen years, viz. in 1847, William Ferrie, one of the sons of the testator, died. At that time the only property unsold was part of that in St. Vincent-street, and the whole of that in Buchanan and Gordon-streets. William Ferrie left a will, by which he conveyed his whole interest under his father's will and under the trust deed above mentioned, and to which he was a party, to trustees. This will was voidable or not according as the interest which was vested in William at his death was of the nature of real or personal estate. If it was real property, then it passed to the appellant, if personal, it passed to the respondents, who were trustees of William Ferrie's will. The Court of Session held, that the interest of William Ferrie was of the nature of personality, there having been a conversion out and out under the trust deed, but declined to give any opinion as to whether his interest would have been the same if there had been no trust deed executed by the beneficiaries. Against that decree the heir-at-law now appealed.

The Lord CHANCELLOR.—My lords, this case has been very elaborately argued, and the only difficulty which I feel is, upon what is the nature of the property between the time of the creation of the trust and the expiry of the nineteen years. I think there is no serious difficulty as regards the true construction of the trust deed. There may be a point of considerable difficulty upon the testamentary instrument, without going any farther into that at present; but the parties assumed a power to alter the destination of the property in an unusual way—not by altering the beneficial interest—but they assumed a power positively to sell the property, at a time when it was not saleable under the testamentary instrument; and the deed in effect assumed the power of abrogating that instrument, because their otherwise power could have obtained a power to sell the estate to the satisfaction of a purchaser, and to the satisfaction of the judges in the courts of Scotland, available on an immediate sale not bound by those trusts. I must, therefore, assume, that the deed of August 1845 enable the parties by that deed to delegate the property in the manner in which they thought proper. Ultimately there were no children, and I observe that all the judges, without giving any distinct opinion upon how far the parties had the right to abrogate the will, from distribution, in the event which had happened, under the deed, must it must assume it, to be vesting. But upon this construction still upon the same hypothesis no doubt upon as regards that will, there had been of the property was this:—The testator had two properties; one, the whole of which was unquestionably fit for sale, and considered ripe for sale. It would certainly sell as well at the period named in the deed as it would at a future time; and there was a desire to accelerate the sale because the estate was very heavy. The creditors were pressing, and there were no assets to meet the debts. But the testator had unfortunately postponed the sale of this to the end of nineteen years. The parties, therefore, agree to a new arrangement. Now, in the first place, I think it will be admitted that the parties do not agree to an absolute sale of the whole property, that is, they have not expressed that intention; but when they come to deal in the operative part of the instrument with the property, they dispose of it in this way: They divide the property into two classes—the St. Vincent-street, Ranfield-street, and Carlton-place property are placed in one class, and the Gordon-street and Buchanan-street property in the other class. Now they deal with it in this way. The first property is to be sold immediately, and converted into money; and it is perfectly clear (and it is more like a power than a trust) that there was an absolute conversion of the property for the payment of debts. But it was assumed throughout the whole of that instrument that that fund would be exhausted in the payment of debts. It was perhaps thought that that fund would be sufficient to pay the debts, but it nowhere appears to have been supposed that there would be a surplus of that property after the payment of debts. The whole of the property, however, was delegated to the payment of debts. Now, in the result, debts are at this moment unpaid which are clearly provided for in this deed, and to the payment of which the first class of property is delegated by this deed. Therefore it is quite clear that that trust still remains to be exercised as regards the St. Vincent-street property, and, remaining to be exercised according to the settled rule of law, we must consider the property as converted from the time when it ought to have been converted, that is, forthwith after the execution of the deed. As regards the St. Vincent-street property there is no difficulty at all. Then comes the second class of property, the Buchanan-street and Gordon-street property. No absolute disposition seems to have been anticipated of any surplus fund arising from the property in the first class after the payment of the debts and the way in which the parties have dealt with the property in the second class is this: they have said, in the 4th clause, that until that property is sold, the rents shall go according to the destination in the will. That admits the only real doubt in the case. Till there is a sale you will take the legacy. Now observe that, if it had not been for the death of a party, it would have been perfectly indifferent whether the character of the property was changed or not. The person entitled under the will was to receive the rents equally under the deed. It would be perfectly indifferent whether he took it as real property or as personal property. But it is his death which has caused the difficulty which the House has now to deal with. Now, considering the matter as remaining certainly untouched by that 4th clause, then you come to the fifth clause, and that clause says, that immediately after the sale of the property in the first class, and the disposition of the proceeds in the manner specified, or, in other words, as soon as you have sold all the property delegated to the payment of debts, and paid those debts, and assuming in that particular part in the commencement that the debts would be paid by the application of the property in the first class, then it goes on to say, you shall forthwith deal with this property in the second class and convey it to the persons who are interested under the will, although not interested in the property in a way in which it can be directly conveyed to them or their survivors, but in trust, according to their several rights under the testamentary deed. So far that is untouched again. The property itself—the heritable property—the corpus, is there left to go according to the deed, hitherto, we will say, untouched. But there is this material proviso, or condition, or modification, at the end—"but in so far as it is not inconsistent with, or does not contravene any thing hereinbefore or after contained." And therefore it amounts to this,—you have sold the parties that when this property in the first class is sold, the rents of the property in the second class shall go to the persons entitled. Then, when the property in the first class is paid, you shall convey the property in the second class to the persons entitled to it, as trustees. They would not get it before, but in trust as if they really were entitled. Now, these are the words "immediately and effectually." They anticipated that, notwithstanding the sale of the property in the first class, and the conveyance of the property in the second class, to those persons, a case might become necessary to sell the property in the second class, or might be thought desirable; and then, by the 6th clause, they gave the trustees power to the majority to bind the minority to sell that property which has not before been directed in the 5th clause to be conveyed to those parties. They give the right and the absolute power to the majority to bind the minority to sell that property, notwithstanding the 5th clause. It is clear, therefore, that the property might be sold, whether it was thought necessary or not. If necessary, surely to be sold; if desirable, in the view of the majority binding the minority, equally to be sold. Therefore, if that sale should take place, then that property at once becomes impressed with the character of personal estate, and, being impressed with that character from that moment it is to belong to the persons who are entitled to the personal estate, and not to the persons who would take it as real property. Then comes the last clause—it is plain enough. They say, whether there are children or not, in the event of your not having exercised that power which is given to you to sell the property in the second class before the expiry of the nineteen years, that is, the nineteen years pointed out by the will—to that extent, therefore, bowing to the will of the testator, and intending to carry his views into effect so far that it might remain for nineteen years, but upon the expiry of the nineteen years in the event of its not having been sold, then it is perfectly clear by the 7th clause, which is now under your lordships' consideration, that the property is absolutely to be sold without the power of any body to prevent that sale. The sale is imperative, and being so, from that moment the property is impressed with the character of personal estate. Now observe how the price of that property so sold is to be applied. It is to be applied in the payment of the debts, if any, which shall then remain. So that the parties anticipated that, even at that time, the debts might not have been paid by the application of the other estates and yet that the party entitled might not have thought fit to sell the estates in the second class. The estates in the second class are absolutely to be sold and the money is to be applied to the payment of the debts. The result therefore is, in the view which I take of this part of the case, that the decision of the court below is perfectly right as regards the corpus of the property. I think that the estates in the second class must be considered as personalty when they are absolutely to be sold. But I do not entertain the same opinion as regards the intermediate rents arising from them. It does not appear to me that there is anything in this deed of trust which converts the property from the time it is delegated by the trust so as by expression but not by implication, to give those rents to the parties as personal estate. If that is the true view, the result would be that as far as regards the rents till the sale or till the time arrives when the sale is directed those rents would go to the parties who would take them as real property the corpus of the estate itself not being there referred to. But as this point was not taken in the court below I will not advise your lordships to dispose of that point now, but reserve it for further consideration. Cur adv. vult.

Tuesday, Nov. 30.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—My lords I reserved for your lordships further consideration the question with regard to the rents until the time of conversion should have arrived having already stated the grounds on which it appeared to me that there was an absolute conversion at all events at the end of nineteen years. I have now looked with the greatest possible care at every word of the will and the deed of trust with a view to the point thus reserved. I think it very far from clear upon the will that there was an absolute conversion as regards so much of the property as might have remained unsold for the purposes of the debts and so on. But I do not think it necessary to pronounce any opinion upon that instrument, because I am clearly of opinion that the case depends upon the deed of trust and in that deed there is not a single word which I can find which amounts to an absolute conversion before the period of nineteen years shall have elapsed. There may be before that period a conversion for certain purposes, but if there should be no such conversion (with which your lordships will not interfere), then the conversion will take place from that particular period. But, in the meantime, the rents and rents are to be disposed of with the greatest possible care, and the estate itself is directed to be conveyed in trust for the parties who are to receive the rents. I think it is perfectly clear that, till the time specified, there is no absolute conversion. What I propose to your lordships therefore is, that there should be an affirmance of the interlocutor complained of, with this variation, namely, that there should be a declaration that there is no absolute conversion of the Buchanan-street and Carlton-place property till the expiration of nineteen years, unless, under the other provisions in the second deed, an actual sale shall occur, in which case the conversion is to be deemed to have taken place from the time of that sale. With that variation, I propose to your lordships to affirm the interlocutor complained of; but, as a question of [illegible] is involved, and as a variation must be made in the interlocutor, there will be no costs on either side.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Reported by C. E. Rundle, Esq., of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law.

Saturday, Dec. 16.

Statute of Limitations—Annuities secured by [illegible] years—Arrears of annuity—Recovery of [illegible] of Young, Lord Waterpark, and Hunter v. [illegible] olds, considered

A general devise and bequest of freehold and [illegible] estate to trustees, their heirs, &c. to the use [illegible] of the testator's son and daughters, R., A., and [illegible] might during their joint lives take certain rent-[illegible] and that after the decease of either the [illegible] might take a rent-charge of 900l. per annum [illegible] during their joint lives, and that after the [illegible] two the last survivor might take a rent-charge [illegible] per annum for life, with powers of distress [illegible] and subject thereto to trustees for a term of [illegible] nine years, in trust for better securing the rent-[illegible] by usual means, without any trusts further, but with a provision that upon satisfaction of the trusts the term should cease, with further limitations, under which S. (since deceased) was, and R. S. is, tenant for life in possession. By a codicil, the testator bequeathed an additional 100l. per annum to each of his daughters A. and M. for life, with a provision that after the death of either her annuity should go to the survivor for her life, and which annual sums were charged and made payable by reference in the same manner with those given by the will. R. died in 1838, and A. in 1838. From the former to the latter period M. received only 300l. a-year. From the death of A. to the institution of this suit she had received only 400l. a-year. On a bill filed by her against the personal representatives of S. and against R. S., as defendants, for the arrears of the several annuities to which she was entitled as well under the will as under the codicil of the testator

Held, that the statute of limitations did not apply.

So long as the legal estate on a term remains unbarred, and the trustee can obtain possession, the right of the cestui que trust is not barred

The question in this case was, for what period of time an annuitant was entitled to recover the arrears of several annuities.

The point was originally brought before the Master of the Rolls, but in consequence of the supposed conflicting opinions of Lord Lyndhurst in the case of Young v. Lord Waterpark, 13 Sim. 199, and (on appeal) 1 Dr. & W. 68, C., and Lord Cottenham in that of Hunter v. Nockolds, 1 Mac. & Gor. 640, the case was heard before the full Court of Appeal.

The facts were shortly these:—Robert Kilby, by his will bearing date the 19th day of May, 1820, gave, devised and bequeathed all his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates to trustees upon trust, that his son Robert Kilby, thereinafter called Robert Kilby Cox, the son, and his daughters Alicia Mary Cox and the plaintiff Mary Ann Cox, and their respective assigns should and might enjoy, have, receive, and take out of the rents, issues, and profits of the said estate one clear yearly rent-charge of 200l. each during their joint natural lives, and that upon the decease of any one of them, the two survivors and their respective assigns might have, receive, and take thereout one clear yearly rent-charge of 300l. each during their joint natural lives, and after the decease of either of them then that the ultimate survivor of them, and his or her assigns, might have, receive, and take thereout one clear yearly rent-charge of 300l. during his or her natural life, the said several yearly rent-charges to be paid and payable at the said testator's said son and daughters respectively at the times therein mentioned, with powers of distress and entry for enforcing the due payment of the said rent-charges respectively as were usual in cases of nonpayment of rent reserved on common demises, and subject thereto, to the use of trustees, their executors, administrators, and assigns, for the term of ninety-nine years, to be computed from the time of his (the said testator's) decease, upon trust for better securing the due payment of the said rent-charges respectively, and subject thereto to uses in strict settlement under which Samuel Cox the son was tenant for life in possession, and under which Richard Snead Cox was now tenant for life in possession. By a codicil dated 23rd of October, 1827, he gave, devised, and bequeathed to each of his daughters Alicia Mary Cox and Mary Ann Cox, and their respective assigns, for and during their respective natural lives, one further annual sum or yearly rent-charge of 100l. sterling, to be issuing out of and charged and chargeable upon all and every his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates, to be raised by the trustees, of the term of ninety-nine years, and to be paid and payable at the same times; and the said testator did [illegible] that his daughters and trustees [illegible] same powers and remedies for [illegible] paying payment thereof [illegible] will were mentioned [illegible] annuities of 200*l.*, therein respectively given to the said daughters; and after the decease of either of them the said testator thereby gave to the survivor of them and her assigns for her life the additional money of 100*l.* thereby given to such one of his daughters as should first depart this life, with the same powers and authorities as were thereinbefore given for the recovery thereof, and to be secured to them as the other annuities were secured; and the said testator did thereby declare that the said annuities so given to such one of his daughters as aforesaid should be over and above and besides all other annuities or bequests given to them respectively by the said will; and in the event of the deaths of both his sons, Samuel and Robert Kilby, without leaving issue male inheritable under the devises in his said will, the said testator did thereupon and immediately from and after the happening of such event, in and by his said codicil, give, devise, and bequeath, unto his said daughters Alicia Mary Cox and Mary Ann Cox, and their respective assigns, for and during their respective natural lives, one further annual sum or yearly rent-charge of 100*l.* each, to be issuing out of and charged and raisable in like manner, and with the like powers as were declared of the before-mentioned additional annuities of 100*l.* each thereinbefore given to them; and after the decease of either of them, the said testator thereby gave to the survivor of them and her assigns during her life such last-mentioned additional annuity of 100*l.* thereby lastly given to such one of his daughters as should first depart this life, with the same powers and remedies as were thereinbefore given for recovering the same; and the said testator did thereby appoint said Alicia Mary Cox to be his executrix jointly with his said two sons, Samuel Cox and Robert Kilby Cox.

The testator died in 1829; R. K. Cox, the son, in 1832, a widower, and without having had any issue; A. M. Cox died in 1838; Samuel Cox, the son, died in 1851, a widower, and without having had any issue. Of his will he appointed the defendants, Dolman and Witham, executors.

In 1852 the plaintiff, M. A. Cox, filed her bill, alleging that, upon the decease of the testator, she was entitled to the annual rent-charges of 200*l.* and 100*l.* under his will and codicil; that, upon the decease of R. K. Cox, the son, she became entitled to a rent-charge of 300*l.* in lieu of the 200*l.*; that, upon the death of A. M. Cox, to 400*l.* in lieu of the 300*l.* and also to the rent-charge of 100*l.* in addition to that of 100*l.* charged and secured by the codicil; and that, upon the decease of Samuel Cox, the son, she became entitled to two further and additional annual rent-charges of 100*l.* each, in addition to the two first-mentioned charges devised to her. It appeared that Samuel Cox, from the death of R. K. Cox, the son, to the death of A. M. Cox, paid to the plaintiff the annual sum of 300*l.* only; and from the death of A. M. Cox to December 1850 400*l.* in respect of the annuity contained in the will; and that none of the charges to which she was entitled after the death of R. K. Cox, the son, during the life of S. Cox, the testator under the codicil, were paid or had ever been received, but that the whole of such last-mentioned rent-charges remained unpaid; that the plaintiff was until after the death of S. Cox, in total ignorance of her right to receive any further or other sums than those which she had received. The bill prayed that the general assets of Samuel Cox, the son, and also the growing and future rents and profits of the estates devised by the original testator's will, might be made liable to make good the unsatisfied demands, &c. of the plaintiff.

Rundell Palmer (with him J. A. Cooke) contended that the plaintiff could claim the whole of the arrears. Certain estates were devised to trustees for a term of ninety-nine years, to raise and pay by sale or mortgage annuities, among which was the one to the plaintiff, and which was of a fluctuating character, with a power of distress and entry; and, subject to the payment of the annuities, the estates were given to certain persons as tenants for life in succession. That term was now subsisting, to the benefit of which the plaintiff was entitled. For a series of nearly twenty years the plaintiff had by mistake, arising from the varying limitation in the will, received 200*l.* a-year less than she was entitled to in respect of her annuity. The first tenant for life of the estates was dead, and the second was now in possession, and the plaintiff, upon discovering the mistake, claimed the whole of the arrears of her annuity, and instituted the present suit to enforce such claim. Her right was not barred by the statute. Sects. 40 and 42 were not applicable. They relied on the 25th section, and on the authority of Young v. Lord Waterpark.

Campbell and Bagshawe, jun., for the executors of the deceased tenant for life, contended that the 42nd section of the Act was in the most general terms, and that the express trusts mentioned in the 25th section referred only to questions between a trustee and cestui que trust.

C. P. Cooper and Cory appeared for the present tenant for life.

The following cases were cited:—Ward v. Arch, 12 Sc. 472; Raven Croft v. Frisby, 1 Coll. 16; Harrison v. Duignan, 2 Ir. Ch. R. W. 295; Hughes v. Kelly, 3 Dr. & War. 462; De Visme v. Lee, 2 Hare, 186; Gough v. Bult, 17 L. J. 486; Chappell v. Rose, 10 Law T. Rep. 57; Law v. Bagwell, 4 Dr. & W. 598.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I do not see that there is any difficulty in this case. It is not possible to distinguish it from that of Young v. Lord Waterpark, and there the point is clearly settled. I have had to consider points of this kind on more than one occasion, but the exact question which has here been raised has not been brought before me for decision. It appears to be settled law, that while the legal estate in a term remains unbarred and uncalled-in, and is still vested in the trustee who may obtain possession and so execute the trusts of the will, the estate of that trustee is not barred; and if the estate of the trustee is not barred, the right of the cestui que trust also is not barred. It has not been denied that the term is a valid and subsisting one, and if an argument had been offered as tending to prove the contrary, it would not have succeeded. The trustees can now enter and execute the trusts of the will; as soon as they recover possession they will be in a condition to execute them fully and raise the entire arrears of the annuity. I do not mean to say that a case may not occur in which a term may be barred and the arrears of an annuity lost, but that is not the question in the present case. The term is subsisting, parts of the annuity have already been raised, and it has been by accident only that the whole trust has not been executed. The cases which have been referred to do not apply to the question here raised, nor do they militate against the rule which was laid down in Young v. Lord Waterpark. With that case I entirely agree. Upon principle, and upon authority too, the plaintiff is entitled to have the whole arrears of her annuities paid. I do not think that the Statute of Limitations can possibly be made applicable to this case. The 40th and 42nd sections of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, are immaterial, because they are not applicable; but the 25th section seems to meet this very case: "When any land or rent shall be vested in a trustee upon any express trust, the right of the cestui que trust or any person claiming through him to bring a suit against the trustee, or any person claiming through him to recover such land or rent, shall be deemed to have first accrued, according to the meaning of the Act, at and not before the time at which such land or rent shall have been conveyed to a purchaser for a valuable consideration, and shall then be deemed to have accrued only as against such purchaser and any person claiming through him." So far from there being any such adverse title, the estates have been and are still held subject to the term of ninety-nine years; and the plaintiff, therefore, for whose benefit the term was created, possesses all the rights and is entitled to every benefit under it. These rights are unaffected by the statute. I am of opinion (and I have also the concurrent opinion of the Lords Justices) that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the whole arrears of her annuities.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

March 13, 18, 19, and April 2.

EDWARDS v. BURT.

Vendor and purchaser—Reversionary interest—Inadequacy of value.

A purchaser by private contract of a reversionary interest, or at all events the purchaser of such an interest from an expectant heir, or some persons standing in the situation of an expectant heir, is bound, if the transaction is impeached within a reasonable time, to satisfy the court that he gave the fair market value for what he purchased:

Held, therefore, overruling the decision of the court below, that, the purchaser not having shown that he gave an adequate consideration for a reversionary interest, the sale must be set aside.

It is not necessary, in order to sustain the sale of a reversionary interest, that it should take place by public auction. If previously to the sale of a reversionary interest, the vendor and purchaser concur in ascertaining from persons of competent skill, and having knowledge of the property, and of all the circumstances likely to influence its value, a well-considered estimate of what the property would fetch on a sale, and act on that opinion, such transaction would not afterwards be impeachable merely because other surveyors should come to a conclusion different from that on which the parties have acted. The court would probably in such a case be much inclined, as a matter of fact, to believe the original and not the subsequent estimate to be correct.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Master of the Rolls, dismissing the bill filed by James Edwards, and Harriet his wife, for the purpose of setting aside two sales by private contract of reversionary life interests, expectant on the decease of Mary Compton, the mother of Harriet Edwards, to the defendant, a solicitor, on the ground of inadequacy of price and undue influence. The defendant, it appeared had formerly acted as solicitor for the appellants, who were in very humble and distressed circumstances.

The facts are stated in the judgment.

Anderson and Cogland, for the appellants, contended that, according to the evidence of the defendant's witnesses, he had not given a fair value on either of the two purchases; but even assuming that the value was doubtful, the appellants were entitled to a decree in their favour, as the rule of reversionary interests the onus lay on the purchaser by private contract to show that he had given a fair value: (Edwards v. Browne, 2 Coll. 100.) Moreover in this case there was this additional element to be taken into consideration, the purchaser was a solicitor, and had formerly acted in that capacity for the appellants, who were in distressed circumstances, which might be easily seen from the way in which the purchase-money had been paid to them by the defendant, who had, instead of handing it over to them in one sum, doled it out by instalments: (Lord Portmore v. Taylor, 4 Sim. 182, 212, 216.) However, where there was undervalue, it was not necessary to prove distress: (Potts v. Curtis, You. 548; Shelly v. Nash, 3 Madd. 232; Peacock v. Evans, 16 Ves. 512; Lord Aldborough v. Trye, 7 C. & F. 436.)

Bethell, Roundell Palmer, and Greene, for the respondent, contended that the value of the property sold by the appellants was less, in consequence of their not being able to show a title, or make out an abstract. [Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—The will under which the property was devised is dated so far back, it seems, as the 21st April, 1825, and possession has been held according to the will. The deeds would necessarily be in the possession of the tenant for life, Mrs. Compton, unless she had mortgaged her interest. The difficulty or inability of making out an abstract must exist in most sales of reversionary interests.] Fraud, moreover, ought to be inferred from the lowness of the price: (Chesterfield v. Jannssen, 2 Ves. 125, 157.) They also cited Mack v. Attwood, 5 Ves. 845; Headen v. Rosher, 1 M'C. & Y. 89.

Anderson, in reply, contended that in these cases it made no difference whether the property, the sale of which was attempted to be set aside, was a vested or contingent reversionary interest, Aldborough v. Trye, 7 C. & F. 436; Portmore v. Taylor, Sim. 803; and the rule as to the onus of proving the adequacy of price was not confined to expectant heirs, but it include reversioners, though in this case the plaintiff, Mrs. Edwards, was heir of her mother, Mrs. Compton, the tenant for life: (Peacock v. Evans, 16 Ves. 512). As to costs, Gwynne v. Heaton, and Lord Portmore v. Taylor, were cited.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—The bill filed in this cause seeks to set aside two sales made, one in the month of October 1846, and the other in Feb. 1848, being sales by the plaintiff to the defendant of the reversionary life estate of the plaintiff, Mrs. Edwards, in some real property at Reigate. The interest of Mrs. Edwards was derived under the will of John Carter, who died in 1825. Under that will Mary Compton, the mother of Mrs. Edwards, was tenant for life of the property in question, with remainder to Mrs. Edwards for her life; and in the month of October 1846 Mrs. Compton was seventy-four years of age, and Mrs. Edwards thirty-eight. The relief is sought on the ground that the plaintiffs had been induced to part with their reversion at materially less than the fair value, so that this court ought not to allow the transaction to stand. The bill alleges further, that at the time of these sales the defendant was acting as solicitor of the plaintiffs, and so exercised an influence over them; and it suggests circumstances of undue pressure on the part of the defendant, which, independently of the question of value, might entitle the plaintiffs to relief; but, as we intimated at the hearing, those allegations and suggestions are not established by the evidence, and the case must, therefore, be considered merely with reference to the point of value. The doctrine on this head of equity has been the subject of frequent discussion in modern times, from the decisions of Peacock v. Evans, 16 Ves. 512, and Gowland v. De Faria, 17 Ves. 20, before Sir William Grant, down to that of Edwards v. Browne, 2 Coll. 100, before my learned brother; but it is unnecessary now to canvass or discuss the principle, for the rule on this subject was finally and distinctly established by the House of Lords in Lord Aldborough v. Trye, 7 C. & F. 436; and that case, following several of the previous authorities, clearly establishes that the purchaser of a reversionary interest, or at all events the purchaser of such an interest from an expectant heir, or from a person standing in the situation of an expectant heir (and the plaintiff, Mrs. Edwards, clearly sustained that character), is bound, if the transaction is impeached within a reasonable time, to satisfy the court that he gave the fair market value for what he purchased. Applying then that rule to the facts now before us, what we have to determine is, whether the case furnishes evidence to satisfy us that 250*l.* was the fair market value of the reversionary interest sold in 1846, and 300*l.* with the additional 50*l.* payable contingently, a fair and sufficient price for the reversion sold in 1848. We think that the case does not furnish such evidence. With respect to the property disposed of in the first purchase, the evidence of Mr. Hall, one of the plaintiff's witnesses, stated that the market value, if it had been sold in 1846 by public auction, would have been 500*l.* As Mr. Crawter, the other surveyor examined on behalf of the plaintiff, puts the value much higher, namely, at 840*l.* Both these witnesses are surveyors of experience, well acquainted with the property, so that they had the best means of forming a correct judgment. They certainly differ widely in their estimates, but the question is not whether, on their testimony, we should be prepared to say we were satisfied that the value was such as they represent, but whether, in the face of their evidence, we can say we are satisfied that the price actually paid (namely, 250*l.*) was the fair value. In order to enable us to do so, the defendant has examined two surveyors (Mr. Shuttleworth and Mr. Marsh); and they, treating this property, not as it actually existed at the time of the sale, but as a well-secured annuity of the same yearly value as the actual rent, say that its market value was 318*l.* according to Mr. Shuttleworth, or 321*l.* according to Mr. Marsh. It thus appears that, according to the defendant's own witnesses, the price paid (250*l.*) was less by about 70*l.* than the fair market value, being a deficiency of above one-fourth of the actual consideration. We have not forgotten the argument of the defendant's counsel, that some deduction ought in fairness to be made from the estimate of his surveyors, in consequence of their not having taken into consideration the perishable nature of a large portion of the property, consisting as it does in part of a pottery, and the want of repair in which the buildings are represented to have been. But this is not a matter which can be justly insisted on by the defendant. He is himself an inhabitant of Reigate, and must have been perfectly acquainted with the property. The burden is on him to show that 250*l.* was the fair market value; and it would be contrary to all principle that he should be allowed to abstain from examining (as he might easily have done) persons of skill acquainted with the property, and then call on the court to make such deductions from the estimates of those whom he produces, in consequence of their imperfect acquaintance with the subject-matter of their testimony. Considering then that, according to the evidence on the part of the plaintiff, unsatisfactory as we conceive that evidence to be, the sum paid was less than half the market value, and that the defendant has offered no sufficient evidence to show that he paid the full value, we have come to the conclusion that this transaction cannot stand. The case as to the second transaction, i. e. the sale of Mrs. Edwards' life interest in the house and land let on lease to Mrs. Wood, is not perhaps so clear, but still we think that the defendant has failed to make out, as he was bound to do, that 500*l.* with an additional 50*l.* to be paid on the death of Mrs. Compton if she should die within ten years, was the fair market value. The property sold was Mrs Edwards' reversionary life interest in a house and land let to Mrs. Wood on a lease for twenty-one years commencing in 1840. The tenant appears on the evidence to have laid out money in improving the house; and the uncontradicted evidence of the plaintiff's surveyors goes to show that the property, if now to be let on lease, would probably yield a much higher rent, one of the surveyors puts the value at 120*l.* per annum, the other as high as 160*l.* It is impossible not to infer from this that the subject-matter of the sale in 1848 was a perfectly well-secured annuity of 100*l.* per annum for thirteen years, with a probability of a material increase at the expiration of Mrs. Wood's lease in 1861. Now one of the plaintiff's surveyors estimates the market value of the reversionary life interest of Mrs. Edwards in this property at 1,100*l.*, the other at 900*l.* They distinctly give those sums as the amount which, in their judgment, the property would have realised on a sale by auction. Mr. Smith, the actuary of the Eagle Office, states the calculated value of the interest sold, treating it as a well secured annuity of 100*l.* per annum, to be 870*l.*, from which, however, he says one-third ought to be deducted in estimating the probable result of a sale, thus making the true market value 580*l.*, being 80*l.* less than the defendant was under any circumstances to pay, and 80*l.* less than he was to pay if Mrs. Compton had lived for ten years. Now in this evidence we make the same observations as on that relating to the other property, namely, that if the question had been whether the plaintiffs had satisfied us what the true value of the property was, we should have been unable to answer in the affirmative. Neither Mr. Nash nor Mr. Crawter explains the ground on which his opinions are formed, the difference between the sums which the one and the other state as being the true market value is considerable, the one putting it at two-thirds higher than the other. And there certainly is nothing to show that they were aware of the existence of a lease for twenty-one years from 1840, at a rent of 100*l.* a year. The actuary puts the calculated value, treating the property as a mere annuity, at 80*l.* less than the estimate of the lowest value as given by the surveyors. If therefore we had to say on the plaintiff's evidence what the fair market value was in 1848, the time of the sale, we should have felt great difficulty in coming to any satisfactory conclusion. But it is not our province to decide what the value was; all we have to say is whether the defendant has made out that 500*l.* with 50*l.* additional in the event of Mrs. Compton dying in ten years, was the fair market value. This we think is not made out. The evidence of the plaintiff's two surveyors taking a mean between them makes the value 1,000*l.* i.e. doubles the price actually paid,—a difference which it is impossible to explain by any suggestion that they might not have been aware of Mrs. Wood's lease. The value of the property calculated by an actuary, treating it as a mere annuity of 100*l.* per annum, is fixed by him at 870*l.*; but in coming to this conclusion he certainly did not take into account the probable rise in the value at the end of thirteen years from 1848, when the lease to Mrs. Wood would expire. On the contrary, the defendant says that one reason why the actuary put the market value at only two-thirds of the calculated value was the risk that there might be a loss of rent in case the property should be unlet; he also relied on the expenses of repairs, insurance, and other outgoings incident to house property. Whether these were expenses to be borne by Mrs. Wood, the tenant, was not shown. The defendant's evidence on the subject of the value of this property consisted of the testimony given by Mr. Shuttleworth and Mr. Nash, the same gentlemen who were examined as to the sale in 1846. They agree in fixing the market value at 475*l.* or 476*l.*, plainly treating the subject-matter which they were employed to value as a mere well-secured annuity, worth 44 years' purchase. It is to be regretted that the defendant did not, instead of resting on the mere speculative opinions of London surveyors, recur to competent persons on the spot, who would evidently, from local knowledge, have had much better means of judging of value than could possibly be possessed by persons, however eminent, who, as far as appears, never saw the property in their lives. The evidence of the surveyors examined by the plaintiffs is at least the evidence of persons who knew the property well, and so had the means of forming a correct judgment. One of them, Mr. Nash, says, that the market value on a sale was 900*l.*; thus agreeing very nearly with the calculated value 870*l.* as given by the actuary. It is true that the actuary said that the market value was not more than two-thirds of the calculated value; but then he gives as his reason for that opinion that the nature of the property was such as to make it liable to certain risks and outgoings, which, perhaps, witnesses acquainted with the neighbourhood, and with the circumstances of the case, might have known to be entitled to little or no attention, and in fact might consider to be more than compensated by the probable rise in value, at the end of the twenty-one years' term That the defendant himself places little reliance on the testimony of his own surveyors may be fairly inferred from his answer, for he states that he believes the value of the property was 580*l.*, not 475*l.* or 476*l.* as estimated by his surveyors. And even if 580*l.* was the true market value, the sum paid was still too small, for the difference between 580*l.* and 500*l.* with an additional 50*l.* payable only on a contingency, is not to be disregarded. Contrasting, then, the evidence of the value given by the defendant with that of the plaintiffs, we have come to the conclusion that the defendant has not, as he was bound to do, shown that the consideration given on occasion of this second purchase was the fair market value at the time of the sale, and, he having failed to show this, the transaction cannot stand. It was contended that as to both transactions some deduction ought to be made in estimating the price which could probably have been obtained, by reason of the inability of the plaintiffs to furnish an abstract. This circumstance is alluded to by Mrs. Edwards, in her first letter to the defendant, but no one afterwards appears to have paid any regard to it. In truth, persons selling reversionary interests seldom can be in a position to produce title-deeds, or to furnish a perfect abstract. But the testator, under whose will the vendors derived their title to the property sold, had been dead above twenty years; possession had, no doubt, gone since his death in conformity with the devises contained in the will; the will seems to be that of a person who had been an established resident at Reigate, and who had acquired considerable property in and near that place, and who himself occupied the house now let to Mrs. Wood. In all probability, therefore, the inability of the plaintiffs to furnish an abstract was not considered by any one as a circumstance really calculated to influence the saleable value. It was then urged upon us that, if we should set aside the present transactions on the ground of undervalue, we should in effect be deciding that no sale of a reversion can be sustained unless it be made by public auction. This we certainly do not mean to decide. But here not only the sale was not a sale by auction, but no effectual steps were taken to acquire a knowledge of the market value before the bargains were completed. As to the first transaction, no steps whatever were taken. As to the second, nothing was done except to obtain the opinion of an actuary, and such an opinion is evidently unsatisfactory with reference to the local circumstances likely to influence market value. Indeed, on such a subject, an actuary is by no means the best authority to refer to. If, previously to the sale of a reversionary interest, the vendor and purchaser concur in ascertaining from persons of competent skill, and having knowledge of the circumstances of all the circumstances likely to influence value, a well-considered estimate of what the property is worth, the Master, to whom on a sale, and not on these opinions, we can see no meaning to decide that such a transaction could be afterwards impeached, merely because subsequent purveyors should come to a conclusion different from that on which the parties had acted. The court would probably in such a case be much inclined, as a matter of fact, to believe the original and not the subsequent estimate to be correct; but nothing of the sort is contended here, and we advert to the point only to explain that we do not concur in the suggestion that no sale of a reversionary interest otherwise than by auction could be sustained. We think that neither of the sales impeached by the present bill can be supported, not because they were sales by private contract, but because, it being incumbent on the defendant to show that the price given by him was the fair market value, he has failed in doing so. We thus come to a result not conformable to that at which the Master of the Rolls arrived; and this can hardly be matter of surprise on a doubtful question of fact, such as that of market value, which different minds may naturally view in very different lights. The consequence of our conclusion at which we have thus arrived is, that the two sales must be set aside, and it must be declared that the deeds ought to stand only as a security to the defendant for the sums actually advanced by him, including, according to what was consented to by Mr. Anderson at the hearing, the money advanced for premiums on the policies of assurance, with interest, at the rate of 5*l.* per cent., that being the rate generally given in cases like the present. The defendant is entitled to his costs of the suit, except the costs of such of the depositions as relate to the state and value of the property. These costs have been incurred in an endeavour to prove what the defendant has failed to make out, and no costs should be given on either side on this part of the case; but the rest of the rest of the costs was occasioned by the unfounded charges in the bill, imputing to the defendant undue influence and pressure on the plaintiffs. Subject to the foregoing declaration the plaintiffs must have the decree usual in such cases, treating the defendant as liable to account for the rents on the footing of his being a mortgagee in possession; and on payment to the defendant of the balance found due to him he must reconvey the property comprised in both deeds, and assign the policies to the plaintiffs. If both parties prefer to have a sale that course may be pursued; but that can only be done by arrangement.

Lee v. Bush.

Will, construction of—Implication, what constitutes a gift to children by.

A. devised her residuary real estate to the sons of her relative B. successively in tail male, with remainder in default of issue male of the sons to the only daughter of B. in tail male, with remainder in default of issue male of the daughter of B. to the testatrix's relative C. in fee simple. She then bequeathed her residuary personal estate upon trust for A.; but if he should die in her lifetime without leaving any child or children him surviving, then in trust for B. A. died in the lifetime of the testatrix, leaving children:

Held, affirming the decision of the court below, that the children of B. did not under the will take any interest in the personal estate by implication.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Master of the Rolls dismissing the claim of the plaintiffs, who contended that they took by implication as residuary legatees of the testatrix. By her will dated the 27th of August, 1847, the testatrix, after specifically devising certain real estates to her relative John Lee, his heirs and assigns, and giving legacies to different persons, gave and devised all her messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments not hereinbefore specifically devised unto C. B. Lee (one of the sons of the said John Lee by Maria his wife) for the natural life of him the said C. B. Lee; and from and after his decease she devised the said last-mentioned hereditament (except as aforesaid) to the issue in tail male in succession of the said C. B. Lee, with remainder on failure of issue of the said C. B. Lee to every other son of the said John Lee and Maria his wife in succession and his issue in tail male, with remainder, on failure of such issue, to the only daughter of the said John Lee and Maria his wife, and her issue male in succession, so that every elder son of the said daughter of the said John Lee and his issue male might be preferred to every younger son and his issue male, according to seniority, in tail male, with an ultimate remainder, on failure of such issue, to the testatrix's relation Charles Lee, his heirs and assigns. Finally, the testatrix gave and bequeathed all the residue of her personal estate and effects to her said executors and trustees, upon trust to convert the same into money and stand possessed thereof upon the following trusts, viz., "upon trust for my relation John Lee; but if he shall die in my lifetime, without leaving any child or children him surviving," then I direct child the residue of my said trust-moneys shall be invested for the said Charles Lee."

COURT OF APPEAL.

John Lee died in the lifetime of the testatrix, leaving five children, who, after the decease of the testatrix, filed the present claim against the executors and trustees, and they claimed, according to the proper construction to be put upon the will, to be entitled to the testatrix's residuary personal estate by implication. His Honour, in dismissing the claim, said that the case was expressly decided by the authorities, which rendered it impossible for him to hold that the children took anything by implication. He could not give to the same words a different construction when used in relation to a residue from that which he should when applied to a simple legacy. That the testatrix knew how to express a gift to the children, for she had done it in the case of the real estate. That words might possibly have been left out but it was not the province of the court to supply them, and thus make a will for the testator.

Rowsell Palmer, Terrell, and Grensid, for the appellants, the children of John Lee, contended that they must take by implication, as it was clearly the intention of the testatrix that the residue should not go to Charles unless John Lee died without leaving children. That the testatrix intended to prefer the children of John Lee to other persons was apparent from the limitations in the will of the residuary real estate. This construction was supported by many authorities, as Littlecottier v. Tracy, 3 Atk. 796; Crowder v. Clowes, 2 Ves. jun. 449; Wainewright v. Wainewright, 3 Ves. 558; Harman v. Dickenson, 1 Bro. C. C. 91. The case of Ex parte Rogers, 2 Madd. 449, was exactly in point. In that case the testator, having by his will bequeathed 1,000*l.* to his niece A., by a codicil, reciting that she had married indiscreetly and that he intended to withdraw the legacy out of her power to dispose of it and out of the power of her husband so to do, did therefore direct his executors to secure his said niece the interest of the said 1,000*l.* independently of her husband, by placing out that sum in trust for his niece; she to enjoy the interest or dividends during her life, and at her decease without child or children, the principal and interest to be divided among such of her sisters as should be then living. Sir Thomas Plumer, M.R. thought that by the combined effect of the will and codicil he was justified in saying that the children took the legacy by necessary implication at the death of the mother. [Lord Justice Lord Cranworth.—I am disposed to think there was more in the case of Ex parte Rogers than what appears in Mr. Maddock's report. Let the order be brought from the office.] The Master of the Rolls had relied upon the authority of Andree v. Ward, 1 Rus. 261, Greene v. Ward, 1 Rus. 262; Randagh v. Randagh, 12 Beav. 200; and Cooper v. Pitcher, 4 Hare, 180; but in those cases the events specified were failure of issue either generally or of a particular marriage; and it is clear that such events were less favourable to the construction by way of implication than where, as in the present case, it has reference to a failure of children. That those cases, moreover, were gifts of legacies, while this was a gift of a residue, and the result of holding that the appellants did not take by implication would, in effect, be to adopt a mode of construction which would lead to an intestacy, which the court, according to the well-known rule, always endeavoured to lean against. [Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—The meaning of the term "leaning against intestacy" is this—not that the court abhors intestacy, but that it infers it to be probable that where a man makes his will he intends to dispose of the whole of his property.] The appellants claimed the benefit of such an inference. The court ought, however, to supply words which have evidently been omitted by the testator, as in this case is clear from the context and the general scheme of the will: (Forth v. Chapman, 1 P. Wms. 663; Papillon v. Voice, 2 P. Wms. 471; Wookley dem. Knight v. Rugg, 7 T. R. 822; Clarke v. Lubbock, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 492; Cockshott v. Cockshott, 2 Coll. 432, were also cited.)

Bethell, Faber, and T. W. Greene, for the executors, were not called upon.

Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—If this will is to be construed according to the rules of grammar, sense, and idiom, it is a case of intestacy. It is therefore incumbent on those who allege that it is not a case of intestacy to show it from the whole will, and also to show what is the particular course of devolution in which the property, as to which there is no intestacy, is to go. Now, assuming for the purpose of the argument, but only for that purpose, that the will does exhibit an intention that, in the events which have occurred, there should not be an intestacy, we must then consider the question, what is the mode of gift which this will demonstrates, or which is to be implied? I confess that, even on the assumption which I have mentioned, I think it impossible to say with anything like—I do not say certainty, but reasonable probability, whether the gift is to the personal representatives of John Lee or to his children: and, further, that even on that most favourable assumption to the plaintiffs, it is impossible to say that here has been anything but intestacy. In saying that, I do not wish to be understood as intimating anything to prejudice the claim of the personal representatives of John Lee, if they think proper to bring one forward.

Lord Justice Lord Cranworth.—I am compelled, though with reluctance, to express the same opinion. I only wish that, before the final determination of the case, the report of Ex parte Rogers could have been tested by comparison with the Registrar's book. That case is reported by Maddock, not in its regular course, but in a note at the end of the volume; and I have never felt quite certain that, upon investigation, there might not turn out to be more in the case than appears on the face of the report. Assuming the report, however, to be perfectly accurate, still I do not look upon it as an authority governing the present case; and for this reason, that the party to whom in that case a life interest was given survived the testator. That is quite sufficient to distinguish the two cases. I think the present a clear case of intestacy, but without meaning by that statement in any way to prejudice the case as against the personal representatives of John Lee.

Appeal dismissed, with costs out of the personal estate.

BOWLEN v. PRICE.

New Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 12—Orders 7th August, 1852, 17, 18—Delivery of interrogatories.

Delivery of interrogatories for the examination of a defendant need not be made to his solicitor personally, under the 12th section of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, and the 17th and 18th orders of 7th August, 1852; it will be sufficient if the delivery be made at the office of the solicitor.

W. Morris made an application to their lordships in this case, as to the course to be adopted under the 12th section of the Act for the Improvement of the Jurisdiction of Equity (15 & 16 Vict. c. 86), where interrogatories are directed to be "delivered to the defendant or his solicitor." The question was, whether the interrogatories must necessarily be delivered to the solicitor personally, or whether delivery at the office of the solicitor, in the same manner as notices of motion, petitions, and other proceedings, would not be sufficient. The 12th section is as follows: "Within a time to be limited by a general order of the Lord Chancellor in that behalf, the plaintiff in any suit in the said court commenced by bill may, if he requires an answer from any defendant thereto, file in the record office of the said court interrogatories for the examination of the defendant or defendants, or such of them from whom he shall require an answer, and deliver to the defendant or defendants so required to answer, or to his or their solicitors, a copy of such interrogatories, or of such of them as shall be applicable to the particular defendant or defendants; and no defendant shall be called upon or required to put in any answer to a bill unless interrogatories shall have been so filed, and a copy thereof delivered to him or his solicitor, within the time so to be limited, or within such further time as the court shall think fit to direct." Similar language as to delivery to the defendant or his solicitor is also made use of in the 17th and 18th of the Orders of 7th August, 1852. Sir Richard Kindersley, who had consulted the other Vice-Chancellors upon the point, thought that the words of the Act and Order ought to be construed strictly, and that personal service of the interrogatories either upon the defendant or his solicitor was absolutely necessary.

Lord Justice Knight Bruce said that he should have been disposed to think that service at the office of the solicitor would be quite sufficient. To hold to the contrary would lead to great inconvenience; for instance, if the solicitor was ill in bed, or absent on professional business, on circuit or otherwise. If the interrogatories were left at the place where any other documents of a similar character could be left and be so deemed to be well delivered or served, it seemed, with great deference to the Vice-Chancellors, difficult to say that the delivery of the interrogatories at the solicitor's office was not a proper delivery. His Lordship then said he would consider the matter further.

Lord Justice Lord Cranworth said that it appeared to him that to hold that the delivery must be to the solicitor personally, might and would lead to as much inconvenience to one side as the other; that there must be numerous instances in which the delivery would have to be made at Lancaster or Newcastle, or some other distant part of the country; that their Lordships would not now decide the point; and that after what they had said upon it another application had better be made to the Vice-Chancellor Kindersley.

The Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, the reporter has been informed, acted upon the opinion of their lordships by holding a delivery of the interrogatories at the office of the solicitor of the defendant, to be sufficient.

Price v. Wisden.

Specific performance—Lease for a term with option to purchase absolutely on notice—Abandonment of contract—Time of the essence of the contract—Acceptance of title—Waiver.

The plaintiff being in occupation of certain premises belonging to the defendant, entered into an agreement with the defendant on the 2nd of April, 1846, to hire of him the premises in question at a rental of 100l. a year, and to pay down 65l., the plaintiff to have the right of purchasing the premises upon title within nine years at the price of 2,500l. in addition to the 65l., on giving three months' notice of his intention so to do. The plaintiff accordingly gave notice on the 14th of May, 1850. On the 4th September the defendant complained of delay in completing the purchase, and on the 3rd November gave him notice that unless he completed in six weeks he should consider the contract abandoned. The plaintiff went on investigating title, but did not complete before the six weeks expired. The defendant treated the contract as abandoned. In a suit for specific performance:

Held, that time was not of the essence of the contract, and even if it were it had been waived by the conduct of the defendant; that the six weeks limited by defendant was not a reasonable time; and that specific performance must be decreed.

Held, also, that the plaintiff, having proceeded to compare the abstract with the deed, must be considered to have accepted the title; but under the circumstances he was allowed a week to bring in objections into chambers.

The bill in this case was filed by a purchaser for the specific performance of a contract for the purchase of a freehold messuage and land. It appeared that Thomas Wisden, the defendant, being seised in fee of a messuage or dwelling-house, with a coach-house, stable, garden, outhouse, and buildings, and certain pieces of arable, pasture, and garden ground adjoining thereto, commonly called New England Farm, situate near Brighton, in April 1846 agreed to let the same to the plaintiff (then and for some time previously the tenant thereof under the former proprietor, from whom the defendant had purchased the premises), at a rent of 100*l.* per annum from the 24th of June, 1846; and also to give plaintiff a right to purchase the same at any time within nine years from the said 24th of June, for the sum of 2,500*l.* in addition to the sum of 65*l.* to be paid to him by the plaintiff. The agreement was in the form of a letter, addressed by the plaintiff to the defendant, bearing date the 21st of April, 1846, and was in these words:—"Brighton, 21st April, 1846. Mr. Thomas Wisden. Dear Sir,—I undertake to hire of you the house and buildings called New England Farm, at a rental of 100*l.* per annum, from the 24th of June now next ensuing, together with the land, being about five acres; and I agree to pay down to you on that day the sum of 65*l.*; and it is understood and agreed that I am to have a purchasing clause of the said estate at any time within nine years, by giving you three months' notice, for the sum of 2,500*l.* in addition to the sum of 65*l.* H. Pegg." The plaintiff continued to occupy the premises under this agreement, and paid the 65*l.* but not till after the 24th of June, 1846. This sum was alleged by the plaintiff to be in part payment of the full purchase-money of 3,150*l.* agreed to be the price of the premises; but the defendant, on the other hand, alleged that it was paid as a premium or fine for the lease, and was so paid wholly irrespective of the purchase. The plaintiff had in his original bill founded the contract upon a letter signed by the defendant, but not addressed to any one by name, and which was in these words:—"Brighton, 21st April, 1846. Dear Sir,—I agree to let you the New England Farm, containing, with the buildings, &c. about five acres, more or less, for one hundred pounds per annum, from June 24th next ensuing. As also I further agree to give you a purchasing clause any time within nine years, by paying me the sum of 2,500*l.* after paying me the sum of 65*l.* on the 24th of June now next ensuing, being altogether the sum of 3,150*l.* Thomas Wisden." This letter was written partly by the plaintiff and partly by the defendant, by whom also it was signed. In his answer, however, to the original bill, the defendant denied having signed the letter, but he admitted the contract, and said it was evidenced by the letter signed by the plaintiff. Thereupon the plaintiff amended his bill by striking out the defendant's letter, and inserting his own as containing the evidence of the contract. The defendant's letter, however, was proved as an exhibit, for the purpose of being used as evidence in ascertaining the intention of the parties as to the 65*l.*, and it was admitted by the defendant in his answer to the amended bill. There was also some evidence by the plaintiff and his wife of admissions by the defendant that the 65*l.* was in fact a payment on account of purchase-money; and the plaintiff further alleged, that the 100*l.* rent was treated and considered by both parties as an instalment of the interest upon the 2,500*l.*, the balance of the purchase-money, at the rate of 4*l.* per cent. per annum. The plaintiff after the contract laid out, as he alleged, considerable sums of money upon the premises in building a wall round the same, and painting them, which unless he considered himself the owner he would not have done, and that the defendant was aware of his doing so, and accommodated him. Accordingly, on the 14th May, 1850, the plaintiff's solicitor (Mr. G. W. Lyle), as the plaintiff's agent, gave notice to the defendant of the plaintiff's intention to complete the purchase; and in the beginning of July, Messrs. Faithfull, the defendant's solicitors, delivered the abstract of title to Mr. Lyle. On the 4th of September, the plaintiff's solicitor wrote complaining of delay in completing the purchase. No steps were taken till the 2nd of November, 1850, when the defendant sent the plaintiff notice that unless the purchase was completed and the purchase-money paid in or before the 14th of December, 1850, the defendant would treat the notice of purchase given in May as absolutely null and void, and the right of purchase thereby claimed as forfeited, and the agreement of the 21st of April 1846, so far as respected the purchase, as cancelled. On the 5th of December, 1850, Mr. Lyle wrote to Messrs. Faithfull to know when and where the abstracts could be compared with the deeds. On the following day Messrs. Faithfull, stating that the deeds were in the hands of various persons, mentioned some of them in the possession of Messrs. Lawford, who, it was said, had attested copies of all the deeds in the hands of other parties. Mr. Lyle accordingly applied to Messrs. Lawford, who, in their reply of the 10th of December, said they assumed that Mr. Lyle's client would pay the charges for producing the deeds. Mr. Lyle then wrote to the Messrs. Faithfull, to say there was nothing "in the contract entailing the expenses on us." They replied that Mr. Pegg knew he was to pay all the charges, and that Mr. Wisden was to be at no expense. It appeared that there was an understanding between the parties, of which Mr. Lyle was not aware, that Mr. Pegg should bear all the expense. The correspondence ceased, and the defendant gave notice that he had abandoned the contract; and on the 8th of January, 1851, the plaintiff filed his bill, praying specific performance of the agreement, or, in the alternative, the repayment of the 650*l.* with interest, and consequential relief.

R. Palmer and Bevir, for the plaintiff, contended that the plaintiff had a right any time within the nine years to complete, and that time was not of the essence of the contract, or, if it was, it was waived.

Willcock (with whom was Hingeston) for the defendant.—The agreement signed by the defendant was not the contract relied on by the plaintiff, but that signed by himself. The plaintiff had nine years within which he might become the purchaser, upon condition of giving three months' notice; and, when notice was given, the purchase must be completed within the time limited. Contracts of this nature must be performed literally, and in this case the condition has been broken. The case was like that of a condition for repurchasing on a sale by A. to B.; if a time for the repurchase is prescribed by the condition, that must be observed; and if the estate is not repurchased in the time, the right to do so is gone. There was no difference between such a case and that of a right to purchase. Suppose the plaintiff had given notice of his intention to purchase when he first entered on the premises, could he have kept the matter open for the whole nine years? In Davis v. Thomas, 1 Russ. and Myl. 506, the privilege of repurchase was forfeited, on non-payment of the money as stipulated. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—If this is a contract to pay in three months, that case would apply]. That is this case; it is to be paid when the purchase is to be completed. The plaintiff must abide by his condition. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Yes; and if he went over the nine years the condition would be forfeited.] The agreement was for "a purchasing clause," so that this bill should have been for a lease with an option to buy. If any estate is to be taken away it must be so taken according to the letter of the contract: (Jay v. Birch, 4 Cl. & Fin. 89.) Consider it as an ordinary case of vendor and purchaser. The time would have expired on the 14th of August, but nothing was done till we gave notice. The plaintiff's first movement was on the 8th of December, asking when and where the deeds could be examined with the abstract; he was therefore guilty of great laches; and the defendant had a right by notice to make time of the essence of the contract, and fix a reasonable time for its completion, or else to insist on its abandonment. The original bill did not mention the agreement which is now set up, although the plaintiff must have known of it, for he sent the defendant a copy. It did not notice the agreement by the plaintiff to pay all expenses. The contract was either a condition which must be observed, or an ordinary contract which ought to be completed in due time. The plaintiff must either take a decree for specific performance (if the court should be of opinion that the purchase ought to be completed) without any inquiry as to title, or must fail altogether. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—If the vendor means to insist on the acceptance of the title, the point must be raised on the pleadings.] The plaintiff has raised the point himself, for he asks for the execution of the conveyance at once. They cited King v. Wilson, 6 Beav. 124; Thursby v. Bedwell, 14 Ves. 590; Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox, 167; Southcomb v. The Bishop of Exeter, 6 Beav. 213.

R. Palmer, in reply.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I have no doubt as to some parts of this case. The first point was whether, in the agreement of the 1st of April, 1846, the words "I am to have a purchasing clause of the said estate at any time within nine years by giving you three months' notice, for the sum of 2,500*l.* in addition to the sum of 650*l.*" were to be read as if a condition was added that the contract should be completed in three months, and that the 650*l.* was to be considered as part of the purchase-money, and to be returned if the purchase did not take place. I think that such an understanding of the passage would be contrary to all the rules of construction. This must be looked on as a common case of purchase by a tenant from his landlord. The relation of landlord and tenant ceases as soon as notice is given, and that of vendor and purchaser is commenced; and in this case, on the expiration of the three months from the 14th of May, 1850, the relation of vendor and purchaser was complete. Was the time of the essence of the contract? I am decidedly of opinion that it was not; and even if it had been, it has been waived by the consent of the parties; for not only did seven weeks elapse before the defendant sent the abstract of title in answer to the requisition of the plaintiff, but after the three months had expired the defendant wrote complaining of the delay in completing the contract, which he treated as still existing. If time, therefore, was essential originally, I am of opinion that it was waived by the letter of the 4th September. It remains to consider the effect of the letter of the 2nd November, in which the defendant gave notice of a fresh day, on which the purchase was to be completed. It must be kept in mind that some of the circumstances of the case were peculiar. The purchaser was in possession of the property, and made payments to the vendor either by way of rent or as interest on the purchase-money; and after the vendor gave his notice the plaintiff went on taking steps to complete the contract, to satisfy himself as to title, and to compare the deeds till the 10th December, when the foolish dispute arose about the payment of expenses. Delay was thus occasioned, and in five days after the time specified by the defendant expired, and then the defendant refused to complete, and the bill was filed without any loss of time by the plaintiff. Under all the circumstances of the case, I cannot say that the six weeks given by the defendant was a sufficient or reasonable time. As to the title, I think, strictly speaking, the plaintiff has accepted it; but, the point not having been properly raised on the pleadings, I will allow the plaintiff a week's time to bring in objections before me in chambers, and the defendant will be at liberty either to remove them or have them argued in open court. There must be a decree for specific performance.

WHITTINGTON v. CORDER.

Demise—What passes by a demise of all in occupation under a lease.

A. B. was the owner of two houses, and demised one to C. D. He afterwards found a subterranean chamber extending under both houses. He converted this into a cellar for his own use. He then mortgaged both houses to E. F. and G. H. with power of sale. Default was made, and the mortgages sold. C. D. bought the house leased to him, described as being in "his occupation," and opened a way into the cellar, and partitioned off so much as was under his house. The mortgagees denied his right, but he refused completion unless he had this part of the cellar, as being in his occupation under his lease. The mortgagees filed a claim for specific performance; but the court dismissed it, holding, that occupation under a lease means occupation of all that passes under the lease, whether in actual enjoyment or not, and whether known or not to exist at the time of the lease.

The facts of this case were that Mr. Fowler owned two houses in Rodney-street, Chepstow; and in 1847 he occupied one and demised the other, which was adjoining, to Mr. Corder, for twenty-two years. Soon after the lease he discovered an old cesspool, which extended under both houses, and made an entrance into it from his own house, and, converting it into a cellar, used it for his own purposes. With the other house there was no communication from the cellar. Mr. Fowler afterwards mortgaged the whole of this and other property to Mr. Whittington and another, who, upon there being a default in the payment of the mortgage money, put the same up to sale by auction under their power of sale contained in the deed, in lots, of which these houses were Nos. 2 and 3, and were thus described in the particulars of sale, "Lot 2, dwelling-house and shop, 209, Rodney-place, now in the occupation of Mr. Jno. Corder, as tenant, at the annual rent of 150*l.*, under a lease for twenty-two years from Lady-day, 1847. The house contains good dining, drawing-rooms, four bed-rooms, and two attics." "Lot 3, all that shop immediately adjoining lot 2, with large cellarage under ground; part of this lot is now occupied by Mr. Cordeaux, the remainder is in the occupation of Mr. Thomas Fowler." At a sale in August, 1851, Mr. Corder bought the house so described as in his occupation, and before the conveyance was executed, having before the sale discovered the existence of the cesspool or cellar, made an opening into it from his house, and partitioning off so much as was under it, he built a party-wall between the portion he claimed and so much as was under the other house. The mortgagees, the vendors, disputed his right to do this, but he refused to complete his purchase unless it were conceded to him, whereupon the mortgagees filed a claim against him for specific performance.

Berry for the defendant.

Russell and J. H. Palmer, for the plaintiff, relied on the case of Doe v. Burt, 1 Term Rep. 701, where a demise was made of parts of a messuage in Swallow-street, &c. "and together with a piece of ground on the north side," particularly describing it, "with an exception of a right of way, the whole of which was late in the occupation of A. B." An action of ejectment was brought for a cellar and wine-vaults, admitted to be under this piece of ground, which was a yard. The lessor, the plaintiff, insisted that the lessee was not entitled to the cellar; but the lessee insisted that he was, on the principle of law, cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad cœlum et ad inferos. On a rule to show cause it was observed, that it was not in the contemplation of the parties at the time of the lease to pass the cellar, and it appeared that for three or four years after the defendant's lease the lessor received rent from a former tenant of the cellar; and the same judge, Ashurst, J. illustrated the case before him thus: "The case of the Inns of Court; now it would be very extraordinary to contend that if a person purchased a set of chambers, then leased them, and afterwards purchased another set under them, the after-purchased chambers would pass under the lease." And Grose, J. said: "This is a demise of premises in Westminster, and the question is, whether it appears to have been the intention of the parties to demise this cellar; but everything which was meant to be demised is particularly described in the lease, and no notice is taken of this. It might as well be contended that a lease of a house in the Adelphi would pass the warehouses underneath. But it would be the greatest injustice to put the general construction of law on grants of the houses in that building; for we all know that these houses are held under titles entirely distinct from the cellars and warehouses underneath. And here the premises demised are described to have been lately in the occupation of A.; and if the parties had intended that this cellar in question should have passed, it would have been described as being in the possession of B. But this cellar, not being a part of the premises, nor appurtenant to them, did not pass under this lease."

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The facts lie in small compass. The defendant is the lessee under Fowler, under a lease for twenty-two years, from 25th of March, 1847, of a house and premises at Chepstow. Underneath this house and premises there is an old cesspool, formerly used for the drainage of the roads. It is nowhere stated in the affidavits that the cesspool was in use; and it seems quite clear that the existence of it was unknown to the parties at the time of the lease. The demise in 1847 being of the house and premises, the question is, what passed under that demise? I have no doubt that the cesspool did pass. I take it that a demise of the surface amounts to a demise of all that lies above and also of all below the surface. The test is, could a man after having demised the premises in these terms enter and dig? For example, if a mine existed under the land unknown to both parties, could the landlord, after the demise, enter, and dig and search for minerals, without the consent of the lessee? The case of Doe v Burt, in the first volume of the Term Reports (p. 701), was much relied upon by the plaintiff, but I think it does not apply, because there the cellar was not only known to exist, but was actually in the occupation of a third party at the time of the demise. At the time of this demise, however, the cesspool in question was walled in, and though under the premises was not in the use or occupation of any person—in fact, was not known to exist. It was in 1848 that Fowler, being the owner of the adjoining land, in building a house on it, struck the arch of the cesspool, which he then, for the first time, had any knowledge of. He immediately proceeded to convert it to his own uses, and did make use both of that part which was under his own land and also of that under the defendant's, by making it into a cellar. There can be no doubt this appropriation was unwarrantable if the cesspool in question was included in the demise to the defendant in 1847. On the 26th Aug. 1851, a sale by auction took place. [His Honour read the description and particulars of the sale, already set out.] The first question is, what is the meaning of a person being in possession of property under a lease? Is it to be said that a man is not in occupation of property comprised in that lease unless he be actively using and enjoying it? I apprehend the true meaning of the words "occupation under a lease" is not actual personal use and occupation, but occupation to which he is entitled under the instrument by which the right of possession was granted; and therefore, on the true interpretation,

V. C. TURNER'S COURT.

what was put up for sale was all the property included in the lease; and this, as I have already stated, in my opinion comprised the cellar in question. The defendant swears he would not have bought had he not expected to have possession of the cellar. I do not think this is a case for exercising the discretionary power of the court, and directing a specific performance; but I shall leave the parties to their remedies at law, if they cannot agree.

PINFOLD v. PINFOLD.

Injunction bill—Dismissal of bill for want of prosecution.

A bill was filed for an injunction to stay waste pending an action of ejectment to try the title. The plaintiff obtained judgment and afterwards sold the estate. The defendant was a pauper, and changed his solicitor. He moved to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution:

The Court considered it an abuse, after the object of a suit had been gained, that a defendant should be able to force the plaintiff to go into evidence, and, considering that there were special circumstances, refused to dismiss the bill at once, but directed the motion to stand over for additional evidence as to the representations made by the plaintiff.

This was a motion made on behalf of the defendant to dismiss a bill for want of prosecution. The bill was filed in August, 1852, for an injunction to restrain waste, pending an action of ejectment brought by the plaintiff to try the title to certain hereditaments, and the injunction issued. The action was tried and the plaintiff obtained a verdict, and judgment was entered up and the plaintiff entered into possession and proceeded to a sale of the estate. The defendant took no steps to disturb the verdict and offered no opposition to the sale. It appeared that the defendant was a pauper, and had recently changed his solicitor. In November the defendant gave notice of the present motion. The facts asserted by the plaintiff, which have been before stated, were supported by affidavit

Sidney Smith for the motion.—This is, upon authority, a motion which it is the duty of the court to comply with: (Stagg v. Knowles, 3 Hare, 241.) Indeed the inconveniences to suitors would be endless if it be necessary to offer any evidence in support of the motion, the fact that the plaintiff has taken no steps to proceed with suit being notorious.

Bagshawe, junior.—The vexation to the suitors will be far greater if the plaintiff be put to further trouble. The affidavits here show that there are special circumstances which take the present case out of the ordinary rule. The conduct of the suit by a solicitor on behalf of a pauper is a mere speculation, and has only been undertaken with a view of compelling the plaintiff to further and wholly useless litigation. The purpose of the suit has been answered and the property sold, and in all this the defendant has acquiesced.

Sidney Smith, in reply.—It is contrary to all rule, after a plaintiff has permitted the time to go by at which he could proceed with the cause, to permit the merits to be entered into on a motion to dismiss for want of prosecution. Upon this subject the observations of Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, in the South Staffordshire Railway v. Hale, 16 Jur. 160, is plain in explaining the rule.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The rule of the court (which as a general rule of course is beyond dispute) is so technical, that I shall avail myself of any discretion which I may have, to refuse following it. I quite agree with the doctrine laid down by Vice-Chancellor Wigram in Stagg v. Knowles, and also with the expression of Vice-Chancellor Kindersley as containing the ordinary rule. The bill must be dismissed unless there are special circumstances; but in my opinion the affidavits do disclose special circumstances, and therefore the motion must stand over till the first seal-day after term, to obtain additional evidence as to the accuracy of the plaintiff's representations.

Wednesday, Dec. 1.—Bagshawe, junior, this day moved to dismiss the bill without costs.

Sidney Smith opposed the motion; but

The VICE CHANCELLOR made the order. During the argument of the case originally, his Honour took occasion to make the following observation: "As to the merits of the case not being gone into, I am not to be tied down by such technical rules. If it can be shown from authority that I am prevented from dealing with such a motion, I will not do so; but if I can see my way to deal with it, I most certainly will. There is not a greater abuse of the proceedings of this court than that after the whole object of a suit has been obtained, the plaintiff may be compelled by a litigious defendant to go into evidence, and bring the suit to a hearing at a great expense, which is wholly thrown away.

CHOLMONDELEY v. LAVENDER.

Mortgagor and mortgagee—Sale under the 48th section of the Chancery Procedure Amendment Act.

Where a sale of mortgaged estate is asked under the 48th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, instead of foreclosure, it must be applied for at the hearing, and if the decree at the hearing be made for foreclosure it cannot afterwards on motion be converted into a decree for sale.

This was a foreclosure suit, instituted before the recent alterations in the procedure and practice of the court; and a decree for foreclosure was made in April 1852, in default of the nonpayment of principal and interest. By the Master's report, it appeared that the principal and interest amounted to 395*l.*; but the property was out of repair, and not worth on a sale 200*l.*, and would require 270*l.* for repair.

Druce now applied on behalf of the mortgagee by motion that a sale might be directed, or that a rehearing of the cause might be had, with a view to obtain a sale instead of foreclosure.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—How can I alter the decree?

Druce.—The 48th section of the Act gives the court power, in any suit for the foreclosure of the equity of redemption, to direct a sale of the property, instead of a foreclosure of the equity of redemption. So that there is nothing to show that the power of the court is confined to the hearing, but is most general. The application may be made by the mortgagee. If, however, the court shall be of opinion that, there being a decree, it cannot now order a sale, then it is asked that the cause may be reheard, with a view to obtain what is asked. The mortgagor, who has had notice, has not even appeared on this motion.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I think the meaning of the section is to give power to the court to direct a sale if the parties ask it at the hearing. If otherwise, if the section is to be read as you contend, then not only the mortgagee, but the mortgagor also, after a decree for a foreclosure, can come here and ask for a sale at any time before the time fixed for foreclosure has elapsed. But if you read the whole of the section, I think that the powers and discretion given to the court show that it is supposed they are to be exercised at the hearing. The sale is to be directed, "if the court shall so think fit, without previously determining the priorities, or giving the usual or any time to redeem;" these are inquiries which could only properly be directed at the hearing.

Motion refused.

ANONYMOUS.

Motion to suppress depositions and to take evidence orally, under the Chancery Procedure Amendment Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

W. J. Borrill moved, by consent, that depositions which during the long vacation had been taken in the old form might be suppressed, and that the parties on each side might take the examination of witnesses orally under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Had this been a motion by consent to suppress depositions simply, it ought to have been made in chambers; but, as it goes further, and seeks that the evidence may be taken orally under the newly-established practice, it was proper to make it in court, and I grant the application.

Ex part. LADY BRAGE re THE LONDON AND NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Dividends of money paid into court by a railway company—Affidavit.

The affidavit of the party entitled to dividends of money paid into court by a railway company, is not required where the application is for payment of those dividends, but the affidavit of title by the solicitor is sufficient; otherwise where the affidavit is for payment of the capital.

This was the petition of the Baroness Brage, who was tenant for life of lands taken by the London and North Western Railway Company under the powers of their Act. The purchase-money was paid into court and invested, and the prayer of the petition was that the dividends might be paid to her during her life. The petition was supported by the affidavit of the solicitor of Lady Brage, setting forth her title to the land taken and to the dividends of the stock representing the purchase-money of it.

Keat, in support of the petition, stated that the registrar had declined to draw up the order, which had been made, on the ground that the evidence was defective, first, because the affidavit was not that of the petitioner herself, and secondly, because it did not state her belief in her exclusive title to the dividends.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The affidavit by a petitioner in the form required by the registrar, verifying the title and negativing the claim of any other person, is necessary only when payment out of court of the principal money is sought. Here the dividends only are asked, and that form is not necessary. The order may be taken upon the evidence as it is.

Re BEAUFOY'S TRUSTS.

Leaseholds—Compulsory purchase.—Tenant for life.

Leaseholds for lives were bequeathed to trustees in trust for A. for life, and afterwards for other persons; and the testator directed the trustees to renew the lease once, to put in another life in the place of his own. The leaseholds were, after the testator's death, taken by a railway company, and the purchase-money was paid into court and invested, and the dividends ordered to be paid to A. during her life. The trustees did not renew the lease, and upon the death of the remaining life the lease expired in A.'s lifetime. Upon the petition of A., the court ordered the corpus of the purchase-money in court to be paid to her, without prejudice to any question as to the renewal.

This was a petition by Mrs. Agnes Beaufoy, presented under the following circumstances:—Certain land was in 1795 leased to J. H. Beaufoy, for ninety-nine years, determinable on his own and two other lives. By his will, dated in 1823, J. H. Beaufoy devised certain real estate to his wife, Agnes Beaufoy, for life, with remainder to C. Beaufoy for life, with remainders over; and the testator bequeathed the said leasehold property unto and to the use of trustees during the remainder of the term; and he directed that as soon as possible after his death the trustees should renew the lease for the purpose of substituting a new cestui que vie in his place, the amount of the fines not to exceed 500*l.*, the testator's intention being to give the trustees power to make only that one renewal: subject to this trust for renewal, the trustees were to stand possessed of these leaseholds upon trusts similar to the uses declared of his freehold estates. In 1836 the testator died, one of the lives upon which the lease was held having dropped between the date of the testator's will and his death. No renewal of the lease was obtained by the trustees. In 1846 the Oxford, Worcester and Wolverhampton Railway Company, under the compulsory powers of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), took possession of part of these leaseholds, and paid the purchase-money into court. This money was afterwards invested in the sum of 243*l.* Consols, and the dividends thereof were ordered to be paid to the tenant for life. In 1851 the last life upon which the lease was held dropped, and the lease consequently expired. The present petition was presented by the tenant for life, claiming to have the amount in court transferred to her.

Waley, in support of the petition, referred to Phillips v. Sargent, 7 Hare, 33; and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 74.

Dart, for the persons interested in remainder and the trustees, opposed the claim, and referred to Osbourne v. Manby, 6 Madd. 72; 2 Russ. 238; and Bennett v. Colley, 5 Sim. 181; 2 Myl. & K. 225.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he could not adopt the view taken by the counsel for the respondents. He was bound by the terms of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act to give to the party entitled in possession the same benefit in respect of this fund as she would have been entitled to in case the conversion had not taken place, and the money had not come into court. There could be no doubt upon the fact of what that interest would have been. The whole property would then have gone to the tenant for life, the lease having expired; so that, had no conversion taken place, the remaindermen could have taken nothing. No new right could accrue to the remaindermen consequent upon the conversion; and as to them the case must therefore be dealt with as if no conversion had taken place. It had been suggested, however, that with regard to the leaseholds there had been neglect, amounting to a breach of trust, by reason of the non-renewal of the lease. Into the merits of that question his Honour could not now enter, but he was bound not to prejudice it by the order to be made upon the present petition. The order, therefore, would be that the fund should be paid to the petitioner without prejudice to any question as to the renewal of the lease: the costs of all parties must come out of the fund.

Dec. 9 and 10,

GURNEY v. JACKSON.

Foreclosure suit—Disclaimer—Costs.

A. B. a mortgagee filed a bill for foreclosure against C. D. the mortgagor and E. F. a second mortgagee, and therein stated applications had been made to C. D. and E. F. to pay the debt. E. F. put in a disclaimer and answer, and thereby denied that any applications had been made, and stated that if A. B. had so applied he (E. F.) would have released and disclaimed all right and interest, &c. At the hearing, E. F.'s costs were directed to be paid by A. B. the plaintiff.

This was a foreclosure suit instituted by the plaintiffs, who were mortgagees on a joint account, against the mortgagor and subsequent mortgagees; and the only question which arose was as to the costs of the subsequent mortgagees. The bill stated that the plaintiffs had applied to the mortgagor and also to the mortgagees, and requested them to pay to the plaintiffs the mortgage debt and interest due to them, but that the defendants had refused so to do; and the defendants were interrogated as to such applications. The subsequent mortgagees filed a disclaimer and answer, and in that stated "that they disclaim all right, title, and interest to or in the mortgaged lands and hereditaments in the said bill mentioned, and every part and parcel of the same;" and "that no application was ever made to these defendants by or on behalf of the plaintiffs, prior to the institution of this suit, respecting the matters in question in this suit, and that if the plaintiffs had so applied they would have released and disclaimed all right and interest to and in the said mortgaged lands and hereditaments, and every part and parcel of the same."

Rasch, for the plaintiffs, contended that the defendants, the subsequent mortgagees, were not entitled to their costs, the terms of the disclaimer not being sufficient. He cited Collins v. Shirley, 1 Russ. & Myl. 638; Perkins v. Stafford, 10 Sim. 562; Silcock v. Roymon, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 376; Grigg v. Sturgis, 5 Hare, 96; Gabriel v. Sturgis, 5 Hare, 100; Gibson v. Nicol, 9 Bea. 408; Oberly v. Jenkins, 1 De G. & Sma. 543; and Buchanan v. Greenway, 11 Bea. 58.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR (without hearing Freeling for the defendants) said that he thought this was a very important question, and to be disposed of on a principle which none of the authorities cited touched. The defendants insisted upon their right to the costs, not upon the ground of their not being necessary parties, but because if they had been applied to before the bill was filed they would have submitted to the plaintiffs' demand. The answer was distinct, "that if the plaintiffs had so applied they would have released and disclaimed all right and interest." The plaintiffs by the bill made it a part of their case, and put in issue the fact that they had applied to the defendants and requested them to pay the mortgage debt and interest, and interrogatories were put to the defendants whether they had not been so applied to. It was very true that these were common words, but they were common words used for a wise purpose. At law, if a man sued out a writ, and the demand was immediately paid, the costs would follow, as no previous application for the debt was necessary. An entirely different course, however, was pursued in this court; and under the old mode of pleading the forms used were not senseless ones, but were wisely adopted according to the established principles of the court. Thus the form was, not that a simple application had been made, for a man might apply in such terms as to invite a refusal, but that the plaintiff had "frequently and in a friendly manner" applied, and that the defendant had refused. The words were introduced to guide the court in its discretion in dealing with the costs; for if a man were willing to accede to a demand, and were dragged into court without a previous application, such a circumstance was important upon the question of costs. It had been urged that the application alleged to have been made to these defendants was to pay the money; but that their answer said, not that they would have paid, but "that, if applied to, they would have released and disclaimed all right and interest." But if they had thus released and disclaimed, the defendants need not have been brought here. A bill of foreclosure was said to have been called a bill to recover a sum of money, and Mr. Rasch appealed to a number of authorities in support of that. In all of these authorities, however, the substantial question was, not upon the effect of an averment of an application, but upon how a party who disclaimed should be dealt with at the hearing. Had there been here only a simple disclaimer, his Honour did not consider he should have any reason for calling upon the plaintiffs to pay these defendants their costs; but, as no previous application had been made by the plaintiffs, they must pay the costs of these defendants.

Contract for sale—Devisable interest.

In August 1836 A. B. entered into a negotiation for the purchase of an estate of C. D. and on the 11*th of October in that year C. D. wrote to his solicitor that A. The contract was ultimately signed on the* 18*th of February*, 1837, and the estate was conveyed to A. B. in the following April. On the 9*th of January*, 1837, A. B. by his will gave personalty to E. F. and G. H. upon trust to complete the purchase which he had recently made of C. D. and to get the same conveyed to them upon trust, &c.:

Held, that at the date of his will A. B. had a devisable interest in the estate, and that the same passed by his will to E. F. and G. H.

This was a special case for the opinion of the court under the following circumstances. In August 1836 Major Holford entered into negotiations for the purchase of an estate in the county of Brecon, from Mr. Crespigny. In the course of a correspondence as to the purchase-money, &c., Major Holford wrote, on the 6th of October, 1836, to Mr. Crespigny as follows: "I will therefore take your word, and agree to give 56,000*l.* I will take the timber at a valuation," that valuation being 4,000*l.* On the 11th of the same month Mr. Crespigny wrote to his solicitor, Mr. Clarke: "My friend Major Gwynne Holford has agreed to purchase our estate in this county for 60,000*l.* including the timber, on our producing a sufficient title. Will you have the goodness to settle an agreement on the basis of the above for us to sign? I have shown this to the Major, and given him a copy, not signed, as a memorandum." This memorandum was in the words of the letter, commencing, "Major Gwynne Holford has agreed to purchase our estate in this county for 60,000*l.* including the timber," &c. Further correspondence passed relative to the leases existing on the estate, and the obligations Mr. Crespigny considered himself under to maintain or renew them, and also as to the payment of a jointure to the mother of Mr. Crespigny; and in one letter, dated Oct. 16, 1836, Mr. Crespigny said, "Do not imagine that it has been my wish that you should be in the smallest degree surprised into the engagement, or that you should not have the fullest and most patient investigation of every bearing connected with this business, so important from the amount of its value." On the 1st of November, 1836, Mr. Crespigny, in a letter to Major Holford, said that if the leases were looked upon as affecting the value of the property he would certainly not think of holding him to any engagement. On the 18th of January 1837, Mr. Crespigny thus wrote to Mr. Powell, the Major's solicitor: "There seems to be unnecessary delay on Major Holford's part in accepting the agreement. I shall consider our treaty at an end." The draft agreement was submitted to Mr. Bellenden Ker in November 1836; and on the 29th of that month Major Holford wrote to Mr. Clarke, Mr. Crespigny's solicitor: "I beg to know by return of post when you will forward the agreement to be entered into with Mr. Crespigny relative to the purchase I have concluded with him for his estate in this county. I cannot comprehend the cause of delay, and hope you will expedite the business." The agreement was not signed until the 18th of February 1837. The estate was afterwards conveyed to Major Holford in two portions, by indentures of lease and release, dated respectively April 4 and 5, and May 11 and 12, 1837. On the 9th of January, 1837, which was prior to the 1 Vict. c. 26, coming into operation, Major Holford by his will gave to the plaintiffs, who were the trustees of his marriage settlement, all his personal estate, upon trust to complete the purchase which he had recently made of Mr. Crespigny, and to get the same conveyed to them upon trust to secure a jointure of 2,000*l.* per annum for his widow, and to hold the remainder upon the trusts of his marriage settlement, which contained provisions for the benefit of his younger children. In August 1846 Major Holford died, without having altered or revoked his will, and leaving J. G. P. Holford, his eldest son and heir-at-law, an infant. The principal questions submitted for the opinion of the court by this special case were: 1. Whether the equitable estate or interest in the said hereditaments comprised in the indenture of the 4th and 5th of April 1837, and the 11th and 12th of May 1837, passed by the said will to the plaintiffs, to be held by them upon the trusts of the said will; and, 2. Whether, if such equitable estate or interest was not effectually devised, the said J. G. P. Holford, the heir-at-law of the testator, was bound to elect either to establish the trusts by the said will declared concerning the said hereditaments, or to forego the benefits by the said will given to or intended for him.

Vend. and Purch. c. 3, s. 3.

Saturday, Dec. 18.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that it had been contended for the heir-at-law that the true construction of the acts of the parties, antecedent to the will and to the execution, after the date of the will, of a formal agreement for the purchase by the contracting parties, was, that no binding agreement for the purchase of the estate had been made, but only a basis agreed upon for the discussion of the terms on which the treaty for a contract to be executed was to proceed, and that it was understood between the parties that, until a formal agreement was prepared and executed, neither party was to be considered as bound. On the part of the widow and younger children of Major Holford, it had been contended that the basis of the formal agreement was an actual agreement in general terms that Major Holford should purchase and Mr. Crespigny sell to him the estate for 60,000*l.*, and that the formal agreement which was to be prepared was merely to settle the necessary details upon points relating to the tenancies on the estate, the title, and other matters upon which the parties, by coming to a distinct understanding by specific stipulations, might on fair discussion escape the danger of an adverse litigation to settle the various points likely to arise in carrying into effect a general contract for the purchase of a considerable estate, the title to which had not been investigated. In a letter of the 11th of October, 1836, the vendor, Mr. Crespigny, wrote to his solicitor, that "Major Holford has agreed to purchase our estate in this county for 60,000*l.* including the timber, on our producing a sufficient title," &c.; and in the same letter said, "I have shown this to the Major, and given him a copy, not signed, as a memorandum." This letter also desired the solicitor to whom it was addressed "to settle an agreement on the basis of the above for us to sign." It was well settled on sound principles that, if the main terms of an agreement for the sale and purchase of an estate be concluded, and those main terms expressed in a writing signed by the party sought to be charged, it made a binding contract, although there might be an arrangement between the parties to have a formal contract prepared for their signature. In the present case, in none of the many subsequent letters or acts of the parties was anything to be found to alter or vary the essence of that agreement as to the contracting parties, the estate which was the subject of the contract, or the price to be paid. The subsequent discussions were entirely on minor points. It was not disputed for the heir-at-law that the letter of the 11th of October was evidence that a basis for the subsequent treaty had been agreed upon; but, as it was admitted that it was evidence of an agreement as to a basis, where the argument for the heir-at-law failed on this point was to show that this basis was anything short of the general contract to sell the estate for 60,000*l.* to Major Holford, including the timber, on producing a sufficient title. There could, therefore, be no doubt on this view of the case that on this evidence in writing signed by the vendor, Major Holford, before he had signed any memorandum or evidence in writing of the contract, might, on the well-established authorities, have enforced the performance of this agreement. But then it was contended that this right to enforce the contract not signed by himself, being a right little more than an option, was not a devisable interest. As in his Honour's opinion the letter of Major Holford of the 29th of November, 1836, to Mr. Crespigny's solicitor, in which he said, "I beg to know when you will forward me the agreement relative to the purchase I have concluded with Mr. Crespigny," on the plain construction of it, taken in connection with the whole correspondence and transactions, was clear evidence to bind him, it established a complete mutuality in point of signature on his part of the agreement which was mentioned in the letter of Mr. Crespigny of the 11th of October. The facts of the case upon that, which seemed to his Honour the only correct, view of them, excluded entirely the argument by which the proposition was maintained, that a contract for the purchase of an estate being a contract certain in its terms, but signed only by the vendor, not being signed by the purchaser at the date of his will, although completed afterwards, did not give the purchaser a devisable interest in the estate. Every lawyer who had well weighed the observations of Sir Thomas Plumer in the case of Martin v. Mitchell, 2 J. & W. 426, and what he noticed as having fallen from Lord Eldon, Lord Redesdale, and Sir William Grant, as to the right of a party to enforce in equity a contract which he had not himself signed, against the other party who had signed it, must feel the difficulties which surrounded the proposition that the interest of a purchaser who had made, but had not actually signed, a contract, the terms of which were clearly proved and which was signed by the vendor, was not a devisable interest in the estate which was the subject of the contract. The difficulty of maintaining such a proposition was greatly increased where the purchaser in such a case, by his will, directed the contract to be carried into effect. In the present case, as it was his Honour's opinion that the letter of the 29th of November must be construed, on a fair view of the evidence, as referring to the agreement and transaction stated in the letter of the 11th of October, and therefore to the memorandum referred to in that letter, and could not be held as referring to anything else, the difficulty which might otherwise have occurred did not arise, and he must hold that there was a valid contract for the purchase of the estate by Major Holford before the date of his will, and that his equitable interest under that contract passed by his will. In the case of Broome v. Monck, 10 Ves. 597, the difficulty arose from the title of the estate having, after the testator's death, been reported to be a bad title, which put an end to the contract. Any ordinary contract for the purchase of an estate might fail on that ground. But the testator might in his lifetime have agreed to accept the title, however defective, and no argument seemed to have been suggested for the devisee in Broome v. Monck as to how far the direction in the will to complete the contract could be held to amount to an acceptance of the title. The case of the devisee there failed from his attempt to enforce a right to have the purchase-money invested for his benefit in other real estates. Upon the whole in this case, after the best consideration, his Honour could come to no other conclusion than that the right of the heir-at-law was excluded by the devise in the will of Major Holford.

WEATHERILL v. GARRETT.

Appointment of new trustees—Parties.

A claim for the appointment of new trustees of certain real estate was filed by the mortgagee of a portion of the beneficial interest against the heir-at-law of the surviving trustee, without making any of the other cestuis que trust parties; and it was proposed to take an inquiry as to the parties beneficially interested. The court declined to order such an inquiry, and directed the claim to stand over, with leave to amend.

This was a claim by the mortgagee of a portion of a trust estate for the appointment of new trustees, and for accounts to be taken. By an indenture of the 23rd of May, 1825, certain freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates were vested in trustees upon trust for the benefit of Charles Hornby and other persons. By a mortgage dated the 15th of May, 1841, Charles Hornby mortgaged his interest to the plaintiff to secure the sum of 800*l.* and interest. Charles Hornby afterwards died, having devised his interest to his wife. The heir-at-law of the surviving trustee was the only defendant to this claim.

Brodrick, for the plaintiff, proposed to take an inquiry as to the parties beneficially interested in the trust estate.

Babington, for the defendant.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that if he directed the inquiries proposed, they would be very expensive, and inquired who was to pay the costs. He could not make the order, but would direct that the claim should stand over, with leave to amend.

KING v. MALLINGS.

Release; or receipt in full of all demands—Trustee—Executor.

A trustee who has a specific trust to execute, where the trust is apparent, and the fund clear, and paying the trust fund in direct accordance with the trust, is not entitled to a release under seal.

On the contrary, if the trustee be asked to do what is not in strict accordance with the tenor of the trust, he is entitled to a general release.

Where a trust fund in the hands of an executor is about to be distributed, it is the practice to grant him a general release by the parties to whom the fund is paid.

An injunction had been granted to restrain an action-at-law for the payment of a sum of money, part of a trust fund; and on the application to dissolve this injunction, a question arose as to whether the trustee was entitled to a general release from the children of a party who had had a life interest in the fund, with a power of distribution to those children at the death of the tenant for life. The trust was created by parol, there being no declaration of the trust by deed; it was to pay the interest of a small sum to A. B. for life, then to C. D. for her life; at her death to pay the expenses of her funeral, and the residue to be divided between her two children.

The trustee contended he was entitled to a general release from the children.

Lewin, in support of the application to dissolve the injunction, contended that, as the trust was precise, the trustee had no right to call for a general release. There was here no open account or intricate trust created; it was an ascertained sum of money, and the expense of the funeral small and defined; and that the balance ought to be paid over to the children, on their signing a receipt in full of all demands, which was a valid discharge, and as good and effectual under the circumstances as a general release. He relied on Chadwick v. Heatley, 2 Coll. 137, where it was held that a trustee of stock under a will, on transferring the stock to his cestuis que trust, was entitled to an acknowledgment by the cestuis que trust, that the stock was transferred to them in full of all demands, although he was not entitled to a release under seal. He relied also on Fulton v. Gilmour, cited in Hill on Trustees, p. 605.

Loftus Wigram and Roxburgh, contrà, argued that in the first case cited nothing remained to be done but to transfer to the party entitled the balance of the stock to which he was clearly entitled; but in the present case a receipt would be insufficient, as, although a bar to a legal debt, it was not so in regard to an equitable demand, which the present was. Having a release under seal, of course the trustee would be safe, as no parol evidence could be given against such deed. They relied on Goldsmid v. Goldsmid, Turn & Russ. 445. [As to this case the Vice-Chancellor said he doubted if he ought to act upon it as an authority for the propositions there stated.]

Lewin, in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR, after stating shortly the facts of the case, said that as to the question of a trustee having a strict right to insist upon a release under seal, he was of opinion that where it was a case of declared trust, as where the trust was apparent on the face of a deed, the fund clear, and the trust clearly defined, and the trustee was paying either the interest or the capital of such fund in strict accordance with the terms of the trust, a trustee under those circumstances was not entitled to a formal release by deed. Certainly in the common case of executors, the executorship affairs being wound up, it was, he believed, the universal practice to give the executors a release. No doubt an executor has a right to be clearly and fully discharged, not to be left to the chance of future litigation, and therefore he could not safely hand over the surplus without such a release. But where a trustee is paying in strict accordance with the trust, it is clearly unnecessary. A general receipt would be sufficient. That, however, was not the present case: here there was no deed at all, no writing by which the trust was declared. A small sum of money was in the hands of the trustee, and only a verbal expression of the trusts. The terms of the trusts are, it is true, admitted by the parties; therefore there is no doubt upon that; but it clearly transpires that they could not be completely carried out until after the death of the tenant for life. Considering, therefore, that in the first place there was no writing to indicate either what the trusts were or the exact amount of the fund put in trust; and in the second place, that what the trustee had been asked to do was not in strict accordance with the tenor of the trust; he (the Vice-Chancellor) was of opinion that it was not improper in the trustee to demand a release by deed under seal. Order accordingly.

COUNTY COURT APPEAL.

(Before COLERIDGE and EDLE, JJ.)

ROOKE AND OTHERS v. THE MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Trover—Evidence of conversion.

The plaintiffs bought timber at Hull, which was by their direction delivered to the York and North Midland Railway Company at Hull, to be forwarded to the plaintiffs at Nottingham. The timber was carried over the Ambergate Railway Company to the Nottingham station, which belonged to the Midland Railway Company, and came into the possession of the Midland Company. The plaintiffs made a written demand of the timber on the Midland Company, with an offer to pay any expenses to which it was liable, but this was refused, and they were told that they could only have it by taking it back to the first station on the Ambergate line, five miles from Nottingham:

Held, evidence of a conversion by the Midland Railway Company.

This was an appeal from the decision of the judge of the County Court at Nottingham.

Trover for timber.

The plaintiffs, who resided at Nottingham, purchased timber at Hull, and ordered it to be forwarded to them by the York and North Midland Railway Company. The timber was proved to be in the defendants' possession at their station at Nottingham; and the mode by which it came there was proved by the following letter from the goods manager of the Midland Railway Company to the secretary of the Ambergate, Nottingham, and Boston and Eastern Junction Railway Company:—

"Midland Railway, Nottingham.

"Sir,—I have to inform you that the understated goods have arrived at this station by your line, and, not being included in the agreement under which the use of the station is to be afforded to your company in regard to the traffic of your line, this company cannot undertake the delivery thereof, and I am instructed therefore to require that the said goods shall be taken back again. John Ashworth."

[A list of the goods was appended.]

Several attempts were made by the plaintiffs to obtain the timber from the Nottingham station, and ultimately a written demand was served upon the defendants with an offer to pay any legal claim the defendants had upon the timber. The plaintiffs attended at the station pursuant to their written demand, when they were referred by the station-master to M'Craith, another servant of the defendants. The plaintiffs then made a demand of the timber of M'Craith, offering to pay any legal charges to which it might be subject. Some of the timber was taken by the plaintiffs out of the defendants' warehouse for the purpose of conveying it away; but by M'Craiths' orders it was removed back again into the defendants' warehouse, M'Craith stating he was ordered by Ashworth (the goods manager above referred to) not to let the timber go, and that they could only have it by taking the same back again to the first station on the Ambergate line (five miles from the Nottingham station.)

Upon these facts the defendants contended at the trial that there was no evidence of a conversion by them. The learned judge was of a contrary opinion, and gave judgment for the plaintiffs.

Against this decision the defendants now appealed.

Miller (Gifford with him), for the defendants.—The refusal to part with the possession of the timber was in this case a qualified and reasonable one under the circumstances. Ashworth's letter explains the defendants' conduct: the timber had arrived at the Nottingham station by the Ambergate line, and, according to the contract between the Ambergate line and the defendants' company, the defendants were not bound to deliver the timber, and refused to accept that responsibility, and told the parties who brought the timber to take it back again. It was not for the defendants, under these circumstances, to part with the timber to any others than the Ambergate company. [COLERIDGE, J.—Suppose the timber had been trespassing. The notice says the plaintiffs are willing to pay any charges upon the timber; and if the defendants thought they were not safe in delivering the timber to the plaintiffs, they might have obtained an indemnity.] They were not bound to take an indemnity; they had no contract with the plaintiffs; the timber was lying at their station by mistake. Secondly, there is no evidence of a conversion by the defendants. In all the cases of trover against corporate bodies, there will be found to be evidence that the fruits of the conversion have found their way into the hands of the corporation. Here there is no evidence of that. The connection of Ashworth and M'Craith with the company was not such as to make the company responsible for what they did: (Pathonier v. Dawson, Holt's N. P. C. 383; Glover v. The North Western Railway Company, 5 Ex. 66; Smith v. The Birmingham Gas Company, 1 A. & E. 526.)

Willes, contrà, was not called upon.

COLERIDGE, J.—We are both of opinion that the judgment must be affirmed. There is abundant evidence of a conversion. It is no answer to the action to say there must be a conversion by somebody to the use of the defendants themselves, when there was clearly a detention for the purposes of the party detaining them. A demand and refusal are certainly not conclusive evidence of a conversion, but there is nothing to show they do not in this case amount to a conversion. In consequence of some disagreement between the two railway companies, the defendants chose to detain the plaintiffs' goods. The plaintiffs demanded the goods of the defendants, and in addition served a written notice of demand on the station-master; and when they attended at the station to take away their goods, the station-master refers them to M'Craith, and he therefore would be in the same position as the station-master. If any one could bind the company, surely the station-master could. Then M'Craith does plenty to bind the defendants.

EDLE, J.—When the goods arrived at Nottingham, the plaintiffs were entitled to have the goods delivered to them; they demanded them, and they were refused. That was a conversion, unless the defendants can justify their refusal. They say the goods were brought to their station by the Ambergate Railway Company, an intermediate line, which had no right to send such goods to their station, and they therefore insist that the Ambergate railway should take them back to the part which belongs to that company. The plaintiffs clearly had a right to have their goods, though brought by mistake or without right on the defendants' premises, upon paying the charges the defendants might have against them in respect of those goods, which the plaintiffs offered to do.

Judgment affirmed with costs.

LEVERONI v. DRURY.

Shipowner—Liability, as carrier, for damage—Bill of lading.

The plaintiff shipped certain goods on board the ship of the defendant to be carried from Genoa to London. By the bills of lading, which were in the usual form, the master bound himself to deliver the goods safe and free from damage in London. In the course of the voyage they were much damaged by rats, although the defendant had kept cats on board and used the usual means to protect his cargo from vermin:

Held, that the defendant was nevertheless liable as a common carrier for the damage done to the goods of the plaintiff.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, as owner of a quantity of Parmesan cheeses shipped on board the defendant's ship the Sophia at Genoa, for damages alleged to have accrued in consequence of the negligence of the defendant, whereby some portion of the goods had been damaged and damaged by rats. It appeared at the sittings before Martin, B. at the first sittings in Michaelmas term last, that the cheeses in question were shipped on board the ship Sophia at Genoa to be carried to London, and that in the course of the voyage five of the tubs of cheese were damaged by rats. The bill of lading bound the master absolutely to deliver the cheese safe and free from damage in London. The defendants contended that they were not liable, as they had taken every usual precaution by keeping cats on board and baiting traps, &c. to prevent damage from vermin. A verdict having been returned for the plaintiff, Crowder moved for a rule to show cause why the verdict should not be set aside and a new trial had on the ground of misdirection. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

POLLOCK, C.B.—This was an application by Mr. Crowder for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection; and we took time to consider our judgment, not because we have any doubt on the question, but because we wished to consider the various authorities which had been cited by Mr. Crowder as adverse to our opinion, and we are now so entirely satisfied that the direction of the learned judge was correct, that we consider it would be a waste of money to grant the rule. The cause was tried at the first sittings in this term, before Martin, B. The declaration was in the ordinary form by the plaintiff, as owner of goods, against the defendants, who are shipowners, for damages alleged to have accrued by the negligence of the defendants, owners of the ship Anna Sophia, to some Parmesan cheese, the property of the plaintiff, on a voyage from Genoa to London. In the month of December, 1851, the Anna Sophia was at Genoa, taking in cargo as a general ship, and the cheese in question was loaded on board, and bills of lading signed in respect of them. The bills of lading were in the Italian language, and are substantially in the same form as ours; and by their terms the master proposed to bind himself absolutely to deliver the cheese safe and free from damage in London. He was, however, examined at the trial, and stated that he was ignorant of the Italian language, and that before he signed the bills of lading they were read to him, and he believed they were in the ordinary English form. For the purpose of the present question, it is to be considered they were in such form, for the direction which is complained of was founded on the supposition that the ordinary exceptions were contained in the bill of lading, and that the plaintiff was bound by them. The ship sailed and arrived in London, but several of the cheeses were eaten and damaged by rats in the course of the voyage. It was proved by the master that he had two cats on board, and it was insisted by the counsel for the defendant that it was a question for the jury whether the defendant had not by keeping the cats exempt himself from the charge of negligence. The learned judge however was of opinion that it was not for the jury, and he directed them that damage by rats was not within the exceptions, and, if they believed that the cheeses were damaged by rats in the course of the voyage, the defendant was responsible; and we are of opinion that this direction was right. By the law of England, the master and owner of a general ship is a common carrier for hire, and responsible for negligence. This, according to the well-known rule, renders him liable for every damage except "the act of God, or the King's enemies." They however always, not universally, receive goods under bills of lading signed by the master, and in such case it depends upon the bills of lading, that being the express contract between the parties, the owners of goods on the one hand, and the master and owner of the ship on the other. The exceptions contained in an English bill of lading, which is assumed to be the form of the bill of lading in this case, as stated in Abbott on Shipping, page 280, are as follows: "The act of God, the King's enemies, fire, and all and every other danger of the seas, rivers, and navigation of whatever nature and kind soever, save risk of boats, so far as ships are liable thereto, excepted." We agree with the learned judge, the question is, whether damage by rats falls within the exception? and we are already of opinion that it does not. The only part of the exception under which it were possible it could be contended to fall is "a danger or accident of the sea;" but this we think includes only the dangers properly so called by the violence of the wind and waves which may be acting on a seaworthy ship, and does not cover damage by rats, which is a kind of destruction not peculiar to navigation, but to which all commodities are liable to, on land or in warehouses. In moving for the rule, the learned counsel cited various foreign writers of great authority; Emerigon, p. 575, Consolato del Mare, Roccus de Navibus, and Story on Bailments, 513. The foreign authorities first above-mentioned lay down the rule distinctly, that a shipmaster or owner who keeps cats is excused from damages by rats; but however worthy of attention their authority may be, we cannot act on them in contradiction to the bill of lading. As to Story, he very cautiously confines himself to stating that such are the [illegible] and it seems to us he avoids expressing his own opinion upon the point. It was also contended that the same doctrine was laid down by Lord Tenterden, and there is no doubt that the learned lord is entitled to the greatest weight and consideration. We do not, however, think that Lord Tenterden can be understood as laying down such a rule. He cites a passage from Roccus, which states that keeping cats on board excused the shipowner from damage by rats; and after that he states it as an illustration of the general principle by which masters and owners are responsible for every injury which might have been prevented. Now, whatever be the case when Roccus wrote, we cannot but think rats might be now banished from a ship without any particular vigilance on the part of the master; and we are inclined to think, in the present mode of stowing cargos, cats would be of very little protection. But we think that Lord Tenterden cannot be understood as contended for by the learned counsel for the defendant in this case. And that is evident from the authority he cites of Dale v. Hall, 1 Wils. 281. That was an action against a shipowner who carried goods for hire. It was contended that the plaintiffs had proved no negligence, and it was proposed to prove the defendants had taken care of the goods, and the damage occurred by rats having made a leak in the vessel, whereby water was admitted, and everything was done that could be done to pump out the water. The evidence was admitted, and the defendant obtained the verdict. A new trial was moved for on the grounds that the evidence was not admissible, and the rule was made absolute, the Chief Justice stating that the evidence ought not to have been received; that everything was negligence in a carrier which the law does not excuse; that he was answerable for the goods immediately he received them, at all events except damaged by the act of God or the King's enemies. This is a case cited by Lord Tenterden in a part of his book as the principal authority on the subject; we entirely concur in it, and it seems to us it is the same principle as in the present case. In our opinion the principle laid down in that case affords the only true rule of ascertaining with certainty the liability of the masters and owners of a general ship, namely, that prima facie he is a common carrier, but that his responsibility may be either enlarged or qualified by the terms of the bill of lading, if there be one; and the question whether the defendant is liable or not is to be ascertained by the terms of the document, where such a document exists. There will, therefore, be no rule. Rule refused.

PROTECTION CASE.

Re CHARLES WALLEN.

Description.

An insolvent petitioning as a trader, will have his petition dismissed if the evidence shows him to be a non-trader.

This insolvent had hired an omnibus, and purchased horses and intended to trade, but had never in fact commenced business in consequence of the withdrawal of the permission which he had been promised, to run into the Kilburn Station of the London and North Western Railway.

The CHIEF COMMISSIONER held, that to constitute a trading, there must be both the intention and the act. Here there had been no act of trading. The description was therefore incorrect and the petition must be dismissed. Petition dismissed.

PROTECTION CASE.

Re JAMES FRY.

Prisoner—Protecting order under 28th section made, and discharge issued by mistake.

Held, that where a protecting order under the 28th section has been made, and a warrant discharging an insolvent by mistake, the court may revoke the order and recommit the petitioner.

This insolvent petitioned the court under the protection statutes in April last, and upon his first examination, being opposed by Macrae for a creditor named Impey, no day was named for the final order, upon the ground of fraud; but it was intimated that he might apply at the end of three months for a protecting order. He was also ordered to file certain documents relating to property in which he was interested, and give due notice to the opposing creditor of having done so, before he applied for his protecting order; but from some inadvertence, this did not appear upon the record as part of the order made. The insolvent being thus without protection, the opposing creditor took the proper steps to arrest him, by issuing a ca. sa., and placing it in the hands of an officer, whose exertions to arrest him were not successful for about two months after the examination, when he was at length taken, and conveyed to Maidstone gaol. In July 51 an application was made by the insolvent for a protecting order, under the 28th section, and there being no opposition the order was granted, and a warrant issued for his discharge forthwith. The opposing and detaining creditor, Mr. Impey, and his attorney, Mr. Godwin, of Essex Court Temple, being apprised that their prisoner was liberated from custody, immediately inquired at the court-house as to how he came to be discharged without their knowledge, when it was discovered that the protecting order had been granted without the notice to the opposing creditors which the court directed having been forwarded to them, which accounted for the discharge without opposition.

Macrae then moved for and obtained a rule, calling upon the insolvent to show cause why the protecting order should not be rescinded, and a warrant issued for the re-committal of the insolvent to his former custody, the order of protection and the discharge having been improperly obtained by the withholding of notice to the creditors; and why service of the rule upon the attorney of the insolvent should not be sufficient in the event of the petitioner not being found.

On Nov. 6 Cooke showed cause.

Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS said that the impression upon his mind was, that the court had power to revoke its order, and remit the insolvent to his former custody: but as the question raised was an important one, involving some doubt, he should take an opportunity of convoking a full court, that the matter might be fully discussed and decided.

The rule was accordingly directed to be enlarged for that purpose.

Nov. 22.—Macrae appeared before the full court and moved to make the rule absolute. Counsel detailed the facts of the case. Upon these facts the questions submitted to the court were; first, whether the commissioner had power to remand at the first examination in cases other than those where he was specifically directed to remand in the Act (sect. 24); and secondly, if so, whether it was just and right to remand this petitioner to his former custody under the circumstances of the case. Upon the first point the statute (7 & 8 Vict. c. 96) enacted that upon some seventeen grounds of opposition, enumerated in sect. 24, being made to appear where the petitioner shall have been a prisoner in execution, and discharged out of custody by order of the commissioner under the provision herein in that behalf contained, such petitioner shall be remanded by an order of the commissioner to his former custody. In these cases, then, there could be no doubt as to the authority of the court to remit a petitioner who had been discharged ad interim under sect. 6 to his former custody. But there was another class of cases, not coming within the specific words of the statute, where the commissioners had often been induced to discharge ad interim when, if they had known the facts brought to their knowledge at the hearing, they would never have interfered. In these cases the commissioners in the Court of Bankruptcy had constantly remanded the petitioners if they appeared, or issued warrants for their recommittal if they did not appear, although they were not specifically warranted in so doing by the language of the statute: (See Macrae's Insolvent Practice, p. 333.) In one of those cases (Re Partington), before Mr. Commissioner Evans, the insolvent, it appeared at his first examination, was in contempt of the Insolvent Debtors' Court for not filing a schedule; and all his property was vested there. The learned commissioner said that if he had known that, he would never have entertained his application under those statutes for a discharge ad interim; and he should therefore remand him to his original custody, which was done accordingly. Upon this recommittal Partington applied upon a habeas corpus to the Court of Q. B. (6 Q. B. Rep. 649) for his discharge, upon the ground that his detention was illegal, the commissioner having no authority given him by the statute to make any such order. The Court of Q. B. after full argument, held that the right to remand was incident to the commissioner's jurisdiction upon the petition, and refused to discharge the prisoner. He then applied to the Lord Chief Baron at chambers with no better effect; and lastly he brought his case before the learned barons of the Ex. (13 M. & W. 679), who, after argument and taking time to consider, delivered their judgment by Parke, B. in the following terms:—"An application was made by Mr. Peacock for the discharge of a defendant who was in custody in execution for more than 300*l.*, and who had in August last filed his petition under the 8th section of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96. It appears that an interim order was made for his protection, and that he was discharged out of custody by the learned commissioner, Mr. Evans. But when the case was heard on the 27th Sept. (the day prefixed), the commissioner refused the final order, and remanded him into custody as if the interim order had not been made; being of opinion that he was not entitled to the benefit of the Act, as he had previously, in the year 1842, petitioned the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors, and all his estate was vested in the provisional assignee of that court, and could be dealt with according to the provisions of that Act. The application for a habeas corpus was made on three grounds,—first, that the commissioner had no power to remand in this case, it not being one in which he is directed to remand under the 24th section; secondly, that upon the refusal of the final order the defendant could only be taken in execution by the creditor under the 6th section by a fresh writ, or by ordering the sheriff to take him again under the old writ; thirdly, that under the 28th section the defendant, who had been already in execution for more than twelve months, could not be detained any longer. The case has already been before the Court of Q. B. on the return to a habeas corpus, and before my Lord Chief Baron at chambers on a subsequent application for a similar writ. In both instances the discharge was refused. The defendant had, however, a right to take the opinion of this court as to the propriety of his imprisonment; and therefore we have thought it proper to examine attentively the provisions of the statute without considering ourselves as concluded by these decisions. But we are all of opinion that the defendant is not entitled to his discharge, and we entirely agree in the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, which was approved by the Lord Chief Baron, and are satisfied of the correctness of the reasons stated to us to have been assigned by Lord Denman for that judgment. The right of remanding as if the interim order had not been issued does not depend upon the 21th section, which is compulsory in all the cases therein mentioned, but is incident to the jurisdiction to grant the interim order given by the statute to the commissioner, who, if he finds that he has granted an order ex parte which he is satisfied he ought not to have done, must have a right to revoke that order and place the defendant in the situation in which he was before, and where he ought to have remained. The commissioner, therefore, when he discovered that the defendant was not entitled to the benefit of the Act, was perfectly right in not merely rescinding the order but in ordering him to be remanded and placing him in the same situation in which he was when the interim order was obtained." This clearly established the commissioners power to remand in cases not within the express language of the Act, the principle being that it was a power incidental to the jurisdiction given to the commissioner by the petition, and necessary to prevent the abuse of the Act by perverting it to purposes for which it never was intended. Now it was true that case was not under this section (sect. 28); but the principle it established was precisely analogous to that involved in this rule, and the facts too were analogous. Then as to the remainining question whether it was just and right for the court to make the orders asked for, it was only necessary to observe that if the commissioner found that by his interference he had deprived parties of legal rights as against their debtor, he was bound to restore those rights by another order; and if he found that he had conceded legal rights to an insolvent who was not entitled to them, it was only common justice to take them from him and restore all parties to their original position. The learned barons of the Ex. at the close of their judgment just read, affirmed the justice of such a proceeding most distinctly. He submitted, therefore, that the rule should be made absolute.

Cooke, in showing cause, adverted to the specific clause inserted in the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, giving the court power to order a rehearing in cases of this description under that statute, the absence of which in the Protection Statutes afforded a strong presumption that the Legislature did not intend to give the court a similar power under those Acts of Parliament. He doubted also, whether the Court of Q. B. in their judgment in Partington's case, had approved of the act of the commissioner in remanding that insolvent. They simply affirmed his jurisdiction.

The CHIEF COMMISSIONER, who spoke in a low tone of voice which scarcely reached the bar, was understood to say that the rule involved two important points; the first being, whether the court had the power to make an order to revoke an order improperly made. Upon that point it seemed to him but common sense and common justice that, when there had been a surprise, or a suppression of facts, or false evidence, a court should have the power of setting itself right upon the true facts being brought to its knowledge. He was therefore clearly of opinion that the court had the power to revoke this order. Upon the second point, namely, whether the court could issue its warrant again to apprehend the petitioner, he had some doubt. Upon this point he should be very glad if he had the facts of the case more fully before him. The discovery that he had withheld papers or documents, might have very much aggravated the case; but no such order as counsel alleged to have been made appeared upon the record, and it did not appear whether the insolvent had acted fraudulently or merely inadvertently in the matter. Under these circumstances, and entertaining considerable doubt whether the court had power to issue its warrant for the apprehension of the petitioner and his recommittal to his former custody, he thought that probably the better way would be to make the first part of the rule absolute for revoking the protecting order, and then grant a new order under the 28th section for the petitioner to come up and be dealt with as in other cases.

Mr. Commissioner LAW said that the important question was to ascertain whether they could legally do that which they were asked to do by this rule; and it appeared to him that the authority was so clearly laid down that there was nothing to answer, and consequently the counsel for the opposing creditor had not answered. He could entertain no doubt about the power of the court to revoke an order improperly obtained, and he could have as little reason to doubt the power to issue the warrant. This case of Ex parte Partington affirmed the propriety of what he was prepared to do; that was to say, if he had done that improvidently which he ought not to have done, he could so act as to repair the injustice that might have been done to any party, and restore things to the state in which he found them. That appeared to be clearly laid down by the judges in the authority before them. He thought the case was perfectly cogent, and in point. The section there alluded to enacts that the commissioner shall not have the power of naming a day in certain cases, that was to say, when for sixteen or seventeen reasons he may remand the petitioner to custody. The case before Mr. Commissioner Evans was not within that section, but the learned commissioner exercised the power notwithstanding, and the courts at Westminster decided that as he had decided the point, and that as he had exclusive jurisdiction in the matter of the petition, they could not interfere. That was a decision upon a plain principle; and that principle applied more strongly here, for the discharge from custody had been illegal. In Ex parte Partington the commissioner acted in ignorance, and that section did not positively require notice to be given to creditors; but the section here expressly alludes to the hearing of creditors. If, as in this case, the petitioner was discharged by any neglect, such as not hearing the parties, the discharge was positively illegal. The opposing parties must have notice. In this case it is specially directed that a certain creditor should have ten days' notice; and therefore, having obtained the protecting order without the condition the law imposed, namely, without hearing the other side, the order was clearly bad, and ought to be revoked. Then as to the suggestion of the Chief Commissioner, that instead of at once issuing a warrant for the insolvent's recommittal he would grant a fresh order to come up, if the petitioner by anything on his part had obtained the order improperly, he would, without hesitation, at once direct the issue of a warrant for his recommittal; but if he was personally without blame, he did not say that he would revoke at once or issue a warrant instanter for his recommittal. But if by any misconduct he had brought about his discharge, he would exercise the entire power asked for in this rule, and recommit; but if the insolvent was personally innocent of blame, he would not do so.

Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS said, the only doubt he had was, whether there was a power under these Acts, as there was under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, namely, where an adjudication was made on false evidence, or otherwise improperly made or fraudulently obtained, the court might grant a rehearing. If by any section in this Act the court possessed a similar power, he would have granted a rehearing. He doubted whether he had the power. However, upon full consideration of the case of Partington, he thought it went to the full length of exercising the power claimed to be exercised by this rule. He thought the case went the whole length; and it was a singular fact that the demerits in Partington was the same as in Fry. Partington had petitioned this court, of which the Court of Bankruptcy was kept in ignorance, and Fry had not given the notice required, of which fact this court was kept in ignorance. The commissioner's judgment in the case of Partington proceeded upon a fraudulent suppression of facts; and as in the one case the Superior Courts decided affirming the power exercised by the commissioner, he could not doubt that the same power existed in this case. He was of opinion that this court had the power both to revoke the order of protection and issue a warrant of re-committal. Upon looking at the schedule, there appeared to have been fraud in the case, and upon that no day was named. His rule was, when he mentioned any time, to specify the sufficient term of imprisonment, or of anxiety or suspense during which he was to be exposed to his creditors. But as the majority of the court do not agree in opinion, he deferred to their experience, and thought it would be sufficient to revoke the protecting order, without recommitting the insolvent, thus leaving him without protection, and at the discretion of his creditors.

Cooke asked for a day to be named for the insolvent to come up and be heard de novo under the 28th section.

Macrae said that it seemed, in deference to the doubts of the Chief Commissioner, that the court, instead of at once making the latter part of the rule absolute, intended to grant a new order, and the insolvent then to be dealt with upon the merits; but he would beg to suggest that, supposing a case were then made against the petitioner, what power would there be under that section to recommit him? He did not say that the court had not the power to recommit in that event, but they were leaving strong and safe ground under this rule, and taking up a new position, the nature of which, in reference to the rights of his client, he had not had time to consider.

Cooke replied, that that question could be considered when it arose.

Mr. Commissioner LAW thought that was a very proper suggestion, and the question should be considered now. He had no idea of allowing this rule to drop, or the power they possessed under it to be diminished by placing the parties in a new situation. There might be great doubt and difficulty in recommitting the insolvent if this rule were permitted to drop; and, therefore, he thought the best course would be, to let the rule stand over for the insolvent to come before the court and be examined viva voce, with liberty to the creditors to adduce any evidence they thought proper.

Macrae said that that course was quite unobjectionable.

Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS said that then, if the court should be of opinion, after hearing both sides, that a case was proved, this rule would be made absolute fully.

The rule was then directed to be enlarged, and the 6th of December named for the petitioner to come up for examination upon the merits, as under the 28th section. The opposing creditor present in court to take notice. The other opposing creditor at the first examination also to have due notice.

Rule enlarged.

PROTECTION CASE.

Re R. J. SMITH.

Trader debtor—Debts in schedule contracted in trade.

An insolvent owing debts contracted whilst in trade must petition as a trader.

The insolvent petitioned as a non-trader, and upon coming up to-day for his first examination was opposed by a creditor, the holder of a bill of exchange for 20*l.* (the only debt in the schedule) bearing the insolvent's name, which was the last of several renewals, on all of which a somewhat heavy discount had been charged. The first bill had been given three years ago, on account of a loan of money by the opposing creditor, at which time insolvent was a trader, and so continued for some eighteen months afterwards.

Surgood, for the opposing creditor, submitted that although the bill was a renewal, and the insolvent only a surety, yet the debt it represented was contracted while insolvent was in trade, and he ought to have petitioned as a trader.

Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS dismissed the petition.

PROTECTION CASE.

Re JAMES RANDALL.

Parting with property within three months of the date of the petition.

Held, that the payment of debts within three months of the date of the petition, not within the exceptions specified in the petition, is a parting with property, and fatal to the locus standi of a petitioner in court.

This insolvent appeared for his first examination upon his interim order.

Nichols appeared to oppose for a creditor. The ground of his opposition was a parting with property within three months of the date of his petition. He directed the attention of the court to the following entries in the Special Balance Sheet: "Oct. 21; paid said Miss Randall for cash lent 15*l.*" "Oct. 16; paid said Miss Randall for cash lent 20*l.*;" and submitted that the allegation in the petition that the petitioner had not parted with any of his property, except within the exceptions allowed, within three months of the date of his petition was untrue, and the petition must be dismissed.

Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS. — It is a bonâ fide debt, and the repayment of a loan is a parting with property.

Surgood, for petitioner.—But the money was borrowed to enable him to carry on his business; and these were the last of a series of repayments in the way of business for money borrowed to enable him to carry on the business.

Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS. — Though the borrowing was in the way of his trade, I cannot hold that the repayment was in the way of his trade. The petition must be dismissed.

The registrar's endorsement upon the schedule was, "Petition dismissed, having parted with property within three months of the date of filing the petition."

NOTE.—For cases upon this point, see Macrae's Insolvent Practice, pp. 137, 131, 401, et seq.

SHERIFFS' COURT.

Reported by [illegible], Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Saturday, Dec. 11.

(Before [illegible], QUERIST, Esq., Q.C.)

Authority to bankers to pay bill accepted payable at their house.

H., having an account at the head office of a joint-stock bank, accepted a bill payable generally at that bank. H. subsequently, and before the bill became due, opened an account at a branch bank belonging to the same company, but gave no notice to the bank to dishonour the bill. The bill, on becoming due, was presented at the head office, and was refused payment for want of funds. The holder then presented it at the office of the branch bank, where it was paid.

Held, that the company were authorised in paying the bill at the branch office; though there were distinct printed forms of cheques issued by the company for the head office and the branch bank; and though bills made payable at the branch bank by H. were always specially accepted payable at the branch office.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff against the defendant, as the public officer of the Union Bank of London, for the balance of his banking account with the company, and also for dishonouring a cheque for 87*l.* drawn by him on the company, although the company had funds in hand to pay the same.

Pulling, for the plaintiff.

Hislop Clarke, for the defendant.

The plaintiff had up to September 1852 kept a banking account with the Union Bank of London, at their principal office in Princes-street, in the city of London. In July the plaintiff accepted a bill for 87*l.* at three months' date, payable generally at the Union Bank of London. Shortly afterwards the plaintiff made an arrangement with the majority of his creditors for the payment of a composition, and was in course of negotiation with the holder of the bill in question for the same purpose when the bill became due. In October, a short time before the bill became due, the plaintiff, having changed his residence, opened an account with the branch office of the Union Bank at 99, Pall Mall, but he gave no notice either at the chief office of the company, or at the branch office, to refuse payment of the bill in question: and on the same becoming due it was presented at the chief office and refused payment for want of funds; and was then taken by the holder to the branch office in Pall Mall, where the same was paid. The plaintiff at this time had only a balance of a few shillings at the chief office, but had sufficient funds to meet the bill at the branch office. The plaintiff having discovered that the bank had paid the bill at the branch office, expostulated with them for so doing, drew a cheque on the company for the exact amount of such funds, and this cheque having been dishonoured, the present action was commenced.

These facts were admitted, and it was also shown that cheques drawn payable at the principal office were always headed "Union Bank of London, Princes-street," whilst cheques drawn payable at the branch office were always headed "Union Bank of London, Branch Office, Pall Mall." It was moreover shown that bills made payable by the plaintiff at the head office were always accepted "payable at the Union Bank of London," whilst the bills made payable at the branch office were always accepted payable at the "Union Bank of London, Pall Mall."

The cases of Marzetti v. Williams, 1 B. & Ad. 415, and Kymer v. Laurie, 18 L. J. 218, N. S. Q. B. were cited; and it was contended on the part of the plaintiff that the authority given to the bank was a limited one to pay the bill at the precise place where it was made payable. On the other hand, the defendant's counsel contended that the authority to the bank was a general one to pay the bill wherever it was presented to them.

GURNEY, Q.C. the Judge, said, the only question was whether the plaintiff had given any authority to the Bank to pay the bill in question. He was of opinion that the authority had been proved. The plaintiff, by making the bill payable generally at the Union Bank of London, gave the officers of the company authority to pay the bill either at the chief office or the branch office; and there must be Judgment for the defendant.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.

(Reported by J. E. DAVIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.)

Monmouthshire Summer Assizes, Aug. 2.

DOE dem. HULIN v. POWELL.

Ejectment—Evidence—Pedigree—Declarations of deceased relations ex parte maternâ—Deposition of deceased witness in one action used in another—Proof of loss—Secondary evidence of contents of deed.

In an action of ejectment brought to recover property settled on the heirs of E. R. the lessors of the plaintiff claimed title through the maternal ancestors, it being admitted that E. R. had no descendants living. In addition to evidence of the pedigree through the mother, a statement of E. R.'s father that he had no father or mother to cry for him was proved, and all the witnesses who were acquainted with the family agreed that they never heard of any other relatives of E. R. on the father's side except the father and grandfather, both long since dead:

Held, that this constituted a prima facie case for the plaintiff, and that it was not necessary to further exhaust the paternal line, or to trace the heirs of E. R.'s grandmother or great grandmother on the father's side.

In a former unsuccessful action of ejectment brought on the same demise to recover the same property, J. R. defended as landlord, and obtained a commission to perpetuate testimony. Before the witnesses were examined under it, J. R. finding he had no legal claim, agreed to defend for P. (the defendant, as landlord, in the subsequent action), and to be repaid the costs out of rents received on P.'s account:

Held, that the deposition of a deceased witness under the commission in the former suit was admissible in the second, although it did not appear that the lessors of the plaintiff had notice that R. defended the first action on P.'s behalf.

The deed by which the property was settled on the heirs of E. R. being in the hands of the defendant P., a summons was taken out by the lessors of the plaintiff for its inspection. The clerk of the defendant's agent, on the hearing, attended and opposed the application, and, in order to show that the defendant had no such deed as that described in the affidavits in support of the summons, he stated the real contents of the deed:

Held, that such statement of the clerk was not admissible as secondary evidence of the limitations of the deed.

Ejectment to recover freehold and copyhold property in Monmouthshire.

The first count of the declaration was on the demise of Anne Hulin, John Williams the younger, and Thomas Williams and Mary his wife. The second count was on the demise of Anne Hulin, John Williams the younger, Thomas Williams and Mary his wife, and George Holbrook. There were other counts alleging the demise to be by one or others of those persons.

Keating, Q.C., Gray, and Horace Wright, for the lessors of the plaintiff.

Whateley, Q.C. and Phipson, for the defendant.

The copyhold estate in question was purchased in the year 1786 by Isaac Paske the elder, and it was surrendered to him for life, with remainder to the heirs of his daughter Elizabeth, the wife of Lewis Richards. The freehold estates sought to be recovered were on the marriage of Elizabeth Richards settled in the same manner and with the same limitations over as in the surrender of the copyhold estates. The lessor of the plaintiff claimed as her heir-at-law. It was admitted on both sides as a fact that there were no descendants of Elizabeth Richards living, and the lessor of the plaintiff claimed through her maternal ancestors, and for this purpose proved that Rachel Paske, her mother, whose maiden name was Hugh, had an only sister, Elizabeth Hugh, who married James Probyn. It was admitted that the lessors of the plaintiff were the heirs-at-law of James Probyn and Elizabeth his wife.

Powell, the defendant, claimed as heir-at-law of Elizabeth Richards, through the paternal line, alleging that Thomas Paske, the father of Isaac Paske the elder, had a brother, Morgan Paske, and that the defendant was his heir-at-law.

In order to prove the limitations of the marriage settlement of 1786, relating to the freehold estates, which was now in the hands of the defendant, evidence was adduced that a summons before a judge at chambers was taken out in this action by the lessors of the plaintiff, under the recent statute for the inspection of documents, for an order to inspect the deed in question. The affidavits in support of the application did not correctly describe the deed, and the clerk of the defendant's agents attended the summons and stated the contents of the deed, but submitted that he was not bound to produce it for inspection, inasmuch as the limitations being different from those alleged to be contained in the deed sworn to be in the defendant's possession, he had not any such deed as the lessors of the plaintiff wished to inspect. The learned judge (Erle, J.) refused to make any order for inspection except upon terms to which the lessors of the plaintiff refused to submit. Notes of what the clerk stated to be the real limitations of the deed were taken down at the time by the agent for the lessors of the plaintiff, who was now put in the box to verify them, and it was contended (notice to produce the original deed having been given) that this was good secondary evidence of its contents.

Whateley, Q.C. having objected to the reception of this evidence for such a purpose,

WILLIAMS, J. after some deliberation expressed his opinion that the evidence was not admissible. There was no authority given to the clerk of the attorney's agent attending on the summons (?) at the same time, if it should turn out that there was no other evidence to prove the limitations of the freehold, he would receive this, and give leave to the defendant to move.

Mr. Powles, a solicitor, was then examined as a witness. He stated that he was formerly employed by Mr. Ample[illegible], a client, to complete the purchase of some property sold to him by Richards, a member of the same family as Lewis Richards. Mr. Richards's solicitor, Mr. Williams, supplied an abstract of the title, which was subsequently returned to him. Witness perused the abstract, which was afterwards examined with the deeds by witness's late partner, Mr. Tyler.

Gray proposed to ask Mr. Powles the contents of the abstract, it having been examined with the original deeds by his partner in the course of business.

WILLIAMS, J.—That will not do. How can the witness speak to the accuracy of his partner?

Mr. Williams was then called. He was the solicitor of the late Mr. James Richards. He died without issue, and his cousin, the present Mr. Richards, was his heir. The deeds were placed by him in the hands of the witness, who also acted as his solicitor after the death of James. The abstract in question, and now produced was prepared in witness's office, and had been in his possession ever since it was returned by Mr. Powles. It was in the handwriting of a clerk not now with him, but who was alive in Somersetshire three years ago. The draft was compared with the deeds, and the draft with the abstract. Some of the deeds abstracted, including the deed of 1786, were now in the possession of the defendant's attorney, having been handed over to him at Mr. Richards's request, who had given up all title to it. The witness also stated that he observed in the abstract notes and corrections in his own handwriting, and therefore believed that he must have examined it with the deeds.

It was now proposed to have the abstract read, the deed of which this was an abstract or copy having been traced to the possession of the defendant's attorney.

Whateley objected that it would be a disclosure of professional confidence on the part of the witness, and was a privileged communication. Moreover, it was not shown that the witness himself examined the abstract with the deed.

Keating and Gray, contrà.—The contents of the deed had been disclosed to Mr. Powles. Here the source of information, the abstract, had been prepared for the purpose of being divulged to others.

WILLIAMS, J.—I think the evidence is now sufficient. There are no degrees in secondary evidence. I shall make a note that I think the evidence is admissible, not being privileged, and that it is good secondary evidence.

The abstract was then taken as read, the defendant's counsel having leave to move on this point, with respect to the freehold.

Mr. Williams, the witness, was then further cross-examined. He stated that a former action of ejectment, tried at Monmouth, to recover the same property, was defended by Mr. Richards for the present defendant, Mr. Powell. There was a commission issued to examine witnesses in that case, and William Morgan, since dead, and other witnesses, were examined as witnesses under that commission. There was an arrangement in writing with Powell respecting the costs.

Re-examined.—I did not communicate personally with Mr. Powell. I was employed by Mr. Richards to defend the action, and I looked to him for the costs. He succeeded in that action, the plaintiff being nonsuited. I received extra costs out of the rents which passed through my hands. I was not present at any arrangement for Richards defending for Powell.

Evidence was adduced to show that the lessors of the plaintiff were the sole heirs, on the maternal side, of Elizabeth, the daughter of Isaac Paske, and the wife of Lewis Richards, tracing the pedigree through the Hughs. A witness also deposed to a statement of Isaac Paske on the occasion of a funeral, that he had no father or mother to cry for him. All the witnesses stated that, although acquainted with the family, they never heard of any member of Isaac Paske's family, except Thomas Paske, his father.

At the close of the plaintiff's case,

Whateley and Phipson objected that the case was not proved as against William Powell. The plaintiff had exhausted the maternal heirs of Elizabeth Paske, but had not exhausted the paternal side. It was not shown that Thomas Paske had no other children than Isaac Paske. Before the claim ex parte maternâ, which is the lowest, can be entertained, it must be shown affirmatively that the paternal line is exhausted. Moreover, in this case the title relied on is that of the heir-at-law of the mother, namely, through Elizabeth Hugh, the sister of Rachel, the mother of Elizabeth Richards; but, before the heirs on the mother's side are admitted, the maternal line on the father's side ought to be exhausted. Here the plaintiff ought to trace, first, through Isaac Paske's mother. The maternal heirs of the mother are the very last persons entitled.—[WILLIAMS, J.—There is the statement of Isaac Paske, that he had no father or mother to cry for him.]—Then the heirs of his grandmother would be entitled before the heirs of the plaintiff, and no evidence had been given respecting her heirs.

WILLIAMS, J.—I cannot say that there is no case.

COMMON PROCEEDINGS.

Wilde for the conversation of the old man, and the statement of the witnesses that they never heard of any relation of his. All I say is, that there is some evidence for the jury. Suppose it had been proved that Isaac Paske was an illegitimate child, who would be entitled? The nearest relation of his daughter would be her aunt Elizabeth Hugh, who married Probyn.

Whateley then addressed the jury.—He opened that the defendant claimed through a Morgan Paske, alleged to be the brother of Thomas Paske, Isaac Paske's father. A former action, substantially between the same parties and involving the same question, was tried in 1845. The lessors of the plaintiff were the same, and Mr. Richards, the defendant, gave up his claim to the property and defended for Mr. Powell, the present defendant. Several old witnesses were examined in that action under a commission, and the testimony of one of those witnesses, since dead, would be laid before the jury in addition to other evidence.

James Richards said: I am the cousin of James Richards, who died in 1845, and I entered into possession of his estates. I was the defendant in the former action. I was applied to to defend for Powell. I refused at first, but afterwards consented. The ejectment was nonsuited. I received the costs from the opposite side, but I had extra costs to pay, and paid them out of the rents. This was an arrangement made with Powell about two months before the trial. I subsequently gave up the deeds and back rents (deducting the amount of the extra costs) to Mr. Norton, Powell's attorney. Mr. Norton was then and now the attorney for the defendant, but was previously the attorney for the lessors of the plaintiff.

John Seymour, Mr. Richard's agent, said that before the action was brought there was a communication made on the part of Powell, to the effect that if Mr. Richards defended for him the costs should be paid out of rents. In consequence of this the witness went to Mr. Williams, Mr. Richards's attorney, to defend the action for Powell. This was about six weeks or two months before the trial. The Nisi Prius record in the former action was produced. The lessors of the plaintiff were the same. James Richards defended as landlord and tenant, and Susannah Keymiss as tenant, by separate consent rules. The issue was also produced with a judge's order for the admission of the declaration in ejectment, and the consent rule by Richards, bearing date July 16, 1845.

A commission to examine witnesses under a rule of court dated 3rd June 1845, drawn up on rules of the 3rd and 5th days of May, with the examination of the witnesses under it, was produced from the proper custody. It being admitted that Morgan, whose evidence was so taken, was alive at the last trial, and had died since, it was now proposed to read his deposition.

Keating submitted that the defendant was not in a situation to read the deposition, on the ground that this was a commission in a different action from the present, and that a deposition taken in one action could not be read in another. The cause in which the commission issued appeared by the record to be against Richards and Keymiss. Both parties appeared, and separate consent rules were entered into. In the present action another person, Powell, defended. The actions, therefore, were different. If the case stood there, the deposition is clearly inadmissible; but it is attempted to be shown that Richards defended for Powell. But in the first place that fact was not made out; and, secondly, if made out, the evidence is inadmissible. Now, it was impossible that the steps in the former action could have been taken on behalf of Powell, Mr. Seymour says that six weeks or two months before the trial the arrangement was made for defending for Powell. The rule for the commission was made absolute on the 3rd of June, and drawn up on reading rules of the 3rd and 5th days of May, being, it is presumed, a rule nisi and enlargement, the 5th of May being the last day of term. As the rule nisi issued, therefore, more than three months before the Summer Assizes at Monmouth, when the action was tried, it was, therefore, absurd to say that the commission was applied for or issued on behalf of Powell, or for the purpose of defending for him. It is not because during the progress of the cause an arrangement is made such as that deposed to, that the defence became Powell's. If Richards's defence were inconsistent with Powell's, and the former abandoned [illegible] action, it might be so.

[illegible]—This is a very important point. [illegible] the same side.—It is apprehended that the [illegible] quite clear. The action must be between the same parties, or representing the same parties. They must be privies. In a case at Shrewsbury, Doe d. Spencer v. Gittelby, before Pattesall, J., where the question depended under the same deed, but under a different limitation, similar evidence was rejected. Powell ought to have perpetuated the testimony in his own name. Suppose in a suit by Richards this testimony had been perpetuated, could it have been said [illegible] for Powell? Clearly not. Therefore it is [illegible] on general grounds. But by the [illegible] appears Richards defended as landlord and [illegible]. He was in receipt of the rents. Suppose Powell to be the true heir of Elizabeth Richards, who became Mrs. Maynard, [illegible] ejectment is brought at the death of old James Richards? Powell would then become her landlord. Miss Richards defended as landlord. How can he be admitting another landlord's title by any arrangement between himself and Powell? His entering into the consent rule as landlord prevents him making any arrangement that Powell shall defend as landlord. Then it does not appear that the lessors of the plaintiff in the former action had any knowledge that they were in contact with Powell. It is most important in these cases, for the purpose of examination and cross-examination, to know who the parties are that are in contact. Who can say whether, if the lessors of the plaintiff had notice that Powell was the defendant, the line of cross-examination of the witnesses would not be different, and so the evidence of the person examined materially different? [WILLIAMS, J.—I may assume that the deposition was made and is now sought to be used for the purpose of setting up a hostile pedigree.] Yes; to render the evidence admissible, the parties and the issue must be the same: (Roscoe's Nisi Prius, 8th edit. p. 89.) Here it cannot be said that we were aware of the issue.

Whateley, contrà.—The test is not whether the action is the same, and the parties literally identical, but the question is whether it is substantially the same action, and between the same parties. If substantially so, it is not necessary to be nominally the same. It is not material that Powell was not known to the lessors of the plaintiff, as Mr. Richards might have set up Powell's title, or anybody else's. It clearly was Powell's defence, as Mr. Richards knows he had no claim. Then, as to the test, had the parties the means of cross-examination? Here they had. They had the opportunity. That is sufficient: (1 Stark. on Evid. 2nd edit. p 270: Kynnersley v. Orpe, Douglas, 56.) Is there any doubt that this deposition could be used as against Powell? [WILLIAMS, J.—That is the great test in the case.] Suppose the lessors of the plaintiff wished to make use of the evidence of Charles, another witness examined under the commission, surely it would be competent to them to give it in evidence.

WILLIAMS, J.—I understand the facts to be that, after the commencement of the action against Richards, and after a rule for the commission had been obtained, an agreement was effected between Richards and Powell that Richards should defend for Powell and be allowed the costs out of the back rents. Then did that put Powell substantially in the place of the defendant? All these cases must depend on something more than the bare proposition. The foundation of the rule involves two considerations. First, had the opposite party a proper opportunity for cross-examination? That does not mean a bare opportunity of cross-examination, for, if so, that would let in strange depositions; but had the party an opportunity of examining in such a way that he would not have examined the witness in another way if he had known who the parties really interested were? Now in this case, even if the parties had been so aware, the cross-examination could not have assumed a different course, because, the object of the lessors of the plaintiff remaining precisely the same, the cross-examination must have taken the same line. The second point is more difficult to determine. In all cases there must be reciprocity; and therefore the question arises, whether Powell was so substantially the defendant that this would be evidence against him. I have come to the conclusion that the evidence is admissible; but I feel great diffidence on the subject, and I am by no means confident, but I decide on the general principle that I ought to admit rather than reject.

The deposition of William Morgan was then read. It referred to Morgan Paske, an elder brother of Thomas Paske, who told the deponent that he had three brothers and one sister. Further evidence was adduced, and the question which the evidence finally resolved itself into was, whether Morgan Paske was the brother of Thomas Paske, the pedigree of the defendant from a Morgan Paske being admitted.

The jury found for the plaintiff.

REG. v. PIERCE AND OTHERS.

Larceny—Property left by passenger in railway carriage—Venue—Statute 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 18—Order for delivery to prisoner of money found on his person.

The law with regard to the finder of lost property does not apply to the case of property of a passenger accidentally left in a railway carriage, and found there by a servant of the company; and such servant is guilty of larceny if, instead of taking it to the station or superior officer, he appropriates it to his own use.

Where the evidence is consistent with the fact of an article having been abstracted from a railway carriage either in the course of the journey through the county of A., after the arrival at B. station, in the county of B., and the prisoner is indicted in A. under the statute 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 18, the venue must be made out to the satisfaction of the jury before they are satisfied that the larceny was committed in the county of A. otherwise [illegible]

The justice will not grant an order for the delivery to a prisoner of money found upon him for safe keeping, unless satisfied that he has power to decide such an order.

James Pierce and Richard Pugh were indicted for stealing on the 23rd of May, 1855, a dressing-case and other articles, the property of the Shrewsbury and Birmingham Railway Company; and in another count the prisoners, together with John Pugh and Jane Pugh his wife, were charged with feloniously receiving the same articles. The other counts the articles were laid as the property of Harry Cunliffe.

Scotland and J. A. Hill, for the prosecution.

Huddleston, for the Pughs; Keith for Pierce.

After the grand jury had found the bill, and before the trial, Keith made an application to the court for an order directing that some money taken from Pierce, and now in the possession of the chief constable, be given up to the prisoner to enable him to prepare for his defence. There was no pretence for saying that the money was connected in any way with the charge.

The application was resisted by the prosecution. A considerable sum, upwards of 13*l.* had been already given up by an order of the committing magistrate, and the chief constable produced an order from the Under Secretary of State for the Home Department, directing that such moneys only taken from prisoners were to be given up as the committing magistrate might order. After some discussion, WILLIAMS, J. refused to make the order, as it did not appear what power, on the one hand, a judge or justice of the peace had to make such an order, and, on the other hand, what authority the Secretary of State had to control the right, if it existed.

At the trial the following facts were proved on the part of the prosecution:—The Rev. Henry Cunliffe on the 9th of May was a first-class passenger from Shrewsbury to the Shiffnal station on the railway. On reaching home he missed a dressing-case, which formed part of his luggage, and was in the carriage with him. Having reported his loss to the railway authorities, inquiries were instituted, and the dressing-case and some of its contents were found in the house of the prisoner Pierce, at Shrewsbury, who was an engineer in the employment of the railway company, and who conducted the train by which Mr. Cunliffe had travelled. Richard Pugh was a stoker in the employment of the company, and he accompanied the train in question with Pierce. The evidence against him consisted in a statement which he made to the police constable, to the effect that he found the dressing-case in a first-class carriage on the arrival of the train at Codsall, one of the stations on the line; that he carried it to the engine, and gave it to Pierce, who opened it with a wrench, and, on their return to Shrewsbury, gave him some of the articles out of it as his share. A portion of the contents of the dressing-case was found at Shrewsbury, in the house of John Pugh, Richard Pugh's father. Jane Pugh, the mother, was proved to have pawned a gold ring, which also formed a part of the contents of the dressing-case.

The part of the line of railway along which Mr. Cunliffe travelled is in the county of Salop; but the Codsall station, to which the train proceeded after Mr. Cunliffe left it, and where, according to Pugh's statement, the dressing-case was taken from the carriage, is in Staffordshire.

At the close of the case for the prosecution,

Huddleston objected that the indictment was not supported as against Pugh. The larceny, if committed at all, must have been committed in the county of Salop. The statute 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 18, did not apply here. That section enacted that, in "indictments for felonies or misdemeanours committed upon any person, or on or in respect of any property in or upon any coach, cart, or other carriage whatsoever employed in any voyage or journey upon any navigable river, canal, or inland navigation, the venue may be laid in any county through which the coach, &c. or vessel shall have passed in the course of the journey or voyage during which the felony or misdemeanour was committed, in the same manner as if it had been actually committed therein." The whole of Mr. Cunliffe's journey was in Shropshire. If the statement of the prisoner Pugh was relied on as evidence of his guilt, it must be taken altogether, and that showed that the larceny was not committed during the journey; for the removal of the dressing-case from the carriage did not constitute the larceny, according to Pugh's statement, but the distribution of the property on the platform at Shrewsbury after the return journey. If so, the offence was not triable in Staffordshire, but in Shropshire.

WILLIAMS, J. thought there was some evidence for the jury, from which they might believe that the dressing-case was taken during the journey. The evidence, with the exception of Pugh's statement, was consistent with either supposition, and therefore the case must go to the jury.

Huddleston and Keith then addressed the jury for their respective clients. Among other topics, it was urged that if the prisoners found the dressing-case, without any owner [illegible] to take care of it for safe custody.

Williams, J., in summing up said there was no pretence for calling this an case of lost property. It was the duty of the prisoners, if they found such an article left by a passenger, to take it to the station-house or some office of the train. It was absurd to say that this case bore any resemblance to that of the finder of lost property. He in nothing like lost property. With respect to the point raised as to the venue, if the jury thought the evidence was not satisfactory of a stealing from the carriage in the course of the journey, then they must acquit the prisoners Pierce and Pugh of the charge of stealing, and consider what evidence there was against them and the other prisoners of receiving the goods knowing them to have been stolen.

The jury convicted Pierce and Richard Pugh of stealing, and acquitted the other prisoners.

Re Dennis Shanahan.

Habeas corpus—Deaf and dumb boy—Illegal restraint—When court will deliver to father.

Where a deaf and dumb boy more than fourteen years of age is brought up under a writ of habeas corpus sued out by his father to obtain the custody of his son, and for the purpose of removing him from what he alleged was a proselytising institution, the court will not deliver the boy into the father's custody, but will inform him that he is at liberty to go where he pleases, and that the court will protect him either in remaining or going, as he wishes; and where the boy can write, for the purpose of preventing any undue influence on the part of the master of the establishment where the boy was, one of the court will examine him in chambers, in the master's absence, for the purpose of ascertaining the boy's wish, which being reported to the court, they will make an order according to such choice.

In this case a conditional order for a habeas corpus was obtained by J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C. on behalf of the father of a deaf and dumb boy, for the purpose of obtaining possession of his son, who was an inmate of the Claremont Deaf and Dumb Institution. The affidavit on which the order was obtained stated that he (the father) was a Roman Catholic in very impoverished circumstances, and that he was induced to allow his child to be sent to this charitable institution, relying on the promise of the lady who obtained his admission that the boy would be educated in his father's religion. That he afterwards discovered that this was a Protestant institution, and that he was anxious to take away the boy on this account, and because the promise on which he was induced to allow the boy to enter was not kept. That he had gone to the Claremont Institution for the purpose of taking away the boy; but that the people there refused to allow him to do so.

Fitzgibbon, Q. C. (with whom Griffin and Norwood) now showed cause.—From the affidavits filed on behalf of the governors of this institution, it appears that the father well knew the character of this institution. Another of his children, a daughter, who was similarly afflicted, had been placed there in 1844. It is a rule of the institution that children, after being sent in by their parents, are not to be taken away for five years. As there are many more candidates than they can afford to take in, it is a great favour to parents or guardians; and the directors will not allow the children to be removed at the whim of their parents. With regard to the girl, the father had complained to the magistrates, and as the girl had completed her fifth year in the institution he was allowed to take her away, and she is now in the poor-house. The conversation with the lady who obtained the boy's entrance was contradicted. It was through charity to the boy that the directors of this institution refused giving up the child, as the father was in wretchedly poor circumstances, and unable to provide for the child. Although there is some controversy about the boy's age, it is admitted that he is more than fourteen years of age. Under these circumstances the court does nothing further than to release the person when brought up under the writ, and inform that he is at liberty, and may go where he pleases: (R. v. Delaval, 3 Burr., 1434.) In Rex v. Greenhill and others, 6 Mod. 71, it was held that, though under many strong circumstances the father was entitled to the custody of his child, yet if the child has arrived at an age to judge for itself, the court will not interfere with what choice he or she child may make. In that case Holt, Justice, says: "The effect of the habeas corpus is that the individual is brought before the court, and if he be of an age capable of taking care of himself he may elect where he will go." Colebitch, J. [illegible] says also: "The writ of habeas corpus always proceeds on the supposition of illegal restraint of the body. When you have a person of age to judge for himself, the case is a very simple one, and the party simply declares any illegal restraint the party may have been subjected to to be at an end, and, when the party has been in danger of being seized, has directed some one of the officers of the court to conduct the party safely."

J. D. Fitzgerald, Q. C. and J. A. Curran, in support of the rule.—This is the case of a natural guardian placing a child at a school, and afterwards wishing to remove him: he has a right to do so. He is not like another boy arrived at the age of discretion, who has the use of speech and hearing. We are entitled to have the child given up to us. The father is the guardian of the child, and he does not wish to leave him in this proselytising institution, and he may deliver him to whom he pleases. Under any circumstances we are entitled to have the boy brought up in court and allowed to choose for himself.

Crampton, J.—Now, to save expense, we might as well make the order at once, as I understand the boy is in court, and we might ascertain what is his wish.

Lefroy, C.J.—We are not to deliver the child to his father. You are agreed that this court will merely deliver a party from illegal custody. We have therefore, as it is admitted he is of an age to choose for himself, to see what his choice is and to protect him in the exercise of it. It seems to me that, the master of the institution being sworn, we may inquire through him what is the boy's wish, and also inform him that he is at perfect liberty to go where he pleases.

J. D. Fitzgerald.—The father swears that the boy was always desirous of leaving the place, and we suspect undue influence will be exercised by the master. The boy can write, and may be examined in that way.

Lefroy, C.J.—We propose then that the boy should be brought, the master having been removed; that he should be informed that he is at liberty to go where he pleases; and then that we should ascertain what his wish is on the subject.

Crampton, J.—We will have him brought into the Chief Justice's chamber and examined by one of the court.

Mr. Justice Moore accordingly retired to their lordships' chamber, and, returning after a short time, reported to the court that he had examined the boy by written questions and obtained his answers in writing; that the lad said that he had seen his father last yesterday. That his lordship then wrote, "You are at liberty to stay at Claremont where you have been, or to go with your father as you please; which do you choose, and do you understand this question?" He replied that he understood. He was then asked, "Which did he wish? to stop there, or go to Claremont?" He then wrote "To Claremont." He was then asked, "Was he told to make that reply by any person?" As he did not seem to understand this question, his lordship then sent for a member of the bar, Mr. Purcell, who, as he was informed, understood the language of the deaf and dumb, and, after some explanation, put again substantially the same question, when the boy replied that he wished to stay at Claremont, and not to go with his father, because he was poor.

By the Court.—It is admitted he is beyond fourteen. He has decided to remain where he is. We have, therefore, no right to take him away from the place while he chooses to remain.

Rule accordingly, and no costs.—It is ordered by the Court that the cause shown be allowed, and the said conditional order be and same is hereby discharged. And it is further ordered that said Dennis Shanahan be forthwith remitted to the care and protection of the managers and head master of said institution at Claremont, there to continue and remain, in compliance with his election and decision.

PREROGATIVE COURT.

Reported by Dr. Waddilove, of Doctors' Commons.

Stultz and others v. Schokelle and another.

How far a wife may exert her authority over the testamentary disposition of her husband.

The facts fully appear in the judgment.

Bayford and R. Phillimore appeared in support of the will.

Adams and Twiss contrà.

Dr. Lushington (sitting for Sir John Dodson, he having originally been counsel in the cause).—I will commence this judgment by stating so much of the undisputed facts, set forth in the proceedings, as are necessary clearly to show what are the questions to be decided. The testator, Mr. John Stultz, died in the month of April, 1849, at the age of 61. He left behind him a widow, no children, and two sisters. Had the deceased died intestate the widow and sisters would have been the only persons entitled to his personal estate. The will and codicil in question had been propounded by the widow and Mr. H. and Mr. C., the executrix and executors; the two sisters opposed it. One of them subsequently withdrew from the suit. A nephew of the deceased, a son of one of the sisters then intervened. The trustees of the Asylum Benevolent Institution also intervened. The interest of the sisters and the nephew was in opposition. The interest of these trustees was adverse to this will, since under a former will they took a larger benefit. [The learned judge, after having stated the pleadings of the parties in the suit and their respective interests, passed on to the pleadings, saying he should confine himself to that part of the allegation which was of importance. He then continued.] The 9th article of the allegation, opposing the will, is that to which attention must be particularly directed, and that pleads that in the summer of 1846 the testator, whose health had been giving way for some time previously, became subject to epileptic fits, and especially that he had a very severe one in March 1847, from the effect of which upon his reasoning powers, though he sometimes rallied, he never quite recovered. The 11th article pleads that Mrs. Stultz, after her return to her husband in May 1847, took advantage of the testator's increased and increasing infirmities in body and mind to obtain complete control over him. The 12th section pleads that, notwithstanding this reduction of the testator's bodily and mental powers, he was competent to the transaction of business of an ordinary character, and even to the making a will properly aided and advised, until the end of the year 1847; that he did duly make and execute a will on the 7th of August, 1847; that in the latter part of the year 1847, and in the early part of the year 1848, he became and generally speaking was incompetent to the transaction of business of any moment or concern, and unequal to the management of himself and his affairs. Now with regard to the article, the contents of which I have now stated, I think it is obvious that, to part of it, it is next to impossible that any evidence could have been produced, because I am at a loss to conceive how any witness could give his evidence according to the terms of this allegation, viz., to fix upon what is the decrease of mental power which would just leave a man competent to the making of his will, properly aided and advised. I do not know how any opinion, or rather any evidence, could be given upon the subject. However, to proceed; the 17th article alleges, "That the will and codicil propounded were written by the direction of Mrs. Stultz and her solicitor; that the testator had neither known nor approved, nor was he capable of knowing or approving, of the contents of the will and codicil, and was not at the time they bore date of sound mind." Very many specific facts are also pleaded in this allegation, intended to prove the main averments and conclusions contained in it; and unquestionably, if this allegation of which I have now stated the principal contents should be proved by the evidence in the cause, the testator was not competent at that period to make his will. On the 5th of November, 1850, a responsive allegation on behalf of the executors is admitted, and all I need say of that is, that the object of it was to deny or explain the facts pleaded in opposition to the will, and to state other facts for the purpose of supporting the will. It appears to me, from the very brief statement I have now given of the contents of these pleas, that the main ground of opposition to the will is that the testator was of unsound mind, or, to put it perhaps in a more correct point of view, of weakened and impaired mind, at the time of the execution of the testamentary instrument; that he was not a free agent, but acted under the control and undue influence of his wife. In the course of the argument against the will and codicil propounded it was said, and truly said, that, according to the established doctrine of these courts in deciding whether a testator was capable or not, his capacity must be considered with reference to the act done—whether he was equal to and capable of the act in question. That is the first point. There was, however, very little discussion as to what amounted in law to control or influence when exercised by a wife over a husband. There are no cases more difficult, or which require a narrower examination of evidence, than questions of capacity proportionate to any given act; nor can I conceive any subject more incapable of approaching to a definition than the question, what constitutes undue influence or control in a wife over her husband? In speaking of capacity proportionate to a given act, and of impaired faculties, we must remember that we have no absolute standard whereby to make a measurement. It will be difficult, perhaps impossible, to say at what period of life all the mental faculties are in their fullest vigour, or how any of them begin to decline. It may perhaps be, I think very frequently is, that the memory loses some of its former vigour at the very time that the judgment is in its greatest strength. Even when disease supervenes it is not easy to trace the effect of that disease, and to show how far it may have weakened or impaired any of the mental faculties in particular. All we can do is to form the best judgment in our power from the conduct of the testator himself, and the acts done by him,—the only safe evidence to rely upon in investigations of this description. The opinions and conclusions of witnesses, for various reasons, are so little to be depended on that it would be very unsafe in ordinary cases to make them the execution of any judgment. Again, in prosecuting this inquiry it is part of the duty of the court,—and I think, of its most difficult duty,—to ascertain how far the evidence of the witnesses in the cause is deserving of credit; for it matters not what a man swears, unless you are satisfied that he deserves to be believed as to what he does depose to. I apprehend, indeed I may say, that upon the successful prosecution of that investigation necessarily depends the question whether the decision of the court in this and in a multitude of other cases be well founded or not. With regard to the question of control and undue influence, a manifest distinction exists between them. Control is more easily capable of a description approaching to a definition, because it necessarily imports something of the nature of force, duress, or fear. Upon the question of undue influence, especially in the case of a wife, very little is to be found in the books, or indeed could be expected to be found. Some dicta we have, not with respect to a wife, but in other cases in some degree approaching to it, but still from their circumstances widely different when we take an accurate inspection of the whole; and some dicta have said, as, for instance, Sir John Nicoll, in the case of Kensington v. Harrison, 2 Phill. 551, observes:—"Importunity, in its correct legal acceptation, must be in such a degree as to take away from the testator free agency." The same question was discussed in Weddons v. Goode, 1 Haggard 581 to which I shall presently refer; and in Huddleston v. Armstrong, 1 Moore, P. C. C. 480. It was there observed, "that undue influence to vitiate an act must amount to force and coercion, destroying free agency." The testator must therefore be a free agent, by which, I apprehend, must be intended and meant that he must have the power, if he had the will, to do or not to do any given act. Whether a testator be a free agent or not, as there are no possible means of penetrating into the motives by which he was actuated, must be judged of by his acts and deeds and all the surrounding circumstances. This, I fear, of necessity leads the way to the consideration of a part of the bulky evidence produced in this cause, both as regards the capacity of the deceased, and his freedom from control or the contrary. But I will here observe there are certain parts of the case which were much discussed by counsel, and not improperly so, into which it is not my intention to travel, or at least with any particularity. I mean the execution of various deeds and the precise amount of property possessed by the deceased at the making of the will propounded, or at any given period; and I decline undertaking this task because, after having again carefully considered the whole of these papers, I have not materials for doing so satisfactorily. I have not enough whereon I can, upon any of the circumstances, come to a safe judicial conclusion; and indeed it is not to be wondered at, because the very facts relating to these deeds and the property of the deceased have not formed a part of the pleadings in this cause, and no evidence has been produced directly on the one side or the other as to the circumstances under which the deeds were made, or with respect to the amount of property, at the various times when different wills have been made. In a case of this description, the history and the character of the testator are necessarily most important ingredients in the decision of the case. The testator, it appears, was born in Germany, and possessed of no property, or very little, when he came to this country for the sake of seeking his fortune; that he was a person of no education, and does not appear to have made much improvement during his long residence here. The evidence varies as to the extent of his acquirements: he could not read English, save in a very limited degree; he could sign his own name and write a little, but not much. His occupation was that of a tailor, and in 1826 he was admitted by his cousin as a partner in his business. In the progress of time he gradually acquired very considerable wealth, and continued to reside in this country, with occasional visits to his relations in Germany, until his death. I must take his character from the evidence of the witnesses produced in the cause, and also in some degree from the facts proved. He was manifestly, at least up to some of the periods in controversy, a person of very shrewd mind, active and adroit in the management of his business, of a very reserved disposition, kind, generous, and charitable to the greatest degree, but, as appears too clearly from the evidence, very irritable, and utterly incapable of restraining his violence when under the influence of passion. I am endeavouring to state the result of the evidence. I will refer to one or two passages in it. One witness, who was intimately acquainted with the testator, and who was a person of the same nation, says: "The deceased was at times as violent and uncontrollable as a madman. I have seen him in that state in his last days." Another witness, who lived in his house nearly thirteen years, says: "The testator was of a very irritable and violent temper; it was, not caused by bodily infirmities"—a very important statement—"his temper was bad when he was in good health." Again, his most intimate friend and confidential solicitor says: "The testator was of a very reserved disposition, and of a very irritable temper;" and one of these witnesses repeats, "I like the testator to have been constitutionally very irritable; he was very hasty, and easily excited. A trifle would upset him, and make him very angry; he expressed himself in very violent terms towards those about him, and sometimes for the most trifling causes." It cannot certainly be necessary, in order to elucidate the proposition here set forth, to refer to more evidence, and for this reason, that there is no conflicting evidence upon the point. All the evidence on both sides tends to establish and prove that which I have now stated. The will propounded in this cause is dated 6th July, 1848, the codicil September 5 in the same year. By this will Mrs. Stultz is very largely benefited. The will preceding in date that of the 6th July, 1848, is pleaded, though not propounded in the allegation of those opposing the will now in question. It bears date August 7, 1847, and differs in some very important respects from the will of 1848. There is, it is true, the same bequest of the household furniture; and all the legacies which I have before recited are given by this will, and others in addition, but to a much larger extent, such as the charitable legacies, and those to the German relations of the testator; and finally to trustees for the benefit of Mrs. Stultz. The difference amounts to many thousands of pounds. It has been said, and said truly, that the only question upon which the court can now decide is, whether the will propounded is entitled to probate; and that is so. But the court cannot shut its eyes to the evident consequence of its decision, whichever way it may be. If against the will propounded (the will of 1848), it is in vain for the court to shut its eyes against the fact that the will of August 1847 will most assuredly receive probate, so far as appears from the facts before me. The question, therefore, is really not between Mrs. Stultz and the next of kin, but between Mrs. Stultz and the legatees of the preceding will, especially the nephews and nieces, the Tailors' Institution; and to Mrs. Stultz it is a question of so many thousand pounds. In the following observations I shall endeavour to a certain extent to take the order of time. The deceased, being a widower, in the year 1826 married Mrs Stultz, the party in this cause, who has since taken a second husband. He was accustomed occasionally, as I have said, to visit Germany for the purpose of seeing his relations, until the year 1845. Now I think there can be no doubt that he felt a great regard for some of his relations, for he evinced it by great liberality. According to the evidence in the cause, regard for his relations generally may be received as a proved fact, and also great generosity towards them. A witness in the cause states that a great many thousands of pounds at various times were given by the deceased to his relations, and it appears he was most liberal towards them. Now how far his regard and affection to his relations varied at different times is a very different question, and is not so easily solved as the first. I think, however, that it will not be necessary to go further into that part of the subject; I mean, as to the earlier part of the transaction. Nor is it at all necessary to inquire whether the deceased made certain declarations at so early a period as the year 1817 or afterwards, of his sisters having shown their affection for him by making him a sharer in his brothers' inheritance, from which he had been excluded. In the first place I think, looking at the deceased's character, it is quite clear that this act of generosity on their part would have been strongly felt by him. In the second instance, I think the whole of his conduct and munificence towards his relations manifestly shows what he really felt upon the subject. It is not necessary to prosecute the inquiry into what may have occurred in the year 1817, when so many things have taken place since, that make it impossible to say that a declaration in 1817 could affect the making of a will in 1848. But, in truth, to argue against the will propounded on account of his affection for his sisters is to compare its probability with an intestacy. Now in my judgment that is wholly fallacious. The true comparison is not with an intestacy, because since the year 1836 there never was an intestacy; the sisters never benefited by an intestacy since the year 1836. It is no comparison at all to compare this will propounded with an intestacy, when there were so many preceding instruments executed, from the tenor of which we see what were the deceased's feelings. The comparison is between the will propounded and the former wills, but especially the one of 1847, which, when made, was at that time the best evidence of the extent of the intentions of the testator to benefit his relations. It was not his intention to benefit his sisters, for reasons I do not know. Whether they did not require it, or whether he thought he had given them enough in his lifetime, it is not necessary to examine. It was his intention to give his other relations, his nephews and nieces, a larger benefit than appeared to be given by the will of 1846. In 1845 the mother of the testator died, and there is only one transaction prior (for I am now looking at the transactions somewhat in the order of time) there is only one transaction prior in date to which I apprehend it is necessary to advert. That is the fact that prior to 1845 Mrs. Stultz left the testator's roof, in 1844, when a letter was written which I shall have occasion to mention; but the departure of Mrs. Stultz from her husband's roof, both in the year 1844 and 1845, must his closely, considering; but I must defer it for the moment. The year 1845 is a most important period for the consideration of this cause. It appears that in that year Mrs. Stultz, who had married the deceased some time in 1826, left his house and home, and continued to reside with her husband; and I can entertain no doubt, upon the evidence in this cause, that in some degree at least the rendering for this retirement arose from the intemperate language which she had indulged. In the month of December of this year Mrs. Stultz was admitted into [illegible], but she did not return to reside with the deceased until a subsequent period, viz. in [illegible]. During the absence of Mrs. Stultz, Miss Warne, who had been for many years domiciled with the testator, continued to reside with him. In the allegation opposing the will in question it is pleaded that the testator became subject to epileptic fits of short duration, but which produced effects which sometimes lasted for several days, and deprived him of the power of duly exercising his mental faculties; and this will bring me to consider whether your lordship, if at all, the mental faculties of the deceased were at the time impaired. On the 19th Dec of the year 1845, codicil was executed at Brighton. The first witness to prove the decay of the faculties of the deceased, consequent upon ill-health and the occurrence of fits, is Durling. He was his servant from November 1844, to 1847. He dates the illness of the deceased from 1845. He says, "that in the beginning of 1846 the paralysis became perceptible; that about August 1846 the deceased was attacked with a fit at Brighton; that from that time he became subject to these fits about once a week." He details the effect of them as seen partly in stupor and, according to his account, in delirium, but he adds that he got better towards the end of 1846. Now the next witness is Miss Warne; and I must here again observe, that she was permanently resident with the deceased during the whole of this period to which Durling speaks. She says, and strange she does so say, if there was any correctness in Durling's evidence, that she knows nothing of this transaction pleaded in the 9th article; she knows nothing of any fit until March 1847, and yet, according to Durling, they were once a-week, and the effect of them was seen partly in stupor and partly in delirium. The result is quite evident, either that memory is exceedingly defective, or that Durling is strangely mistaken in his evidence, because she can hardly have forgotten the first fit, which, according to the evidence of Durling, produced stupor lasting nearly a week, and this again recurring and becoming very frequent. Now what advantage can I derive from clearing up these matter—contradictions? Mr. Bloxam, who was a medical man resident in London, attended on the deceased from the 25th of May, 1846, to the 10th of April, 1847. This gentleman was not at Brighton; but the deceased was there about this period, for how long I have no means of forming a conclusion. Now Mr. Bloxam says that when he first attended the deceased (this was of course in May 1846) he found him suffering under considerable disorder of the digestive functions, and subject to fits of despondency; that he had two epileptic fits, one in the winter of 1846 (so that as to time he does not confirm Durling) or early in 1847, which rendered him incapable for two or three weeks. He then, having advanced as far as the year 1847, goes back in his evidence to 1846, and there he says he had a consultation with Dr. Bright as to the propriety of authorising some one to draw checks for the deceased, and this on account (these are his words) of his present state and apprehension of subsequent attacks. Now, although this gentleman cannot speak as to what occurred at Brighton, I think I must presume that he is correct in his date as to the consultation with Dr. Bright; and if so, however occasioned, the testator was in some degree at that time treated as a person not of perfectly sound mind, memory, and understanding, and was therefore incapable of transacting all his own business. I say in some degree, because I can put no other construction on the words used by Mr. Bloxam, "on account of his present situation and apprehension of subsequent attacks." Mr. Hunter, who knew the deceased from the year 1820, who represents himself to have been his confidential friend from that time to May 1847, has been examined upon this article of the allegation; but again, strange to say, though he saw the deceased at Brighton, and though he states in another part of his evidence that he assisted the deceased in drawing his will for him, namely, the will of 1846, he is altogether and wholly silent as to the state of the deceased's mind in 1846. He commences his examination stating that it was at the anniversary dinner of the Tailors' Institution in the month of March that he noticed a change in the deceased. Here again I must think either that his memory has failed him, or, what I have no right to suppose, that he was through error examined upon this article; for, to the 77th interrogatory he says: "The testator was so far affected in health, but in what way or with what disease I do not know, in the latter part of 1846, as not to have any desire to attend to business; but he was not incompetent to do so; he did attend to business during the time interrogated, but only partially." I pike, upon the evidence of two other witnesses on this part of the case,—of the solicitor it is of little consequence, both of the other because I regret to say it is not worthy of credit;—but these is all the evidence I have to publish upon them so far as to the mental state of the deceased is concerned. There was, however, a will made on the 16th December in that year, prepared by a solicitor at Brighton. Whether this will was, if then revoked or cancelled, a valid testamentary disposition of the deceased's property at any time, is not a question I am called upon to determine; prima facie, I apprehend I must presume it was a genuine will. Now if this will really contained the unbiassed testamentary intentions of the deceased, the subsequent wills are certainly most widely different in their disposition. If, on the contrary, the testator at the time of making this will was in a state of mental incapacity or under influence, it greatly behoves the court to be on its guard; for, whichever way it be taken, this will is a proof either of intentions wholly contrary to subsequent acts, or it is evidence of a mind so impaired at that particular time and period as to be subject to undue influence. From one of these conclusions it is utterly impossible to escape. I repeat again, it is proof either of intentions wholly contrary to subsequent acts, or it is evidence of a mind to such a limited degree, it matters not what, but a mind in that state and condition that, at the period of making the will, it was subject to undue influence, because, if it does not contain his real intentions, it must have been made under undue influence. So much for the year 1846. We now approach the year 1847; and in the month of May of that year Mrs. Stultz returned to the deceased, who was then at Brighton. A great deal of evidence has been given as to her conduct after she was released from the lunatic asylum in September 1846, as to the period of rejoining the testator. Much, too, has been said of the deceased's alarm and fear lest she should enter his house during any period of that interval, and of the negotiations which took place with him as to her maintenance. I think, without entering into details, I give the opponents of the will of 1848 the full benefit of this evidence when I say that I think it is satisfactorily established that the deceased was at times greatly alarmed lest Mrs. Stultz should intrude upon him, namely, between the month of October 1846 and the month of May 1848, and that he was exceedingly averse to her return. I take that as an established fact in the cause. Going on then from the year 1847, in the month of March of that year, the deceased having been resident at Mr. Housley's, in the Regent's-park, it is a fact fully established that he there experienced a fit of a most serious character. He was thence removed to an hotel in Oxford-street, and afterwards to Brighton, accompanied by Miss Warne. I can entertain no doubt that his mind was weakened by that attack; perhaps not very materially so, for Mr. Hunter states, in answer to the 16th interrogatory, "that the testator did recover his health in a great measure in the spring of 1847;" and in August 1847 there is another will made by Mr. Pike. I refer to these circumstances in order to show, as appears to me, that the return of Mrs. Stultz cannot be ascribed to any particular deterioration of the faculties of the deceased at that time. Whatever might have taken place with respect to Mrs. Stultz before—however violent her temper, or outrageous her conduct—it is, I think, clear that the testator, upon due deliberation, not hastily, but after much consideration, thought it most for his happiness that she should return to him; nor is it possible, I think, to attribute this intention entirely to any neglect of the Misses Warne, though this was certainly, in fact, the moving cause. The departure of Miss Warne too, under the circumstances mentioned by Durling, and looking at the statement made by herself, clearly evinces that whatever regard the testator had for her was, at that time at least, extinguished, not merely on account of her inattention, but from his supposition that she might possibly intend to confine him in a madhouse. Assuming that the deceased was not serious in this expression, or that it was to be taken literally, still it showed great exasperation of mind against her. The will of Aug. 7, 1847, was prepared by Mr. Pike, the confidential solicitor of the deceased, at least in many matters; and I am not aware that there is any material evidence as to the interval between May 9, Mrs. Stultz's return, and Aug. 7. I have already said, and I now repeat it, that I must assume this will to have been executed by a competent testator; and I think that this is a real starting-place, from which I ought to commence a more narrow examination of the evidence in the cause. I use the expression competent testator, not meaning thereby to aver that the mental faculties of the testator were not in some degree weakened and impaired; for I think it most probable that the illness he had experienced, and the anxieties he had undergone, must to a certain extent have diminished the original vigour of his mind. The real subject of inquiry is, how far after Aug. 1847, up to July 1848, any diminution of mental capacity had taken place. [Dr. Lushington having here gone through the witnesses produced against the will, in the order in which they had been examined, except Mr. Pike, continued.] Mr. Pike is the most important witness in this cause, save Mr. Harrison.

I apprehend that it will not be disputed on either side that Mr. Pike is a witness of unimpeachable veracity, and that he has given his evidence in this cause with fairness and impartiality. His means of knowledge were great. He was for many years not only the confidential solicitor of the deceased—at least for the most part,—but also the private friend. One result, I think, necessarily follows from the credit due to him and his evidence, namely, that the will of August 1847 was made by a competent testator. I do not, by that expression, mean by a testator in the enjoyment of all his faculties wholly undiminished, but legally competent to give effect to the act he did—being to make the will of 1847, a will almost wholly departing from the will of December 1846. [Dr. Lushington then reviewed the evidence of Mr. Pike.] I have now, I hope, carefully analysed the whole of the evidence bearing upon the question of capacity produced by the opponents of the will of 1848, given by all the witnesses who could speak to that period; and, speaking of this evidence, and of this evidence alone, I conceive that it is utterly impossible to arrive at any conclusion but that the attempt to prove general incapacity at the time of making the will of July 1848 has totally and entirely failed. I do not mean to say that there were not times and seasons when, from the attacks the testator experienced, of whatsoever kind they might be, he might not be incapable for periods of transacting business; nor that, in consequence of those and previous attacks, to a certain extent the mental faculties of the deceased were not weakened or impaired; but I do assert that not only has this evidence failed in establishing general incapacity, but has proved to my satisfaction that the testator was in July 1848 a competent testator—or that, in other words, no testamentary act done by him could be set aside on the ground of mental incompetency alone. I must, however, distinctly guard against being supposed to say more than that there is established an adequate general legal capacity, though the mental faculties were in my judgment weakened to an extent which no words can describe, and which I can only define by saying not so weakened as to affect generally the testamentary power. I have advanced this step in the cause; but I well know that the ultimate decision of this case must depend upon a very careful review of very many facts and circumstances besides mere capacity; that the case of the opponent of this will may be said to consist not only of incapacity or impaired capacity, but also of control, influence, and of improbability so gross, that the court must conclude that the deceased never would, except under control or under influence, have made such a disposition of his property. These considerations lead me to that part of the case which occupies by far the greatest portion of the evidence, namely, the relation that subsisted between the deceased and his wife, her conduct, his regard or other feeling for her; and this it is my duty to trace as accurately as the materials I possess will allow. [Dr. Lushington then reviewed the evidence bearing on this part of the case.] The period of real importance to the ultimate decision of this cause is that from the return of Mrs. Stultz, in May 1847, to the month of July 1848. Upon what terms did Mrs. Stultz live with her husband? To what extent did she exercise influence or control over him? As the will of 1848 is a departure from the will of 1847, and wholly in favour of Mrs. Stultz, the terms upon which they lived are important to this extent, as showing the probability or improbability of such alteration. Now as to the terms on which Mr. and Mrs. Stultz lived, the evidence is somewhat contradictory; there is evidence of kind treatment on her part, and there is evidence of the contrary, and there is evidence of violent quarrels taking place between them. The conclusion I am disposed to draw is, that Mrs. Stultz, immediately after her return, conducted herself with greater kindness and consideration towards the deceased, and practised more self-restraint, but that in the course of no long period of time they relapsed into their former state. Quarrels, and violent quarrels too, were not unfrequent. Mr. Stultz was most irritable, and when irritated wholly ungovernable. Mrs. Stultz resumed to some extent her former habits, and occasionally exasperated the deceased—a state of things, as I have already said, not wholly without example, nor inconsistent altogether with affection between the parties. Then as to control and influence—I have no hesitation in expressing my conviction, that the deceased was under the influence of Mrs. Stultz during this whole period, and up to the time of his death, and moreover that during the year of her absence he was under the influence of Miss Warne. I believe that when Mrs. Stultz returned in May 1847 the deceased continued to be influenced, if I may use that word in this peculiar sense, and that the transition was easy from influence exercised by Miss Warne, to influence exercised by Mrs. Stultz; but how far the exercise of this influence was increased as time went on, and whether it became ultimately that degree of influence amounting to control which would invalidate an instrument made whilst the testator was subject to it, is a question which cannot be easily settled. It is not easy to describe with accuracy the result of this evidence. That the deceased was in many instances prevented following his own immediate wishes by the act and influence of his wife must, I think, be conceded, especially in all matters of domestic arrangements, and occasionally in his wishes frequently to visit London whilst at Dulwich; but the strongest instance of all is the limiting the supply of money, which, standing alone, is a circumstance of considerable weight. To fix however the value of all this evidence, all circumstances must be taken into consideration; we must see in what particulars the deceased acted as a free agent, as well as those in which he gave way to influence or submitted to be controlled. [Dr. Lushington then reviewed the evidence as to this point.] I enter upon the consideration of the evidence as to the will of 1848 with the following convictions, which I have endeavoured to prove to be well founded by reference to the evidence in the cause: 1st. That in June and July, 1848, the testator was generally competent to make any testamentary disposition of his property, though to some extent his faculties were weakened, and necessarily weakened, by previous illness. 2nd. That the deceased was in great measure subject to the influence of Mrs. Stulz, but not under control in many important matters. 3rd. That the probability is against the will of 1848, if the testator were left uninfluenced. [Dr. Lushington then reviewed the evidence as to the will of 1847.] I think that the true cause of Mr. Harrison being called in was the influence of Mrs. Stulz; and though there is no direct evidence of such being the case, I am of opinion that the circumstantial evidence renders it most probable that he was called in at her instigation, and at her instigation only. On the 24th of June, 1848, Mrs. Stulz writes a note, requesting Mr. Harrison to come to Dulwich and dine there, but not saying for what purpose. Mr. H. answers he will come on Friday the 30th, and on that day he goes. It is worthy to be noted, that Mr. Harrison deposes that between the 30th June and the 6th Sept. he saw the deceased seventeen times in Saville-row, and probably other times of which he has no note. This then is most clear, that Mr. Harrison had most ample opportunity of seeing the state of the deceased; all that was apparent must have been seen by him. If the statement of Mr. Harrison be true, what is the short summary of the facts? That Mrs. Stulz was the dux facti; that the instructions proceeded from her, or were in her handwriting; but that the deceased took a part therein, adopted what was done, and that, too, as a free agent, and a person of testamentary capacity. By this observation I mean that Mr. Harrison so considered him to be, and has so represented him, and, if Mr. Harrison's evidence be not rebutted by a consideration of all that previously occurred, that this is the conclusion to which his evidence would lead. The draft was prepared and was read over, and the blanks supplied partly by Mrs. Stulz, and partly by the deceased. This interview lasted two hours. Mr. Harrison gives a very brief account of the execution of this will. I presume that he was satisfied from what had previously passed of the deceased's knowledge and approbation thereof, and he deposes in very decided terms as to capacity on all these as well as other occasions, and states his reasons. And now let me bring this judgment to a close, by stating the general effect produced on my mind by a consideration of the whole of this mass of evidence, and the conclusions to which I have been led. I am satisfied that the deceased possessed, during the period of these transactions, testamentary capacity at all times when not under the influences of certain attacks, whether of epilepsy or paralysis, or whatever else they may be called. Looking at his bodily infirmities, and the disorder to which he had been subject, and also to the evidence in the case, I can arrive at no other conclusion than that, although his testamentary capacity remained, there was and must have been some and no inconsiderable reduction of mental energy, and of firmness and resolution of mind. That I think was his state and condition. I conclude further, that in many respects, and from various motives, he was under the influence of Mr. Stulz. His very necessities rendered this most probably the case. Quarrels though there were, Mrs. Stulz was attentive and kind to him, she managed many of his affairs, and was his amanuensis. The whole control of the household rested with her; her superior education and energy gained ground as his capacity for exertion diminished, and his power of expression decreased. The very character of the deceased placed him under influence.—his want of education, his irritability, his violent passions, which are almost always followed by subsequent submissiveness. What were the motives upon the mind of the testator? Put the case in the strongest point of view. Fear of displeasing; fear of future solicitation; love of peace; or it may be deference to superior judgment, or affection and regard. Who is to drive into these motives? What evidence can any tribunal have? Coercion may indeed be capable of proof, and in such case no act would be valid. Influence may be proved, but what would be the legal result? Hundreds of wills have been made under the influence of wives, apparently unjust sometimes towards children, sometimes towards relatives. As I have previously observed, some of the largest estates in this kingdom are now held under wills disinheriting the heirs-at-law of the testator and giving them to the wife or her relatives. But it may be said, all this is very true, yet in the present case the testator was so enfeebled that he had no power of resisting the will of his wife. The answer is given in this case as I think. First, that there is not the slightest proof of importunity. Second, that there is proof of the power of resistance in an instance when Mrs. Stuls was urgent for the testator to take measures for the recovery of a certain sum of money due or supposed to be due to him. Third, that his testamentary capacity was beyond all doubt. Fourth, that he voluntarily did many acts to complete this will, and by the evidence voluntary acts. I will put this case on the lowest foundation, lower indeed than the facts warrant. The will of 1848, let it be assumed, originated with Mrs. Stuls; further that the instructions emanated from her; still it was adopted, it may be reluctantly, by the deceased, who was a competent testator. It is a valid will, and such is my opinion. I believe that this decision is in strict conformity with the doctrines laid down in Armstrong v. Huddleston; that in principle there is no distinction. The only difference is, that in Armstrong v. Huddleston it was necessary, to uphold that will, to carry the principle much further. The circumstances of this case are much more favourable to the validity of the will. I will only add that I believe these to be sound principles of testamentary law, and that none other could be found to support the validity of wills alleged to be made under the influence of a wife without either curtailing the testamentary power, so firmly established by the law of England, or introducing a species of investigation into motives and reasons where even the most industrious and acute would soon be in "endless mazes lost." I need not occupy time in discussing the subject. I also pronounce in favour of it. I have entered at great length into the facts of this case, for the satisfaction of parties; but let it not be supposed that I have entertained any doubt as to the judgment to be given. The evidence of Mr. Pike, Mr. Harrison, senior, and Mr. Johnson, in truth dispose of this case. I shall make no order as to costs. I think the circumstances justified the investigation, but not the profuse production of witnesses utterly useless.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

(Before Lord Cranworth.)

Re Northampton Charities.

Practice—Appointment of new trustees of a charity—Jurisdiction—Municipal Corporation Act.

A general affidavit, verifying the deaths of trustees of a charity by a person acquainted with them, held to be sufficient evidence of their deaths without the production of the certificates of burial.

A petition for the appointment of new trustees of a charity, if entitled under the General Trustee Act, may be heard by the Master of the Rolls or one of the Vice-Chancellors.

This was a petition presented under the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76. Under the 71st section of that Act twenty persons were appointed trustees of certain charity funds and estates called the Church Charities, which were formerly vested in the corporation of Northampton as trustees; and under the same Act twenty persons were also appointed trustees of certain other funds and estates called the General Charities, which were also formerly vested in the aforesaid corporation as trustees. Out of the twenty persons appointed trustees of the Church Charities eight had since died and four had left the place and taken up their permanent residence elsewhere; and of the trustees of the General Charities five had died.

Bagallay appeared for the petitioners, and asked for the appointment of new trustees in the place of those who had died and of those who had changed their residence. Their deaths were verified by affidavit only. This application had been made to the Vice-Chancellor Stuart, who had declined to make any order, doubting whether he had jurisdiction. The petition was entitled in the General Trustee Act, under the 22nd and 32nd sections of which the order as prayed might have been granted.

Wilkinson for the corporation.

The Lord Chancellor decided that a general affidavit of the deaths of the deceased trustees, by a person acquainted with them, was sufficient without the production of the certificates of burial, and that such a petition, being entitled under the General Trustee Act, could be heard by the Master of the Rolls or by one of the Vice-Chancellors.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by Owen Davies, Tudor, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

June 30, July 8 and 10.

Ex parte Dufaur, re Dufaur.

Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849—Whether solicitor had acted as scrivener—Trading.

A solicitor who had upon a few occasions had money deposited with him for the purpose of investment, was held not to be a scrivener within the meaning of the bankrupt laws, the adjudication of the Commissioner making him a bankrupt was therefore annulled; but as he had not tendered himself for examination before the Commissioner, he was held not to be entitled to costs, and he was to undertake not to bring any action.

Though an attorney may have incidentally acted as a scrivener, and money may have been entrusted with him, for which he was afterwards to seek a borrower, a few isolated instances of that sort occurring in the course of his business as an attorney will not bring him within the operation of the bankrupt law.

This was an appeal from the decision of Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque, under the following circumstances:—Mr. Antonine Dufaur carried on business in partnership with Mr. Blakeney down to March 1851, when the partnership was dissolved. On May 22, 1852, a petition was presented by Timothy Fogarty and Julia Regan for an adjudication against him, and on the 26th of the same month he was adjudged a bankrupt. On June 2, the bankrupt, by his solicitor, appeared before Mr Commissioner Fonblanque to show cause against the adjudication, when the adjudication was confirmed. The bankrupt did not submit or tender himself for examination before the Commissioner. The case now came before this court on a petition of the bankrupt alleging that he was not a trader within the true intent and meaning of the bankrupt laws, and that the decision of the Commissioner was erroneous, for that the adjudication was invalid, on the ground that the proof of the trading was insufficient to support it, and it prayed that the adjudication might be annulled. The evidence on which the adjudication was made was that of H. Stanley, who had been managing clerk of, and F. W. Dolman, who had been articled to, the bankrupt. The former deposed that from 1843 to 1847 Dufaur exercised the trade, business, or profession of a money-scrivener, receiving other men's moneys and estate into his trust or custody, and making merchandise thereof, and sought and endeavoured to get his livelihood thereby as others of the same trade or business usually do; that the business of Dufaur and of Blakeney his partner consisted for the most part of the procurement and advance of moneys by way of mortgage and annuity, and occasionally for the discount of bills of exchange for parties introduced to Dufaur as requiring advances of moneys, that Dufaur so applied moneys in his hands, and which were entrusted to him for the purpose of finding securities for the same, and that among several of such parties so entrusting their moneys were a Mrs. Browne and Messrs. Basham and Blakeney, the trustees of Mr. and Mrs. Browne's settlement, a Mr. Cross, and a Mr. Williams and others. The deponent then proceeded to set out items of a bill of costs, for one particular mortgage transaction, partly as follows: "Attending Mr. S. jun. with reference to the trust fund, and raising of 250*l.* thereon," and "upon Mr. G. Hunter, who agreed to advance the same, drawing memorandums," &c. (this loan went off); "attending upon Mr. S. sen. who proposed that 550*l.* should be raised by way of mortgage, to pay off, &c. and begged me to write to Mr. S. jun. fully thereon, explanatory of the proposed transaction, and for his assent," "attendance on Messrs. Basham and Blakeney, proposing security to them for 550*l.*, when they agreed to advance the money provided the security was unobjectionable," "attending in the city to sell out stock." Mr. Dolman deposed in the same manner as to Dufaur's exercise of the business of scrivener, and then said: "Dufaur has been in the constant practice of receiving the moneys of parties, the same being lodged in his hands by clients and others, for the purpose of being invested in securities, and for the purpose of finding securities for the same; and, upon the money being invested, he has charged not only for the mortgage deed and conveyancing part of the business, but also certain fees, bonuses, or compensation for such procurement of the said moneys; but, in particular, the said Dufaur has invested moneys intrusted to him, placed, or left, in his hands by Dr. E. Blakeney and a Mrs. Mary Browne, for the purpose of being invested in securities." "That Dufaur, in an affidavit he made in April 1851, swore that he and his partner had been for the last four years concerned for the said Mrs. Browne, in investing her money on mortgages or other securities; and that, in the course of such employment, they had recommended various investments to her, all of which had been accepted by her, and that she had from time to time left it to Dufaur and his partner to find such securities for such sums of money as might be paid off; that, in answer to a letter from Dufaur to her, dated the 15th of Aug. 1850, requesting her to pay over [illegible] of money having been paid off, and that another [illegible] to Mrs. Browne, in which [illegible] to Mrs. Browne, it [illegible] consent of Mrs. Browne was obtained to the advance of 500*l.* to Lieut. Newenham, and she [illegible] in the Court of Q. B. as follows: [illegible] She has never been consulted either by [illegible] Dufaur or Blakeney on the subject of the proposed advance of any portion of her monies to Lieut. Newenham; no mention has ever been made by either of them of such advance being required, or contemplated, nor have the particulars or nature of any interest or property whatever proposed as a security for the loan of 500*l.* or any other sum, or money, by the said Lieut. Newenham, been at any time mentioned to her; and further, that had any such proposal been made to her she should most decisively and peremptorily have declined to assent to any such application of her monies." This affidavit was used in evidence by the consent of the petitioner, to save the expense of an oral examination.

The affidavit of Dufaur stated that he had been for twenty-one years past in practice as an attorney and solicitor, that he never exercised the trade, &c. (a denial of the technical passages in Stanley's and Dolman's depositions); that his business consisted of the usual business of an attorney and solicitor, namely, that of conducting affairs in common law, chancery, conveyancing, and all other branches of his profession, and that some but not the most part of his business consisted in the preparation of mortgages and annuities granted to clients; that he had not, since 1844, been in the habit of procuring the discount of any bills of exchange or promissory notes for clients or any other persons, but, &c. (then followed admission of two instances); that he had not, since 1844, invested any client's money, or any part thereof, in the discount of any bills of exchange or promissory notes, but, on the contrary, had most studiously avoided doing so; that money had not been entrusted to him, nor to him and his late partner, for the purpose of finding securities for the same; he had never advanced the moneys of Mrs. Browne (repeating the names) nor the money of any other client, by way of mortgage or annuity, without first communicating to them the nature of the security on which he proposed to advance the same, and procuring their sanction, authority and consent thereto. The affidavit then entered into a full explanation of several particular matters, and in each case stated the assent of the lender to the security, and contained the following passage—"I say that the statement in the examination of F. W. Dolman, sworn in this matter, that I have been in the constant habit of receiving the moneys of parties, &c. (following the words of the deposition) is utterly untrue; for I say I have never had money lodged in my hands by clients or others for the purpose of finding securities for the same."

In one of the accounts, No. 6, "Capital Account," on which reliance was placed as proving that money was placed in Dufaur and Blakeney's hands for the purpose of investment at their discretion, were items such as these:—

To sums of money drawn out by Mr. Blakeney, for his own private purposes, between, &c. out of 1202*l.* 3s. 1*d.*	187	14	9
To Best's mortgage	300	0	0
To Ryan and Fogarty, in part of 600*l.* agreed to be advanced to them on mortgage	420	0	0
To Mitchell, in part of 800*l.* agreed to be advanced to him on mortgage ...	411	0	0
To Newenham, in part of 500*l.* agreed to be advanced to him by way of annuity	420	0	0

On the other side of the account appeared, among others, these items:—

By cash, Salamans	1202	3	1
By cash, Beaver...	200	0	0
By cash, Stevens	250	0	0
By cash, Rymer...	400	0	0

Mr. Dufaur was examined and cross-examined at great length, and in the course of it he explained this to be that Dufaur and Blakeney had received moneys belonging to Mrs. Browne, which had been lent on mortgage, and upon being paid off by Beaver, Stevens, and Rymer, the amounts were paid to Dufaur and Blakeney as the solicitors of Mrs. Browne. As to the item 1202*l.* 3s. 1*d.*, and the 187*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.* cash drawn out by Mr. Blakeney, Mr. Dufaur accounted for it thus; Mrs. Browne was present when Salamans paid the money, and requested her solicitors to put the money for safe custody into their hands, which they did, and the 187*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.* was drawn out by Mr. Blakeney, the partner, upon some understanding or agreement (unknown to him, Dufaur) between him and Mrs. Browne, they being [illegible] partner. The 1202*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.* was never in the hands of the firm for any other purpose than for safe custody. Mrs. Browne not having, any business. He also swore that on every occasion, which he advanced himself, he allowed, besides the commission of [illegible] per cent. In some few instances, particularly according to Mr. Dufaur, where [illegible] and swore that [illegible] he knew the nature of the business, and that the chief business was to [illegible] money agents," that is, "the persons who are employed to borrow money." In the case of sales belonging to Mrs. Browne's money, it appeared that the only advances made by Mr. Dufaur were the small sums for charges. In one or two particular instances in the bills, charges for commission on the sale of estate appeared to have been made; but, [illegible] of the court is founded on the case of Mrs. Browne, and therefore it is needless to go into the details of the other cases.

Hemming and Bagshaw, for the appellant, contended that it had not been shown that Mr. Dufaur was a bankrupt, according to the definition in the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, and which was contained in the present bankrupt law, "receive other men's moneys or estates into his custody." Mr. Dufaur was simply employed, as other attorneys, to invest their moneys in the character of an attorney, and not as a scrivener. In Mrs. Browne's case, which will be much relied upon to support the case of trading as a scrivener with the monies of others, it will be seen that he acted rather as an attorney than a scrivener; and even if he had her money for some time in his hands, it was, to use the words of Gibbs, C.J. in Adams v. Malkin, 3 Camp. 539, "only having incidentally, on particular occasions, the money of his clients to lay out for them." That was not sufficient to constitute a case against him as a scrivener. He cited Ex parte Bath, Mont. 92.; Malkin v. Adams, 2 Rose, 28; 2 V. & B. 31; Ex parte Paterson, 1 Rose, 402; Hutchinson v. Gascoigne, Holt, 507.

Eadon and Cooke, for the opposing creditors and the assignees.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—In this case it appears that an attorney and solicitor, of the name of Antoine Dufaur, was adjudicated a bankrupt in May last, as a scrivener within the meaning of the bankrupt laws. Two of his former clerks were examined, and who said what, if true, was conclusive, and left the Commissioner no alternative. It is to be remarked that Mr. Dufaur did not tender himself for examination before the Commissioner, and doubtless, if he had, that learned person would have taken his examination, and he now demurs to the result of the evidence. The evidence which was before the court below as to the practice of scrivening was, as I before observed, the testimony of two clerks who were formerly in the service of Mr. Dufaur, and, if their evidence is to be relied upon, no doubt the practice of scrivening within the meaning of the bankrupt law is made out. The question is, whether the evidence of these two persons is to be relied upon. They say that the general practice of Mr. Dufaur's business was the receipt of moneys from clients, and the laying of it out upon securities at his discretion, and from time to time as he found convenient opportunity. But their evidence is general, not specific, excepting to a certain extent as to the dealings with the moneys of Mrs. Browne. This court is not at liberty to rely upon general allegations, unsupported by specific facts or instances. If such general evidence were to be relied on, no doubt can be entertained that Mr. Dufaur is a scrivener who receives other persons' money into his custody or trust in the manner stated in the bankrupt law. The trade of a scrivener has ceased in this country for two or three centuries, and its business is now divided between bankers and brokers. As bankers are now by statute declared to be within the operation of the bankrupt law, it never matters whether a banker has traded as a scrivener or not; but as attorneys, as such, are unquestionably excluded from the operation of the bankrupt law, it is frequently, as in the present case, very important to see whether an attorney who is sought or seeks to be made a bankrupt can be so made by the fact of his acts of scrivening. In the case of Adams v. Malkin, it was said by Gibbs, C.J.: "At the present day the banker occupies one department of the business of the scrivener by being the depository of the money, and the attorney the other by drawing the securities. The banker would not be an attorney though he were occasionally to fill up bonds for his customers; nor does the attorney become a money scrivener though on particular occasions he incidentally has the money of his clients to lay out for them. In order to make a man a money scrivener he must carry on the business of being trusted with other people's money to lay out for them as occasion offers. If, in that course, and with the money of his client, he receives it from the person with whom his client may have previously contracted, and pays him on account, an attorney a money scrivener. In that part of the transaction he is no more than a person employed to count and carry. Having negotiated the loan and secured the goods, his happening to receive and pay the money is incidental to his business of an attorney. Now, if on one or two occasions money were deposited with him to lay out, would that constitute him a money scrivener? He must be carrying on generally the business of a money scrivener; that is what the statute of 1 Jac. 1 means by the well-known occupation." I do not quarrel with the law of that case; the question is whether Mr. Dufaur is brought, upon the evidence before us, within it. The evidence shows that from 1847 to 1848 he received moneys from Mrs. Browne. Arrangements were made before the money was received. Several cases were relied on, but no evidence on more than one or two; and Mr. Dufaur denies that any other ever existed on which the question could arise. In the absence of any such evidence, I think we are bound to believe Mr. Dufaur, and we must rely on Mrs. Browne's case if any case can be relied on. Even supposing the evidence of the two late clerks of Mr. Dufaur, with relation to Mrs. Browne's case, were to be taken as true, still I am of opinion that it will not be enough, for the case of that lady is most peculiar. In every instance but one of the investment of her property, the security was agreed on beforehand; and if it had not been so, still if the facts are true of her being the wife of a former partner of Mr. Dufaur, and the sister of a subsequent partner, and that he has been wholly confided in by her as to the disposal of her money, they will account for his dealing with it, and we should not, in any case of such description, hold Mr. Dufaur to be a scrivener. Lord Eldon and Lord Chief Justice Gibbs have both plainly laid down that the fact of scrivening, isolated acts of scrivening, is not sufficient to support a commission against an attorney as a scrivener, but it must be shown that the general course of his business is of that nature. It is not to be forgotten that in all Mrs. Browne's investments Mr. Dufaur charged his attorney's costs only. Lord Chief Justice Gibbs says, in the case I have before referred to, "Though an attorney may have incidentally acted as a scrivener, that is not sufficient; though money may have been deposited with him, for which he was afterwards to seek a borrower, a few insulated instances of that sort occurring in the course of his business as an attorney would not bring him within the operation of the bankrupt laws; for that would not be using the trade or profession of a scrivener, receiving other men's moneys or estates into his trust or custody." And Lord Eldon, in Ex parte Paterson, observes, "The next question is, as to the trading as scrivener. That does not depend upon the fact whether the bankrupt has or has not occasionally done acts which a scrivener peculiarly and properly would have done; not upon what he may have done upon one day, and what upon another, but upon his intention generally to get a living by so doing." Now, this requirement is not proved on the evidence before us to exist in the present case. The few cases of Mrs. Browne, and Dr. Blakeney and others, so far as they go, are exceptional, and there is no evidence of a general intention on the part of Mr. Dufaur to get money by scrivening, and these cases are explained by the particular and intimate connexion existing between the parties. On the whole, I am of opinion that the examination of Mr. Dufaur, whose evidence was not before the Commissioner, has shown that he is not a scrivener within the meaning of the bankrupt law, and the adjudication must therefore be set aside; but I do not consider Mr. Dufaur entitled to any costs, as he did not tender himself for examination before the Commissioner. It is not necessary to decide anything as to any charges made by Mr. Dufaur for commission, for the case does not depend on that. He must undertake not to bring any action.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—The only possible objection to the adjudication the Commissioner has made, and which, upon the only evidence before him, he was bound to make, is that Mr. Dufaur is not and has not been a scrivener, within the meaning of the bankrupt laws. Considering that the petitioner did not offer himself before the commissioner for examination—considering how he has conducted himself—considering that he is probably or certainly insolvent—I was at one time disposed to refuse to interfere to assist him against the adjudication, and to require that an action should be brought. Upon the whole evidence now before the court (evidence not before the Commissioner) I agree with the conclusion of my learned brother; but I agree because I find the law, as applicable to the facts proved, is in support of that view, and I agree only because of authority by which I do and ought to feel myself bound, and not on my own view of the question. The authority is that of great judges and eminent men, and is such as I consider myself bound by. I also agree with Lord Cranworth in holding that Mr. Dufaur can have no costs, and that he must undertake not to bring any action.

Re HALL'S ESTATE.

Evidence—Extracts from parish register—Incumbent's signature—Sect. 14 of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99.

The extracts from parish registers of entries of marriages, baptisms, and burials, purporting to be signed by the incumbents of the respective parishes, may, without any further verification, be received in evidence under the statute 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14.

This was an application which, at the request of Sir George Turner, V.C., was made to their Lordships, in order to take their opinion on a new point of very great consequence, as to the reception of evidence under the 14th section of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99.

The point arose upon the application on behalf of the petitioners, who wished to obtain payment of moneys out of court, and had tendered as evidence of marriages, baptisms, and burials in support of their title, the extracts from parish registers, signed by the incumbents of the respective parishes, and certifying that the extracts respectively were truly copied by them from the registers of the respective churches. The question was whether the court could receive the extracts thus attested without any further verification.

By the Law of Evidence Amendment Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14, it is enacted, "Whenever any book or other document is of such a public nature as to be admissible in evidence on its mere production from the proper custody, and no statute exists which renders its contents provable by means of a sworn copy, any copy thereof or extract therefrom shall be admissible in evidence in any court of justice, or before any person now or hereafter having by law or by consent of parties, authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence, provided it be proved to be an examined copy or extract, or provided it purport to be signed and certified as a true copy or extract by the officer to whose custody the original is intrusted, and which officer is hereby required to furnish such certified copy or extract to any person applying at a reasonable time for the same, upon payment of a reasonable sum for the same, not exceeding fourpence for every folio of ninety words."

By the 17th section it is provided that any person who shall forge the signature, &c. or tender in evidence a document with a false signature, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be liable to seven years transportation.

Forster, for the petitioners, contended that the evidence tendered was sufficient.

Their LORDSHIPS, after referring to the statute 52 Geo. 3, c. 146, as to what officers were to be intrusted with the custody of the parish registers, said that they considered that, according to the proper construction to be put upon that statute and the Statute to amend the Law of Evidence, the extracts which had been tendered in evidence ought to be received.

Ex parte DANE and HIGGINS, Re CHARLES BELTON a Bankrupt.

Bankruptcy—Practice—Petition to disallow certificate—Costs.

Upon a petition to disallow a bankrupt's petition coming on to be heard, it appeared that, the bankrupt having gone out of the jurisdiction, the petitioning creditors who had presented the petition had been unable personally to serve the bankrupt with the petition:

Held, that the petition ought to be dismissed with costs as against the assignees, but, as the petitioners undertaking not to file another petition, without costs as against the bankrupt.

Upon the usual application by the bankrupt in this case the Commissioner had allowed him his certificate, suspending, however, the same for three months. Two of the petitioning creditors thereupon presented an appeal against the decision of the Commissioner, praying that the certificate might be altogether disallowed. The bankrupt had gone out of the jurisdiction, and the petitioners, although they had used all due diligence, had been unable to serve the bankrupt with the petition. It appeared that the solicitor of the bankrupt at first appeared, and promised to accept service for the bankrupt, but he afterwards refused so to do. The petitioners then served the petition at the house in which the bankrupt lived previous to his going out of the jurisdiction.

Renshaw, for the petitioning creditors, in support of the appeal.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE said that it seemed a hard case that the bankrupt should be enabled to secure his certificate by going abroad. His Lordship then asked whether it had ever been the practice to allow such petition to stand over?

Bacon (amicus curiæ) said that he thought the bankrupt had a right to have the petition heard, or, if not personally served, dismissed.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—That is my impression; it certainly used to be so. My impression is that this petition must be dismissed.

Glasse, on the part of the bankrupt, then asked for the costs of the petition, and cited the case of Ex parte Long, 1 Gl. & J. 351.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—We are not bound to give the bankrupt his costs, and shall not do so if the petitioners will undertake not to file another petition. On the other hand, if the petitioners will not give that undertaking, the bankrupt may as well have his costs at once.

Renshaw then gave the required undertaking on behalf of the petitioning creditors.

Bird, for the assignees, who had been served with the petition, asked for the costs.

The Court thereupon ordered that the petition should be dismissed with costs as against the assignees, and without costs as against the bankrupt, the petitioners undertaking not to file another petition. (a)

HIORNS v. HOLTOM.
FORTNUM v. HOLTOM.

Sale or foreclosure under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 48—Fraudulent dealings by a solicitor—Who to bear the loss—Mortgage—Sale—Purchasing debt—Costs.

An arrangement was made on behalf of A. by his solicitor, for a loan to B. of 1,000l. on the security of a second mortgage of certain property which was already mortgaged to secure 1,000l., and a mortgage was prepared and executed by B. but no money was paid; and on A. learning what was done he refused to convey, but agreed to advance 2,000l. (on having a transfer of the first mortgage) by way of further charge. The deed of transfer and further charge was accordingly executed, but the deed of second mortgage was not cancelled, but remained in the hands of the solicitor, who advised a third party, C., to advance 1,000l. on a transfer of it, C. paid the money to the solicitor, who handed him the deed, with a memorandum which he had fraudulently induced A. to sign, undertaking to transfer the second mortgage; and subsequently the solicitor induced A. to execute the transfer accordingly, and to sign a receipt for the 1,000l. which the solicitor applied to his own use. The deed of transfer was expressed in words sufficient to convey the legal estate, which was vested on C. by the deed of transfer and further charge.

Held, that as between A. and C. the former must bear the loss occasioned by the fraud which he had enabled the solicitor to commit, and that C. was entitled to half the benefit of the security of the deed of transfer and further charge, and to costs of the suit, to be paid by A. except the costs of the mortgagor and a defendant who ought not to have been made a party.

The mortgagor held, not entitled to his costs, but decreed to have them himself because he ought to have taken care that the deed of second mortgage was cancelled; and a mortgagee of the equity of redemption, who by his answer disclaimed, stating that his claim was satisfied, and if applied to before being made a party he would have disclaimed, was held entitled to his costs.

The transfer of the deed of second mortgage to C. being intended only to give the benefit of a deed which did not pass the legal estate: quære the effect.

Under the New Chancery Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 48, a sale instead of a foreclosure will not in general be ordered, unless there is such complication that the common decree for foreclosure cannot conveniently be worked out.

This was a bill to obtain the benefit of a security to the extent of 1,000*l.*, and consequential relief. The principal question was, in fact, which of two incumbrancers should bear the loss consequent upon the fraud perpetrated by a solicitor. It appeared that Mr. Samuel Robins, who was possessed of some freehold property in Gloucestershire, in 1842 applied to his solicitor, Mr. Charles Handley, of Warwick, to procure him the loan of 1,000*l.* on the security of a second mortgage of the property in question, which he had in 1840 mortgaged to secure a similar sum. Handley, who was also the solicitor of Mr. Joseph Holtom, accordingly agreed with Robins to provide an advance of 1,000*l.* from Holtom on the security of the second mortgage; and without the knowledge of Holtom a deed bearing date the 13th Feb. 1843 was prepared, which purported to be a mortgage of the property by Robins to Holtom, to secure (subject to the mortgage of 1840), the sum of 1,000*l.* This deed was executed by Robins, but no money was paid, and Holtom, so soon as he learned the nature of the transaction, refused to proceed with it and to advance his money on a second mortgage; but he agreed to pay off the mortgage of 1840, and take a transfer of it, and then advance to Robins a second 1,000*l.* by way of further charge, by which means he would become a first mortgagee for the sum of 2,000*l.* This was agreed to, and a deed of transfer and further charge, dated 28th Feb. 1842, was prepared and executed, and the money paid and the transaction completed, but no notice whatever was taken of the deed of the 13th Feb. 1842, which had not been cancelled, but was retained by Handley, for the purpose, as he pretended, of having the stamp duty returned. In June 1843 Robins borrowed 500*l.* from one Tatnall and, to secure it, mortgaged the property subject to the mortgage of the 28th Feb. 1842. The 500*l.* mortgage was afterwards transferred to Richard Hiorns, the plaintiff in the first suit. In 1844 Mrs. Wilkes, afterwards Mrs. Fortnum (the plaintiff in the second suit), wishing to invest a sum of money, applied to Handley for this purpose, who told her that Holtom had two mortgages for 1,000*l.* each on the property of Samuel Robins, on which he wished to raise 1,000*l.* and recommended her to advance 1,000*l.* on the security of a transfer of the mortgage of the 16th Feb. 1842. Mrs. Wilkes accordingly paid the 1,000*l.* to Handley, and received from him the deed of the 16th Feb. 1842, and a memorandum (which he had prevailed upon Holtom to sign, on the ground, as alleged, that it would enable Robins to raise 1,000*l.* and would not affect Holtom's security) in these words:

"March 3rd. Memorandum. I, the undersigned Joseph Holtom, of Blockley, in the county of Worcester, farmer, do hereby undertake and agree, when called upon, to assign to Mrs. R. Wilkes, of Brailes, in the county of Warwick, widow, or to whom she may direct, a certain indenture of mortgage, dated the 16th Feb. 1842, on property at Mickleton, in the county of Gloucester, for securing the sum of 1,000*l.* and interest from Mr. Samuel Robins to me. Joseph Holtom. Witness, Charles Handley." The money being paid to Handley, he applied it to his own use. Subsequently Mrs. Wilkes applied several times to Handley for a legal transfer of the mortgage as stipulated, but in vain; and, after numerous evasions by Mr. Handley, Mrs. Wilkes at last, in 1848, put her affairs into the hands of another solicitor, who applied to Handley, and the result was that Handley delivered to Mrs. Wilkes's solicitor a deed, dated the 1st of March, 1848, executed by Holtom, and with the proper receipt indorsed, transferring to a trustee for Mrs. Wilkes the mortgage of the 16th Feb. 1842. This deed of transfer was in the usual form of transfers of mortgages passing the legal estate, and contained the clause of "all the estate, right, title," &c. Soon after, Mrs. Wilkes married Mr. Fortnum, and the money secured by the deed of 1st March, 1848, was made the subject of their marriage settlement. Hiorns, the transferee of the 500*l.* mortgage, filed his bill for redemption and foreclosure against Holtom, Mrs. Fortnum, and those claiming under her against the mortgagor and some subsequent incumbrancers, praying a declaration of his title to redeem both Holtom and Mrs. Fortnum on payment of 2,000*l.* only. On the other hand, Mrs. Fornum and her trustees filed their bill against Holtom, Hiorns, the subsequent incumbrancers, and the mortgagor, praying that they might be declared entitled to the benefit of the security of the 28th Feb. 1842, to the extent of 1,000*l.*, and asking consequential relief. Holtom resisted this claim, on the ground that Handley had fraudulently procured him to sign the memorandum of March 1844 and to execute the transfer of March 1848, and converted the money to his own use; that Handley devised the fraudulent scheme to obtain the 1,000*l.* for his own benefit. Nobody doubted but the question was, who was to bear the loss in consequence of the fraud. The case now came on to be heard.

Lloyd and J. V. Prior, for the plaintiff in the first suit.—We contend that there was constructive notice of our advance of 500*l.*; for Handley was solicitor to both in the mortgage transaction of 1844. We therefore have a lien on the property, subject only to the prior charge of 2,000*l.* secured by the mortgage of Feb. 1842, but not to the further sum of 1000*l.* advanced by Mrs. Fortnum, for Handley was not only the solicitor in that transaction of Mrs. Fortnum's as Mr. Robins' agent, but regularly paid the interest on his mortgage to Mr. Hiorns. Whatever effect the transactions between Mrs. Fortnum, on the one hand, and Robins and Handley his solicitor on the other, as between themselves, they could not affect a third party who was not privy to them, so as to let in an additional charge of 1,000*l.* in priority to the charge of the third party.

Bird, for Garrett, a mortgagee subsequent to Hiorns.—The deed of transfer of 1848 was only intended to operate as a transfer of the mortgage of the 16th of February 1842, which was only a mortgage of the equity of redemption, and did not purport to pass the legal estate, and, therefore, the transfer of 1848 could not pass the legal estate. [The Master of the Rolls.—You are not affected by that point, if it should be held that the parties entitled to the securities of the 28th of February 1842 and March 1848 are only to have 2,000*l.* between them.] Even if the legal estate did pass that would make no difference, for in a mortgage transaction the debt is the principal, and the property only the accessary. There being no debt therefore on the security of the 16th of February 1842, though purporting to be a mortgage for 1,000*l.*, a court of equity will hold that the deed of transfer passed nothing.

R. Palmer and James for Mrs. Fortnum.—The deed of the 28th of Feb. 1842 superseded that of the 16th of the same month, which ought to have been cancelled. It was, however, retained by Handley; but, though retained by him, it must as regards us be considered as having been in the possession of Holtom. Handley no doubt was our solicitor in 1844; but that in no way prejudices us, inasmuch as Holtom himself signed the memorandum admitting the deed of the 16th of February 1842 to be in his possession, and treating it as a subsisting mortgage, and afterwards executed the deed of transfer, which was so worded as to be capable of operating so as to pass the legal estate in the property; for he had the legal estate vested in him, which therefore passed to us, and he has no right in equity to deprive us of it without paying off our claim. According to his own statement, he was told by Handley that his signing the memorandum would enable Robins to raise 1,000*l.*; he must therefore be considered as having signed the memorandum to enable Robins to raise the money on the estate, and is therefore bound; the documents which he signed and gave to Handley being a sufficient authority to us to pay the money to Handley as his agent; and we are not answerable for the appropriation of it by Handley to his own use. (They cited West v. [illegible] 2 Sim. N.S. 196.)

Field, for parties claiming under Mrs. Fortnum's settlement.

Daniel and Roderick, for Holtom, insisted that Handley was only Holtom's general agent, and had no authority to raise money for him. [The Master of the Rolls.—The difficulty of answering is, that you gave him documents which enabled him to represent to third parties that he had authority.] He came to us representing himself to be Holtom's agent, and practised a fraud upon us; and, as against us, the deed of 1848 is void for fraud, and we are not bound by it. The memorandum of 1844 does not amount to or operate as an agreement which Mrs. Fortnum could enforce against us; and even if it were, she did not thereby acquire any right except to a transfer of a void security. [The Master of the Rolls.—Are you not estopped by the memorandum from saying the security was void; and if you allege the deed to be void for fraud, you ought to file a bill to have it cancelled.] We should require to file a bill if it were only void in equity; but it is void at law, for it was executed four years after the memorandum, and its execution was obtained by fraud. But suppose it to be valid, it did not operate to pass the legal estate; for it is plain on the face of the deed itself that there was no intention to pass the legal estate. Mrs. Fortnum, not having the legal estate, therefore must take subject to all prior equities, and to ours among others, over which she cannot claim any priority. Holtom has the title-deeds in his possession, and the court will not in any case deprive him of them.

They cited Fauset v. Carpenter, 2 Dow. & Cl. 232; Ramsden v. Hilton, 2 Vern. 309; Cole v. Gibson, 1 Vern. 506; Lord Braybroke v. Inskip, 3 Ves. 417; Bac. Ab. "Release," K. 633.

Roberts, for the mortgagor, asked that the costs of litigation as to the transactions between Mrs. Fortnum and Holtom should be borne by the parties themselves, and not charged against the estate. [The Master of the Rolls.—I shall not give any costs in the second suit out of the estate. You do not, I suppose, contend that the costs in the first suit should not follow the general rule.]

H. C. Jones, for Garner, a mortgagee of the equity of redemption, asked that both bills should be dismissed as against him, with costs, inasmuch as by his answer he had disclaimed, stating that his charge had been satisfied two months before the first bill was filed; and if he had been then applied to, he would have disclaimed, and by deed if necessary. As to his not having reconveyed, there was nothing to convey, inasmuch as an equitable mortgagee's interest determines ipso facto by being paid off.

R. Palmer, in reply.—[The Master of the Rolls.—There is only one point on which I wish to hear a reply, viz.—Whether the deed of 1848 could pass the legal estate, when its only object was to transfer a security which did not purport to pass the legal estate?] If the court should hold that we have an equity against Holtom, it will probably not be necessary to argue that point, inasmuch as we only bargained to have a security for 1000*l.* subject to a prior one for the same amount, and we ask no more.

The Master of the Rolls.—As the claim is only to the extent of the estate, and not to be paid in full if the estate should not be worth 2000*l.* a reply is unnecessary; and I have only to state my reasons for deciding that Mr. Holtom cannot maintain that Mrs. Fortnum is not entitled to 1000*l.* out of the 2000*l.* for which he holds a security on the property. [Here his Honour shortly stated the facts.] Now what is Holtom's own account of this transaction? He says that Handley came to him as the solicitor of Robins the mortgagor, and told him that Robins wanted to raise 1000*l.* on the property; and to enable him to do so, it was necessary that he should sign the memorandum. Holtom inquired whether it would affect his own security, and on being informed by Handley that it would not, he signed it. Now, how could he suppose his signature would be of any use if it did not affect his interest in the mortgaged property? It was argued, indeed, with reference to the form of the memorandum containing no statement that it was given for raising money, that Holtom is not to be affected by the use made of it, and much stress was laid upon this part of the case; but it is clear from Holtom's own statement that he gave it for the very purpose of enabling money to be raised, and not only so, but four years afterwards he executed a deed in conformity with the memorandum, and signed a receipt for the money. Now he turns round, and after all this says he did not know what he was doing, and that the deed in the hands of persons who innocently advanced money upon it, on the faith of the memorandum signed by him, is void. Such an argument has never, in any case I have met, been admitted. In Kennedy v. Green, which was a case of gross fraud, it was considered clear that a purchaser for value was safe unless he had actual or constructive notice of the fraud. But here it is impossible to hold that, as between Mrs. Fortnum and Mr. Holtom, the former is to, but the person who [illegible] the latter has occasioned such a [illegible] which he [illegible]

V. C. [illegible] COURT.

[illegible] it [illegible] Holton to [illegible] the [illegible] Feb. 1852; and there must be one [illegible] in both suits for redemption and foreclosure. The plaintiff in this second suit must pay the costs of all the defendants in that suit, except those of Holton, whom and his mortgagee, and have them [illegible] Holton. I was at first inclined to make Holton also pay the mortgagee's costs in the second suit; but I think the mortgagee ought not to receive any costs, inasmuch as he ought to have taken care to have the deed of the 16th Feb. 1852 cancelled, and not having done so, is to blame. The costs in the first suit will follow the rule in redemption and foreclosure suits, except as to Garnett, as against whom the bill must be dismissed with costs to be paid by the plaintiff, because they chose to make him a party without first asking him whether he had any interest, and they must take the consequences.

Bird observed, that this was a proper case for the court to order a sale under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 48, there being three mortgages, and there being no doubt that the estate was incumbered beyond its value.

The Master of the Rolls felt unwilling to order a sale, unless by consent, in a case where there was not such complication as to render it inconvenient to work out the common decree. This he thought was not such a case; but if all the parties agreed to it, the decree might be drawn up as asked.

CROFTS v. MIDDLETON.

Practice—Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act—Affidavit—Evidence—Examiner abroad.

The Court of Chancery has power to appoint an examiner to take the examination of witnesses who are not out of the jurisdiction, notwithstanding the provisions of the 36th section of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

In this suit two of the defendants not principally interested in the subject-matter of the litigation, were necessary to be examined as witnesses, and they had put in their answers. The cause was at issue before the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86 came into operation, but the parties to the suit had come to an arrangement that the evidence in the cause should be taken conformably to the new practice established by the Act and the Orders of August 1852; but subsequently one of these defendants, Mr. Beale, left England, and was now in Australia.

E. F. Smith now moved, pursuant to the arrangement, that the plaintiff might be at liberty to take the evidence of Mr Beale as a witness in the cause by affidavit; and that such affidavit when made, might be used by the plaintiffs at the hearing, and on all subsequent proceedings. He relied upon the 36th section of the Act, which provides that, notwithstanding any election by the parties to a suit to take evidence orally, "affidavits by particular witnesses, or affidavits as to particular facts or circumstances may by consent, or by leave of the court obtained upon notice, be used in the hearing of any cause.

J. V. Prior, for the defendant, was willing to take the affidavits of both Mr. Beale and of Mr. Middleton, the other defendant, who was required as a witness, because then the parties would be on equal terms. Mr. Beale, having gone to Australia, could not be cross-examined as Mr. Middleton could, and therefore it was right that if he were examined orally the other should be so too, and that a commission should issue for that purpose.

E. F. Smith, in reply.—The examination must be by commission if the affidavit be objected to, and as the 38th sect. of the statute only abolishes the commission for examining witnesses within the jurisdiction, there seems to be no other course but to have a commission here if the court has authority to issue it, which seems doubtful.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—All the judges of the court, who have been consulted on this point, are of opinion that the court has power to appoint an examiner for the examination of witnesses who were out of the jurisdiction of the court; and I will in this case appoint an examiner in Australia. The parties may agree on the person to be named; or, if not, the court will make the appointment. It is not a case in which the plaintiff is entitled to have the evidence of his witness taken upon affidavit.

RAMSBOTTOM v. BOURDON.

Practice—Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act—Service of subpœna.

Where a decree is made in an administration suit, the judge in chambers will dispense with service of the subpœna upon such parties as he considers properly entitled to be served, and will there direct service on such as he thinks it proper should be served.

A claim was filed before Michaelmas Term 1852 for the administration of the estate of an intestate, and in that term the minutes of the decree were handed out from the registrar's office, by which inquiries were directed as to the next-of-kin, and then, on its being ascertained that all the next-of-kin had been duly served with writs of summons, that the accounts should be taken of the intestate's estate. Some of the next-of-kin were known to be out of the jurisdiction of the court, and by the 18th of the Orders of the Court of the 7th of August, 1852, it is provided that "The existing practice of the court with reference to issuing, and serving writs of subpœna, to appear to and answer bills and writs of summons on claims, is also to continue in force with respect to bills and claims filed before these orders came into operation;" and the orders are directed, by the 47th of them, to come into operation on the 2nd of November, 1852.

Welford asked for the variation of the order, so that service of the writ of summons on such of the next-of-kin who were out of the jurisdiction might be dispensed with.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The minutes of the order are not in the proper form, according to the present mode of proceeding. The form of order which was originally adopted on claims, directing what parties were to be summoned, and that when such parties had been served the accounts should be taken, is not now suitable to the case. In a case like the present, the Act tells you what you are to do. A suit for the administration of the estate of an intestate may be brought by or against one of the next-of-kin; and the decree simply directs an inquiry who were the next-of-kin of the intestate at the time of his death, and whether any of them are dead, and if so, who are their personal representatives; and then it goes on to direct that the accounts of the estate shall be taken. The General Orders of the Court which have been made are well adapted to provide for any such difficulty as that which is represented to occur in this case. The judge in chambers is enabled to dispense with service of the decree upon any party as to whom it shall appear to him that, from absence or other sufficient cause, it ought to be dispensed with or cannot be made. The course is this: having ascertained who are the parties interested in the estate, upon the first summons before the judge in chambers to proceed with the decree, the judge will consider any circumstances which may be brought before him with reference to any of the parties, and direct who are the parties to be served, and whether service on any of them may be dispensed with.

LAWSON v. HALL.

Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 31—Appointment of examiner.

Nichols applied on the part of the plaintiffs, some of whom were infants, for the appointment of a solicitor, not engaged in the cause to be the examiner of witnesses in this cause. The witnesses were all resident in the county of Somerset, and the application was made to save expense. He referred to the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 31 and the General Orders.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he thought it desirable there should be some affidavit of the facts. He was unwilling to depart from the usual practice of the court unless there was distinct evidence that there would be a saving of expense.

Nichols read an affidavit of the respectability and competency of the solicitor proposed to be appointed, and

The VICE-CHANCELLOR made the order.

GILLGALL v. JOHNSON.

Practice—Evidence—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, ss. 40 and 41.

A decree referring it to the Master to make certain inquiries having been made previous to the passing of the above-mentioned statute, the court by consent ordered that parties and witnesses should be examined viva voce.

Berkeley, on behalf of a defendant in this cause, renewed an application made on the 8th ult. for an order that the parties and witnesses should be examined viva voce. A decree had, previous to the recent statute, been made, referring it to the Master to make certain inquiries. The Master declined to examine the witnesses, and the examiner doubted his power to do so without the order of the court. He referred to Heatcoll v. Cheatle, 20 L. T. 139.

The application was consented to by the other parties to the suit.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR accordingly made the order.

MAY v. BIGGENDEN.

Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, ss. 39 and 40.

The plaintiff in a cause, after publication had passed and the cause been set down for hearing, applied for leave to serve the defendant with a subpœna to appear at the hearing, that he might be orally examined. The application was supported by an affidavit showing that it was very important to the plaintiff's case, and to the discovery of the truth as to the matters in question, that the defendant should be examined viva voce at the hearing.

The motion was refused with costs.

W. D. Lewis, on behalf of the plaintiff in this cause, moved that the plaintiff might "be at liberty to issue a subpœna, directed to the defendant John Biggenden, commanding him the said John Biggenden that, having all other matters aside and notwithstanding any excuse, he personally be and appear before the Right Honour the Vice-Chancellor Stuart on the hearing of this cause to testify the truth according to his knowledge touching the matters in question in this cause." The solicitor for the plaintiff, in an affidavit filed in support of the motion, after stating certain circumstances connected with the case, deposed that he had laid the papers therein before mentioned before counsel, and he was advised and he verily believed that it was of great importance to the plaintiff's case, and to the discovery of the truth of the several matters in the pleadings of the cause mentioned, that the defendant John Biggenden should be examined viva voce at the hearing of the cause. The present application was made by way of precaution, to secure the attendance of the party in case the court should, at the hearing, think proper to examine him; and that the defendant should not object that he was taken by surprise. The 39th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, provided that "upon the hearing of any cause depending in the said court, whether commenced by bill or by claim, the court, if it shall see fit so to do, may require the production and oral examination before itself of any witness or party in the cause," &c. The Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, in Smith v. Scottish Dock Company, reported in 9 Hare, Appendix xxi. said, that "the introduction of oral testimony, on a motion under the 40th section of the Act, must be procured by due service of the writ of subpœna in the ordinary way, upon an application to be made before the motion came on to be heard."

Bazalgette, for the defendant Biggenden, opposed the motion. Publication had passed in the cause, and the cause had been set down to be heard. The evidence, therefore, was closed, and the section which was beyond the evidence applied to the discretion of the court and not to either of the parties. It was not the intention of the Legislature that parties should be harassed by such a compulsory attendance as was now sought, when the court might not require the oral examination to be made. Should the court desire to examine a party, the cause could be ordered to stand over for the attendance of the party whose testimony was required; and though this might be an inconvenient course, it was much less so than that proposed by the plaintiff. In the case cited the Vice-Chancellor Kindersley did nothing which could bear the construction now attempted to be put upon it. The hearing there was upon a motion, and from the report of the case in The Jurist, the learned reporter whose note had been cited appeared to have been misinformed as to what was said by the judge.

Bacon and Follett (amici curiæ) stated that they were counsel in Smith v. Scottish Dock Company, and they explained the circumstances of the case, showing that the report in 9 Hare as to this point was not strictly correct.

J. H. Palmer, for the defendant Cheesman, contended that the present application was either premature or unnecessary. The 39th section required that, at the hearing the court should decide upon the necessity for an oral examination, and therefore no such application as the present could be made previous to the hearing. The issuing of a subpœna was a matter ex debito justitiæ (24 Ord. May 1845) and therefore this motion was unnecessary.

W. D. Lewis, in reply, said that the court was not now asked to decide in any way as to the effect of this examination. The object of the motion was simply that without hindrance the benefit of the 39th section might be obtained. At the hearing, Biggenden might be abroad or not to be found, and then it would prove a serious inconvenience that the hearing of the cause should be interrupted until his attendance could be obtained.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that this was an application which was perfectly novel, and was alleged to be necessary in consequence of the changes which had been recently introduced in the practice of the court. The application was said to be necessary by the special circumstances of the case; first, because it was stated that the clerk of records and writs would not issue the subpœna without the order of the court; and in the next place because on the facts shown by the affidavit, which were very peculiar, the court was pressed with the consideration that the circumstances of the case were such as that, under the discretion given to the court by the 39th section, it would require a viva voce examination of this defendant at the hearing of the cause. The question then was whether, for the purposes of justice under the authority of this late act of Parliament, the court would be authorized to make the order asked for. If the order required were issued for enabling provisions of the 30th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, those provisions pointed to nothing in the nature of a subpœna, but empowered the court at the hearing of the cause, if it should see fit, to order any witness or party in the cause to be examined viva voce; and, therefore, if the order to issue a subpœna were a novel and unprecedented matter in the practice of the court, his Honour had no authority under that section to make an order directing the clerk of records and writs to issue a subpœna of this kind. It had been said, that it would be inconvenient to interrupt the hearing of the cause, if the court at that stage of the proceedings should think the examination of Biggenden necessary, and that it would be more convenient that the party should have means that he might be required to be examined, and that such notice would be best given by a subpœna. On the other hand, the application had been resisted, on the ground that under the 30th section the court could only upon the hearing, if it should then see necessary, require the attendance and oral examination of the party. That, in his Honour's view, was the more just construction; and although upon the ground of convenience the purposes of all parties might be better served by giving the defendant notice, his Honour said that his sentiments of what was convenient and proper did not justify him in stretching the construction of an Act beyond what the words authorised. Of the cases which had been mentioned as having occurred before the Vice-Chancellor Kindersley his Honour had been furnished with two reports, and one of them appeared to justify Mr Lewis's argument. But from what had been stated by the counsel engaged in that case, it appeared that the report in 9 Hare was not accurate, and that nothing had passed which would sanction the present application. Upon the whole, therefore, his Honour considered that the motion was unnecessary, unsanctioned by the practice of the court, and altogether misconceived; and he must refuse it; and as the motion was not justified, it must be refused with costs.

NEW RULES

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J., on taking his seat on the bench, said that he had the satisfaction to announce that the judges had this day signed a body of new rules for regulating the practice of the three Superior Courts of Common Law in Westminster-hall. They had adopted the plan and he hoped it would be generally approved of, to abolish all the rules of practice from the earliest times, and to make in that way a tabula rasa for the new practice. The new body of rules would be equally applicable to all the three Superior Courts, and were intended to establish a uniformity of practice, so far at least as the judges had the power in themselves to establish it. There was matter as to which they had not the power of themselves to make new rules at once binding on the Profession—they had not the power of their own authority to establish new rules relating to pleading. The objections to the existing system of pleading they had endeavoured to obviate by certain rules which they had made under the authority of recent Acts of Parliament. Under these Acts the judges had done all they could to render the course of justice speedy and effectual, but before the rules they had agreed to could come into operation they must be laid before the two Houses of Parliament and on the expiration of three months, they would unless disapproved of by either House of Parliament, become law and come into actual operation, and he hoped that they would then be found materially to improve the administration of justice.

RE THE BIRMINGHAM AND OXFORD JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY AND THE BIRMINGHAM, WOLVERHAMPTON, AND DUDLEY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mandamus—Service of writ by copy of original.

The Court will not, on a suggestion that the original writ of mandamus has not been served on the defendant or sworn to him, grant a rule to show cause why the service should not be set aside.

It is for the party who has been served to determine whether he will make a return or not.

Phipson moved for a rule calling on the prosecutor to show cause why the service of the writ of mandamus herein should not be set aside on the ground that the original had not been served nor even shown. The affidavit on which he moved was made by a gentleman who is secretary to both companies, which set forth that the companies, though distinct, are carried on by the same staff, and the business conducted in the same place, that the deponent had never been personally or otherwise served with the original of the writ of mandamus issued in this case, nor to his belief had the original ever been served by the same having been left at or transmitted through the post directed to the principal office of either of the said companies, and that the original of the writ had not come to his knowledge or to that of any one in his office.

LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.—The prosecutor has taken some step that has brought this writ to your knowledge. What is it?

Phipson.—No doubt he has served a copy, but he ought to have served the original.

LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.—Have you any authority for setting aside the service of a writ of mandamus on the ground that the original writ was not served?

Phipson.—In Corner's Practice p. 277 the analogy with the service of the writ of summons is pointed out; but in this case it does not appear that the original was ever shown. How can the defendants make a return to that of which they have no knowledge?

WIGHTMAN, J.—In the case of several defendants with distinct interests, how is the service of each with the original to be effected?

Phipson.—That is precisely the difficulty. One only may have knowledge of the writ; how are the others to make the return?

COLERIDGE, J.—Why may not a return be made to a copy? The Master tells me that it is constantly done; and unless there is authority for setting aside the service, I do not see why we should interfere.

By the COURT.—It is for the party who has been served with a copy to elect whether he will make a return or not.

Re JOHN SMITH, Gent. &c.

Attorney—Striking off rolls.

The court declined to rule for striking an attorney off the rolls obtained on the opinion that he had been at sufficient punishment by having been subsequently restored to the rolls of the Court of Chancery at appearing that he had been suspended from practice in the Court of Chancery and suspended for six months. The court refused to suspend him from practice therein for the same period as could not say that the punishment inflicted by the Court of Chancery was not a sufficient punishment for the attorney's misconduct but merely ordered him to pay the costs of the rule.

Gray showed cause in this case in which he said a rule had been granted by this court to strike Mr Smith off the rolls of attorneys of this court upon production of a verified order of the Lord Chancellor that he should be struck off the rolls of solicitors of the Court of Chancery. The rule had been enlarged on the representation that a petition had been presented to the Lord Chancellor to reconsider the case. Since then the petition had been considered and the result had been that the Lord Chancellor had ordered Mr Smith's name to be restored to the roll of solicitors in the Court of Chancery but that he should be suspended from practice for six months. It must therefore be assumed that Mr Smith had been guilty of some degree of misconduct which required a punishment by a suspension for six months; but that would not warrant the making absolute the rule in this court which was not for mere suspension but for striking Mr Smith off the rolls.

The Court called on

Wilde to support the rule.—He did not mean to ask that the rule should be made absolute in its terms. After what had occurred in the Court of Chancery he could not do so. But he asked for a similar judgment as in the Court of Chancery, and that Mr Smith should pay the costs of the application. The two courts ought to be uniform in the course they pursued. That had always been the principle observed in cases of this kind.

Gray said that that principle did not apply in this case. It might be that the attorney who was struck off the rolls of one court, for misconduct which was deemed to show him unfit to practise ought therefore to be struck off the rolls of another court.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Because in fact he would not be struck off the rolls without proof of some fraud which would disqualify him from practising in any court.

Gray said that that was so. Here, however the punishment inflicted must be taken to be the whole which was due to his offence. There was no occasion here for the uniformity now asked for. He was suspended in Chancery for what he had done there, and if he were punished here by a similar order for suspension from practice, he would receive an additional punishment, when it must be assumed that that which the Lord Chancellor had inflicted was all that his misconduct required. Suppose the Lord Chancellor had fined him fifty pounds, might that would not have been a reason why he should be punished in the Common Pleas, and the Exchequer, in each also to be fined fifty pounds for the same offence.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J., said he did not think the circumstances; that the rule ought to be discharged, and that Mr. Smith ought to pay the costs. He quite agreed that the Lord Chancellor did not think that the punishment which he inflicted in his opinion was also a sufficient punishment. If we were to enable the greater by any addition here, we might in fact be acting against the exercise of his discretion.

COLERIDGE, J., said that he had at first a different opinion, but Mr. Gray's argument had convinced him.

The other judges concurred.

Re ARCHIBALD WILSON.—Sir F. Thesiger moved to discharge a rule for taxation of costs. This was a case in which the City Solicitor had, as such, instituted, under the direction of a magistrate, a prosecution against the defendant for an assault upon a boy. The case had at the instance of the defendant been removed by certiorari and the defendant convicted. The question now was, whether under the 5 Will. & M. c. 11 s. 3 the City Solicitor was entitled to the costs of the prosecution. That section gave to the party grieved or injured the right to the costs in a case where the prosecution had been removed by certiorari into the Superior Courts. It was quite clear that the City Solicitor was not a party grieved in this case, and the question therefore was whether he could claim costs under the other part of the section. The section, after giving the right to costs to any party grieved went on to award them to any officer who prosecuted in respect of any fact committed or done that concerned him or them to prosecute or present. It could not be said that this assault on a boy was a matter which concerned an officer in his office to prosecute or present, and therefore it was submitted that the City Solicitor was not in this case entitled to claim the benefit of the words in the statute. The Court suggested that in Rex. v. —— this court had held that if the act of offence was of which, on public grounds of safety or morals, required a prosecution it became the duty of a public officer to prosecute and costs might be given. Sir F. Thesiger said that the doctrine went to that extent it would follow that all prosecutions ought to be undertaken by him.

Re J. On the second ground of objection, it appeared that the evidence had the inquest at the Bush Inn in Duke's in the county of Monmouth though the body was in Gloucestershire until the jury had had the view in that county. The inquest was in Monmouthshire, the verdict was given there and the warrant issued there. Thirdly, the jury were formed of persons not qualified to sit as jurors, on an inquest held in the county of Gloucester. This objection rested on affidavits which set forth that eight of those persons were not, nor was any one of them a resident within the county of Gloucester, nor qualified to act as a juror within.

MITCHELL and WIFE v. CRASSWELLER.—Hoggins, Serjt., moved for a rule to set aside the verdict which had been entered for the defendant under the direction of the Chief Justice. The action was brought to recover damages from the defendant for injury caused by the negligent driving of the person in charge of the defendant's cart. Plea—1. Not guilty. 2. Denial of the negligence of the cart. The defence was that the servant had been sent with the cart to deliver goods in the City, and after he had returned drove the foreman part of his way home without the permission of his master, and on his way back did the injury complained of, and that the defendant was not liable for an injury caused by the act under such circumstances. Price v. Hewitt.

Common Law Procedure Act, 1852—Pleading and demurring together.

An action was brought against an infant for fraud in representing himself to be of full age, so as to induce credit to be given to him—alleging damage:

Held, that defendant may plead and demur to the declaration at the same time.

This was an action of tort against the defendant, an infant, for having represented and stated that he was of full age and more than twenty-one years, so as to induce credit to be given to him; which statement was false, the defendant being a minor at the time.

The declaration alleged that the defendant requested the plaintiff to lend him a sum of money, and falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully represented and pretended to the plaintiff that the defendant had attained the age of twenty-one years; and the plaintiff, confiding in the truth of the said representation and pretence, agreed with the defendant to lend to him and did lend to the defendant, and the defendant then borrowed of the plaintiff a sum of money, upon the terms, amongst others, that the defendant should, for securing the repayment to the plaintiff of the same on the 28th Sept. 1852, execute, and the defendant did execute, a certain warrant of attorney, authorising certain attorneys therein named to appear for the defendant in the Court of Q. B. and receive a declaration for him in an action of debt for 800*l.* at the suit of the plaintiff, and to confess the said action, or to suffer judgment to pass against defendant, and to be entered up against him for the said 800*l.* besides costs of suit as between attorney and client; whereas in truth and in fact the defendant had not at the time of the making of the said representation and pretence attained the age of twenty-one years, but was an infant under that age, as the defendant at the time of his making the said representation well knew, and the defendant has hitherto wholly refused to repay, and has not repaid the plaintiff the said loan, and refuses payment thereof, and has obtained an order of one of her Majesty's barons of her Court of Ex. whereby, on hearing the plaintiff and defendant the said baron did order that the said warrant of attorney should be taken off the file of the said Court of Q. B. and delivered up to be cancelled, and that a certain judgment which plaintiff had signed against defendant, under and in pursuance of the said warrant of attorney, in the said Court of Q. B. and all subsequent proceedings taken, if any, should be set aside, the defendant being such infant as aforesaid. By reason of which premises the plaintiff hath been and is greatly injured, and was put to and incurred such expenses and trouble and about the application to the said baron for the said order, and in attending the hearing of the summons for the obtaining thereof, and otherwise, and the plaintiff claims 500*l.*

A rule nisi was then obtained to show cause why the defendant should not under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 50, be allowed to plead and demur at the same time to the declaration upon stating the facts and circumstances of the case in an affidavit made by defendant's attorney, which stated, amongst other things, "that deponent is advised and believes that the defendant has, under the circumstances aforesaid, just ground to plead not guilty to the declaration in this action, and also a traverse that the plaintiff confided in the said alleged fraudulent representation, and that he is also advised and believes that the declaration will be held bad in substance on demurrer, and that the objections to the same raised by such demurrer are good and valid objections in law."

Peterdorff showed cause.—The court may, perhaps, determine that the defendant here may plead and demur to this declaration at the same time, under the 80th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, which enacts, that "either party may, by leave of the court or a judge, plead and demur to the same pleading at the same time, upon an affidavit by such party or his attorney, if required by the court or judge, to the effect that he is advised and believes that he has just ground to traverse the several matters proposed to be traversed by him, and that the several matters sought to be pleaded as aforesaid by way of confession and avoidance, are respectively true in substance and in fact, and that he is further advised and believes that the objections raised by such demurrer are good and valid objections in law, and it shall be in the discretion of the court or judge to direct which issue shall be first disposed of." Yet the affidavit in support of the application is insufficient, as it only alleges that the deponent is advised and believes that defendant has just ground to plead not guilty, &c., but it does not aver that the circumstances stated are true in substance and in fact.

Alderson, B.—No, because that only applies to pleas by way of confession and avoidance; this is a traverse, a denial of the fraud alleged in the declaration.

Parke, B.—There would be no cause of action for simple fraud, unless the party is damaged by it in some way or other There is a case in 1 Siderfin, p. 258, which seems to show this action lies. The demurrer here had better be argued first.

Martin, B.—It is clear under the Act the defendant in this case may do both.

Field, contrà, not called upon.

Bankruptcy—12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 125—Relation from date of order of the court, back to the time of act of bankruptcy—Title of assignees.

One Atkinson assigned to the plaintiff Heslop, certain goods by way of security for advances made; Atkinson remained in possession as apparent owner, and subsequently, in August 1850, he committed an act of bankruptcy. On the 4th Sept. plaintiff, with notice of the bankruptcy, took possession. On the 9th Sept. Atkinson was adjudged a bankrupt, and on the same day Baker (the defendant) was appointed official assignee; on the 20th Sept. the other defendants were appointed trade assignees; on the 7th Oct. defendants took possession of the goods. Subsequently the Court of Bankruptcy made an order under the 125th section of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, for sale:

Held, in trover by the plaintiff against the assignees, that he was not entitled to recover, as the order of the court related to the date of the act of bankruptcy, from which time the assignees became entitled for the benefit of creditors.

In order to vest the property in such goods in the assignees or other person, the Court of Bankruptcy must make an order under the provisions of the 125th section.

Trover for goods.

Pleas—not guilty and not possessed.

At the trial before Lord Campbell, C. J. at the Newcastle assizes, it appeared that the plaintiff claimed the property in question under an assignment made several years before the commencement of the suit by one James Atkinson, as a security for alleged advances. The defendants were the assignees of Atkinson, who had committed an act of bankruptcy in Aug. 1850 by leaving his dwelling-house and place of business and going to America. Up to that time the property in question had remained in his possession as apparent owner. On the 4th Sept. after the departure of the bankrupt, the plaintiff, who at that time knew of the act of bankruptcy, took possession of the property. On the 9th Sept. Atkinson was adjudged a bankrupt, and upon the same day the defendant, Baker was appointed official assignee. On the 20th Sept. the other defendants were apointed trade assignees; and on the 7th Oct. the defendants took possession of the property. The cause was tried at the Spring assizes in 1851, before Cresswell, J., when the learned judge directed the jury to find a verdict for the defendants, if they thought that the goods remained in the order and disposition of the bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy with the consent of the plaintiff, and that he knew of the act of bankruptcy before he took possession. A verdict having been found for the defendants, a rule was made absolute for a new trial (reported 6 Ex. 740), the court holding that goods in the order and disposition of a bankrupt as reputed owner do not pass to the assignees under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 141 (the Bankruptcy Law Consolidation Act); but, in order to vest the property in such goods in the assignees or other person, the Court of Bankruptcy must make an order under the provisions of the 125th section. An order of the Court of Bankruptcy was subsequently obtained, and a second trial, which terminated again in a verdict for the defendants. Another rule nisi having been obtained to set aside that verdict, and to enter the rule for the plaintiff for 250*l.*:

Watson, Q. C., Hugh Hill, Q. C., and [illegible] showed cause.—The question depends upon the construction of the 125th section (a) of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, viz., whether its effect is to divest the property out of the true owner and render his goods, by order and disposition of the bankrupt, with his consent, part of the bankrupt's estate, so as to [illegible] the assignees by relation back to the time of the act of bankruptcy, the court having subsequently ordered the same to be sold and disposed of for the benefit of the creditors under the bankruptcy; or whether the property and right of possession still remain in the owner, notwithstanding the order of the court, no order of court having subsequently been made, till the goods vest in the assignees from the date of the act of bankruptcy by relation back to that period. The 125th section gives the court power to order a sale of any goods or chattels which any bankrupt, at the time he becomes bankrupt, shall, by consent and permission of the true owner thereof, have in his possession, order, or disposition. The question has been already determined by this court when this case was last argued; the judgment was then delivered, after time taken for consideration, by Parke, B. who says, in delivering the opinion of the court, "Where we find that in the same Act of Parliament the 72nd section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, is re-enacted, with this alteration only that instead of the commissioners having power to sell and dispose of the same, they practically to assign them to the assignees, the order has power—not to sell and dispose of, but—to order them to be sold and disposed of, we think that the meaning of these enactments in the new statute is, that in the case of the bankrupt's own property it is to pass by the adjudication; but in the case of chattels in his reputed ownership, something different must be done, and the court must make an order to sell and dispose of the same, in order to vest the property in the assignees or some other person." And again, in a subsequent part of the judgment, he adds: "There is no absurdity, or inconsistency, or inconvenience in holding that an order is necessary in such a case; when given, the title of the vendee of the goods are sold, of the assignees if the order is to vest the goods in them, will relate to the act of bankruptcy in the same way that the title of the assignees does by the general assignment, for all will be sold or assigned which the bankrupt had at the time he became bankrupt." The 125th section of the recent Bankruptcy Act is copied from the 21 Jac. 1, c. 19, s. 11, and is precisely the same, except the words "the court" are substituted for the word "commissioners." It is therefore the old reputed ownership clause, as to which the leading principles are clear and settled, and the point in this particular case upon the facts arising out of it has been determined by this court; the defendants have, under the order of the court, sold the goods and paid the money arising from such sale into court. Under the old law the goods vested in the assignees from the date of the act of bankruptcy, and so they do now (the order having been), made as the new Act in no way alters it: (Whitney v. Taylor, 10 A. & E. 280; Buron v. Denman, 2 Ex. 167; Fitch v. Adams, 2 Strange, 1128; Foster v. Bates, 12 M. & W. 226;

(a) And with respect to the power of the court over certain descriptions of property, be it enacted, sect. 125. "That if any bankrupt at the time he becomes bankrupt shall by the consent and permission of the true owner thereof have in his possession, order, or disposition, any goods or chattels whereof he was reputed owner, or whereof he had taken upon him the sale, alteration, or disposition as owner, the court shall have power to order the same to be sold and disposed of for the benefit of the creditors under the bankruptcy: provided that nothing herein contained shall invalidate or affect any transfer or assignments of any ship or vessel, or any share thereof, made as a security for any debt or debts, either by way of mortgage or assignment, duly registered according to the provisions of an Act made in the Parliament holden in the eighth and ninth years of the reign of Her Majesty, intituled 'An Act for the Registering of British Vessels' or any of the Acts therein mentioned."

Sect. 141. "That when any person shall have been adjudged a bankrupt, all his personal estate and effects, present and future, wheresoever the same may be found or known, and all property which he may purchase, or which may revert, descend, be devised or bequeathed, or come to him before he shall have obtained his certificate, and all debts due or to be due to him, wheresoever the same may be found or known, and the property, right, and interests in such debts, shall become absolutely vested in the assignees for the time being, for the benefit of the creditors of the bankrupt, by virtue of their appointment; and after such appointment neither the bankrupt, nor any person claiming through or under him, shall have power to recover the same, nor to make any release or discharge thereof, neither shall the same be attached as the debt of the bankrupt by any person according to the custom of the City of London or otherwise; but such assignees shall have full power to recover the same in their own names as the bankrupt himself might have had if he had not become or been bankrupt."

EXCHEQUER.

Young v. Cooper, 6 Ex. 199; Wallis v. Baker, 6 Ex. 799; West v. Loveday, 4 M. & G. 973, were cited.)

Willes, Q.C. (Unthank and Lewis with him) in support of the rule.—There are three points to be considered; 1st, Whether the plaintiff having, after the act of bankruptcy, taken possession of his own goods then in the possession of the bankrupt, the subsequent order of the court vests them in the assignees from the date of the act of bankruptcy, so as to deprive the real owner of them? 2nd, Whether the order of the court is not bad on the face of it? and 3rd, Whether the plea of "Not possessed" has been properly pleaded, or is sufficient to raise the points to be determined? The plaintiff took possession of his own goods, which at the time of the bankruptcy were in the possession of the bankrupt. No order at that time was made; clearly therefore the plaintiff, and he alone, could take possession at that time; the assignees were not then, at all events, entitled to do so: can the defendants, by any subsequent order or course of proceeding, say that the plaintiff was "not possessed?" They can only do so by the fiction of law that, after an order of the Court of Bankruptcy, they are supposed to be entitled, under certain circumstances, to goods belonging to the bankrupt from the date of his bankruptcy. [Pollock, B.—It is not by fiction of law, it is the words of the Act of Parliament.] The question turns principally upon the 125th section of the recent Bankrupt Act; but the plaintiff contends there is nothing even in the spirit of that Act to take away his goods, although in the possession of another at the time of his bankruptcy, to pay that other's debts. The plaintiff was the true owner; and who but he is entitled before the bankruptcy and order made? Not the assignees certainly, for an order never may be made. Can it then be said that upon an order being made, the assignees become entitled from the date of the act of bankruptcy, so as to deprive the true owner of his property to distribute it to pay the bankrupt's debts? It would be a case of very great oppression if it were so. He referred to Lyon v. Weldon, 2 Bing. 334; Fawcett v. Fearn, cited therein; Biggins v. Adam, 8 T. & J.; Perry v. Skinner, 2 M. & W. 471; Rogers v. ——, 7 Ir. Law Rep. 482; and Ventr. 358. It was also contended that the order of the court was bad on its face for informality, as it claimed that the plaintiff was the true owner.

Pollock, C. B.—We adhere to what was said before in this case, when it was before the court upon a previous occasion; it was then a written judgment, and much considered before it was given. The argument to-day on behalf of the plaintiff at first made some impression upon me, but it has not induced me to alter the opinion at which I before arrived, and still think correct. It appears to me the order in question is perfectly good, and indeed the objection taken to it was purely technical. As to the relation from the time when the order was made back to the date of the act of bankruptcy, I think the court was perfectly correct in the opinion expressed in this case on the former occasion. The learned Chief Baron here read the judgment as delivered in that case, as also the 125th and 141st sections of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106.] The effect of it therefore is that the court has the power to make the order in respect of goods in the possession of the bankrupt at the time he became bankrupt. I think therefore the better course is to adhere to the judgment, which I think is quite correct, given in this court in this case not long since, and to hold that, the goods in question being in the possession of the bankrupt at the time he became bankrupt, by the consent and permission of the true owner thereof, whereof the bankrupt was reputed owner, and that the court had power to order the same to be sold and disposed of for the benefit of the creditors under the bankruptcy. Having made such an order, it related to the date of the act of bankruptcy. The only other point is as to the pleas of not guilty, and not possessed. I think these pleas are sufficient to determine the question raised; indeed it would be difficult to see how there could be any other plea available. The rule therefore must be discharged.

Parke, B.—I am of the same opinion. There are three points raised in the case to be considered. I expressed my opinion on the point as to the relation from an order of the court for a sale to the date of the act of bankruptcy committed, on the former occasion when this case came before us. (The learned Baron here read his judgment in reference to that part of the case.) That particular point it was not then essential to determine, because it was not then raised, and no such order by the Court of Bankruptcy had at that time been made; but subsequently the order was made, and now the points have arisen, and the opinion I expressed on the former occasion, in reference to it is, I still think, right. The 21 Jac. 1, c. 19, s. 11, is the same [illegible] 12 Vict. c. 106, s. 125, except that the [illegible] court," are substituted for the word "commissioners." No act by the reputed owner, subsequent to and with knowledge of the act of bankruptcy, could affect the order of the court, or of its having its full operation and effect from the date of the act of bankruptcy. There must be the same decision here as there was in the cases under the statute of 21 Jac. 1, where the commissioners made the order. There is no protection given by any of the other sections in the late Bankrupt Act, and the assignees became, therefore, entitled to claim the goods by virtue of the order from the date of the act of bankruptcy; the terms of the 141st and 125th sections are to be construed in precisely the same way as they were under the statute of James. Then the criticisms which were made upon the order are invalid: the order is effectual to pass the property; and that is sufficient. And 3rd, As to the pleas, the points raised are, I think, all available under "Not possessed."

Alderson, B.—The first and last points made are virtually the same; I think there was a relation in this case from the date of the order to the time of the act of bankruptcy. The court had the power, under the 125th section, to take from the bankrupt any goods or chattels, whereof he was reputed owner, that were in his possession, with the consent and permission of the true owner, at the time he became bankrupt. That power has been exercised by the court making the necessary order; the same power exists here as there did under the statute of James; and the order must have the same relation now under the new statute as it did under that of James. The order is, I also think, in itself valid.

(Before Mr. Justice Erle.)

Reg. v. Smith.

Municipal election—Voter on the burgess roll for two wards, voting in each—Voting after the legal hour for closing the poll.

Cowling moved for a rule calling upon Mr. Samuel Smith to show cause why a quo warranto information should not be filed against him for exercising the office of town councillor for the borough of Leeds.

The borough of Leeds is divided into several wards, two of which are respectively called "Middle Hill Ward" and "Kirkgate Ward," and at the election of councillors on the 1st Nov. last, Mr. Scholey (on whose behalf this application was made) and Mr. Samuel Smith were candidates for Kirkgate ward. At the termination of the election the presiding alderman and the two assessors declared Mr. Samuel Smith to have been duly elected; the votes being, for Smith, 195, and for Scholey, 194. It was now alleged that the legal majority was in favour of Mr. Scholey, inasmuch as one of the voters who voted for Mr. Smith, being on the burgess list for both Middle Hill and Kirkgate wards, had previously voted in Middle Hill ward, contrary, as it was argued, to the provisions of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 44, which enacts that "if any burgess shall be rated in respect of distinct premises in two or more wards, then he shall be entitled to be enrolled and to vote in such one of the said wards as he shall select, but not in more than one;" and also that a vote was received for Mr. Smith after four o'clock, which is the hour fixed by sect. 32 of the above Act for the final close of the poll.

Municipal election—Election of a burgess who was auditor and assessor, to the office of town councillor.

Welsby moved for a rule calling upon Mr. John Richard Carr to show cause why a quo warranto information should not be filed against him for exercising the office of town councillor of the city of Oxford. At the election of town councillors for Oxford on the 1st Nov. last, Mr. Carr was elected a town councillor, and since then has acted in the office and still retains it. It was now objected that he is disqualified from holding such office, inasmuch as he was, in the previous March, elected an auditor and assessor, which offices he still retains, the 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 15, enacting "that no burgess shall be eligible to be elected a member of the council while holding the office of of assessor or elective auditor."

Practice—Notice under sect. 101 of the 15 and 16 Vict. c. 76, to proceed to trial—Course to be pursued by a plaintiff when he has a sufficient excuse for not proceeding to trial.

Hance moved for a rule calling on the defendant to show cause why he should not be restrained from taking any further proceedings to compel the plaintiffs to proceed to the trial of this cause, or to show cause why the time for proceeding to trial should not be extended, with a stay of proceedings. It appeared from the affidavits upon which this motion was made, that the action was brought to recover a debt, and that pending the writ the defendant called upon the plaintiffs, admitted the debt, and offered terms of settlement, which however were declined; the action thereupon proceeded, and the defendant pleaded "never indebted, except as to 1*l.* 4*s.*" Subsequently he obtained a commission in the army, and is now out of the country; but his mother agreed to pay the amount by instalments, which are accordingly in the course of payment. The plaintiffs for these reasons not having proceeded to trial, the defendant's attorney served the plaintiffs with a notice under sect. 101 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76 (the Common Law Procedure Act), to bring the issue on to be tried. It was now contended that the notice mentioned in sect. 101 being merely a substitution for the old proceeding of a motion for judgment as in case of a nonsuit, which by sect. 100 is wholly abolished, the plaintiffs might avail themselves of the same defence upon the new proceeding as they would have had under the old; and that as the excuse now offered would have been sufficient under the old practice to have discharged the rule, it may be used upon the present occasion in the shape of the motion now submitted to the court. Two days' notice had been given of the present motion.

Trader debtor—Debts in schedule contracted in trade. An insolvent owing debts contracted whilst in trade, must petition as a trader.

This insolvent was opposed by Macrae, who submitted, as a preliminary objection, that his client's debt was contracted whilst the insolvent was in trade, and as his debts exceeded 300*l.*, his petition must be dismissed. The insolvent had been a farmer and extensive hop grower, and had not only consigned his own hops to the opposing creditors for sale, but had instructed them, as his factor, to buy and sell other hops on his account. He had also, in 1845, been partner with another person as a coal merchant. The opposing creditor's debt begun in 1844.

Fraud—Breach of Trust—Embezzlement—Opposition—Condonation.

Held that a creditor who has taken a warrant of attorney or other security against the debtor's person or property, in respect of a debt improperly contracted, is not thereby precluded from opposing the debtor's discharge, upon his application under the Act to get rid of such security and the debt for which it was given.

This insolvent came up to-day for his hearing, and was opposed by Cooke for Barron and Stevens, West India merchants. The insolvent entered the service of the firm in Oct. 1851 as clerk and book-keeper; and in the following February the manager of the business had reasons to suspect the accuracy of the insolvent's accounts, and, upon examination, discovered a deficiency of 165*l.*, caused by the insolvent's tampering with the petty cash accounts. The insolvent, upon being taxed, after some hesitation admitted his offence, and begged for permission to repay the amount, to insure which he gave a policy of insurance upon his life, a warrant of attorney and an assignment of his furniture; and the manager, being aware that the only character which he could truly give would effectually debar the insolvent from obtaining another situation, kindly retained him in the office, taking, however, the precaution of removing from his control the petty cash book with which he had heretofore so successfully tampered. In October following, another and a larger defalcation was discovered, amounting to 394*l.* which had arisen in this way. It was the custom of the house that manufacturers or warehousemen who supplied goods when their accounts became due delivered a statement of account, upon which it was the insolvent's duty to fill up a crossed check for the amount for the managers signature. To carry out his fraud, the insolvent had first falsified the account by creating a larger sum, and then drew the check for a corresponding amount, which, being compared with the creditor's statement of account, was signed by the manager and paid to the creditor. The insolvent, however, a day or two afterwards calling upon the latter and pointing out the overpayment which had been made, received the balance, which he appropriated to his own uses. When the second discovery was made, the insolvent told the creditors they could not prosecute him, because they had condoned a former defalcation. After discussion it was arranged that as the present defalcation had been entirely paid off, by the insolvent's relations in fact, an assignment of the furniture should be again given, and a warrant of attorney. The furniture had produced 118*l.* and the insolvent was now in execution for the balance.

Sargood said: In this case upon the discovery of the defalcation the creditor, instead of prosecuting, accepted the insolvent's undertaking to repay in the shape of a warrant of attorney for the whole amount, and an assignment of his furniture which had since been sold and realised 118*l.* out of 394*l.* The offence originally was a highly criminal one, amounting to nothing less than embezzlement or sheer robbery, for which the creditor might have indicted the insolvent criminally: but having preferred, instead of so doing, converting the transaction into a civil debt by accepting a security, under which he had received part payment on account, he could not be allowed now to revert to the original transaction, and clothe that which he had made a civil debt with the attributes and character of a criminal offence.

Cooke contended, first, that there had been a gross breach of trust clearly established, the insolvent having misappropriated the money intended by the firm for specific purposes; and, secondly, if the court had any doubt upon the first point, that at all events the debt was one most fraudulently contracted, and meriting the fullest reprobation of the court. The learned counsel, after some further remarks, said that the doctrine of condonation would be urged, no doubt. He knew that it had been held that where parties had taken securities after the fraud was discovered, they had condoned the offence, but that doctrine was carried sometimes to an extent which was prejudicial to the interests of society.

Mr. Commissioner LAW said the learned counsel has done all that lay in his power upon the subject of what is sometimes called condonation. That is a subject on which I have never been able to agree with the doctrine I have heard sometimes spoken of as held by others. I think, and it is likely I shall continue to think, that the doctrine that a creditor, because he has taken a warrant of attorney, is therefore to be excluded from all opposition to the discharge of a party, or all inquiry into the mode in which a debt was contracted, is a doctrine not warranted by common justice or common sense. There might be cases in which that doctrine might be tenable. If it could be said that the act of arresting him was contrary to good faith, then I would not allow him to suffer from the proof of circumstances such as are in this case. If, instead of taking his own warrant of attorney, which is but giving a man a judgment without the trouble or expense of bringing an action, they had taken the warrant of attorney of any relation, and on that had dropped all intention of proceeding against this man, and that then we saw them turn round and put him into prison, it would have been contrary to good faith, and might have been urged—not as condonation, for I don't like the word; but I should have said that if they professed to have been satisfied with the security of this kind of person, they could not afterwards turn round and urge their original complaint: or if they had undertaken that the warrant of attorney was to be without one of its ordinary consequences, that is, that it was to be exempt from the consequences of proceedings against the person who gave it, it would be against good faith that they should arrest that person; but there is no such thing here. Here all is, that he gave up his furniture to pay a part of the debt, and gave a warrant of attorney to pay the rest, which saved them the trouble of going through an action, and gave them a right to have execution both against person and property. To give an execution against the person, if a man was not allowed to oppose his debtor in this court, would be an idle proceeding. They had a right to proceed against him, and he had a right to petition the court. I find no bad faith in this case, and therefore in my mind it is just the same as if the arrest was not founded upon a warrant of attorney. It is not imputed that there has been any bad faith in arresting him; and if not, then all the rest follows. They have the right to arrest him; he has the right to petition, and they as creditors have a right to oppose. After commenting upon the facts of the case, the learned Commissioner said it was a melancholy case, and that the insolvent had been guilty both of a breach of trust and of contracting a debt most fraudulently, for which the judgment of the court would be that he was entitled to the benefit of the Act, and to be discharged at the expiration of fifteen months from the date of the vesting order, at the suit of Messrs. Barron and Stevens.

NOTE.—This case has been carefully reported, in consequence of the valuable remarks of the learned and experienced Commissioner upon what is commonly called the "Doctrine of Condonation," namely, that the acceptance of a security which alters the nature and character of the debt determines the right of the injured creditor to oppose, upon the insolvency of his fraudulent debtor, in respect of the fraud, embezzlement, or breach of trust by which the debt was originally contracted. No doubt there are circumstances (as the learned Commissioner observes) involving a breach of faith by the creditor, which, when they occur, should disqualify him from opposing; because the debtor's inability to meet his engagements might be brought about entirely by his own conduct; but, upon the other hand (as the same learned authority remarks), the mere acceptance of a security against the person or property of the debtor, unaccompanied by any breach of faith on his part, ought not in common justice to disqualify a creditor from opposing. This doctrine of "condonatio" has in some courts obtained to a great extent; and in very many cases where it has been permitted to apply it has been nothing but hypocrisy and falsehood on the part of the insolvent, added to his original fraud. In some other cases there has not been the least pretence for the application of the doctrine. For instance, a gentleman employed a broker to sell some stock, which was done, but the broker applied the proceeds to his own use. His principal, finding this out taxed his broker with the breach of trust, who admitted it, but promised faithfully to repay the money at a certain time fixed. Believing that the broker would keep his promise, he employed him in the interval to effect one or two transfers of stock; and because he had done this, although he was never repaid one farthing of the debt which had been contracted with him by breach of trust, Mr. Commissioner Phillips was persuaded by counsel, that this amounted to a condonation, which was a doctrine in universal acceptance in those courts. It is true that this was not very long after his appointment; but it is also true that there is still too much of this nonsense, by which the effective clauses of the statute against fraud are very much frittered away.

Wednesday, Dec. 15.

(Before Lord ST. LEONARDS, L.C. and the LORDS JUSTICES.)

SHEFFIELD v. The Earl of COVENTRY.

Construction—Appointment.

Bequest to trustees, upon trust, to purchase the sum of 20,000l. Four per cent. Bank Annuities, and to pay the dividends to his son J. for life, with a proviso that, in case his son should at any time thereafter marry with the consent of his said trustees, then that that sum, subject to the life-interest of the son in the dividends thereof, should be settled for the benefit of any woman with whom he should intermarry, and the issue of such marriage, in such manner as should be agreed upon with the concurrence of such trustees, and subject to the trusts to be declared of and concerning the said Bank Annuities in any settlement to be made on the marriage of his son, or, in case none should be declared, then that the said Bank Annuities should go unto such person or persons, for such uses, &c. and in such manner as the son should by his last will direct and appoint: and in case his son should die unmarried, then that the trustees should stand possessed of and interested in the sum of 10,000l. Four per cent. Bank Annuities, part of the said sum of 20,000l. like Annuities, in trust for all his children then born, or thereafter to be born, other than and except, &c. who should be living at the time of the decease of his son, and the issue of any of his children who should happen to die in his lifetime leaving issue, to be divided between or amongst them, &c.; and as to the residue of his personal estate, after making such appropriation thereout as was thereinbefore directed, upon trust for the payment of certain annuities, and after the decease of the said annuitants of and in the fund so to be appropriated to answer and satisfy the same, in trust for his the testator's children, except, &c. and the issue of such children, in such shares, &c. as he had thereinbefore directed with respect to the share or shares of such children and their issue of and in the said sum of 10,000l. Four per cent. Bank Annuities thereinbefore directed to be transferred to them from and after the decease of his said son J. J. by his will, appointed 10,000l.:

Held, reversing the decision of the Master of the Rolls, that the appointment was valid.

This was an appeal from an order of the Master of the Rolls.

The question arose as to the construction of the will of the late Earl of Coventry. His lordship by his will dated the 8th July, 1818, gave and bequeathed the general residue of his personal estate and effects to Sir Robert Sheffield and Henry Pitcher Boyce, their executors, &c. upon trust, among other things, to appropriate and set apart so much thereof as would be sufficient to purchase the sum of 20,000*l.* Four per cent. Bank Annuities, and to stand and be possessed of and interested in the same when so purchased, and to receive the dividends, interest, and annual produce thereof, and pay, apply, and dispose of the same during the life of his son John Coventry, to such person or persons and for such intents and purposes, and in such manner as his said son should from time to time by any draft, note, order, or writing signed by him (but not by way of anticipation) direct and appoint; and in default of or subject to any such direction or appointment, pay such interest, dividends, and annual produce into the proper hands of his said son, for his sole use and benefit during his lifetime, subject to the proviso next thereinafter contained (being a proviso against alienation of the provision thereby intended to be made for his said son, or any part thereof). And the said testator further declared his will as follows: "Provided also and my will is, that in case my said son shall at any time hereafter marry, with the consent of my said trustees, or the trustee for the time being of this my will, then I direct that the said last mentioned sum of 20,000*l.* Four per cent. Bank Annuities (subject nevertheless to the life interest of my said son of and in the dividends, interest, and yearly proceeds thereof,) shall be settled for the benefit of any woman with whom my said son shall or may intermarry, and the issue of such marriage, in such manner as shall be agreed upon, with the concurrence of my said trustees or trustee for the time being, and subject to the trusts to be declared of and concerning the said Bank Annuities, in any settlement to be made on the marriage of my said son, or in case none shall be declared, then I direct that the same Bank Annuities shall go unto such person or persons for such uses, estates, and interest, and in such manner in all respects as my said son shall by his last will and testament, or any codicil or codicils thereto, to be signed and published by him in the presence of and attested by two witnesses, direct or appoint, and be paid, assigned, or transferred accordingly: provided also, and my will is, that in case my said son shall die unmarried, then I direct that the trustees or trustee for the time being of this my will do and shall stand possessed of and interested in the sum of 10,000*l.*, Four per cent. Bank Annuities, part of the said sum of 20,000*l.*, like annuities, in trust for all my children now born or hereafter to be born, other than and except my son, Lord Deerhurst, who shall be living at the time of the decease of my said son John, and the issue of any of my children who shall happen to die in his lifetime leaving issue, to be divided between or amongst them in equal proportions, share and share alike, if more than one, save only and except that the issue of any deceased child shall take between them such part or share thereof only as his, her, or their father or mother, if living, would have taken." And as to, for, and concerning the surplus of the residue of his said personal estate, after making such appropriations thereout as were thereinbefore directed, the said testator directed that the trustees or trustee for the time being of his will should stand and be possessed of and interested in the same, upon trust that they, or the survivor of them, his executors, administrators, or assigns, should appropriate and set apart so much of such last-mentioned surplus as would be sufficient to create a fund for the payment of certain annuities thereinbefore given to his wife Lady Coventry, and his sister Lady Ann Margaret Wright; and, after making the several appropriations aforesaid, upon further trust that his said trustees should stand possessed of and interested in such surplus, and also from and after the decease of both or either of the said annuitants of and in the fund so to be appropriated, to answer and satisfy the same, in trust for his the testator's children (except his son Lord Deerhurst and his said son John), and the issue of such children, in such shares and proportions, and to vest and become transmissible at such ages or times, and to be subject to such benefit of accruer and survivorship, as he had thereinbefore directed with respect to the share or shares of such children and their issue of and in the said sum of 10,000*l.*, Four per cent. Bank Annuities, thereinbefore directed to be transferred to them from and after the decease of his said son John. The testator died in March 1831, and pursuant to a decree the sum of 20,000*l.* was paid into court, and the dividends thereof paid to John Coventry during his life. He died in May 1852 without having been married, but having first made his will bearing date 28th Oct. 1841, whereby, after reciting that he was entitled under the will of his late father to the sum of 20,000*l.*, then Three-and-a-half per cents., with a power of disposing of the same by will, but subject to a proviso that in case of his dying unmarried, 10,000*l.* part thereof should be paid to his brothers and sisters equally, he gave and appointed the sum of 4,000*l.*, part of the portion of the said stock over which he had power, to his brother, the Honourable William James Coventry, for his own use and benefit, without prejudice to his interest in the remaining portion of the said stock: and he gave and appointed all the residue and remainder of the said portion of Stock unto his brother, Thomas Henry Coventry, for his own use and benefit.

In July 1852 the surviving executors and trustees of the will of the late Earl of Coventry, and the said Thos. Henry Coventry, and John James Coventry, preferred their petition to the Master of the Rolls, praying that the said sums of 4,000*l.* and 6,000*l.*, part of the 20,000*l.*, might be transferred and paid to the two latter petitioners, and that the remaining 10,000*l.* might be transferred and paid to such of the children of the late Earl as were living at the death of John Coventry.

His Honour, on the hearing of such petition, held that the marriage of John was a condition precedent, and that under the circumstances he had no power of appointment under the will of the late Earl over any part of the 20,000*l.*, and ordered the whole of that sum to be paid to such of the children of the Earl as were living at his son John's death.

From that order the petitioners now appealed.

Bethell, Bolt, R. Palmer, Elmsley, Follett, Osborne, and Pemberton appeared for the several parties.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In this case the testator intended the 20,000*l.* to be a portion for his younger son John, with certain checks and provisions in consequence, as one may suppose, of his want of confidence in that person, because, although he gives him a life interest, he carefully provides that he shall not have a power to anticipate. With the same view he makes a provision with regard to his marriage, and, having made no absolute gift of the property after his death, he makes a provision in case he marries with consent. Now by the first part of the proviso (which his Lordship read) there is nothing further provided for than a marriage with consent, and a direction that in that event the property should be settled. It was to be settled in such a manner as might be agreed on with the concurrence of the trustees. Then comes a sentence which I think may be read in a great measure as an independent sentence,—as beginning a new sentence: "And subject to the trust to be declared of and concerning the said Bank Annuities in any settlement to be made on the marriage of my said son, or in case none shall be declared, then I direct that the same Bank Annuities shall go unto such person or persons for such uses, estates, and interests, in such manner in all respects as my said son shall by his last will appoint." Therefore it is, if you marry with the consent of my trustees, a certain settlement shall be executed; and subject to the trusts to be declared by such settlement, or in case none shall be declared you shall appoint it by your will: that would effect every intention which this testator had. He intended to put such a bridle upon his son as to prevent his anticipating; that was his intention. The testator did not intend that any woman whom his son might marry should enjoy the property, unless the trustees concurred; but he meant not only that his son's issue should take, but that his son's power of disposition, subject to the issue taking, should remain. I agree, as was argued, that the context would meet the view of the appellants; that, taking the context, if it would admit of it, you need not introduce any particular words, because you might take it as it stands; but if you are not to take the entire context, you must introduce words in every place to explain the testator's meaning. For instance, before the words "or in case none shall be declared," you have to introduce the words "or upon such marriage;" and when you come to the gift over, "or having been married without leaving issue," you must there again introduce the words "or having married with such consent as aforesaid, and without leaving issue,"—this is without leaving issue entitled under the settlement; for the case provided for would not come in regularly after the limitation in the supposed settlement; for it is an absolute disposition in case he dies, having married (to say nothing of consent) without leaving issue, which means at his death, whereas the settlement would provide for issue which had died in his lifetime. There is therefore nothing that brings it into a regular course of settlement. You must take the context in order to get at the intention, and if you do take the context, I can see no difficulty. If my son marries with my consent, let there be a settlement, such as the trustees shall agree upon; and subject to the trusts, whatever they might be, created by the settlement, still my son shall have power of appointment by will. But the fund was not only subject to those trusts, "but subject to the trusts to be declared of and concerning the Bank Annuities in any settlement to be made on the marriage of my son." If it had stopped there, that would have been a gift over in any event, in case he did not marry, or in case he died without a settlement. In either case he would have had a power of appointment by will. This testator intended to put him on the footing of a favourite younger son; he was intended to take the property, and so he would have taken it without violence to the will, provided he married with consent. There was no provision made for a woman whom he married without consent, or for the issue of such a marriage. The testator intended to provide by his own will for his son's wife and children if he married without consent; but if he married with consent, that that trust should fail, or become subject to the son's disposition; and by taking that view I conceive no violence is done to the will. But the words "in case none shall be declared" render it difficult to say that there was an absolute trust imposed in the first part; because, although those words would seem to relate to a settlement in case of marriage with consent, yet, if you find a positive disposition that if no trust be declared the man shall have power of disposing of it by will, it seems to remove that imperative direction, and to substitute the man's own will in place of that direction; therefore I am by no means prepared to say that this will did make it imperative on the testator's son to make any settlement which should be agreed on with the concurrence of the trustees. They might have consented to the marriage, and might not have agreed to a settlement. The testator says, "In case none shall be declared." "None," there, refers to trusts; for he first of all says, that "subject to the trusts to be declared concerning the Bank Annuities in any settlement to be made on the marriage of my son," then, though he married with consent, he was to have the power of appointment. It has been asked by one of the Lords Justices: "What would have been the case if this gentleman had married without consent, and left issue?" The answer necessarily was, to maintain the argument, that that issue would not have been entitled, that the son would have had no power of disposition, and that the property would have gone over. Was that the testator's intention? He tells you he means to provide for his son John far above all others; and could he therefore intend to cut him down to a life interest, and to leave his family penniless? It is perfectly clear that he had no such intention; but he did intend, in the different cases that might arise, to retain some power over this property. Supposing the words "in case none shall be declared" to be an independent sentence, and read, "If my son marries with the leave of the trustees, then there shall be a settlement such as the trustees approve of, and subject to those trusts," that is, "the trusts of any settlement" (there may be none), "but subject to those trusts" (if there be any), "or if none shall be declared"—would not that apply as well to the case of a defect in, or a want of, a declaration of trust in a settlement; as to that of there being no settlement, and therefore of course no declaration of trust? In either case the property is to go as he shall appoint by will. Now is that construction assisted, or is it excluded, by the proviso that follows?—"Provided also, and my will is, that in case my said son shall die unmarried, or, having been married, without leaving issue, and without having exercised the power of appointment I have hereby given to him," then I leave the trustees possessed of half the sum I have given to him. If you read the one as an independent and the other as a disjunctive part—no doubt the one is not altogether unconnected with the other—it is very difficult to explain the sentence; for as marriage generally has not been provided for, but only "marriage with consent," and he might marry without consent, it is very difficult to say what the meaning of "without having been married" is; but if we are to put that construction upon the will which has been contended for, and take every part of it as bearing on every specific disposition, where is the difficulty? A case of this nature was decided in the House of Lords yesterday. After limitations to a daughter for life, and to her first and after sons in tail, came words to this effect, "And in case my daughter shall depart this life without issue male living at her death, or no such issue male as shall be entitled under this my will, then in either of those cases I give the estates to my granddaughters living at my daughter's death." It had been decided by the Court of Ex., the Lord Justice Cranworth having delivered the judgment of the court, that there the whole sentence applied to the disjunctive part or second alternative. It was decided by the Court of Q. B. that you could not import those words; they read the second clause as an independent clause, and decided that the gift over took effect. The House of Lords, under my advice, decided that that could not be supported, and came to an opinion in favour of the construction of the Court of Ex. They considered the whole clause was to be taken with the context—both events were governed by all the words in the first clause, and therefore it really was the same as if the words "or such issue male not entitled under this my will" had been specified in the first part, repeating the clause, "in case my said daughter shall die without issue male living at her death, or in case my said daughter shall happen to die without such issue as shall be entitled at her death, then in either of those cases I give over." That construction would enable this court without any difficulty—not as a regular rule of construction, not as a construction to be adopted in every will, but upon the context of this will—to read this clause in this way: "Provided also, and my will is, that in case my son shall be unmarried, or having married without leaving issue" (and that clause applies to both alternatives), "and without having exercised the power of appointment I have hereby given to him, I give 10,000*l.* over." That construction makes this a sensible will, and that shows that he meant in the previous part to give him the power of appointment. If he had given him the power of appointment then this construction is perfectly sensible and entirely accords with the first part, for then the first part is a gift over of a power to the son at all events by his will; the one exactly harmonises with the other—in case my son dies unmarried, or having married without leaving issue, and does not exercise his power (the power I have shown arising in each case), then this 10,000*l.* shall go over. I do not understand the ground on which this gentleman executed his power only as to 10,000*l.*; but I suppose a doubt had been raised on the first part of the will; it was considered, I suppose, that as 10,000*l.* only was given over, a gift by implication arose of no more than that sum. I can find nothing in the will to justify that construction. The conclusion to which I have come is a very satisfactory conclusion to my own mind, although I say it with the greatest deference to the learned judge below; but I have come to that conclusion with the concurrence of my Lords Justices, and in doing so I feel we do execute the manifest intention on the face of the will of this testator. The order of the Master of the Rolls must be reversed; and let it be declared that in the events which have happened John had a sufficient power to dispose of the property, and that it has been well disposed of by his will.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

COURT OF APPEAL.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

March 24 and April 2.

RICHARDSON v. EYTON.

Compromise of suit—Specific performance, decree to carry into effect—Construction of compromise—Abstract of title—Mistake.

A., who was tenant for life of coal mines under a will with remainder to his children, filed a bill in which he set out his title, and the will under which he took, alleging however by a clerical error that he was tenant in tail, although in the interrogatory founded on that statement he asked whether he was tenant for life. The bill, which was filed against the lessees of a conterminous mine, prayed an account of coals raised by them, and payment to him of the value thereof, and for an injunction to restrain them from getting any coals, and that the plaintiff might have liberty to view the workings. An interim order was obtained and from time to time continued, whereupon a compromise was entered into between the solicitors of the parties, by which the defendants were to pay to the plaintiff 400l. for the full value of the coals to be raised from the mine, with costs of suit to be taxed in Michaelmas Term then next as between solicitor and client, and if reasonable security were given to the satisfaction of the plaintiff, six months time from the date thereof for payment of the 400l. was to be given. First a petition to which an objection was taken and allowed, and then a claim, was filed for the purpose of enforcing the agreement for a compromise:

Held, overruling the decision of the court below, that as the statement in the bill that the plaintiff was tenant for life was clearly a clerical error, and could not, as the plaintiff's title was stated on the bill, have misled the defendants, the court was not precluded from decreeing specific performance on the ground that the agreement for a compromise was entered into by mistake or under an erroneous impression.

Held also, that the defendants were not entitled under the agreement to have an abstract of the plaintiff's title.

Held also, that a claim was properly filed to enforce specific performance of the agreement, and that a petition in the original suit was not a proper mode of obtaining that object.

The first of these suits was a bill filed by Ralph Richardson, who was tenant for life of certain coal mines under a field called Coltia Nicholas, near Mold, in Flintshire, against John Prys Eyton, Edward Eyton, who were the lessees of some adjoining mines, against Sir William Trelawney, whom the bill charged that the defendants pretended that he had an interest in the minerals raised under Coltia Nicholas, and against Hugh Roberts, a trustee, and Ralph Richardson, the eldest son of the plaintiff, and against his other children, Mary, Louisa, Helena, and John Billingley Richardson. The bill prayed an account of the coals raised by or by the order of John Prys Eyton, Edward Eyton, and James Eyton, or either of them, from under the field called Coltia Nicholas, and that it might be declared that the petitioner was entitled to the full value of all coals so raised, and that John Prys Eyton, Edward Eyton, and James Eyton, might be decreed to be liable for such coals, and be ordered to pay what should be ascertained to be the full and utmost value thereof, as well as to make good all damage done by them or either of them, or their or either of their agents, to the coal and minerals under the field; and that the same defendants might be restrained by injunction from continuing their works under the field, and from getting or raising any coals therefrom, and that the plaintiff and his agents might be at liberty to view and inspect the workings and coals under Coltia Nicholas. The bill, after showing the title of the testator, Mr. Richardson, to eleven-twelfths of the mine under Coitia Nicholas, set forth his will, by which he gave all his real and personal estate to his wife and Hugh Roberts, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, upon trust to receive the rents, issues, and profits, and place the same at interest, in order that the same might accumulate, and to stand possessed of all such accumulated property in trust for his nephew, the plaintiff Ralph Richardson, until he should attain the age of twenty-one years, and then upon trust to pay and apply the interest, dividends, and proceeds of such accumulated property in such manner as thereinafter particularly mentioned; and he gave all his real estate whatsoever and wheresoever to the use and behoof of the plaintiff for his natural life, accountable nevertheless for waste, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, and, after the decease of the plaintiff Ralph Richardson, to the use of the first and other sons of his body successively in tail male, and with a charge for portions of younger children. And the said testator thereby authorised and empowered his trustees to purchase the remaining undivided twelfth part or share of and in the estate. The bill then stated that the plaintiff had long since attained his majority, and had issue, the defendants, Ralph, Mary, Louisa, Helena, and John Billingley, and no others; that the hereditaments, eleven-twelfths whereof were bought by the testator, and the remaining one-twelfth whereof was purchased by the trustees after his decease, consisted of the mines and minerals under Coitia Nicholas, but that the testator had no interest in the surface of the lands under which the mines and minerals were; that the property in the mines and minerals had always devolved and passed consistently with the title thereinbefore set forth; and that the plaintiff was and continued to be the tenant in tail of all the mines and minerals under the piece or parcel of land called Coitia Nicholas. [It must here be remarked that the interrogatory part of the bill corresponding with and founded upon this statement asked whether the plaintiff was not "tenant for life."] The bill then stated that the defendants, the Messrs. Eyton, were lessees of lands adjoining to the close called Coitia Nicholas, and had caused a pit to be sunk called the Mill Pit, in the land so leased; that, after some negotiation, the plaintiff's agent, on the 14th Sept. 1849, wrote and sent a letter to one of the defendants, stating that the plaintiff was willing to dispose of certain seams of coal below the Red Bar, in the field called Coitia Nicholas, for sums amounting to 336*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, but so that the sale of these coals should not prejudice the working of such other beds as might be in the ground, but that he strictly forbade any working going on in the ground while this settlement was pending. The bill also stated that some time in Aug. or Sept. 1849, a clerk of one of the defendants called at the office of the plaintiff's solicitor, and said the defendants would like to purchase the minerals under Coitia Nicholas, and asked to see the plaintiff's title, to which the plaintiff's solicitor replied that he had received no instructions in the matter, but that, if the plaintiff agreed to sell, the defendants would be furnished with an abstract, in the usual manner; that some time in Oct. 1849, one of the defendants told the plaintiff's solicitor that the only reason why they had not come to some arrangement was because he understood that Sir William Lewis Salisbury Trelawney's solicitors considered that the minerals belonged to Sir William; and that it was then proposed that the defendants should pay the gross value of the minerals, when the amount should be ascertained, into some bank, in the joint names of the solicitors of Sir W. Trelawney and of the plaintiff, who could afterwards compare the titles of their respective clients, and settle the ownership amicably. And the bill amongst other things charged that, unless the relief thereby prayed was granted, irreparable mischief would happen to the plaintiff and those interested in the matters aforesaid. All the defendants appeared to the bill, but no answer had been put in. After an interim order had been obtained, and had been from time to time continued, Mr. Williams, the solicitor of the defendants, met the solicitor of the plaintiff at Mold, and the following agreement was signed by them.

"In Chancery.—Richardson and others v. Eyton and others.—It is agreed that this suit be compromised on the following terms. The defendants, Messrs. Eyton, to pay the plaintiff Richardson 400*l.* which he, the plaintiff, agrees to accept for the full value of all coals to be raised below the Red Bar in Coitia Nicholas, or Coitia Tan-y-ty, or by what other name the close may be called, with costs of suit, to be taxed next Michaelmas Term, as between solicitor and client. The plaintiff to execute a release if required. If reasonable security be given, to the satisfaction of the plaintiff, six months' time from the date hereof for the payment of 400*l.* and costs will be given.

John Williams, solicitor for the defendants Eyton.
R. T. Roberts, solicitor for the plaintiff.
Mold, 11th Oct. 1850."

In Nov. 1850 the plaintiff presented a petition, praying that it might be referred to the Taxing Master to tax the petitioner's costs of the suit, including the costs of that application, and incidental thereto, as between solicitor and client; and that the defendants, John Prys Eyton, Edward Eyton, and James Eyton, might, after the Master should have certified the amount thereof, be ordered to pay the same, and also the sum of 400*l.* to the petitioner.

In Dec. 1850, when the petition came on to be heard, counsel for the Messrs. Eyton took the objection that the court could not make any order on petition for the specific performance of the agreement. The court thereupon ordered that the petition should stand over, with liberty for the plaintiff to take such proceedings, by claim or otherwise, as he might be advised. The plaintiff therefore filed on the 20th Dec. 1850, a special claim, being the second of the above suits, against the Messrs. Eyton, and thereby, after setting forth the agreement for a compromise, claimed that the petition might come on to be heard, together with the claim, and that it might be referred to the Taxing Master to tax the petitioner's costs of the suit, as between solicitor and client; and that the defendants might be ordered to pay the same, and also the sum of 400*l.*, to the plaintiff, and also the costs of the claim, the plaintiff thereby offering to execute a release when required so to do. Affidavits were filed in support of the claim as to the facts above-mentioned. Affidavits also in opposition were filed, and in one of them Mr. Williams, the solicitor for the defendants, the Messrs. Eyton, deposed that he had considered and treated the agreement for a compromise as one which would carry out the original proposal of 1849, under which a title was to be deduced to the minerals. On the 18th Dec. 1851 the petition and claim came on to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Turner, whereupon his Honour dismissed the petition and the claim, but as against the defendants in the second mentioned cause without costs, his Honour being of opinion that the erroneous statement of the plaintiff's title in the bill and the affidavit of Mr. Williams showed that the agreement for compromise had been entered into under a mistake and misunderstanding, and that the court therefore, acting upon the principle long since established in such cases, could not decree a specific performance. From this decision the plaintiff now appealed.

Rolt and Giffard, for the appellant, contended, first, that the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, which proceeded upon an assumption that the compromise had been entered into under mistake and by a misunderstanding of the title of the plaintiff, was incorrect; for although the plaintiff in one part of his bill stated that he was tenant in tail, that was clearly a clerical error, and could not have misled the Messrs. Eyton or their legal adviser, as the corresponding part of the interrogatories, asked whether the plaintiff was not "tenant for life;" and the title of the plaintiff under the will of the testator, as set out in the bill, clearly showed that he was only tenant for life. With regard to the second question raised by the defendants, whether they were not entitled to an abstract of the defendant's title, either for the life of the plaintiff or in fee simple, though the defendants would not state to which of those two interests they were entitled, it was clear from the terms of the compromise that no abstract was to be furnished; that that part of the agreement by which it was stipulated that the 400*l.* was to be paid within six months, showed that the compromise was to be carried immediately into effect, without waiting for an abstract and the examination of the title by means of it, which might in fact take some years to do.

C. P. Cooper and W. H. Terrell, for the respondents, the Messrs. Eyton, contended that the statement of the plaintiff that he was tenant in tail had misled the defendants, for it was clear that if they only bought a life interest from him, if he died immediately, they would lose their 400*l.* and be subject to the vexation of another suit; that such a mistake was a good defence to a suit for specific performance: (Mason v. Armitage, 13 Ves. 25; Malins v. Freeman, 2 Keen, 34.) Secondly, that the agreement was of so indefinite and doubtful a character that the court could not properly make a decree upon it: (Price v. Griffiths, 1 De G. M. & G. 83.)

Giffard, in reply, contended that no weight ought to be attributed to the argument that there must have been a mistake in the agreement because, if the plaintiff was only tenant for life, they might immediately lose the 400*l.*; he might live for a considerable time; and the 400*l.* was intended rather as a remuneration for the coal which had already been got, than for the coal which they intended to get.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—The Vice-Chancellor disposed of the case upon the ground that the bill contained an allegation that the plaintiff was tenant in tail; and his Honour considered the defendants entitled to the benefit of the assumption that they were misled by this statement. That seems to have been a point to which the attention of the plaintiff's counsel had not been particularly directed, and which they say was not argued so fully as it would have been if they had considered it likely to affect the mind of the Judge. I am of opinion that if the matter had been fully, minutely, and clearly presented to the mind of the Vice-Chancellor, he would have thought as we do, that the precise and accurate statement of the plaintiff's title in other parts of the bill, shewing that Mr. Richardson was tenant for life only, enabled the defendants to correct the accidental and erroneous statement that the plaintiff was tenant in tail. The interrogating part of the bill, indeed, shows that the mistaken allegation in the statement was a mere clerical error. I do not, however, lay much or any stress upon the interrogatory, as the statements in other parts of the bill are sufficient to correct the mistake. We consider ourselves as hardly differing from the Vice-Chancellor, as we have had the advantage of having these other parts of the bill fully called to our attention. With regard to the rest of the case we have not the benefit of the Vice-Chancellor's opinion; because, viewing as he did the consequence, of the erroneous allegation in the bill, he did not address his mind to the other parts of the case. It appears that the plaintiff, stating himself to be tenant for life of coal under land in the surface of which he had no interest except a right to sink pits (if he had that right), filed a bill against owners of conterminous mines, complaining that the defendants had laterally and subterraneously taken his coal, and prayed for an account, an injunction, and liberty to inspect the defendants' workings. An interim order was made in the summer, and was afterwards extended till Michaelmas Term. Thus the matter stood in October, when the London solicitor for the defendants met the plaintiff's country solicitor at Mold, not far from the mines, the place of residence of the country solicitor, upon which occasion the agreement in question for a compromise was entered into. Now it is contended that this is a mere agreement to purchase for 400*l.* all coal raised or to be raised, either for the life of the plaintiff or in fee simple. The defendants decline stating which of the two interpretations they adopt, but say that, whichever ought to be adopted, they are entitled to the production of an abstract of the plaintiff's title. With this contention we do not agree. The defendants entered into the agreement with full knowledge of the plaintiff's title, which the pleadings disclosed. They knew that he was tenant for life, and claimed manifestly, as we think, to be no more. The meaning of the agreement, therefore, was, that he was to receive 400*l.* for all the coal raised already, and that if any more remained to be raised (which was very improbable) the defendants were to take it so far as the plaintiff could give it them; that so far the plaintiff was to have 400*l.* in full for all coal gotten, or to be gotten, for the time past and to come. The plaintiff was also to have, by the terms of the compromise, the costs of the suit taxed, as between solicitor and client, in the following Michaelmas Term, that is to say, within a month. It is, however, contended that all this was to be suspended till an abstract of title should be furnished, and the title investigated in the ordinary way. But the agreement contains a clause which throws light, if any were wanted, upon this part of the case, by providing that, if reasonable security shall be afforded to the plaintiff's satisfaction, six months' time for payment may be given. This seems inconsistent with the argument that everthing was to wait until a title shown, which might involve the lapse of years. The obvious meaning appears to be, that the agreement was to be immediately carried into effect, and that the defendants were to have what the plaintiff could give them and no more. That is our opinion, and we are glad to find that our views do not differ from those of the Vice-Chancellor upon the materials brought under his consideration. It is said, however, that, whatever may be the true construction of this agreement, it is competent for the defendant in a suit for specific performance to show that his belief or understanding of the terms of it was or might be different from that which the words of themselves import. If the defendants could satisfy us that this was the case, we might give effect to the argument; but a consideration of the evidence has not convinced us that there was any such mistaken belief or any such erroneous understanding. We both affirmatively believe the reverse to be the fact. There must be a decree for specific performance. The petition in the original cause should be brought on with this appeal. I think that the petition would not of itself have been sufficient, and that a separate suit was requisite to enable the court to give effect to the agreement.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—I will only add, with reference to one of the last remarks of my learned brother, that not only is the evidence not sufficient to show that Mr. Williams was misled, but it is sufficient to show that the defendants were not misled; for although the affidavits approach this subject, they do not allege such misapprehension on the part of the defendants.

April 2.—On this day the appeal was again spoken to, together with a petition in the first-mentioned cause, praying that one order might be made on the petition and the claim and motion, and that the order of the 18th Dec. 1851 might be discharged, in so far as it dismissed the petition as against the defendants other than and except Sir William Trelawney, and in so far as it dismissed the claim, the petitioners being ready and willing and thereby offering to act as the court might direct in respect of the costs of the plaintiff's trustee and his children, on the original cause being stayed or dismissed, as between the petitioners and the said last-named defendants; and that the costs of the said first-mentioned suit might be taxed as between solicitor and client; and that the costs of the second-mentioned suit might be taxed in the ordinary way, as between party and party; and that all such costs, and the sum of 400*l.* in the agreement mentioned, with interest thereon from the 4th Oct. 1850, at 5*l.* per cent. until the day of payment, might be duly paid to the petitioner, or as he should direct, by John Prys Eyton, Edward Eyton, and James Eyton, and that on such taxation and payment all proceedings in the first-mentioned suit might be finally stayed.

Upon the plaintiff undertaking to pay the costs of his trustee and of his children, the order was made as prayed, and it was thereby declared that it should operate as a release to the defendants, the Messrs. Eyton.

LOWES v. LOWES.

New Practice—Order to effect of usual supplemental decree—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

In an administration suit, on the death of the sole plaintiff, an order to the effect of the usual supplemental decree, under the 52nd section of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, was made on behalf of a person not a party to the suit, but found a creditor by the Master's report, he having served the parties with notice of the application, and they not having appeared.

Foster made an application in this case on behalf of Eleanor Kemp, a creditor of the testator in the cause, for leave to prosecute the suit, either by filing a supplemental bill, or that the court would make an order to the effect of the usual supplemental decree under the 52nd section of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. The circumstances of the case were as follows:—The bill was filed by executors and trustees for the administration of the testator's estate. All the plaintiffs died, and the suit was revived by an infant defendant. The usual accounts had been taken, and Eleanor Kemp was found by the Master to be a creditor for 100*l.* The report was confirmed, and the usual decree made for the sale of the real estate. In 1848 the infant plaintiff died, and nothing had been done since in the suit. The parties who, had a supplemental bill been filed would have been defendants, had been served with notice of the motion.

Stuart, V. C. refused the application, observing that the case was clearly not within the 52nd section of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, which in his opinion was applicable only to the usual order to revive on the usual supplemental decree. See 20 L. T. Rep. 61. The 52nd section is as follows: "Upon any suit in the said court becoming abated by death, marriage, or otherwise, or defective by reason of some change or transmission of interest or liability, it shall not be necessary to exhibit any bill of revivor or supplemental bill, in order to obtain the usual order to revive such suit, or the usual or necessary decree in order to carry on the proceedings; but an order to the effect of the usual order to revive, or of the usual supplemental decree, may be obtained as of course upon an allegation of the abatement of such suit, or of the same having become defective, and of the change or transmission of interest or liability; and an order so obtained, when served upon the party or parties who, according to the present practice of the said court, would be defendant or defendants to the bill of revivor or supplemental bill, shall from the time of such service be binding on such party or parties, in the same manner in every respect as if such order had been regularly obtained according to the existing practice of the said court; and such party or parties shall thenceforth become a party or parties to the suit, and shall be bound to enter an appearance thereto in the office of the clerks of the records and writs, within such time and in like manner as if he or they had been duly served with process to appear to a bill of revivor or supplemental bill filed against him; provided that it shall be open to the party or parties so served, within such time after service as shall be in that behalf prescribed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor, to apply to the court by motion or petition to discharge such order on any ground which would have been open to him on a bill of revivor or supplemental bill, stating the previous proceedings in the suit, and the alleged change or transmission of interest or liability, and praying the usual relief consequent thereon: provided also, that if any party so served shall be under any disability other than coverture, such order shall be of no force or effect as against such party, until a guardian or guardians ad litem shall have been duly appointed for such party, and such time shall have elapsed thereafter as shall be prescribed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor."

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE said that he was of opinion that the application was clearly within the spirit of the 52nd section, and that if it had not been for the opinion of the Vice-Chancellor he should have thought it also as clearly within the letter. The parties having been served and not appearing, the order to the effect of the usual supplemental decree ought to be made under the 52nd section, within which his Lordship thought the case came.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH concurred.

COURT OF APPEAL.

Ex parte S. T. WOOD, re THE VALE OF NEATH AND SOUTH WALES BREWERY COMPANY.

Joint-Stock Companies' Winding-up Acts—Contributory legatee—Executor.

A legatee of shares in a joint-stock company and her husband, it not appearing by the evidence that the executor had assented to the legacy, or that the directors had approved of them, or either of them, to be proprietors according to the terms required by the deed of settlement:

Held, not to be liable as contributories; and that consequently, the liability of the executor not having ceased, his name ought to be placed in the list of contributories without qualification.

Distinction as to the extent of the power of partners in an ordinary partnership, and of directors of a joint-stock company, to depart from or waive the terms of the deed constituting the partnership.

This was an appeal by the official manager from the decision of Stuart, V. C., reversing the decision of Master Brougham, who had included the name of Samuel Thomas Wood in the list of the contributories of the company without qualification, and directing that the name of the said Samuel Thomas Wood should remain on the list as liable only up to the death of the testatrix, Miss Lydia Keene, whose surviving executor he was. The facts of the case are stated in 20 Law T. Rep. 108, with the exception of three clauses of the deed of settlement, under which the shares were held. These are set forth in the judgment of Lord Justice Knight Bruce.

Russell and Terrell for the official manager, in support of the appeal, contended that there had been no acceptance of the shares by Mr. or Mrs. Kluht, and that neither the directors nor the company had, according to the terms of the deed of settlement, approved of either of them as proprietors, so that they never became proprietors, or responsible as such, and that consequently the responsibility remained with Mr. S. T. Wood, the then surviving executor, and that the Master was right in putting his name on the list of contributories without qualification. They cited Ex parte Kluht, 3 De G. & Sma. 210; Ex parte Southcote, 3 Mac. & Gord. 187; Strafford's Executors, 1 De G. Mac. & Gord. 576; Crosfield's case, 17 Law T. Rep. 47, 2 De G. Mac. & G. 128.

Bacon and Roxburgh for the respondent.

Russell in reply.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—Primâ facie the estate of Miss Lydia Keene, who was proprietor of five shares in this company at the time of her death, would continue liable in respect of those five shares; it is upon those who assert that such liability has ceased to prove it. It is said that the liability has ceased under the 38th and 44th sections or clauses of the deed, inasmuch as Miss Lydia Keene made a will by which, either as part of her residue or specifically, she bequeathed the shares in question to her sister, who, after the testatrix's death, married a gentleman of the name of Kluht. It is said that the executor assented to the bequest, whether it was specific or residuary, and that the legatee or her husband was approved of by the directors, in a binding manner as a proprietor, or that they were both approved of as proprietors in respect of these shares, as from the death of the testatrix; in which case it is assumed that the liability of the executor ceased. It is denied on the part of the official manager that there was any assent to the bequest. It is denied also, on his part, that Mr. and Mrs. Kluht were approved of as proprietors of these shares, as successors to the testatrix, and consequently that a discharge of the estate has not arisen. The 38th clause provides that "husbands of female proprietors, executors, administrators, or legatees may, with the approbation of the directors, to be manifested as hereinafter mentioned, but not otherwise, be admitted and become proprietors of the company in respect of the shares which belonged to or were claimed by them as such; but husbands, executors, administrators, or legatees who do not apply to or obtain the approbation of the directors to be admitted proprietors, and also all guardians, &c. shall, within six calendar months after becoming entitled to the shares belonging to or claimed by them respectively in such characters, sell and dispose of the same, and on refusal or neglect so to do shall forfeit the said shares for the benefit of the other proprietors of the company; every purchaser or transferree of a share or shares, and every husband, administrator, and legatee, who shall have obtained the approbation of the directors to be admitted a proprietor of the company in respect of the share or shares belonging to or claimed by him or her as such, shall, unless already a proprietor in respect of some other share or shares, execute this indenture or some deed of accession thereto, binding himself or herself to conform to, observe, and abide by all stipulations, regulations, and provisions for the time being affecting or intended to affect the proprietors of shares in the capital and property of the company; and no purchaser, transferee, husband, executor, administrator, or legatee, unless already a proprietor, shall, before being approved of by the directors as fit, become a proprietor, or before executing this indenture, or some deed of accession thereto, be entitled in any manner or respect whatever to any of the rights, privileges, or benefits of a proprietor of the company, save and except to a proportionate part of the income or proceeds of the capital and property of the said company, upon the next yearly or other divisions thereof." And the 41st clause provides that, "upon all transfers of shares to purchasers and others approved of by the directors, and in all cases of husbands, executors, administrators, or legatees applying to become proprietors of shares belonging to or claimed by them in those characters, and being approved of by the directors, such alterations shall be made in the Share Register Book, and also in the copies by way of certificate of former entries therein respecting the same shares, as the circumstances may require. And the approbation of the directors in all the above cases (to be valid) shall be manifested by entries or memorandums to that effect in the Share Register Book, under the signature of two of the directors for the time being, and by like memorandums so signed, added to, or indorsed upon the copies or certificates of the former entries respecting the shares in question in the Share Register Book; or, instead of such last-mentioned memorandums, by such copies or certificates being delivered to the parties entitled thereto of the new or altered entries respecting the same shares in the Share Register Book." The 44th clause provides that, "whenever any share or shares in the capital of the company shall become actually forfeited, or shall be duly and effectually vested in any new proprietor, and such entry or alteration in regard to such share or shares shall have been made in the Share Register Book as hereinbefore required, then and not before the responsibility of the previous owner as a proprietor in the company, with respect to the same share or shares, shall, from and after the completion of such entry and certificate granted as aforesaid, and the payment of all instalments on such shares previously called for, cease and determine as to the same share or shares; and such previous owner shall thenceforth be exonerated and released from all subsequent claims, demands, and obligations in regard to the same share or shares, and from all future observance and performance of the covenants, conditions, and stipulations contained in or referred to by this indenture, or in or by any deed or deeds relating thereto; and the certificate to be given by the directors as hereinbefore required of such entry, erasure, or alteration, shall at all times be evidence of such acquittance and discharge as aforesaid in respect of such share or shares. And the person in whom any share or shares shall or may become vested, and whose name shall be entered as the approved proprietor thereof in the Share Register Book as hereinbefore-mentioned, shall immediately thereupon, but not before, have and be subject to all the same privileges, advantages, and future liabilities, in respect of such share or shares, as the person originally owning such share or shares." Now it is plain and undisputed, that the things required by the deed of settlement to be done were not done, and therefore, if the letter of the deed is to be followed, the responsibility has not ceased, and the Master's conclusion was correct. But it is said that, although everything provided by the deed was not done, something that is equivalent has been done; inasmuch as the usual manner of proceeding by the company was so loose, and departed from the language of the deed so much, that the course of proceeding taken ought to be considered as the course of proceeding adopted by the company and substituted for what ought to have been done. In ordinary partnerships any clause of a deed may be departed from or waived, where two or three or four partners alone are interested; and thus it often happens that on winding up such concerns, a different course is pursued from that pointed out by the deed. The same course, attended with the same results, is not absolutely impossible in cases of larger companies, called joint-stock companies, in which, as it is impossible for every proprietor to interfere directly in the management of the business, it is often delegated to a chosen body as directors. But there is a difference in acting in such a case, because agents (as the directors are) must carry their instructions exactly into effect, and cannot depart from their deed. Now, in the present case, it appears to me, from the best attention I have been able to give to the case, it fails on two grounds; in the first place, how is it shown that the body at large did assent to a departure by the directors from those provisions in the deed as to the manner of exhibiting the assent of the directors to the introduction of a new partner? The evidence does not authorise this conclusion. If the body at large had been shown to make the directors their agents to give consent, they must have been bound by them. But that observation that the directors themselves have concurred in the approval of the husband and wife, or both, in respect of the shares, does not appear from the evidence to be proved. The concurrence of the directors with the acts of the secretary does not appear to be proved, even if it were of any importance. The proprietors at large have a right to say, not only in form but in substance, that those acts were not done by which the responsibility of the estate of the testator could be made to cease. It illustrates the case to observe that no man living can tell what manner of proprietorship was accepted in lieu of that of the testatrix; it nowhere appears. But it is most essential to show which of these things was intended to be done, and was done. For these reasons my impression is that the Master was correct.

Lord Justice TURNER.—I concur in this opinion. The deed of settlement provides for the shares of legatees becoming vested in them with certain qualifications and stipulations. Though there may be conduct on the part of the directors which may dispense with the stipulations of the deed, showing that all the proprietors have concurred, that has not been shewn. Now the argument at present is, that there has been approbation on the part of the directors to the vesting of the shares in the legatee or her husband. There are two grounds insisted on. First, it is said, a letter was written to the secretary, in which the executor expressed himself to the effect that the dividends must be paid to the legatee; and another, in which he said that the shares must be transferred to her husband, Mr. Kluht; and the secretary, in consequence of this last letter, wrote in pencil against the shares in the share ledger the name "Kluht." Whatever weight must be attributed to that, it is shown that at a subsequent period the dividends were paid to Keene, the executor. Subsequently, in the years 1843 and 1844, a transaction of this kind took place; it became necessary for shareholders to advance 5*l.* per share, and Mr. Keene gave his acceptance for 400*l.*, being 330*l.* on account of his own shares, and 70*l.* on account of the shares left to Mrs. Kluht. This was renewed by another bill, and the bill was returned on Mr. Keene paying the 330*l.* but the 70*l.* was not paid. Now, it has been held in Kluht's case, that the circumstances which took place, did not make him liable as to shares in his wife's right. I do not see how it makes him liable as legatee, or his wife either: and if it did not render either of them liable, there was no shareholder liable except the executor of the testator. The Vice-Chancellor's judgment, therefore, must be reversed. This is not a case of specific bequest; but, assuming it to be so, it makes no difference, because it is not only necessary that there should be assent, but approval on the part of the directors. Costs of the official manager are to come out of the estate, and dismiss petition with costs as against the others.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by J. MACAULAY, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Dec. 8 and 9.

FRAIL v. ELLIS.

Fraud—Vendor and purchaser—Lien—Notice—Bills of exchange—Mortgage.

The plaintiff, having let certain property to a party who entered into possession as tenant, afterwards agreed to sell it to him for 450l. The purchaser proposed that 150l., part of the 450l., should be paid down, and that he should give his bill at three months for 300l., the remaining part; but this the vendor declined to accept, and insisted upon the unpaid purchase-money being secured by a mortgage of the property. The contract for sale was accordingly drawn up by the purchaser's solicitor, and signed by the plaintiff, but no mention was made therein of the amount of purchase-money or the mode of payment. The purchaser had no copy of this contract given to him, but having subsequently obtained one, it was found that an alteration had been made in the original document by stating that the purchase-money was to be paid as originally proposed. At the meeting to execute the conveyance the plaintiff still insisted on the mortgage, and was told by the solicitor that he had procured the mortgage from the purchaser. The conveyance was executed, and the 150l. was paid and the acceptance given for 300l., but no mortgage was executed. The purchaser soon after executed a mortgage of the property for 300l. to a third party, a client of the same solicitor, and absconded:

Held, that the vendor's lien was not discharged; that the mortgagee of the purchaser ought to have inquired whether the bill for the unpaid purchase-money was satisfied, and, not having done so, his security must be postponed to the vendor's lien, of which he had notice.

This was a bill by James Frail, a vendor of a freehold dwelling-house, with a piece of land, &c. situate in Three-Colt-street, Bow, in the county of Middlesex, to establish his lien on the property for part of the purchase-money which had remained unpaid. In the month of Dec. 1849 the plaintiff had let the premises in question to Charles Lloyd, who had been let into possession as tenant. Soon afterwards Lloyd offered to purchase the property at the price of 450*l.* and the plaintiff, having accepted the offer, delivered his title-deeds on the 20th Dec. 1850 to Edward Lawrence Levy (of the firm of Edward Lawrence Levy and David Lawrence Levy, Doughty-house, solicitors), who was the solicitor of Lloyd, for the purpose of having a conveyance prepared. Meantime, however, it was proposed by Levy, on behalf of Lloyd, that the plaintiff should take 150*l.* in money and an acceptance for 300*l.* the residue of the purchase-money, payable in three months. The plaintiff, however, declined to accede to this proposition, but offered to accept a mortgage of the premises as a security for the unpaid purchase-money. This appeared to be satisfactory to all parties, and accordingly a contract for the sale of the premises was drawn up by Levy, and signed by the plaintiff, in which no mention was made either of the amount of the purchase-money or the mode of payment. Though the plaintiff signed this document, no copy of it was given to him at the time, but he subsequently applied to Levy and obtained a copy; and thereupon it appeared that an alteration had been afterwards made in the contract as originally signed, by the insertion of a statement that 450*l.* was to be paid for the house, of which the sum of 150*l.* was to be paid down, and the rest by an acceptance payable in three months. On Jan. 12, 1850, the parties met and the plaintiff executed the conveyances, in which the consideration was stated to be 150*l.* paid at the time of the execution, and a bill by Lloyd for 300*l.* payable in three months; and the receipt indorsed was drawn up in the same form. It was in evidence, on the part of the plaintiff, that previous to the execution of the conveyance, he again refused to take a bill, and insisted on having a mortgage, and that Levy then told him that he had procured a mortgage from Lloyd by way of additional security for the 300*l.* It also appeared, that in the receipt for Levy's charges, which were paid by the plaintiff, there was a reference to a mortgage-deed alleged to have been prepared, the charge being 8*l.* 10*s.* No such mortgage, however, was ever executed, and soon after Lloyd mortgaged the property to the defendant Ellis to secure the sum of 300*l.* advanced by him on loan to Lloyd. Ellis was also a client of Levy. In Feb. 1850, Lloyd absconded, and the bill on coming to maturity was dishonoured. The plaintiff filed his bill to establish his lien on the property for the unpaid purchase-money in priority to Ellis's mortgage, whom he charged with having notice of the fraud; and he also sought to recover the deeds which were in Levy's possession.

R. Palmer and J. Hadden for the plaintiff, Roupell and Burk for Ellis, contended that the vendor had waived his lien by making a special contract for the payment of the purchase-money. He had, as appeared by the deed itself, accepted an indemnity in substitution of the lien. If Levy had committed any fraud, it was not communicated to Ellis.

Lloyd and Southgold, for E. L. Levy, disputed the charge of fraud, and insisted that he ought not to have been made a party.

Temple and Forbes for D. L. Levy.

The following cases were cited:—Beadles v. Birch, 10 Sim. 332; Veed v. Caruthers, 2 Y. & C. C. E. 32; Winter v. Lord Anson, 3 Russ. 488; Toogood v. Robins, not reported; Mackreth v. Symonds, 15 Ves. 329; Clarke v. Boyle, 3 Sim. 499; Buckland v. Pocknell, 13 Sim. 406; Kennedy v. Green, 3 Myl. & K. 699; Parrot v. Sweetlands, 3 Myl. & K. 653; Hewitt v. Loosemore, 9 Hare, 499; Blair v. Bromley, 5 Hare, 542; Sugd. V. & P. 863.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—There are two questions in the present case: first, whether the plaintiff's lien for the unpaid purchase money is discharged by the substitution of the bill of exchange for 300*l.*; and, secondly, whether Ellis had notice of the fraudulent transaction. As to the first question, whether the original contract was to sell for 150*l.* money and 300*l.* bill, or if it was to sell for 450*l.* and then there was an agreement to take the bill for 300*l.* part of it—whether, in short, it was by way of security or a substitution for the unpaid purchase money—on this point it was argued that the plaintiff is concluded by the terms of the deed; but to this argument I cannot accede, and I am of opinion that the plaintiff was at liberty to adduce evidence in accordance with the case, to prove the real nature of the transaction. There is a conflict of testimony, and a contradiction in the evidence; but I do not think it is satisfactorily proved that the plaintiff ever sanctioned the alteration of the agreement by the insertion of the consideration in the shape in which it now appeared. It is quite clear the plaintiff did not consider himself bound to take an acceptance; but he always insisted on having a mortgage security, which he states he was informed had been actually executed; and this statement is corroborated by the receipt given by Levy for his bill of costs. Under these circumstances I am of opinion that the plaintiff never lost his lien on the property. The next question is as to the notice to Ellis of the plaintiff's right. If he had any notice it was through his solicitor. In the absence of any special contract discharging the plaintiff's lien, the duty of Ellis was to inquire whether the bill for the unpaid purchase money was paid, and no indifferent solicitor would have allowed a mortgagee under such circumstances to advance money without seeing that it was applied in paying the vendor. It was not necessary to fix Ellis with notice of the fraud, it was sufficient that he had notice of the plaintiff's lien. He must therefore be postponed to the plaintiff, who must have the usual foreclosure decree against him, with liberty to sell the property.

Practice—Answer of party who is imbecile—Guardian ad litem, who may be.

Where the sole surviving trustee of a fund had become imbecile, and a bill was filed by the parties interested in the fund, the court refused to appoint his nephew, who acted as the family solicitor, guardian ad litem for the purpose of putting in the answer of the trustee, and admitting an incumbrance by one of the cestuis que trust of which the trustee had had notice, though his only sister and nearest relative was also imbecile and paralytic.

The bill in this case was filed by certain persons interested in a trust fund against the sole surviving trustee. It appeared that one of the cestuis que trust had mortgaged his share, and had given notice of the mortgage to the trustee. The trustee, however, had become imbecile through age and illness, and was incapable of putting in his answer. His nearest relative was an only sister, who was also imbecile and paralytic. Under these circumstances—

Freeling moved that the nephew of the defendant, who was a solicitor, and acted for the family in that capacity, should be appointed guardian ad litem for the purpose of putting in the defendant's answer, and admitting notice of the mortgage. (He cited Lee v. Ryder, 6 Mad. 294; Biddulph v. Lord Camoys, 9 Beav. 548; Brooke v. Jobling, 2 Hare, 155; Howlett v. Wilbraham, 5 Mad. 423.)

The MASTER of the ROLLS, after taking time to consider, refused to make the order. He could find no precedent for making a solicitor guardian ad litem to a lunatic defendant.

Practice—Production of documents—Mortgage deeds and drafts of deeds.

A mortgagee is not obliged to produce his deeds, as he cannot be compelled to show his title; and the same rule applies to drafts and copies of deeds.

Cottrell moved on behalf of the plaintiff, a mortgagor, who had instituted a suit for the redemption of the mortgaged estate, that the defendant might produce certain drafts of deeds which by his answer he had admitted to be in his possession, contending that the same rule did not apply to drafts or copies as to original deeds.

The MASTER of the ROLLS refused the motion. The reason why a mortgagee was not obliged to produce his title-deeds was that he could not be obliged to show his title; and the same rule must apply to drafts and copies of deeds.

Re THE BRITISH AND AMERICAN STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, ex parte MEYER.

Winding-up Acts—Contributory.

A joint-stock company was projected in 1836, and prospectuses were issued setting forth its objects and purposes, and the terms upon which it was intended to be established. In 1837 the company was established, but on a footing essentially different from the original prospectus. M. took ten shares in the original company, and paid a deposit upon them, but did not sign the company's deed; but in the company as altered he took no shares, except that he agreed to have all the deposits he had paid considered as having been paid upon one share, and he paid up the balance payable upon that share, and the other nine shares were cancelled. This was done by a resolution of the board of directors in 1838, which was passed at one meeting and confirmed at the following. The company became defunct in 1841, and on being wound-up under the Winding-up Acts, the Master placed the name of M. on the list of contributories for the nine cancelled shares, on the ground that the board had no power to cancel them, the only point argued before the Master. On a petition to expunge M.'s name from the list of contributories:

Held, that he was not liable as a contributory in respect of the nine shares, but only in respect of the one share which he did not dispute.

The decision turning not upon the cancellation of the shares, but upon M.'s having done no act to make himself a shareholder in the new company, or the company after being placed upon a new footing, which point was not argued before the Master, the petition was allowed, but without costs.

This was a petition to expunge from the list of contributories of the British and American Steam Navigation Company the name of Mr. Meyer. It appeared that in the early part of 1836 the British and American Steam Navigation Company was projected, and a prospectus was issued whereby it was proposed that the capital should consist of 500,000*l.* in 5000 shares of 100*l.* each; that the steam vessels should be partly English and partly American, in order to bring them within the provisions of the navigation laws of both countries; and that an Act of Parliament should be obtained limiting the liabilities of shareholders, with other provisions. The company did not proceed according to this prospectus; but in 1837 the company became in fact a new company, simply for carrying on intercourse by navigation with America, but neither providing the means of bringing itself within the navigation laws of the two countries, nor limiting the liability of its shareholders, and even reducing its intended capital from 500,000*l.* to 100,000*l.* On the company being projected, Mr. Meyer took ten shares in the original scheme, but did not sign the company's deed. He however paid a deposit of 50*l.* being 5*l.* per share upon the ten shares. Several calls were made upon the shareholders, and upon Mr. Meyer among others; but he took no notice of them, nor did any act whatever in respect of them till Dec. 1837, when, upon receiving notice of a further call, he sent through Mr. Bainbrigge, the chairman of the company, and a personal friend of Mr. Meyer, a communication to the board of directors that if they would cancel nine of the shares, and add the deposit on them to that on the other share, he would pay up 50*l.* more, making 100*l.* and being the whole amount payable upon the one share. On the 7th March, 1838, accordingly Mr. Bainbrigge stated to the board that Mr. Meyer, not being able to pay upon the ten shares, was willing to pay upon the one as proposed, if the others were cancelled. The proposition was agreed to, and entered on the minutes, and on the 14th March the minutes were confirmed, and the nine shares were cancelled, the remaining one being fully paid up, and afterwards sold. The company continued to carry on operations for some time; but eventually, in 1841, it was broken up. So matters stood till the Winding-up Acts came into operation, when their provisions were applied to this company; and on going before the Master he placed Mr. Meyer on the list of contributories not merely in respect of the one share but the nine shares which had been cancelled, on the ground that the board of directors had no power so to cancel shares—the only point which was argued before him. Mr. Meyer then presented a petition praying that his name should be expunged from the list of contributories in respect of the nine shares; and the petition now came on to be heard.

R. Palmer, for Mr. Meyer, contended that this case came within the recent cases of exemption from liability, and was within the principle of Goldsmid's case,—a case in this very same company. In that case there was no communication whatever, as here, between Mr. Goldsmid and the company as modified, and yet he was held not to be a contributory. The shares have been continued debited to Mr. Meyer, on the assumption that the original contractors, that is, the shareholders in the original scheme, continued liable as shareholders in the new or modified scheme; and Mr. Meyer has been held liable, though he expressly took one share on condition of the other nine being cancelled and his liability thereon determined. This is an executory contract only, which may or may not be enforced; and where that is so, and the parties come to an arrangement respecting its being cancelled, they cannot enforce it afterwards. He cited Beresford's case, 2 M'N. & Gor. 197.

Roxburyh, for the official manager.—There was no evidence of a suggestion from Mr. Meyer to the directors that he would take one share if the others were cancelled. If it were so, and they had acted upon it, then this might come within Beresford's case; but on the 7th March, 1838, for anything that appears, Mr. Meyer was the holder of 1,000*l.* stock in the company, and had dealt with 100*l.* (part of it) by transfer to a purchaser. The Master held that Beresford's case did not apply, the suggested alteration of the company not being in question before him. Mr. Bainbrigge had no authority, nor had the directors any authority, nor was there any authority in the company by their deed, either to cancel or forfeit shares. Mr. Meyer has not sworn that he had no connection with the new company.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I am of opinion that Mr. Meyer is not liable as a contributory, and that his name must be removed from the list. The company was originally formed in 1836, and Mr. Meyer took ten shares in it; but it is not disputed that this company was completely changed in the latter end of 1837 or beginning of 1838, and, being so changed, the original shareholders are not bound, unless they have done some act to make them shareholders in the company as altered; and Mr. Meyer is not bound unless he has done some act to bind him. I omit now any consideration of what took place on the 7th March, 1838; but if there was nothing more than that, Mr. Meyer would be a shareholder in the original company, but without having done any act to make him a shareholder in the altered or new company, and so the matter would have gone on till the present time; and having done no act to show his intention of becoming a partner in the new company, I do not see how, following out the principles which I always follow, and which I think ought to be followed in a Court of Equity, I can, after the lapse of eleven years, place him in the position of a contributory in respect to the new company, unless he did some act to make him such. Now what act did he do? The matter stands thus:—On the 7th March, 1838, Mr. Meyer had ten shares in the original company, upon each of which he had paid a deposit of 5*l.*, amounting in all to 50*l.*, but he was allowed to take, and did take, one share in the new company, on the terms of the other nine being cancelled, and thus his shares were reduced from ten to one. Now this is either a valid act, or it is not; but I cannot say that it is valid as an admission against Mr. Meyer for the purpose of making him a shareholder in the new company, and yet at the same time hold that it is not valid for the purpose of releasing him from liability as to the nine cancelled shares. However, the company was so altered as, in reality, to become a new and distinct company, and, upon such alteration, Mr. Meyer had a right to say, The company is a new company, and I want back my 50*l.* deposits; but, instead of that, he says, "I will not ask for my 50*l.* back, but I will give you 50*l.* in addition, which you can add to the other 50*l.*, and give me one share fully paid up instead of ten shares upon which only a deposit has been paid." The directors, upon the proposition of the chairman, agree to this, and they enter the agreement on their minutes, and subsequently sign and confirm them; and, besides, the remaining nine shares are cancelled in the company's books for registration of shares, though the books treat the shares as shares in both companies. Now I do not think that is the right view of the case; but it is to be considered as ten shares in the old company reduced to one in the new company. The Master, therefore, is wrong, and Mr. Meyer's name must be struck off the list of contributories as to the nine shares, for he has done no act to admit himself to be a shareholder for more than one share. I decide the case entirely on the ground of no act being done by Mr. Meyer to make himself a shareholder except as to the one share, and not upon the point of the cancellation of the shares, the only point taken before the Master. There will, therefore, be no costs of this petition.

MURRAY v. BOGUE.

Copyright—Piracy—Copyright Registration Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45*—Injunction.*

The first edition of a book published before the Copyright Act (July, 1842*) did not require registration at Stationers' Hall under the* 24*th section, and, consequently, Held, that such edition is protected from piracy; and the author may institute proceedings at law or in equity in respect of the infringement of the copyright of such edition.*

But as to the editions published after the passing of the above Act, if such editions are not duly registered, so much of new matter as is contained in them is not protected from piracy.

Where there are errors in both publications, the presumption is, that the author of the last publication has pirated the first author's work; but where the same errors are found in works common to both, and upon evidence that the second author had used such works, the mere insertion of like errors in both publications would not be proof of piracy.

An author may make a fair use of a prior publication, as to the scope and tenor of a work; and, therefore, where upon the evidence it appears that no unfair use of the prior publication has been made, an injunction to restrain the publication of the second book will be refused.

This was an application to restrain the defendant, a bookseller in London, from publishing a work called "Bogue's Guide for Travellers," on the ground of such work being pirated from the plaintiff's work, so well known as the "Handbook for Switzerland," &c.

The arguments occupied several days in the December sittings of the court.

It appeared by the bill filed that about Sept. 1838, the plaintiff, Mr. Murray, composed his "Handbook, for travellers in Switzerland and the Alps of Savoy and Piedmont," principally from his own personal observation and experience, obtained in the course of extensive and carefully-performed journeys through the countries named. By the accounts of other travellers and authors, and comparing them with his own observation, he was enabled to add much useful information. He also added a few communications made by personal friends, which they furnished him with for his work. Mr. Murray stated that this particular handbook had gone through five editions; the second having been published in July 1842; the third in June 1846; the fourth in Sept. 1851; and the fifth in Sept. of the present year. It was stated that the work on Switzerland formed one of a series of handbooks or travellers' guides, which were printed in a uniform manner, bound in red cloth with gilt lettering on the outsides, and that these guides were generally known by foreigners as the "Red Book." The plaintiff stated that the defendant, Mr. David Bogue, of 86, Fleet-street, some time ago announced a series of guide-books, under the title of "Bogue's Guides for Travellers," of which he had published two parts or volumes, the first of which was entitled "Belgium and the Rhine," and was published in July last; the second, being entitled "Switzerland," was published in August last, but afterwards was entitled "Switzerland and Savoy." These volumes were also bound, gilt, and lettered in a manner similar to those of Mr. Murray's handbooks. The bill alleged that parts of the defendant's work, called "Switzerland and Savoy," had been pirated and copied from Mr. Murray's work on the same subject; that in many respects an unfair use had been made of his Swiss handbook; the design and plan of it had been followed to a very considerable extent; and it stated that the extent and nature of the alleged piracy of his copyright would appear from the inspection and comparison of the respective works. The plaintiff, in particular, referred to various instances of the piratical use of his work by Mr. Bogue, alleging that errors contained in the editions of Murray's handbook previous to the fifth edition, had accidentally crept into the defendant's work; that 32 routes in the whole had been taken from Mr. Murray's work and used in that of Mr. Bogue. Amongst numerous instances were the following, which were stated in the bill:—At page xii. of the introductory information contained in the handbook there was the following passage:—"1 Swiss franc, containing 10 batz, or 100 rappen, equal to 1 French franc (1 franc 48 cents,) equal to (nearly) 1*s.* 2*d.* English;" and in such passage the word "cent" occurred by mistake for the word centimes, there being no French coin termed a "cent." It was stated that this mistake in the use of the word "cent" had been copied into the defendant's work, at p. 16, as follows:—"It must be impressed on the memory that the Swiss franc has a value equal to 1 franc 48 cents, or, more practically, one franc and a half French currency." Another instance specified was this:—At p. 15 of Mr. Murray's handbook the word "Ange" occurred by mistake as the name of an inn at Frick, whereas there had not lately been such an inn there. The above mistake in the use of the word "Ange" had been copied into the defendant's work, in a passage at p. 324, thus: "Frick (inns, Adler and Ange)." It was further stated that in the early editions of Mr. Murray's handbook, the town of "Fluelen" was inaccurately spelt as "Fluellen," and this mistake was alleged to have been copied several times into the defendant's work, called "Switzerland and Savoy." In one instance, it was observed, at page 75, not copied and taken from the handbook, the word was spelt "Flueln." In the Swiss and German books the name of the town was spelt "Flüelen." Another passage referred to was the following:—At page 108 of the plaintiff's handbook, the bridge called the "Devil's Bridge" was described as being of two arches, although, in fact, the bridge consisted only of one. At page 76 of the defendant's book, this error was alleged to have been copied as follows:—"The old bridge was only one arch thrown across the gorge, but just broad enough to admit of two persons passing each other in safety, with scarcely any protection at the sides, and at a height of about 100 feet above the torrent. It was a dizzy thing to pass it, and to get upon it the passenger must coast the gulf on zigzag terraces. The new bridge is of two arches, with safe and strong parapets, and of ample width for carriages." Again, it was alleged by the plaintiff that at page 116 of the handbook the inn at Kandersteg was spoken of as the "Cheval Blanc," although the real sign of such inn was the "Kain Zum Ritter." Mr. Murray stated that he had been led into the mistake respecting the sign by the circumstance of the sign being, in fact, a knight upon a white horse. He had corrected the error in the last edition of his handbook, but the mistake as to the inn at Kandersteg occurred at page 284 of the defendant's work.

Bacon and Renshaw, in support of the motion for the injunction, contended that it had always been considered as decisive evidence of piracy when a defendant had copied the errors of the work which it was sought to protect. In one part of Mr. Murray's work, Interlacken was spoken of as an "English colony." The defendant's work referred to the same place by the terms "Anglicised neighbour." Murray spoke of "Roman" antiquities; Mr. Bogue spoke of "Romish;" and other instances were pointed out. They cited Lewis v. Fullarton, 2 Beav. 6; Mawman v. Tegg, 2 Russ. 385; Dickens v. Lee, 8 Jur. 183 (relating to Mr. Charles Dickens's Christmas Tale); Bramwell v. Halcombe, 3 Myl. & Cr. 708; Gray v. Russell, 1 Story's Rep. 111 (the case of a Latin Grammar); Emerson v. Davis, 3 Story's Rep. 711 (relating to a Treatise on Arithmetic).

Craig and Riley, for the defendant, opposed the motion, contending—1st, that the plaintiff had not registered his publication according to the Copyright Acts, by which it could be protected; and, 2ndly, that the defendant had not made an unfair use of the plaintiff's work, although admitting that the general object and scope were the same. They said it would appear by the evidence that the defendant, Mr. Bogue, having had repeated demands from his customers for guide-books, had employed Mr. F. K. Hunt to prepare the work in question, he having been to Switzerland twice, and having kept notes of his travels. Mr. Hunt had been assisted by a literary gentleman named Walker; and they had been expressly enjoined by the defendant to avoid interfering in any way with Mr. Murray's work. The defendant and these gentlemen had availed themselves of various books of travels and of their own manuscripts. It was positively denied that any portion of the handbook had been extracted or pirated. They had availed themselves of an American work by Dr. Cheever. They also objected that under the 24th section of the Copyright Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, it was the duty of a publisher, on publishing a new edition of a work already registered under that Act, to register it, to enable the proprietor to avail himself of his copyright by a suit in equity. The first edition was published by Mr. Murray, sen., now deceased. It was the duty of his representatives to register the subsequent editions; certainly to register the third edition, which was referred to during the argument to prove the alleged piracy. If the subsequent edition contained no alteration then the statute did not require a fresh registration. By the 6th section of the above statute copies were required to be sent to the British Museum of any republication with additions or alterations. The book in respect of which protection was sought never had been registered at Stationers' Hall, and the plaintiff therefore had no locus standi. They proceeded to criticise and comment upon Mr. Murray's affidavit with much particularity. As to the charge of piracy, the plaintiff had confused the evidence of piracy, founded upon copying slight mistakes, with piracy itself. The defendant had a right to make a fair use of Mr. Murray's handbook, provided he did not do so to an extent likely to injure his work. The question, as was said by Lord Cottenham and Lord Eldon, in Bramwell v. Halcombe, and Wilkins v. Aikin, was, whether the defendant had fairly employed his intellect in producing an original work, and not whether he happened to use phrases which, in many instances, were similar to those of the plaintiff. The passages to which Mr. Murray's counsel had referred were mere shreds and patches, immaterial to the general importance and leading merit of the work. In Cary v. Longman, 1 East, relating to a road-book, it appeared both parties had used Paterson's handbook, and Lord Kenyon said there could be no copyright in those passages which were taken from other works. A great portion of Mr. Murray's work was compiled from authorities common to all the world. In Sayer v. Moore, in the same volume, the copyright was claimed in sea charts. Lord Mansfield said the similitude of the two works must be such as to show that the one was a transcript, or copy, or a servile imitator of the other. So in Carey v. Kearsley, 4 Esp. 168, as to a road-book; Matthewson v. Stockdale, 12 Ves. 270, the case of copyright in an East Indian Calendar; Longman v. Winchester, 16 Ves. 269, the case of copyright in a Court Calendar; Barfield v. Nicholson, 2 Sim. & S. 1; and 4 Russ. 355; Sweet v. Maugham, 12 Sim. being copyright in law reports; Sweet v. Cator, 11 Sim. 572, being alleged piracy of Sir Edward Sugden's work "Vendors and Purchasers;" and Spottiswoode v. Clarke, 2 Phil. 157; all these cases recognised the same principle, that the case to be established must be one of mala fides.

Bacon, in reply.

On Jan. 14 the Vice-Chancellor pronounced the following

JUDGMENT.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR, after stating the general character of the application, said,—Now the defendant Bogue insisted in the first place that, even supposing his work was borrowed from that of the plaintiff, he was not entitled to sue in respect of the infringement of his copyright, from the want of a due registration of his own work; and secondly that, if even that were not an objection, in fact the defendant's work was no piracy of Mr. Murray's work. With respect to the first point, namely, the question as regarded the registration, it was necessary he should consider that first. Previously to the Act of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45—the recent Act which had made an alteration in the law of copyright—it was not necessary, in order to enable the owner of a copyright to sue another in respect of the infringement of that copyright, that there should have been any registration of the work at Stationers' Hall. Registration was required by the previous Acts, but it had been decided that even where no registration had been effected the proprietor might still protect his copyright either by action or suit. The Act of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45 made an alteration in the law in that respect; besides altering the duration of the copyright, it altered the law in the following manner:—By the 24th section it was enacted, "That no proprietor of any copyright in any book which should be first published after the passing of that Act, should maintain any action or suit at law or in equity, or any summary proceeding in respect of any infringement of such copyright, unless he should before commencing such action, suit, or proceeding have caused an entry to be made in the books of registry of the Stationers' Company of such book, pursuant to the provisions of the Act; provided always, that the omission to make such entry should not affect the copyright of any book, but only the right to sue or proceed in respect of the infringement as aforesaid." So that, with respect to any book which should be first published after the passing of that Act, although the author had a copyright in the book, he could not sue, either at law or in equity, in respect of the infringement of such copyright, unless the work had been registered at Stationers' Hall, pursuant to the provisions of the statute. But that applied only to books which should be first published after the passing of the Act; it did not in any way affect works first published previously to it. That Act was passed on the 1st of July 1842. The first edition of Mr. Murray's work, "The Handbook for Switzerland," was, according to the affidavits published in September, 1838, of course long before the passing of that Act. The second edition was published in the month of July, 1842, and the Act was passed on the 1st of that month. He thought that he was bound to assume, and must assume, that that second edition was first published after the passing of the Act. If it were otherwise—if the second edition had been published on the 1st of July—it would have been incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that fact. All that he stated in his affidavit was, that it was published in the "month of July, 1842;" but as the Act received the royal assent on the 1st of July, he thought he must assume that the second edition was published after the passing of the Act. The third edition was published in 1846; the fourth in 1851; and the fifth in 1852. Now, what was the effect of this Act of Parliament in respect of the several editions of Mr. Murray's book? That work, except so far as it was registered previously—that is, the first edition, previously to the Act of Parliament—had not been registered at all at Stationers' Hall subsequently to the passing of the Act of Victoria. With regard to the first edition, as he had already said, the law, as it existed previously to the 5 & 6 Vict. did not require any registration in order to enable the plaintiff to sue in respect of an infringement of the copyright of that first edition, nor had that statute, with regard to that edition published antecedently to the passing of the Act, made any alteration, except in this way: it entirely repealed the prior Acts. And, if that were all, it might be a question whether a party had any copyright at all in a book published previously to that Act, because it had been held (although a doubt had at one time been entertained on the point in consequence of contrary decisions) that there was no copyright at common law, it being entirely statutory, or, as it was termed, entirely "the creature of the statute" law. But although the Act of Vict. repealed the prior Acts—the Act of Anne and the two Acts of Geo. 3,—it re-enacted a copyright, and a better copyright; that is, a copyright enduring for a longer period than under the prior Acts. It gave to the author or the proprietor of any book published previously to the Act a copyright for a period of not less than forty-two years. But as to the obligation to register, it left the matter where it was. The obligation to register was confined to a work first published after the passing of the Act. It left any work first published previously to the passing of the Act unaffected with any obligation to register at Stationers' Hall. So that, supposing Mr. Murray had published that first edition of 1838, and that no other editions had afterwards been published at all, and any one had infringed Mr. Murray's copyright in that first edition, he would have had clearly a right, although that book was not registered at all, notwithstanding the Act 5 & 6 Vict. to have sued either at law or in equity respecting the infringement of that copyright. His publication of another edition after or before the passing of that statute did not in any way affect the copyright which he had in the first edition. But, if he published, as he had done, a second edition after the passing of the Act, which second edition was not materially different from the former edition, but containing alterations and additions, quoad those alterations and additions it was a new work; that is to say, in order to entitle him to sue at law or in equity in respect of the infringement of his copyright of those portions of the second edition which were new, if they were the only part infringed, he must, before he could sue, have registered that book at Stationers' Hall, in pursuance of the 24th section of the Act. Mr. Murray, in the preface of his second edition, repeated (naturally enough) the preface to his first edition; but he added a note to it, to this effect, which appeared not only in that second edition, but in all subsequent editions—"The present edition has been very carefully revised and corrected, as far as possible, down to the present time; some new routes have been added, and others have been rewritten." Now if this had occurred, that Mr. Murray, having in that second edition, published in 1842, and in the subsequent editions of 1846 and so on—if he had, as he had there, added new routes or new matter which altered the former work, so as to introduce new matter, and to make it in that respect a different work, although substantially the same—if Mr. Murray wished to protect the portion thus introduced for the first time after the passing of the Act, he was bound to register the work at Stationers' Hall before he could sue; and not having done that, if the defendant or any one else simply pirated that, or simply took verbatim et literatim every portion of that which was new for the first time in the second or any other edition after the first, the defendant might with perfect impunity, and Mr. Murray would have no redress until he had registered his new work at Stationers' Hall, after which he might sue either at law or in equity. A case might be conceived in which the alterations made in a second or subsequent edition might be extremely trifling, even to the extent of a few words by way of correction; but a case might also be conceived in which a subsequent edition might contain four times the matter contained in the prior edition. A familiar instance of this occurred in law books, where the first edition might be a very slight treatise, but afterwards might swell in subsequent editions into one of great bulk. But it signified nothing, in his Honour's judgment, what was the extent of the alterations or additions so far as the work was thus made new, for the new portion contained in the work could not be protected by statute unless the party claiming copyright had registered it at Stationers' Hall. How did this operate as regarded the old part of the work? It left the copyright in that just where it was. Therefore, if the defendant or any other party took that which, being contained in the first edition of Mr. Murray's book, was also contained in the second or any subsequent edition, in that respect Mr. Murray might protect his copyright in that matter, because it was a book published prior to the passing of that Act, and prior to that period no registration was requisite to give the party a right to sue. This brought his Honour to another point—namely, that Mr. Murray could have no relief at all, and that the defendant might copy Mr. Murray's book ad libitum, from want of registration; but to this extent it had the effect, which was not an inconsiderable one, that he must discard all reference to Mr. Murray's book, except the first edition, because, as the second and subsequent editions were published after the passing of the Act of the 5 & 6 Vict., if the defendant had simply transcribed all that was new in the subsequent editions, but nothing that was contained in the first, clearly, according to the terms of the Act of Parliament, Mr. Murray could have no redress. Therefore, although he had been referred throughout to the edition of 1846, he must discard it, as he must also that of 1842, which he must take to have been published after the passing of the Act of Parliament, and he must confine himself entirely to the edition of 1838, which was the only edition published prior to the passing of the Act of 5 & 6 Vict. Still the edition of 1838, the first edition, did contain a vast bulk of what was in the subsequent editions. The question if much or little was not the point as to the 24th section of the Act of Victoria. Whatever was in the first edition Mr. Murray had a right to protect, whether it was contained in the subsequent editions or not; but whatever was new in the subsequent editions he had no right to protect. This brought him to consider how far the defendant's book was a piracy of anything contained in the first edition of Mr. Murray's book, published in 1838. Beyond all question, he was quite satisfied in his own mind that to some extent the defendant had made use of Mr. Murray's book. A great many instances were adduced in argument by counsel—some were stated on the bill, some upon affidavit, and some were merely suggested by counsel at the bar, for the purpose of showing that the defendant or whoever was the compiler of his book, had copied errors. That was the ordinary and familiar mode of trying the fact whether a defendant had used a plaintiff's book. But his Honour thought that the argument arising from the fact of copying errors had been pressed a little beyond what it would bear. The argument was used to show that the defendant's book had the same errors as that of Mr. Murray, and the use intended to be made of it was this, that when the defendant said he had obtained all his information, not from Mr. Murray's book, but from other sources, common to both, referring to different works, and a contest arose whether the defendant had unfairly used Mr. Murray's books, the fact that the defendant had copied errors would of course be a strong argument to convince him of that fact. He thought that a great many of the instances which he had cited were fully explained or did not apply. There was one instance which his Honour might mention without going into all of them. He did not feel the weight of the argument which was adduced from the peculiar expression used in both books, giving the height of a "mountain above the level of the sea." He did not understand that to be a "peculiar" expression, but a common expression, not only in our own but in other European languages. He found it over and over again in the defendant's work, the expressions—a certain mountain so many thousand feet "above the sea;" at other times, "above the level of the sea," or, "above the sea-level." He did not follow the argument which arose out of instances of that sort. Other instances applied to passages contained in the subsequent editions of Mr. Murray's work, but not in the first. But there were other passages which related to very trivial matters—the more trivial, generally speaking, the more conclusive—which left not the smallest doubt whatever that, to some extent, the defendant Bogue had used Mr. Murray's work. He did not suppose that the defendant had used the first edition, nor did he suppose that he had used any edition which was published before 1846; the probability was that he had used the latest edition when he published his book in 1852. The latest edition of Mr. Murray's book then, was in 1851. It was not material which he took. He was perfectly satisfied, from various little matters, that to some extent he had used Mr. Murray's book. He would mention one or two very trivial instances which led to that conclusion. There was one, however, the force of which he could not perceive, namely, that Mr. Murray, in his work, speaking of certain antiquities at Basle, used these words:—"From August the site of the Roman 'Augusta Rauracorum;'" whilst the defendant used these expressions:—"The Romish antiquities are chiefly from Augst." His Honour had no doubt that the defendant had taken it from Baedeker's German work. But there was a very slight instance which impressed his Honour's mind a great deal more than many which had been pressed at the bar. In the description of Basle, the defendant, in his book, spoke of the university library as "contained in a back-lying building, called 'Zur Mucke,' in a corner of the square in which stands the minster." The whole of the description of Basle in the defendant's book was transcribed from Baedeker, or, he should rather say, an abridged translation. No doubt it was generally taken from Baedeker's book; but Baedeker, when he spoke of the university library, spoke of it as a back-lying building; and although he mentioned it as a building in a recess, he did not mention it as being in the corner of a square, but Mr. Murray's book did say that it was in the corner of a square. He said, "The minster is situated in a square of considerable size, in one corner of which, in a recess, stands a building called 'Zur Mucke.'" He could not, therefore, help concluding that in this instance, although it might be very fairly, the idea of its being in the corner of a square had been taken from Mr. Murray's book. So, in speaking of the pictures at the picture-gallery, amongst others mention was made of a painting by Holbein, described in the defendant's work as a "School, painted in the fourteenth year of the artist's age, as a schoolmaster's sign-board, and used for several years at Basle." The whole of this is an abridged translation from Baedeker, who did not say that it had been so used at Basle, or that the schoolmaster used it as a sign-board at Basle; but Mr. Murray said: "Two representations of a school, painted by Holbein at the age of fourteen, and hung up as a sign over a schoolmaster's door in the town of Basle." He had no doubt that this was taken from Mr. Murray's book. It was but a trifling instance. He might mention another instance in the same description of Basle: the defendant's book mentioned "Some droll wood carvings, some of which represent the hares rising in a revolutionary manner against the sportsmen and dogs. These works are by Giger, and were executed in 1608." This was translated from Baedeker, who did not mention Giger; but Mr. Murray did, using the words "The Stadt-Rath-Sall is ornamented on the walls and roof with humorous reliefs by Mat. Giger (1609)." His Honour mentioned these as indications which satisfied him that to some extent (although it might be to a lawful extent, which was another question) use had been made by the defendant of Mr. Murray's book. This really was all that was to be deduced from any number of blunders which had been copied, or any number of instances of this or any other kind. Upon the whole he had found that in a great many passages—by no means in the whole of the book, or in any vast proportion, but in a great number of places, as far as the whole description of the town of Bade went, which occupied many pages—he found that the defendant's book was a translation (generally an abridged translation) from Baedeker's German work. This had made it necessary to examine that work, and to compare it with those published by the plaintiff and defendant, and had prevented him from giving judgment in the case before the holidays. However, this view might be taken of the case—he was putting an extreme one—even if Baedeker's work had been a translation into German of Mr. Murray's book, and even if the defendant, Mr. Bogue, had not known that Baedeker's work was a translation, he would never have allowed the plaintiff's work to be pirated in that way. In short, he had come to the conclusion that it was necessary to ascertain how far Baedeker's book itself, if it had been published as an English book in England, would have been a piracy of Mr. Murray's book which the Court would have interfered to prevent. He had gone through Baedeker's work sufficiently to test the general accuracy of the conclusion at which he had arrived as to the facts of the case. He found that Baedeker, in his preface, avowed the advantage he had derived from Mr. Murray's book: he spoke of it as being a book from which he had derived considerable benefit, and he expressed himself in regard to it in this way:—"The favourable reception which has fallen to the lot of the former attempts of the author has encouraged him to work this 'Guide of Switzerland,' which now appears very much improved from the former edition, and of this also, Mr. Murray's celebrated 'Travellers' Handbook' forms the groundwork; and it was only the frame in which this exclusively peculiar German work was put together." His Honour, after minutely comparing Baedeker's works with that of Mr. Murray, said the conclusion of fact at which he had arrived, was that Baedeker's was a book which had taken Mr. Murray's as its ground-work, but that it was substantially an original work. As to the comparison between Baedeker's work and the defendant's he found that in many parts it was literally a transcript, or an abridged transcript of the former work. Baedeker's book having been published in 1848, and the defendant's four years afterwards, it was to be expected that the defendant should use it, as he had done, not only very freely, but often as a simple servile copying. In other parts of the defendant's work, especially those which described scenery, he had freely taken extracts out of Dr. Cheever's work, the author of which was an American, who had travelled in Switzerland, and who had given very interesting and florid descriptions of the scenery in that country. Dr. Cheever's book no doubt was compiled by a person who had Mr. Murray's book in his hand, and Dr. Cheever, like every other rational man who travelled in Switzerland, would take Mr. Murray's book with him. His Honour did not see how it was possible for any human being who happened to have, as he naturally would have, and as he ought to have, Mr. Murray's "Handbook of Switzerland" with him when he was writing letters to his friends, or the journal of a tour which he afterwards intended to publish,—how he could avoid most fairly having passages which were in effect, if not servilely transcribed from, at least taken from, the ideas and particulars which were to be obtained from Mr. Murray's "Handbook." Nobody could pretend that Dr. Cheever's book was anything approaching to a piracy of Mr. Murray's. He had very great difficulty in arriving at the conclusion in his own mind whether, taking the defendant's own book to have been written and compiled with a certain use of Mr. Murray's book itself, and taking his book also to have been clearly compiled with a free and unlimited use of Mr. Baedeker's book and Dr. Cheever's book, although he did find instances in which there were copies from "Ebel" and the "Manuel des Voyageurs"— taking his book to have been composed in that way, and taking it to be a book which he ought to look at with great jealousy, by reason of its not professing to be the work of a person going to the spot and writing it from sources accessible to himself, but compiled from the labours of others — his Honour confessed he had great difficulty in coming to a conclusion in his own mind whether the use which had been made, and the benefit which had been derived by the defendant from Mr. Murray's book, directly or indirectly, was to such an extent as to amount to what Lord Cottenham called the "extraction of the vital parts of the book;" that is, whether it amounted to what, in other language, was described as a fair or unfair use of the book. The difficulty was obvious at first sight; for any two books which professed to be guides for travellers in Switzerland must, of necessity, have a great deal that was the same. When, for instance, the description of Basle was taken, which occurred in both the books, and which was almost an entire translation or transcript from Baedeker, could any one doubt that nine-tenths, and probably the remaining tenth also of the objects of curiosity in the place, would be mentioned by all? In some instances, Baedeker mentioned them in the same order in which Mr. Murray did; in others he mentioned them in a different order; but in the particular case of Basle the defendant followed Baedeker in the description. There was one thing, for example, which Mr. Murray did not mention in the subsequent editions of his work, for it had been done away with—his Honour meant the figure which was thus described in the defendant's work:—"A curious memorial of the local feuds of which one continually hears in the neighbourhood of the borders, existed until lately at Basle. This was the 'Lalenkönig,' often mentioned in the 'Folks-books' of the middle ages. A tower stood on the left bank of the Rhine, near the bridge, having a clock, from above which a wonderfully-carved human head of colossal size projected; a long tongue was thrust out of the mouth, which, being connected with the machinery of the clock, wagged derisively with every beat of the pendulum in the face of the people of Little Basle, on the opposite side of the river." He thought that with regard to the general scheme of the routes the defendant's book was altogether different from Mr. Murray's or Baedeker's. The plan of the defendant's book was much more limited than either. The conclusion to which his Honour had arrived upon the whole was, that he could not say that the defendant's book was an unfair use of Mr. Murray's work. He confessed that as he had gone through the works he had sometimes come to parts where he had a strong leaning one way, and then he had immediately afterwards come to other parts which gave him a strong leaning the other way. But the result was, that he was obliged to come to the conclusion—he would not say that he was absolutely and entirely satisfied that the use made of Mr. Murray's work might not be looked at by a judgment far more experienced and able than his own quite in a different light; but viewing it as he did, he could not say that this was a case for him to exercise the jurisdiction of the court in restraining the publication of the defendant's work. Of course he could not grant the injunction unless he was satisfied, which he was not, that an unfair use had been made of the plaintiff's work. He thought he might say this, although it had nothing to do with the grounds of his judgment, that he could not understand why Mr. Murray should be apprehensive of any mischief likely to arise from the publication of Mr. Bogue's book. He must say, without intending to depreciate Mr. Bogue's book at all, that it did appear to him that Mr. Murray's was so far superior that no person going to travel in Switzerland would, even with the greater expense of Mr. Murray's book, hesitate about choosing it; and the more so, as the defendant's book (though very able, very clever, and very useful, if there were none better), partly from mistranslations of Germans, and from other causes, had a number of errors, and sometimes of a practical kind. He mentioned this, because it was some satisfaction to him to think that, being obliged as he was to refuse this injunction, Mr. Murray's book, he believed, would take no hurt whatever from the publication of Mr. Bogue's work. He could only say that he did not know any book more deserving of protection than that of Mr. Murray. A more generally accurate and useful book it was difficult to meet with. All, no doubt, had derived great advantage from his work. However, for the reasons he had mentioned, being obliged, having regard to the statute, to confine himself to the first edition, and Mr. Murray not being able to protect anything new in the subsequent editions without registering them under the Act, and following out first a comparison of the defendant's book with the plaintiff's, and then of the defendant's with Baedeker's, and the plaintiff's with Baedeker's, and the same with Dr. Cheever's, he had been obliged to come to the conclusion that he ought not to grant the injunction.

The motion refused; the costs to be costs in the cause.

PENNY v. COOKE.

Production of documents.

Motion to produce documents, not in absolute possession of defendants, refused with costs.

In this case the suit was instituted by a party whose property was insured in the Westminster Fire Office, and who claimed against that office the full amount of the sum insured in respect of an alleged loss by fire. The only question in the cause was what evidence of loss should be given—the policy providing certain evidence which the plaintiff declined to give.

The defendants were three out of a numerous body of the directors who were at the time of the filing of the bill the treasurers of the office, and by the bill required to answer the usual interrogatory respecting documents in their possession relating to the matters in question in the cause. By their original answer they stated that there were at the office, but not otherwise in their possession, custody, or power, the deed of settlement of the company, and certain other documents relating to the matters in question in the cause; and in a further answer they set forth a list of such documents. In this further answer they stated that they had then ceased to be directors and treasurers of the society.

The plaintiff took out a summons under the new practice in chambers for the usual order for the production of the deed of settlement, and the other documents referred to in the further answer. The Vice-Chancellor directed the application to be heard in court. At the hearing an offer was made on behalf of the office (not by the defendants) to produce the deed and other documents at the office at all seasonable hours, and also before the examiner; and at the hearing if required. The plaintiff declined the offer.

Terrell, for the motion.

Walford, contrà.

The following cases were cited: (Taylor v. Russell, Cr. & Ph. 104; Murray v. Walker, Cr. & Ph. 114; Reid v. Langlois, 1 Mac. & G. 114; Glyn v. Caulfield, 3 Mac. & G. 468.)

The Vice-Chancellor said: This is a motion for the production of documents admitted not to be in the exclusive possession or control of the defendants. If they are in the possession or control of other persons, I cannot order them to be produced. The case before Lord Truro does not touch the point. If documents were in the possession of A., B., and C., the court could not order A. to produce them, because B. and C. might refuse, and leave A. to be sent to prison for not doing that which perhaps might not be in his power to do. The case before Lord Truro (a) was founded on an attempt to establish a partnership which failed, and all the documents had been deposited in the hands of trustees, with full power to deal with the fund. But in that case the defendants sufficiently represented the whole of the partners and shareholders for all the purposes of litigation, which is not the case here. And even if the defendants were still the treasurers of the company, the court would not make an order to take the documents out of their custody in the absence of the other parties.

Motion refused with costs.

BROOKS v. LEVEY.

Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 22.

In support of the prayer of the petition in this case, an application had been made under the provisions of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 22, (b) for a direction to

(b) All pleas, answers, disclaimers, examinations, affidavits, declarations, affirmations and attestations of honour in causes or matters depending in the High Court of Chancery, and also all acknowledgments required for the purpose of enrolling any deed in the said court, shall and may be sworn and the Clerks of Records and Writs to receive an affidavit which embodied certificates from the books of the Jewish Synagogue at Sydney, sworn to at the colony before Mr. Justice Dickenson and Mr. Justice A'Beckett. The Clerks of Records and Writs refused to receive the affidavit, as it had been sworn before the passing of that Act, without having it verified in the usual way, according to the practice of the court previous to the Act.

Glasse, in support of the application for receiving the evidence, submitted that the Act had a retrospective view, and therefore enabled the evidence to be received.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR then intimated that he thought the Act was retrospective, and allowed the evidence to be received, but on a subsequent day (Tuesday, Jan. 18), stated that he had conferred with the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors, and they were of opinion that the Act was not retrospective; but, as he had given leave to receive the affidavits, he would not disturb that decision. The case, however, must not be held to be a precedent.

V. C. TURNER'S COURT.

Reported by J. HENRY COOKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

O'BRIEN v. OSBORN.

Creditor—Deed—Covenant not to sue—Release.

A debtor conveyed a life estate and policies of assurance on his life to trustees upon trust, out of the rents of the life estate to keep up the policies, and then to pay the debts rateably from time to time mentioned in the first schedule. The surplus, if any, of the rents, and the policy monies when received, were to be applied in paying the debts in the second schedule, and the surplus on the fund to the debtor. All the debtors were required, if called upon, to make out their claims to the satisfaction of the trustees, and it was provided that, in consideration of the assignment, the debtor might remain in England without molestation, the creditors consenting not to sue him. A bill was filed by the personal representative of a creditor against the trustees to enforce the trusts of the deed, and the present suit was subsequently instituted by the same plaintiff against the debtor for enforcing the trust, and also for the administration accounts against the debtor's estate. After arrangements had been made, both causes came on together, and the first suit was dismissed and the costs arranged, and on the second (the present suit) decree for an account of rent now due to the plaintiff was made, under which the Master reported that nothing was due from the estate to him. On exceptions to the reports on a petition of rehearing:

Held, that the plaintiff's debt was established: that the proviso in the deed permitting the debtor to remain in England without molestation did not operate as a release: that the first suit for enforcing the trusts of the deed was not a forfeiture under the covenant not to sue, and that the covenant not to sue prevented the Statute of Limitations from running against the creditors during the life of the debtor (a)

This was a bill filed in 1849 by the executrix of the late Mr. William Neale, a creditor of the late Sir John Osborn, on behalf of herself and all others the unsatisfied creditors of that gentleman, against Lady Osborn, his widow and executrix. Mrs. O'Brien by her bill stated that in 1823 Sir John was indebted to her late husband in 1853*l.* 8*s.*, and interest on promissory notes, and to other persons in various sums; and that by a deed dated 9th April, 1822, Sir John had conveyed to George Lord Kenyon, and Thomas Metcalfe, all his estates to which he was entitled for life, in Bedfordshire; and that by an indenture dated 1st July, 1823, made between Sir John of the first part, Lord Kenyon and Mr. Metcalfe (as trustees) of the second part, and the creditors whose names appeared in the schedules, of the third part, by which it was recited that meetings of Sir John's creditors had been held, and that it had been resolved that the whole of the clear surplus income of the trust estates vested in the said trustees should be available for the benefit of his said creditors in manner thereinafter expressed, and that in consideration of the provision so to be made for payment of the said debts with interest, the said creditors had granted to the said Sir John Osborn such licence and immunity from suit and molestation as thereinafter was expressed. And after reciting that the amount of the several debts then claimed to be due and owing from the said Sir John Osborn to the several persons or parties thereto of the third part, was set opposite to their respective names in the first column of the said several schedules thereunder written; and so much of the same debts respectively as was due for arrears of interest on such debts respectively, up to the day of the date thereof, was specified in the second column, but which arrears of interest were for all purposes of the trust therein contained to be considered as principal; and the several securities held by the said several creditors respectively for securing their said respective debts were specified in the third column; it was declared that the said trustees should hold all the said lands and hereditaments for all the estate and interest of the said Sir John O., upon trust to pay the expenses, then to pay various sums, and as to the residue to pay and divide it into two shares bearing to each other the same proportion as the aggregate amounts of the debts comprised in the said first and second schedules respectively "when those aggregate amounts should have been adjusted and ascertained as thereinafter mentioned, and should pay and divide the share which should be proportionate to the debts comprised in the said first schedule, to and amongst the creditors in the same schedule, in proportion to the amount of their respective debts set after their respective names in the same schedule, after the same shall have been so adjusted or ascertained as aforesaid;" and with the share proportionate to the amount of the second schedule, or so much as was necessary, should effect and keep on foot the policies therein mentioned on the life of Sir John; and so much as was not necessary for that purpose or for paying the interest on all debts, the same, together with the policy moneys when received, to be held in trust, after paying all costs and expenses, to divide the same among the creditors named in the said second schedule, rateably to the amount of their respective debts set opposite to their respective names, after the same should be so ascertained and adjusted as aforesaid. The surplus, if any, of the estates was to be for Sir John, his executors, administrators, and assigns, for his own use and benefit. It was then provided that no creditor should be entitled to any benefit under the trusts thereof until he should, if thereunto required by the trustees, prove the amount of his debt by affidavit or otherwise to the reasonable satisfaction of the trustees, who were to be at liberty to admit the whole or any part of the debt on such evidence as they should think fit. And then followed this clause: "And this indenture further witnesseth, that in consideration of the provision hereby made for the payment of the said debts of the said Sir John Osborn, with interest as aforesaid, and the covenants and agreements on his part contained in the said recited indenture of 9th April 1822, the said several persons parties hereto (other than Sir John) do, and every of them doth hereby give and grant to the said Sir John Osborn, that in case he shall duly observe and perform the several covenants and agreements on his part contained in the last-mentioned indenture, and in all respects duly conform to the true intent and meaning thereof and of these presents, it shall be lawful for the said Sir John Osborn to live and reside and to attend to follow and negotiate his affairs and business in any place and in any manner which he shall think proper, without any let, suit, trouble, arrest, attachment, or other molestation or impediment whatever to be done or offered, or attempted or procured to be done, to the said Sir John Osborn in his person, or in his goods, chattels, and effects by the said several persons parties hereto or any of them, or their partners, executors, administrators, or assigns, &c. And also that in case any of the said several persons parties hereto, or his partner, executors, administrators, or assigns, &c. shall sue, arrest, &c. the said Sir John Osborn, contrary to the true intent and meaning of the licence hereinbefore contained, then his, her, or their debt or debts shall be considered as discharged, and the said Sir John Osborn shall be wholly released, &c. and these presents shall be pleaded in bar of any suit to recover such debt, &c. and such person or persons shall be excluded from all benefit and advantage under these presents." The creditors, after the death of Mr. Neale, which occurred in 1836, made an endeavour to effect some arrangment, but Mrs. O'Brien, who was Mr. Neale's executrix, refused to accede to it; and on the 1st of June, 1850, a deed of arrangement was executed between all the parties to the deed of 1823 (excepting, of course, Mr. Neale's executrix) and Lady Osborn, who was the executrix of Sir John, who had died, which, after reciting that the parts of the trust moneys therein mentioned had been duly distributed among the parties of the first part (the creditors), and that three sums of 4160*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* Three per Cents., 6986*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.* like stock, and 101*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.* cash, were standing in the names of the trustees, and were the only funds which had not been so distributed. It was argued that parties would be bound by any arrangement which the majority of the trustees and creditors might be able to effect. Mrs. O'Brien, in 1847, filed a bill against Lord Kenyon and the other trustees of the deed of 1823, to enforce its trusts, and then she filed the present bill for carrying the same trusts into execution, and for the administration of Sir John Osborn's estate, and to this suit his executrix was a party. Negotiations were entered into among all parties, which resulted in the two causes being brought on together for hearing in July 1851, when an order was pronounced, by consent of Mrs. O'Brien, dismissing the suit with costs against some of the defendants, and making provision for payment of the whole of the costs of that suit; and in the present suit an order was made at the same time for an account of what was due to the plaintiff for her said debt, and for the usual accounts in an administration suit. The Master, upon the reference thus directed, came to the conclusion that nothing was due to the plaintiff as executrix of her husband from the estate of Sir John Osborn. To this report the plaintiff excepted. Before, however, this report was made, a deed was executed, dated 8th Aug. 1851, and which was between Mrs. O'Brien, Lady Osborn, and Lord Kenyon and Mr. Metcalfe, which, after reciting the deed of June 1, 1850, and all the proceedings which had taken place since that time, witnessed that the following arrangement had been determined on: First, that out of the said trust funds there should be paid to the said plaintiff Emma Eliza O'Brien 1000*l.* Five per cent. Consols. and 45*l.* cash, and to the said Earl of Westmoreland the sum of 404*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* Consols, and 18*l.* 4*s.* 1*d.* cash, it being thereby admitted that the said Emma Eliza O'Brien and the said Earl of Westmoreland would thereby severally receive a dividend on the amounts due to them respectively proportionate to the dividend theretofore received under the said indenture of the 1st day of June 1850, by the said parties thereto respectively. And then after provision for certain costs it was declared that the said trustees, after making the transfers and payments aforesaid, should divide the residue of the said trust funds among the several persons parties of the first part to the said indentures of the 1st day of June 1850, and the said Emma Eliza O'Brien and the said Earl of Westmoreland, rateably and in proportion to the respective debts appearing by the second schedule of the said deed of the 1st day of July 1823 to be owing to them, and that all and every the parties receiving the amount so to be apportioned to them respectively should release the said George Lord Kenyon and Thomas Metcalfe from the trusts of the said indentures of the 1st day of July 1823, and of the indenture there recited, and of the first indenture of the 1st day of June 1850, and from all claims and demands under or in respect thereof or of either of them.

The cause was set down upon exceptions taken by the plaintiff to the Master's report, and upon a petition of rehearing which by direction of the court had been presented.

The arguments of counsel were fully adverted to in the judgment, as were letters of Sir John Osborn referring to the amount of the plaintiff's claim, and which are not set forth in the foregoing statement. The following cases and authorities were cited in support of the exceptions:—Year Book, 27 Hen. 8, 16, cited in Cardell v. Edwards, 1 Show. 46; Ivimy v. Veitch, 3 M. & W. 90; Hemp v. Garland, 4 Q. Monday, Aug. 2.—The VICE CHANCELLOR.—The first argument on the part of the petitioner, Lady Osborn, is, that there is no proof of the debts upon which to ground any decree at all. Now this is a view in which I cannot agree. Sir John, by the indenture of 1822, conveys certain property to Lord Kenyon and Mr. Metcalfe, with powers to them to make arrangements with his creditors enumerated in the schedule. Among these appears Mr. Neale's name, for the sum of 600*l.* Sir John, it must be remembered, was a party to this deed. Under the powers thus given to them, Lord Kenyon and Mr. Metcalfe came to an arrangement with the creditors, which is embodied in the indenture of the 1st July, 1823. By that deed trusts are declared of Sir John's life interests, for the payment of debts; viz. the trustees were to receive the rents, and after payment of all their costs to which they might be put, and certain annual charges and payments, the surplus was to be divided among the creditors named in the first and second schedules to that deed. The creditors named in the first schedule were to take payment out of the rents and profits received; and the creditors named in the second schedule were to take payment out of certain policies of insurance thereby directed to be kept on foot; any surplus rents were to be applied in payment of interest of the debts in the second schedule. In this second schedule William Neale's name appears with two sums of 600*l.*, and 753*l.* 8*s.* opposite, for principal money, and 57*l.* 10*s.* and 73*l.* 4*s.* 10*d.* as interest due on those sums respectively; it being stated that the 600*l.* is due on a promissory note, and that the 753*l.* is due for coals supplied to Sir John. The deed is particular in declaring that the sums appearing in the schedule are to be paid when the same shall have been adjusted and ascertained, and in the schedule itself the column in which the sums are entered is headed "amounts claimed." It was contended on these taken in Scotland or Ireland, or the Channel Islands, or in any colony, island, plantation, or place under the dominion of her Majesty in foreign parts, before any judge, court, notary public, or person lawfully authorized to administer oaths in such country, colony, island, plantation, or place respectively, or before any of her Majesty's consuls or vice-consuls in any foreign parts out of her Majesty's dominions; and the judges and other officers of the said Court of Chancery shall take judicial notice of the seal or signature as the case may be of any such court, judge, notary public, person, consul or vice-consul attested, appended or subscribed to any such plea, answers, disclaimers, examinations, affidavits, affirmations, attestations of honour, declarations, acknowledgments, or other documents to be used in the said court.

(a) It was argued that the deed was usurious; but that point had been decided in the negative by the Court of Exchequer, in the case of O'Brien v. Lord Kenyon, 6 Exch. Rep. p. 466.

V. C. TURNER'S COURT.

grounds, that this indenture has the effect barely of stating claims, and that it does not treat any of the amounts named as recognised debts. It is clear, on the recital, that the deed treats these merely as debts which are claimed to be due; and the declaration of trusts directs the rents and profits to be divided proportionally to the aggregate amounts of the sums in the two several schedules which shall be ascertained; and there is a proviso that no creditor shall be admitted to any benefit unless he shall prove his debt to the reasonable satisfaction of the trustees. On the deed alone then I admit it might fairly be argued, that the specification of these sums in the schedule did not amount to an admission of a debt of that amount by Sir John, or any of the other parties to the deed, but only that such an amount was claimed. But twenty-five years afterwards a bill is filed for carrying into execution the trusts of that indenture, and the answer of Sir John to that bill admits that the trustees had ascertained these debts. Now, it is said that the trustees were merely Sir John's agents for administering the trusts of the deed, and not for the purpose of binding him by their admissions or by ascertaining the amount of the debts. I think, however, that that could hardly have been the intention at the time of the execution of the deed; and it is not quite consistent with the clause enabling the trustees to admit any debt as ascertained upon such evidence as they should think fit. Then there is the letter of Sir John in 1828, in which he mentions being indebted to Mr. Neale in upwards of 1000*l.*; the amount is not quite accurate, but it is near enough to render it almost a certainty that he referred to these scheduled debts. Then Lady Osborn was a party to and executed the indenture of the 8th Aug. 1851, in which not only the existence of the debt is admitted, but its amount is taken at the sum appearing in the second schedule of the indenture, 1st July 1828, and provision is made for its immediate payment. It was then argued that the deed of 1st July 1828 operated as a release of this debt, and this argument was founded on the wording of the operative part of that deed, by which it is witnessed that in consideration of the provision thereby made for the payment of the said debts, with interest, and the covenants and agreements on the part of Sir John Osborn therein contained, the said persons parties thereto of the third part (viz. the creditors) gave and granted to Sir John that in case he should perform, &c. the covenants, &c. to be by him observed and performed, then he, Sir John, might live and reside, and attend to his affairs, in any place he might think proper, without suit, molestation, &c. to be offered, &c. to him in his person or in his goods, chattels, and effects, by any of the other persons parties thereto, or the partner, executor, administrator, or assignee of any of them. And it was argued that as Sir John had not done anything by which the plaintiff was prevented from getting the full benefit of that indenture of 1828, that provision operated in effect as a discharge of the debt, Neale having thus agreed, in consideration of the security furnished by the deed, not to take any other steps or proceedings against Sir John or his estate. But the court is bound to put a construction upon the instrument which will not defeat the intention of the parties; and it obviously never was intended that this deed should operate as a release. It is a mere licence by the creditors to enable their debtor to live unmolested in this country, in consideration of the trusts and the whole intention of the deed being carried into effect. The main intent was, that the debts in the schedule should in some way or other, at some future day, be paid or satisfied. It is utterly inconsistent with that intention to argue that the deed itself operated as a present discharge and satisfaction. The third point made was as to the question of forfeiture. It was said that this debt was forfeited in 1847, when this creditor (the present plaintiff) filed a bill in this court for the purpose of carrying into execution the trusts of the indenture of the 1st July, 1828, bringing forward two breaches of trusts, viz., the dropping of one of the policies which formed the fund to which this plaintiff had to look for the discharge of his debt; and, secondly, that some of the debtors whose names were originally in the second schedule had been transferred into the first schedule: and it is argued that this proceeding was such a suing or molesting Sir John as to bring the plaintiff within the operation of that ultimate proviso in the deed declaring that in case of any such suing or molestation by any creditor such creditor shall forfeit his claim. Now that clause does not go so far as the clause immediately preceding it, in which the goods also and estate and effects of Sir John are protected against any proceedings. Here it is only Sir John himself who is mentioned: and the purport of it evidently is to protect him personally from molestation. This suit was merely for the purpose of enforcing the deed itself: an object which it is impossible to conceive should work a forfeiture of rights under the deed. It never could have been intended that the deed should create a right and at the same time preclude the parties from protecting themselves on the right so created. The fourth branch of the argument was that addressed to the ground of usury; but that point has been already decided by the Ex. in favour of the legality of the deed. Then it was contended that the amount of the debt was unascertained at the date of the deed; and therefore, if the court gave a fixed and definite meaning to the scheduled debt, and took that as sufficient evidence without more, and as binding upon Sir John, it would by such a course give a force and meaning to the deed which it would not of itself possess; and Walkeyn v. Coutts, 3 Mer. 707, and Garrard v. Lord Lauderdale, 2 R. & M. 453, were cited to show that a creditor's deed of this description is merely voluntary. The true meaning probably of the deed is that Sir John leaves it to the trustees to arrange the amounts which might turn out to be due, and is therefore bound by what they have done. The deed would be revocable until an arrangement of the amounts was made; after that arrangement it would be irrevocable. Taking the judgment of the Ex. in this sense, I do not think it is objectionable. Besides, I think the deed might well be supported as a purchase by Sir John of a licence to live in England without exposing himself to molestation; and therefore as being made and entered into for valuable consideration. In that view it would be irrevocably valid from the time of its execution. Then it was in the next place urged that the debt was barred by the Statute of Limitations. But I think that bar is removed by the tenor of the whole deed, taken altogether, the licence to Sir John to live in England unmolested precluding this suit during his life. Besides, there are Sir John's own letters clearly referring to this debt in 1847. But then it was said that the debt, assuming it to have subsisted at the time of the decree, had in fact been satisfied since that time. It appears that, the Court of Ex. having determined that the deed was not usurious, the trustees came to an arrangement with all the creditors except the present plaintiff and Lord Westmoreland, by which their debts were to be paid rateably out of the moneys in the hands of the trustees; and thereupon all the creditors were to release the trustees from the trusts of the indentures of 1828 and 1851, and all claims in respect to them or either of them. Therefore, the question of satisfaction arises, since out of the trust funds the plaintiff was to receive the value of 1000*l.* Consols. and 45*l.* cash, and Lord Westmoreland was to receive 404*l.* Consols. and 18*l.* cash, and receive a rateable dividend out of the residue of the trust fund proportioned to their respective debts as appearing in the second schedule of the deed of 1828; and thereupon they were to release the trustees of all the trusts of those two deeds and of all claims, in respect that this arrangement was accepted and entered into by the present plaintiff and by Lord Westmoreland, who both of them signed the deed. Now what position did the parties occupy at the time of entering into it? The present plaintiff stood in this position, that she had released neither the estate nor Sir John. She had therefore a double claim; and the deed of 1851 is silent as to any claims against the estate of Sir John, but only speaks as to Sir John himself personally and the trustees; and therefore I think the deed of 1851 releases one part only of this double claim of the plaintiff, viz. her claim against the person of Sir John and against the trustees, but that it does not operate as a release of the estate.

COOK v. HALL.

Practice—Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act—Examination of witnesses de bene esse.

Witnesses de bene esse are to be examined orally, like other witnesses; and it is not a sufficient reason for departing from the mode of examination prescribed by the 30*th*, 31*st*, and 32*nd sections of the* 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, that the evidence is not published.

A motion was made in this cause for the examination of a particular witness de bene esse by commission, the witness residing at Cheltenham. The common order for the examination of the witness was obtained on the 20th Oct. 1852; but, the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86 coming into operation before the examination, and the 35th section abolishing commissions for such purposes where witnesses are within the jurisdiction, it became necessary to move for leave to examine, and for the appointment of a commissioner for the purpose.

Pearson now moved accordingly.

Cole for the defendant.—The new Act does not apply to examinations de bene esse. The 31st section says witnesses are to be examined "in the presence of the parties, their counsel, solicitors, or agents." Clearly, therefore, a secret examination cannot be permitted; and such is always the case where witnesses de bene esse are examined; for unless they are subsequently unable to give their testimony, their evidence so taken is never used. The 35th section merely says "that it shall not be necessary to sue out any commission," not that "no commission shall be issued;" and therefore it is amply within the power of the court to issue a commission in the common and ordinary manner for the examination of the witness, and not in any other way.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I have consulted with other judges of the court, and we are of opinion that the case of the examination of witnesses de bene esse is within the Act. The general clause, section 28, of the statute on this subject enacts, that "the mode of examining witnesses in causes" in this court, "and all the practice of the court in relation thereto, so far as such practice shall be inconsistent with the mode hereinafter prescribed of examining witnesses, and the practice in relation thereto, shall, from and after the time appointed for the commencement of this Act, be abolished." The clause afterwards proceeds to give the court a discretion to examine any particular witness, either one way or the other, upon interrogatories under a commission or viva voce; but the latter mode of examination is the general method prescribed by the Legislature, and which it is the duty of the court to adopt, unless there are special reasons to the contrary. The circumstance that the depositions taken de bene esse are not published, and will continue not to be published, is not a sufficient reason for departing from the general form of examination now to be used. The evidence will be known to the parties, but it will not be published or used.

It was ultimately ordered that an examiner should be appointed by both parties, and if they could not agree on a choice, his Honour said he would himself appoint one at chambers.

GOLDSMID v. STONEHEWER. (a)

Practice—Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act—Foreclosure—Representative trustee and cestui que trust.

An estate was mortgaged, and was then again mortgaged. The first mortgagee filed a claim for foreclosure and sale. The second mortgagee (a defendant), was the trustee for parties interested under a marriage settlement. The mortgagor was the tenant for life under the settlement, and the children were infants:

The Court held, that under rule 9 of the 42*nd section of the statute* 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, the infant cestuis que trust were sufficiently represented by the trustee (second mortgagee), but that the adult cestuis que trust must be parties. As, however, one of them, namely, the mortgagor, was before the court in that character, it was not necessary to serve him with the amended claim.

Some of the shares of the children under the settlement had also been settled by assignment to trustees, and it was held that they were not necessary parties.

This was a claim for foreclosure by a first mortgagee against the mortgagor and the second mortgagee. Before the hearing of the claim the second mortgagee filed an affidavit, in which he stated that the second mortgage was held by him as the trustee of a marriage settlement, under which trusts were declared for the husband and wife for their lives, and for the children of the marriage in remainder; and that some of the shares of the children had been again made the subject of other settlements. The case was opened to the court before the Act of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86 came into operation; and it then stood over at the request of the plaintiff, that the benefit of the new rules with regard to parties might be had.

Sir W. P. Wood and Goldsmid, for the plaintiff, submitted that under the above-stated circumstances the case came within the 9th rule of the 42nd section of the before-mentioned statute, by which it is directed that "in all suits concerning real or personal estate which is vested in trustees under a will, settlement, or otherwise, such trustees shall represent the persons beneficially interested under the trust, in the same manner and to the same extent as the executors or administrators in suits concerning personal estate represent the persons beneficially interested in such personal estate; and in such cases it shall not be necessary to make the persons beneficially interested parties to the suit, but the court may, upon consideration of the matter, on the hearing, if it shall so think fit, order such persons, or any of them, to be made parties." The learned counsel urged that the parties beneficially interested, as well under the original as under the subordinate settlements, were sufficiently represented on the record, and that it would be burdensomely expensive to make any of the cestuis que trust parties; the case being, if not in letter at least in spirit, within the relief intended by the Legislature to be afforded to the suitors of the court.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The question before me now is whether, in order that a decree for foreclosure may be made, it is sufficient that the trustees of moneys secured by a second mortgage are parties, without the cestuis que trust under the settlement being also parties. I have carefully considered the point with the desire of relieving the plaintiff, as far as it could be safely done, from the necessity of bringing the persons beneficially interested before the court. It was suggested, that the court might act on the principle which is applied in the case of executors, and which is now made applicable in proper cases to the trustees of real estate. If the mortgage had been made to the party, or become vested in him in the character of executor, it would be sufficient to make him a defendant without any of the persons beneficially interested, and the decree of the court would bind all the persons who might be so interested; but there is this difference between the case of an executor and that of a trustee, that the executor has the control of the whole estate of his testator, whilst the power of the trustee is limited to the particular fund which is the subject of the trust, and he has not necessarily the control of any other funds. I think therefore that the court should not, by a decree of foreclosure against the trustee only, without giving the cestuis que trust the opportunity of redeeming, foreclose all the parties interested under the settlement. Still it is clear that the infants and the trustees of the settlements which have been made of the shares of the children in remainder, cannot reasonably be expected to be in a position to redeem the estate; and not having the means of redeeming the mortgage, I think it is not necessary that they should be made parties. If the husband and wife and the adult persons interested under the trusts of the original settlement are made parties, the order may be made. It appears, however, that the husband, who is tenant for life under the settlement, is the mortgagor, and is a party therefore before the court in that character. It is said that if it be necessary to serve him with the amended claim, for the purpose of making him a party to the suit as one interested under the settlement, great delay would be occasioned, on account of his now residing in Australia. In that case, as he is already before the court, I am of opinion that the plaintiff may proceed without serving him with the claim a second time. The order will accordingly give him the right to redeem.

HANMAN v. RILEY. (a)

Practice—Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act—Representative trustee and cestui que trust—Foreclosure—Sale.

A claim was filed by a mortgagee of a term against the mortgagor's executors, and the devisees in trust of the mortgaged premises under the will of the mortgagor, and a sale was asked for instead of foreclosure, under section 47 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80; and it was asked that, under rule 9 of section 42 of the same statute, the Court would direct that the cestui que trust need not be further represented; and the plaintiff asked to be admitted a general creditor against the mortgagor's estate for so much of his debt as the mortgaged estate should fail to realise:

Held, first, that the cestuis que trust were sufficiently represented; and secondly, that the decree was directed to take an account of the debt due to the plaintiff on his mortgage, then a general account of personal estate and debts, and if deficient an account of the real estate, and as to incumbrances; and after the report the Court would give the plaintiff the benefit of his security, and such right as he might have against the general estate.

This was a claim filed by the mortgagee of a term against the executors of the mortgagor, and against the devisees in trust of the mortgaged estate under the will of the mortgagor. The defendants were devisees in fee of the mortgaged premises, the trusts of the will being not an immediate sale and conversion of that and the residue, but a trust to pay annual sums to the testator's widow for her use, and for the maintenance of Rebecca Riley, and subject thereto to accumulate the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises, until a sufficient sum could be raised to pay off any mortgage which might subsist thereon, and then to pay the rents and profits for the maintenance of Rebecca Riley until she should attain the age of twenty-one years, and thereafter to be for life for her separate use, and after her death upon trusts for her children who should be then living, and if there should be no child of her then living, upon trust for sale, and a direction to divide the money among several persons in the will named.

Southgate now applied for a sale instead of a foreclosure, under the authority of the 48th section of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, by which the court is enabled to direct sale of mortgaged property instead of foreclosure on such terms as it may think fit. He also asked, that the plaintiff having taken all necessary preliminary steps, under the 47th section of the same Act, might be admitted a general creditor against the estate of the testator, the mortgagor, for so much of the mortgage debt as the mortgaged premises should on sale fail to realise. The defendants were the persons who were authorised to sell and to give receipts for the purchase-money, and although there were cestuis que trusts under the will who were not before the court, the learned counsel relied on the 9th rule of the 42nd section of the same statute to show that they were not necessary parties. (b) In support of the relief beyond the sale the learned counsel cited King v. Smith, 2 Hare, 239.

Metcalfe, for the defendants, said there was no present power of sale vested in them, but only a prospective one. He submitted that the plaintiff should be content to have a sale of the term of 1000 years, for which his mortgage was granted, and that the defendants in their character of executors could probably profitably deal, but as to interfering with the fee they had by the will no authority.

Southgate, in reply.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The object of the Act, in enabling trustees of real estate to represent the parties beneficially interested in such property, was to save the expense of bringing before the court all the cestuis que trust, who generally, if necessary parties to the conveyance of the estate, were only so for the purpose of covenanting with the purchaser. The trustees convey to the purchaser the legal estate, and the court deals with the purchase money. In Goldsmid v. Stonehewer, (c) a claim for foreclosure was filed by the first mortgagee against the mortgagor and the second mortgagee, and the latter filed an affidavit shortly before the claim came on to be heard, stating that he was a trustee for a great number of other persons, who, upon the decree of foreclosure, would be entitled to redeem. That was the case of a settlement, and not of a will; and I was of opinion that, as the trustees would be in possession only of the settled funds, and not of funds applicable to the purpose of redemption, it would be proper to require that the tenant for life under the settlement, and the children who had attained twenty-one, should be made parties. This is the case of a will, in which the devisees in trust of the estate are also the executors, and are therefore the persons in whom any funds which may be applicable to the payment of the debts of the testator, and to the redemption of this estate, are vested. I do not think it will be necessary therefore in this case to make the cestuis que trust parties. The decree may be made in their absence. I have had occasion to consider the form of the decree in a suit by a mortgagee against the estate of the deceased mortgagor, seeking also to enforce his security as against the mortgaged premises. The right of the mortgagee in that character is foreclosure; and if he comes for that relief and obtains foreclosure he is satisfied: he has taken the estate for his debt. If, on the other hand, he comes against the general estate of the testator, he may possibly be satisfied out of the personal estate, as the primary fund for the payment of the mortgage debt, and may not need the application of the property comprised in his security. A decree, therefore, founded in the first instance on relief directly against the mortgaged premises, by way of foreclosure, and also against the general estate, would be inconsistent. The decree, which it has appeared to me to be right in such cases to take, is an account of what is due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on his mortgage; then to take the usual accounts of the personal estate and of the debts; and if the personal estate should appear to be insufficient for the payment of the debts, then an account of the other real estate of the testator; and ascertain whether there are any and what incumbrances on the real estates other than that of the plaintiff. When the case comes back it will be in a condition which will enable the court to give the plaintiff the benefit of his security, and also such right as he may have against the general estate; and I make that Order accordingly.

KING v. PHILLIPS.

Vesting of trust and mortgage estates.

A testator devised and bequeathed real and personal estate to A. and B. and the survivor of them, and the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of such survivor upon certain trusts, and appointed them and C. executors. A. never acted in the trusts, and did not prove the will; but he survived B. as co-trustee. A. then, by his will, devised and bequeathed all his mortgage and trust estates to D. and E., and appointed them executors, and they assented to act as trustees, and proved the will:

Held, that as he had never disclaimed the trusts of the will of the original testator, the legal estate in that testator's estate had passed to him as surviving trustee, and, as D. and E. had accepted the trusts of A.'s will, such legal estate was vested in them.

This was a creditor's suit instituted by Jane King, the only daughter and executrix of the will of William King, on behalf of herself and all other the creditors of John Phillips, deceased. The alleged debt due to Mr. King was 550*l.*, secured by covenant by John Phillips to mortgage freehold estate in the event of such freeholds falling to him in a particular contingent event. No mortgage was ever made. John Phillips by his will directed his debts to be paid, and devised his freehold hereditaments to Mr. Ward and Mr. Sanford, and the survivor of them to hold the same to them, and the survivor of them and the heirs and assigns of such survivor, upon certain trusts. The testator then, after making certain bequests, gave the residue of his real and personal estate, after payment of his debts, to Mr. Ward and Mr. Sanford, and the survivor of them, and the heirs, executors, administrators and assigns of such survivor, upon certain trusts. He appointed his wife executrix, and Mr. Ward and Mr. Sanford executors of his will. Mr. Phillips died in 1829, and Mr. Ward and Mrs. Phillips alone proved the will. Mr. Sanford never proved the will, nor in any manner acted in the trusts. Mr. Ward died in 1832, and Mr. Sanford died in 1847, having by his will devised all his trust and mortgage estates to Mr. Langton, and Mr. Bicknell, and appointed them executors who proved the will, and acted under the trusts of it. Mr. King died in 1848, leaving the plaintiff, his daughter and only child, whom he had appointed executrix of his will. The 550*l.* and a large arrear of interest still remained due from Mr. Phillips' estate. The bill prayed an account of the principal and interest due to the plaintiff, and, if need be, for a sale of the estate agreed to be mortgaged, and an account of the personal estate and its due administration. Mr. Langton and Mr. Bicknell, who were defendants, by their answer, after setting forth the facts as before detailed, as to the non-interference of Mr. Sanford with trusts of Mr. Phillips' will, and submitted whether the trust and mortgage estate even vested in them; and they each disclaimed all right or interest therein.

Smythe, for these defendants, submitted that, under the circumstances, they ought to be dismissed; and relied on the cases cited in 2 Jarman on Wills, 199.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I consider that these defendants have accepted and acted in the trusts of the testator's (Mr. Sanford) will, and as Mr. Sanford never in his lifetime disclaimed the devises or trusts of the will of Mr. Phillips, the estates by the last-mentioned will vested in him, Mr. Sanford, on his surviving Mr. Ward, his co-trustee, and passed to Mr. Langton and Mr. Bicknell accordingly. The usual decree will be made.

ESPEY v. LAKE.

Principal and surety—Guardian and ward—Undue influence.

A stepfather applied for a loan of 500l. for a party who required that the stepdaughter of the borrower should join in a joint and several promissory note for payment of the money, with large interest. The stepdaughter lived with her mother and stepfather from tender years, and was not twenty-two years of age, and the lender had married the sister of her mother, and was well acquainted with the fact of the whole property being 550l. The lender sued the stepdaughter on the note, and obtained a verdict; but the court granted an injunction to stay execution on account of the relative position of the makers of the note, and of the knowledge of it by the lender.

This was a bill filed for an injunction. The facts alleged on the bill were that the mother (Mrs. Speakman) of the plaintiff (Miss Espey) was the sister of the wife of the defendant Mr. Lake; that the plaintiff lived with her mother and her stepfather, Mr. Speakman, from very tender years, and that she attained the age of twenty-one in 1841; that in 1842 Mr. Speakman borrowed 500*l.* of Mr. Lake, upon an arrangement that he was to pay 10*l.* per cent. interest for five years, such interest to be secured by a promissory note from Speakman for 250*l.*, and the 500*l.* and interest at 5*l.* per cent. to be secured by the joint and several promissory note of Mr. Speakman and Miss Espey, payable to Mr. Lake on demand; that the note was accordingly made and handed to Mr. Lake, and the 500*l.* paid to Mr. Speakman; but it was understood between the parties, that it was not to be called in; that the plaintiff received no consideration for the promissory note; and that she made it solely on the representions of her mother and Mr. Speakman, her stepfather; that she was ignorant of the arrangement as to the payment of the 10*l.* per cent.; that for many years after the making of the note, Mr. Speakman was well able to pay the 500*l.*; and that he had paid the 250*l.* on the other note; that he was now in difficulties and embarrassed in his circumstances; that she was ignorant of the 500*l.* being unpaid, although she was constantly in the habit of meeting and speaking to Mr. Lake; that interest being alleged to be due on the note, Mr. Lake, in March, 1852, sued the plaintiff, and in Aug. following obtained a verdict for 525*l.*; and that the form of action prevented her from pleading fraud. The bill, therefore, prayed a perpetual injunction against Mr. Lake to prevent her from entering up judgment, and for suing out execution thereon, or alternatively, for other relief.

Rolt and Elderton, for the plaintiff, now moved for the injunction, and, on the question of undue influence having been exercised by Mr. Speakman over his stepdaughter, cited Archer v. Hudson, 7 Beav. 561; and Maitland v. Backhouse, 16 Sim. 58. On the question of the whole transaction not being explained to the plaintiff as surety, they relied upon Pidcock v. Bishop, 3 B. & C. 605; Green v. Gosden, 11 L. J. Rep. N. S. 24 C. P.; and Owen v. Homan, 3 Mac. & G. 378.

Daniel and C. M. Roupell, for the defendant, remarked on the delay in coming to a Court of Equity, and not preventing the costs of an action, and insisted that the plaintiff having failed in establishing by her evidence the case of fraud she had charged in the bill, she was not entitled to the equity, if she had any, on any other ground even if substantiated by evidence, as was laid down by Lord Cottenham, in Wilde v. Gibson, 1 Ho. of Lords Cases. If the court should be disposed, however, to give any aid, it ought to be only on the terms of the money being brought into court. The other arguments are sufficiently set forth and commented on in the judgment.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—This is an application to restrain the defendant from entering up judgment, and to stay execution upon the verdict he has obtained. I take it to be quite clear, that the principles of this court go to this extent, that in the case of securities taken from a person just of age, living under the influence, and in the house of another person, with a relation subsisting between that other person and the party from whom the security is taken, which constitutes anything like a trust, or anything approaching the relation of guardian and ward, or standing in loco parentis to the surety, this court will not allow a security of that description to be enforced against the party from whom it is taken, unless it is perfectly satisfied that that security was given freely and voluntarily, and independently of any influence which might be exercised by the party in whose favour the security was given, or by the party who was the medium or instrument of obtaining the security from the person from whom it was taken. These being the principles of the court let us see how far the circumstances of this case are affected by them. In this case the young lady who is the plaintiff attained the age of twenty-one in the month of December, 1841. She was living in the house of her stepfather, Mr. Speakman, and her mother, Mrs. Speakman. At the end of 1842 her stepfather proposes to borrow from Lake 500*l*. I do not enter into the particular terms proposed. It is said that he proposed to pay 10*l*. per cent. for five years, and 5*l*. per cent. afterwards; but the fact is undoubtedly that the loan was to be a loan by Lake to Speakman, the stepfather of the young lady. Now what next took place? I take it from Lake's own affidavit in reply in this case. Lake says, "I admit that I asked for security, and that he (Speakman) said, he had no security to offer, but that of his stepdaughter, meaning Miss Espey." It is quite clear that Lake knew that the only security he could have was that of the plaintiff, the stepdaughter, who was living in the house with her stepfather at the time. Lake knowing all these circumstances, the result was that the joint and several promissory note, dated the 1st Jan. 1843, was given by Mary Espey, jointly with Speakman, for securing that sum. It is said by Lake that he took no part in it; that he left it entirely to Speakman. I impute no moral fraud to Lake in the course of this transaction. I believe there was no moral fraud on his part; I am glad to be able to say that. He might have been mistaken as to the mode of securing the 10 per cent., or not have been aware of the principles which guide the court as to securities taken from a person in the situation in which Miss Espey was. But what does he say? Why, that he left it wholly to Speakman. That is, he himself allows a party standing in the relation of guardian to this young lady to persuade her to join in this security for the sum of 500*l*. How can that be permitted consistently with the principles of the court? How can a security of that kind be maintained under such circumstances? Then it is left to a person who had influence over his young ward, if I may so express myself, to induce her to join in this security, putting her more directly under this undue influence than if the creditor had applied for the security himself. It is said that this was a matter which had not been put in issue by the bill. Perhaps the bill might have done that more distinctly, but in my opinion the bill sufficiently brings forward such a case, for it says that at the time Lake agreed to lend the 500*l*., it was well known that she had no property, except a sum of 550*l*.; that she was applied to to join Speakman in a promissory note for 500*l*., and she did so on the representation that she would never be called upon to pay the note, and influenced by the representation of her mother and Mr. Speakman; but, as was well known to Lake, without receiving any consideration. In a subsequent part of the bill, it is alleged that during thirteen years previously this lady had continued residing in the house of Speakman and his wife. These facts raise the equities upon which this motion was argued in the opening. But it is said that there are other circumstances alleged in the bill which rest the equity, not on the law of the case, as applied to the circumstances to which I have referred, but on a case of personal fraud; and that no personal fraud being proved, this is brought within the principle laid by Lord Cottenham in Wilde v. Gibson; but Lord Cottenham, if I recollect rightly, qualified that principle in subsequent cases. I take it to be the law of this court, that it is not because there are superadded allegations of fraud upon circumstances which of themselves would be sufficient to maintain an equity that the original equity is not to be attended to by the court. In that principle, with that explanation, I fully agree with the dictum laid down in Wilde v. Gibson. In this present case there is nothing which would take the case out of Archer v. Hudson and the subsequent case of Maitland v. Backhouse, except the time which has elapsed. The question has been whether there have been circumstances in this case before me which would destroy the original equity? I see no circumstance arising in reference to the lapse of time which would destroy that equity. It has been stated that the lady has been participating in the profits of the business since the transaction; a business carried on with this borrowed capital. If there be any facts of this kind, the defendant may allege them and make use of them when proved at the hearing of the cause; but I must deal with this injunction upon the evidence before me, and in that I see nothing which deprives her of her equity. I think there is sufficient to authorise me to restrain execution upon the judgment at law. Another question was raised in the case, but I do not think it necessary to give any opinion upon that, although it is of considerable importance, namely, to what extent a creditor is bound to communicate with the surety the whole nature of any arrangements which may have been entered into between the creditor and the principal debtor, when all those facts do not appear on the instrument constituting the suretyship. I think that is too important a point to dispose of without more fully looking into the case. It is not necessary on this occasion to decide it. I do think that, upon what I may call the pure equity of this case, there is sufficient ground for granting the injunction further than to stay execution, without putting the plaintiff to the terms of paying the money into court.

Practice — Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act — Indorsement on bill or claim—Amendment.

Where a plaintiff obtained an order for service of copies of the bill on defendants out of the jurisdiction, and a time was fixed for appearance, the Court ordered the indorsement on the bill to be altered to correspond with the time mentioned in the order in cases where it was found necessary to make such variation.

Some of the defendants in this case were out of the jurisdiction, and it became necessary to serve them with copies of the printed bill pursuant to the 8rd section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86; and on such order being obtained the printed bill was tendered to the Clerk of Records and Writs indorsed in blank with the time for entering appearance, the eight days limited by form in the schedule to the Act being insufficient, as one defendant lived at Naples, another at Pesch, and others in other parts of Hungary. That officer, however, refused to file the bill unless it were indorsed in the form directed by the schedule of the Act, and accordingly the eight days were thereon specified.

Tripp now moved for leave to amend the indorsement on the printed bill, by substituting such periods as might be found sufficient for the purpose.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—This point has been brought before the judges of the court. The Act directs that the defendant shall be served "with a printed bill of complaint or claim, with an indorsement thereon, in the form or to the effect set out in the schedule, with such variations as circumstances may require." The form of the indorsement given in the schedule is applicable to all ordinary cases where the defendants are within the jurisdiction. If the defendants are out of the jurisdiction, and it is necessary to obtain an order of the court fixing special terms or times of service, the indorsement may be altered, and the time fixed by the court inserted instead of the eight days, or such other variation may be made as the circumstances may require.

Dismissal of Bill—Compromise—Trustees—Consent—Sanction of the Court.

Where a bill is filed to which executors or trustees are parties, and it is proposed that the same shall be compromised upon stated terms, the Court will not permit the bill to be dismissed until it is satisfied that the arrangement is such as is proper for the executors or trustees to enter into. Such a bill may, however, be dismissed simply by consent.

This was a motion for the dismissal of the bill by consent of all parties. The suit was instituted by parties interested in an estate, and the defendants were the executors of the testator whose estate was in dispute. The motion was made on behalf of the plaintiffs, who had arranged among themselves as to the mode of distribution of the property among them, and the terms of that arrangement for compromise had been settled between them and the defendants, one of which was that the bill should be dismissed.

Bird, for the plaintiffs, in support of the motion asked that it might be made upon the terms which had been come to among the parties.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Applications of this kind are not unfrequent, in which executors and trustees have entered into agreements for the termination of suits. There is no doubt, that, if the court makes an order for the dismissal of a bill, to which executors or trustees are parties, upon the terms which the parties have agreed to, the terms of such an arrangement would be afterwards set up as having been sanctioned by the court. The bill may be dismissed by consent and the parties may carry out their arrangements out of court; but, if they are to be made part of the order of the court, the court must be satisfied that the arrangement is proper for the executors or trustees to enter into.

ORTELL v. LEPAGE.

Decree in suit in India—Staying proceedings in suit in England for the same purpose.

V. C. STUART'S COURT.

An administrator de bonis non of an intestate's estate in India, who was also appointed attorney for the administratrix, resident in England, instituted a suit in India for an account of certain partnership transactions, and this suit resulted in a compromise, upon which a final decree in India was made. Previous to this final decree being made the administratrix instituted a suit in England for a similar purpose, though alleged to be more extensive in its object than the India suit, and the defendant put in an answer which was excepted to for insufficiency. Upon the final decree in India being made the defendant moved to stay all proceedings in the English suit, and the court granted the application without prejudice to any proceedings to be adopted with reference to the decree and proceedings in India.

The circumstances of this case, which was argued before Sir J. Parker upon a plea which his Honour then overruled, are fully stated in 18 Law T. Rep. 219. The defendant afterwards put in his answer, and to this the plaintiff filed exceptions which were set down to be argued. In the meanwhile the proceedings in the suit in India were continued, and on the 2nd of July last a final decree therein was made. Notice of this decree was received in England on the 16th Aug. The decree,—after reciting a previous decree referring it to the Master to take an account of the partnership dealings between Thomas Ostell and the defendant from the commencement of the partnership until the 30th Dec. 1841, and between Margaret Ostell, the present plaintiff, and the defendant to the 21st Oct. 1848, and directing that Lepage should be at liberty to lay before the said Master any proposal for a compromise on payment of a fixed sum instead of taking such accounts, and if he did so, that the Master should inquire and state whether it would be for the benefit of Olivia M. M. Ostell, the infant, that such proposal should be accepted; and reciting the Master's report whereby, amongst other things, he found that certain terms of compromise proposed were for the benefit of the infant O. M. M. Ostell,—proceeded as follows: "This court doth decree and declare that the proposal for compromise mentioned in the said report of the said Master is for the benefit of O. M. M. Ostell, the infant daughter of the said Thomas Ostell in the said report named, and ought to be accepted, and doth therefore order and decree the same accordingly; and this court doth order that the said defendant R. C. Lepage be at liberty, according to the terms of the said compromise, to purchase all the interest of the said infant and of the said complainant as such administrator and such attorney of the said Margaret Ostell as in the pleadings mentioned, in the matters in dispute, for the sum of 63,842 Company's rupees 8 annas 11 pice, and that he do pay to the complainant Robert Molloy, as such administrator and attorney as aforesaid, the sum of 12,768 Company's rupees 8 annas 3 pice, in part payment of the said principal sum of 63,842 Company's rupees 8 annas 11 pice, and do pay the balance or residue of the said sum by instalments, bearing interest at the rate of 5*l*. per cent. per annum, that is to say, &c. And it is further ordered that the said instalments be secured by a bond of the said defendant R. C. Lepage, together with an assignment by way of mortgage of all and singular the stock-in-trade, property, and effects now on the premises of the said defendant, situate in Tank-square in Calcutta, and all such other property and effects as shall from time to time be added to the said stock and effects, with liberty to the said defendant to redeem the said mortgage at any time before the expiration of the period limited for payment of the said debts. And it is further ordered that all necessary and proper deeds, conveyances, and assurances for effecting the said compromise be executed, and that all necessary parties do join therein; and the said master is to settle the said bond, assignment, deeds, conveyances, and assurances; and the first-mentioned sum of 12,768 Company's rupees 8 annas 3 pice shall be paid by the said defendant as aforesaid, upon the tender to him of an assignment and release duly executed by the said complainant as such administrator and attorney as aforesaid, in respect of the interest so to be purchased by the defendant as aforesaid in the partnership property in the pleadings mentioned. And it is further ordered that the said defendant, R. C. Lepage, do pay to the solicitor of the said complainant, R. Molloy, his costs of this suit, when the same shall have been taxed by the Taxing Master of this court; and all parties are to be at liberty to apply to this court from time to time as they may be advised."

W. M. James and Cotton, on behalf of the defendant in the present suit, now moved that all further proceedings in the suit might be stayed. They referred to Garcias v. Ricardo, 14 Sim. 255; Harrison v. Gurney, 2 J. & W. 563; and Ostell v. Lepage, 18 Law T. Rep. 219.

Russell and Bagshawe, for the plaintiff, opposed the motion, upon the grounds stated in the Vice-Chancellor's judgment.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that this was an application to stay proceedings in a suit in this court, instituted by a legal personal representative, in order to recover for the estate which he represented what might be found due in respect of certain partnership transactions. The person whom the plaintiff represented was engaged in a bookselling business in Calcutta. It appeared upon the pleadings that a litigation for the same purpose substantially as in this suit had been instituted in the court in Calcutta, and it was now brought to the attention of this court by the present motion that that litigation in Calcutta instituted not by the present plaintiff, but by a person who in India became under the authority of the plaintiff the representative of the same estate which was here represented by the plaintiff, had ended in a final decree, which had established that a certain sum was due to the estate in respect of the partnership transactions which were the subjects of both suits. His Honour was therefore very naturally asked on the part of the defendant that, there being this decree of a court of competent jurisdiction, the present proceedings in this court might be stayed. Against this it was urged that the relief prayed in this suit was more extensive than that in the suit in India; but he was not satisfied that there was a perfectly just ground for that contention. It was next urged that the suit in the court in Calcutta was not between the same parties who were suing in this court, for the plaintiff who represented the estate in Calcutta was not the same individual who sued here; but he became the representative under the authority of the person, who was suing in this court, and his Honour could not therefore pay attention to that part of the argument which asked him, on the ground that the two suits were not between the same parties, to refuse this motion. Next it was contended that the suit in India was settled on a compromise under the authority of that court. That would be no objection to the finality of the decree, if a party having authority to conduct the proceedings arrived at that end by a compromise authorised by the court. If that was done by a party having sufficient authority, the decree was and ought to be binding; and even if done without such authority, proceedings must be taken of a nature very different to the pleadings in this suit in order to get rid of that decree; and therefore on that ground his Honour saw no reason for refusing this motion. It was finally said that what appeared on the face of the decree, and what the court had now before it as to the proceedings in India, showed that this court ought not to recognise the proceedings in the court in Calcutta. The decree, however, appeared to be a regular decree, directing accounts to be taken in the first instance, and then a final decree directing a compromise and sanctioning the amount to be paid. The decree, therefore, in form was one which for the present purpose this court must recognise. But the question to be considered was whether, this decree being for the same object and concerning the same estate, any good purpose could be answered by allowing the present litigation, which assumed that there had been no final decree in India, to go on in its present shape. Upon that part of the case it was conceded on the part of the plaintiff, who wished to go on, that some alteration should be made in the frame of the proceedings in the present suit, because it was suggested that by amendment the matter could be put into a shape in which the court might decide on the finality of the decree in India. His Honour could not, however, entertain that view of the case. It was plain that a bill to set aside the decree in India, or to get more extensive relief in respect of the matters in this case than was given by that decree, must be framed on a totally different plan from the bill in the present suit, which had proceeded so far as to obtain an answer, which was excepted to for insufficiency. But then it was said that, in order to put the proceedings into a proper form by amendment or by filing another bill to set aside the decree, some discovery ought to be allowed from the defendant in this suit, and that the court should see before it stayed proceedings that a sufficient answer was put in to the bill filed in this court. It was plain however upon all sound rules for conducting the proceedings in this court, that the discovery sought to be obtained by means of the answer ought to be ancillary to the relief prayed by the bill; and the relief now prayed was wholly inconsistent with any case, if any case could be made, for setting aside the decree in India. It would be, therefore, entirely useless to allow this suit to proceed for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to obtain this discovery by the bill as at present framed. His Honour therefore made an order staying all proceedings in this court, without prejudice to any proceedings the plaintiff might be advised to adopt with reference to the decree and proceedings in India.

V. C. STUART'S COURT.

Russell and Bagshawe asked that the words "or otherwise" might be added to the order; but

The VICE-CHANCELLOR refused to allow the addition to be made.

ROBERTS v. COLLETT.

Practice—Married Woman—Settlement.

Where the share of a married woman was not ascertained, but would necessarily be less than 300l. and might not much exceed 200l., the Court, under the circumstances of the case, ordered, without an examination of the wife, that the same should be paid to the husband.

In this case, which was heard as a short cause, a married woman was entitled to a share of property, the amount of which, being subject to be reduced by the taxation of the costs, could not at present be precisely ascertained. The share, however, would certainly be less than 300l. and probably not much above 200l.

Bagshawe, jun. appeared for the plaintiff and proposed as to this share, that the lady might be examined by the court at some future day, when the amount of her share had been ascertained, and without requiring the attendance of the other parties to the suit; or that the court should take the lady's consent at once.

Bagshawe, sen., Selwyn, and J. V. Prior, appeared for other parties.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that this fund not being yet ascertained, he could not now take the consent of this lady as to the disposal of it. As however it appeared that the amount must be less than 300l. and might not much exceed 200l. he thought it was a case in which the court might exercise a discretion, and he would therefore at once order that the sum should be paid to the husband.

Practice—Costs.

Where the usual papers had not been left with the court, the plaintiff's solicitor was ordered personally to pay to the defendant the costs of the day.

Upon this case, which was a short claim, being called on,

Bates appeared for the plaintiff, and Brodrick for the defendant.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that the solicitor for the plaintiff had not thought proper to leave the usual papers with the proper officer of the court, and he should therefore order that the cause be struck out, and that the plaintiff's solicitor should personally pay to the defendant the costs of the day.

SMITH v. ROBINSON.

Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 48—Sale of mortgaged property.

Where a mortgagor had appeared in a suit instituted against him for foreclosure, but did not appear at the hearing, the Court declined to direct an immediate sale of the property under the above section.

This was a claim for foreclosure of certain copyhold property which had been mortgaged by the two defendants, who were entitled as tenants in common. The defendants appeared in the cause. The claim was set down as short, and notice of this was given to the defendants.

Shapter appeared for the plaintiff, and asked that the court should, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 48, direct an immediate sale of the property.

There were no subsequent charges on the court rolls. The defendants did not appear at the hearing.

Thursday, Jan. 20.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that this claim was for foreclosure, and the question upon which he reserved his opinion was whether, upon the construction of the 48th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, the plaintiff was entitled to have, instead of a foreclosure, an immediate decree for sale. On looking at the words of the section it appeared that the effect of it was to supply that, the want of which had been the occasion of great injustice, great delay, and considerable expense, viz. an authority to direct the sale of an estate which was the subject of a claim for foreclosure. Now in the present case his Honour was pressed for an immediate order for sale in the absence of the parties entitled to the equity of redemption. The two defendants, who were the mortgagors, had been served with a writ of summons upon the claim, had appeared in the cause, but did not appear now, although they had been served with notice of the claim being set down as a short claim. The prayer of the claim did not ask for a sale; and in every case his Honour considered that the owner of the equity of redemption was entitled to a fair opportunity to redeem. This claim, with perfect propriety, asked for an account to be taken of what was due, and for payment, or in the alternative for foreclosure. There would be ample authority for effecting a sale hereafter, but his Honour thought it would be too harsh to direct an immediate sale, as was proposed. He should, therefore, direct that his chief clerk should ascertain the amount due on account of the mortgage, and fix a short time for payment, and that in default of payment the property should be sold, with the approbation of the court.

BRYSON v. THE WARWICK AND BIRMINGHAM CANAL COMPANY.

Practice—Evidence.

Where the depositions of some witnesses in a cause had been taken down in the hand-writing of an examiner, and signed by them, but were not signed by the examiner, all the witnesses not having been examined, and the examiner afterwards died, the Court ordered the depositions to be received without the examiner's signature.

De Gex, on behalf of the plaintiff in this case, moved that the depositions of witnesses who had been examined before the late examiner, Mr. Plumer, might be received without having been authenticated by his signature. The depositions were in Mr. Plumer's hand-writing and signed by the witnesses; but as there were other witnesses to be examined, Mr. Plumer had deferred affixing his signature until the depositions of the witnesses were complete. The death of Mr. Plumer, however, had occurred before all the depositions had been taken.

H. Cadman Jones, for one of the defendants, submitted that he should be at liberty again to cross-examine some of the witnesses whose depositions had been taken.

Hallett, Eklerton, Southgate, and Baggallay, appeared for other defendants.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR considered that the application on behalf of the plaintiff was very reasonable, and therefore ordered that the depositions in question should be received, but declined to allow another cross-examination of the witnesses.

Practice—Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act—Replication.

Where a case is about to be brought before the court upon motion for a decretal order, it is not necessary to file a replication pursuant to the 26th section of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, and the 28th order of the General Order of 7th Aug. 1852.

Secus, where the motion for the decretal order has been made and has failed.

Hare moved in the above suit that the Clerk of Records and Writs might be directed to file a replication. The application was made under the 26th section of the Chancery Practice Amendment Act, by which it is enacted that in suits commenced by bill, where notice of motion for a decree or decretal order shall not have been given, or, having been given, where a decree or decretal order shall not have been made thereon, issue shall be joined by filing a replication in the form or to the effect of the replication now in use. The 28th of the General Orders of 7th Aug. 1852 directs issue to be joined by filing a replication in the form or to the effect of the replication now in use. In the present case a notice of motion had been given by the plaintiff for a decretal order under the 22nd of the same Orders; but the Clerk of Records and Writs considered that there was an inconsistency in asking to file a replication when the defendant had had notice of motion for a decree, the Act and Orders, as he said, not contemplating such a course.

W. M. James and Chapman Barber (amici curiæ).—The Act and the order founded upon it were only intended to apply to cases where the motion for the decretal order or decree has not succeeded.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Where the motion has been made, and has failed, then the filing of the replication is necessary; but here notice of the motion has been given, but the motion has not been made, and, therefore, the replication is at present needless. The motion being now pending, I must refuse the application.

Attorney—Sufficiency of signed bill—Name of the court in which business done.

A bill of costs contained items for business in one of the Superior Common Law Courts, but did not contain any information as to which court, and the defendant did not prove at the trial that any further information was practically wanted for taxation:

Held, that the bill was sufficient under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 76, s. 37:

Attending in court, when, on motion by counsel, a rule was made to refer all matters in dispute."

The other parts of the bill related to business done at the Middlesex sessions. It was objected that the bill was insufficient, because there was nothing in it to indicate in which of the Common Law Courts the above items of business were done; on the other side it was contended that the whole bill was not thereby vitiated. The judge directed a nonsuit, with leave to the plaintiff to move to set it aside and enter a verdict for 100*l.*, the sum admitted to be due on the whole account, or for such portion of the bill as the court should think fit, if the bill should not be vitiated altogether.

Keating, in Trinity Term 1852, obtained a rule nisi accordingly.

Atherton and Milward showed cause.—First, it does not appear by the bill of costs that the business, the items of which are now pointed out, was done in any of the Superior Courts at Common Law. It might have been done in an inferior court; for by the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 27 (for regulating the proceedings in the Borough Courts), sect. 3, all personal actions brought in the Borough Courts shall be commenced by writ of summons: (Lewis v. Primrose, 6 Q.B. 625; Martindale v. Falkner, 2 C. B. 706; Engleheart v. Moore, 15 M. & W. 548; Ivimey v. Marks, 16 M. & W. 843; Sargent v. Gannon, 7 C. B. 742; Dimes v. Wright, 8 C. B. 831; Anderson v. Boynton, 13 Q. B. 308; Keene v. Ward, 13 Q. B. 515; Cozens v. Graham, 16 Jur. 952.) Secondly, as to entering a verdict for the plaintiff for such portion of the costs as to which the objection does not apply. The bill is an entire thing, and the issue taken on the plea is as to the entire bill, and it is not divisible. This point seems to have been decided in Ivimey v. Marks. There is a direct decision against splitting the bill in the manner proposed, Hill v. Humphreys, 2 B. & P. 343. That was upon the old statute, but is also applicable to 6 & 7 Vict. c. 76, so far as this point is concerned: (Drew v. Clifford, 1 Ry. & Moo. 280; Waller v. Lacy, 1 M. & G. 54; Page v. Watkins, 16 Law T. Rep. 512.)

Keating, in support of the rule.—By the 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, s. 23, the bill was required to be taxed in the court in which the major part of the business was done, and there was some reason for naming the court in the bill, but it was once doubted even then whether it was necessary: (Lester v. Lazarus, 2 C. M. R. 665.) But since the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 76, the bill may be taxed in any of the Superior Courts, and the reason for naming the court in the bill no longer exists. It has, however, been held that the court need not be expressly named, if it can be collected from the bill generally, by reasonable intendment. As to the second point, Drew v. Clifford and Waller v. Lacy are authorities for plaintiffs recovering those items in the bill for business as to which the objection of the want of the name of the court does not apply. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Saturday, Nov. 20.—CAMPBELL, C. J.—In this case the question was whether an attorney's bill, intended to be delivered according to the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 78, s. 37, was sufficient. The bill related to several transactions, all of which were properly described, except that there were items to a small amount in two actions for writs of summons and other proceedings such as would occur in actions in the Superior Courts; and there was nothing to indicate in what courts these actions were brought. The defendant objected that the bill was therefore invalid. Ivimey v. Marks, 16 M. & W. 843; Engleheart v. Moore, 15 M. & W. 548; Dimes v. Wright, 1 C. B. 831, were cited, in which the rule was laid down that a charge for an item in an action, without specifying in what court the action is brought, renders the bill bad, the reason assigned being, that the client ought to be enabled by the bill to obtain advice as to taxation without the need of further question. But after considering the provisions of the statute, the change that has been made in the taxation of costs, the reason assigned for the rule, and the late cases upon the subject, we have come to the conclusion that the objection ought not to be sustained. The stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37, forbids an action until a bill of fees, charges, and disbursements shall have been delivered. No requisites for the bill are particularised; there is no requirement that the court should be specified; and the section further declares that the plaintiff is not bound in the first instance, in proving a compliance with the Act, to prove the contents of the bill delivered; but it is presumed sufficient, unless the defendant proves that it is not such a bill as constitutes a bonâ fide compliance with this Act. The defendant here does not prove that any further information was practically wanted for taxation, or suggest that the name of the court in which the two writs of summons were issued would have been of any use to him; nor does he contend that the Act has not in this case been bonâ fide complied with, unless the arbitrary rule to be deduced from the cases above mentioned, that the name of the court as to every item is indispensable, can be maintained. Now this rule as applied to the existing statute appears to have originated in a mistake. It was first introduced by judges applying the provisions of the 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, s. 23; and then there was good reason for that, for the jurisdiction to tax under that statute is given to the court in which the greater part of the business was done, and it was therefore indispensable for the parties and for the taxing officer to be able to assign each item to its appropriate court before the taxation could be entered upon; and moreover at that time the scale of charges in the several courts was different, so that the name of the court was also wanted in order to estimate the amount of charges. But under the existing statute, if there is any item in any court of law, jurisdiction is given to all the Superior Courts indifferently; so that in respect of jurisdiction the name of the court is entirely immaterial; and so likewise is it for estimating the amount due, as the scale of charges in all the Superior Courts is now uniform. The judges who instituted the rule in relation to the existing statute adopted it from cases under the former statute, without adverting to the important changes in the law which the Legislature had made, and thereby, as we think, contravened the intention of the Legislature. If this reasoning is correct, it follows that the rule which so originated has been maintained without any useful purpose. The greater number of the later decisions accord with this view of the law. In Martindale v. Falkner, 2 C. B. 706, a bill was decided to be sufficient, which showed by reasonable intendment that the business charged for was done in one of the Courts of Chancery, though there was nothing to show which of those courts was intended. In Anderson v. Boynton, 13 Q. B. 308, it was held sufficient if the name of the cause and the court could be gathered by intendment from the bill without being expressly mentioned. In Keene v. Ward, 13 Q. B. 515, a bill was held good, although it contained items in an action, and did not indicate in what court that action was brought; and in that case the change in the law, in respect of the jurisdiction to tax, and of the uniformity of charges in the different courts, and also the practical result of the supposed rule, was pointed out. This has been followed by a very salutary judgment in Cozens v. Graham, 16 Jur. 952, where a bill was held valid, although the court in which the business was done was not mentioned or described—it being clear that the defendant, knowing the court, did not want the information, and only made the objection to evade payment of the debt. The judgment there points out that the words of the last statute are complied with, although the court is not mentioned in the bill, and also that the changes introduced by the last statute had not been adverted to in the decision now relied on for the defendant. This judgment appears to us to give effect to the true meaning of the statute. The defendant who undertakes to prove that the bill is not a bonâ fide compliance with the Act cannot found an objection upon the want of information in the bill, if it appears that he is already in possession of that information. It seems to us probable that the Legislature changed the law relating to attorney's bills from having perceived that a clerical error or an accidental oversight often worked the forfeiture of the remuneration due for many years of professional services, and therefore meant, while it secured the client a right to reasonable information respecting the bill before an action should be brought upon it, at the same time to give to the attorney security that the delivery of a bill intending to give, and giving, all requisite information, should be a compliance with the Act, unless the client could show that information which was really wanted had been withheld. Upon this principle, and according to these cases, we decide against the objection raised by the present defendant. We consider that the doubt, whether the writs of summons and other proceedings, apparently such as belong to the courts of Westminster, were issued here or in the borough court of some municipal corporation, emanated from the ingenuity of the advocate, without having had any existence in the mind of the defendant; and that a client has no ground of objection to a bill, who is in possession of all the information that can be reasonably wanted for consulting on taxation. We further consider that it would be better to require a demand of further information, so that a bill might be corrected before action, rather than to allow a defendant to conceal a defect till time had become a bar to another action, and then obtain an unfair advantage by disclosing it.

JOHNSON v. GIBSON.

Debt for rent—Statement in declaration of time when rent became due.

In a declaration in debt for rent, the statement of the time when the rent became due is material, and, though laid under a videlicet, must be proved.

Where, therefore, the declaration stated that on a certain day the rent for three-quarters of a year then elapsed became in arrear:

Held, that the plaintiff could only recover the rent for the three-quarters next preceding the day mentioned, although no particulars of demand had been delivered, and the day was stated under a videlicet.

Debt for rent.—The declaration stated a demise by the plaintiff to one Keble for twenty-one years, at a rent of 80*l.* per year; that afterwards the term became vested in the defendant; and that whilst the defendant was assignee, to wit, on March 25, 1849, a large sum of money, to wit, 22*l.*, parcel of the rent aforesaid for three-quarters of a year then elapsed, became in arrear and unpaid.

Pleas.—Except as to 7*l.* 10*s.* never indebted; and as to 7*l.* 10*s.* payment into court.

No particulars of demand had been delivered by the plaintiff. At the trial it was proved that the defendant had ceased to be assignee of the term and liable for rent during the last two quarters prior to March 25, 1852; and the money paid into court was sufficient to cover the third quarter. It was contended, however, that the plaintiff was not limited to the three-quarters next preceding that day; and that although the defendant had in fact paid all the rent previously due, yet he could not avail himself of the payment in this action because he had not pleaded it. A verdict was accordingly taken for the plaintiff, damages, 15*l.*; but leave was reserved to the defendant to move to enter it for him. A rule nisi had accordingly been obtained for that purpose.

Hawkins now showed cause.—Without a plea of payment, the defendant could not prove payments even in reduction of damages, and the plaintiff was not bound by his declaration to any particular three quarters. [WIGHTMAN, J.—Gilbert says that, in debt for rent, the time when the rent became due must be shown.] A time must certainly be stated; but it need not be proved as laid.

Borill, contrà, was not called upon.

LORD CAMPBELL, C. J.—I think that this rule must be made absolute. It is true that the payments could not be proved under "never indebted;" but under that plea the defendant might show, as he did, that he had ceased to occupy the premises for which the rent was claimed before the time mentioned in the declaration. It is laid down that the time must be stated; and this declaration is for rent for three quarters "then elapsed;" the reasonable construction of which is "then next elapsed;" and although the day is laid under a videlicet, that does not exonerate the plaintiff from the necessity of proving it as laid.

COLERIDGE, WIGHTMAN, and CROMPTON, JJ. concurred. Rule absolute.

DOE DEM. BUTT v. ROUS.

Turnpike—Mortgage—Ejectment—3 Geo. 4, c. 126, ss. 49, 81.

After the plaintiff, the mortgagee of turnpike tolls, &c. had commenced ejectment to recover the toll-gates, &c. the defendant, a prior mortgagee, commenced an ejectment and succeeded in first obtaining judgment and possession of the gates, &c.:

Held, that the defendant's possession so acquired was no answer to the lessor of the plaintiff recovering a verdict in his action.

Quære, whether the lessor of the plaintiff could disturb the defendant in his possession by writ of habere facias possessionem.

Ejectment for toll-gates, bars, houses, &c. under 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 49.

It appeared at the trial before Martin, B. at the Wiltshire Summer Assizes, that the plaintiff was the mortgagee of the tolls of a turnpike road, and that the defendant was also another mortgagee of the tolls by an earlier title, and also one of the trustees of the road. Upon default, the plaintiff commenced this ejectment, but subsequently the defendant also commenced an ejectment, and obtained judgment and possession of the toll-gates, &c. before the plaintiff's ejectment came on to be tried. The date of the demise was laid earlier in the plaintiff's ejectment than in the defendant's, and at the trial it was insisted that the plaintiff having recovered possession in his ejectment, the plaintiff could not maintain his action, and thereupon a verdict was directed for the defendant.

M. Smith in last term obtained a rule nisi to set aside the verdict and enter it for the lessor of the plaintiff.

Butt and Fitzherbert showed cause.—The question is whether the lessor of the plaintiff can have a verdict in this case. He had no right of possession against the defendant, who was a mortgagee in possession. The form of the mortgage is given by the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 81: "grant and assign unto A. B. such proportion of the tolls and the toll-gates and toll-houses, as the said sum shall bear to the whole sum now or hereafter to become due, to have, hold, &c., for and during the residue of the term for which the said tolls are granted by the last-mentioned Act," &c. And by sect. 49, if any mortgagee shall seek to obtain possession of the said toll-gates, &c. in order to pay himself the principal and interest due to him, it shall be competent for him and upon his demise only, and without uniting in such demise the other mortgagees, to obtain such possession; but he shall not apply the tolls to his own use and benefit, but for the benefit of all the mortgagees pari passu in proportion to the several sums due. The defendant obtained judgment and possession in his action before the plaintiff's ejectment was tried, and he holds now for the general benefit of all the mortgagees. The right to the possession dates from the judgment. [WIGHTMAN, J.—Is that any answer to the plaintiff's maintaining a verdict?] One mortgagee cannot turn another out of possession, and the Act does not contemplate a multiplicity of ejectments. If a mesne landlord brings ejectment against his tenant, and then the superior landlord brings another ejectment for a forfeiture of the lease, and the day of demise in the latter ejectment is prior to that in the other, has not the superior landlord the right to the possession? [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—We have only to determine whether the verdict shall pass for the plaintiff or the defendant.] There is only one title that can be taken advantage of under the statute, and the defendant has secured that. (Doe dem. Banks v. Booth, 2 B. & P. 219; Doe dem. Thompson v. Lediard, 4 B. & Ad. 137; Doe v. Penfold, 8 Q.B. 757.)

M. Smith and Phinn, in support of the rule.—There is nothing in the 8 Geo. 4, c. 126, which obliges a mortgagee who has obtained possession to remain in possession. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—If he was to throw it up, he would be guilty of a breach of trust. We must suppose that the plaintiff had a title to possession on the day of demise in the declaration.] If so, the plaintiff was entitled to the verdict. There may be some question hereafter as to whether the plaintiff may disturb the possession of the defendant, but that is no bar to the plaintiff obtaining the verdict in this action. (Thrustout v. Grey, 2 Stra. 1056; Doe dem. Morgan v. Bluck, 3 Camp. 447.)

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that the lessor of the plaintiff is entitled to the verdict on the demise laid in the declaration. Whether he is entitled to have a writ of habere facias possessionem is not now to be considered, but only whether there was evidence to entitle him to a verdict, and whether that verdict is to stand. It is admitted that, if no subsequent action had been commenced, this ejectment would have been well brought. If, then, it was well brought, it is difficult to see how, by some subsequent proceedings, the plaintiff's right is entirely barred, and how he thereby becomes liable to pay the costs of this ejectment.

WIGHTMAN, J.—As soon as it appeared that the lessor of the plaintiff had the privilege of bringing this ejectment, the argument of the defendant failed. To say that there is no right of possession until possession is obtained, is absurd and contradictory. The plaintiff is therefore entitled to have the verdict entered for him. What may be the ultimate effect of the verdict, and whether the defendant can be disturbed in his possession, we have not now to determine. Rule absolute.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF NEW SARUM.

Poor-rate—Commitment for non-payment—13 & 14 Vict. c. 14.

Where a poor-rate was made under a local Act, 11 Geo. 4, c. lxxvi. which only gave a power of commitment to prison for non-payment where no sufficient distress could be found, in consequence of removal of goods to evade payment:

Held, nevertheless, that the justices had power to commit under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 14 (a general Act) for default in non-payment, there being no distress, although it was not suggested that there was any fraudulent removal of goods.

A rule nisi having been obtained by Archbold, calling upon two justices of New Sarum to show cause why they should not commit W. J. Targett to prison for non-payment of 14*s.* 3*d.* assessed upon him by a rate made for the relief of the poor of the parish of St. Edmund, &c.

G. S. Carr showed cause.—In this case a rule has been obtained under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 5, in order that the justices may know how to act. The poor-rate in question was made under a local Act, 11 Geo. 4, c. lxxvi. (for the relief of the Poor of New Sarum), and by section 9 a power to commit for non-payment is given, only where no sufficient distress on the premises can be found, "in consequence of removal of any such goods or chattels with intent to evade or elude payment." Here there is no removal of goods to evade payment, and it is not contended that the justices should commit under the local Act; but it is said that the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 14, s. 2 (a general Act) gives them power, and they are called upon to act under that provision. That section recites the power to commit under the 43 Eliz. c. 2, in default of distress for a poor-rate, and enacts, that hereafter, when to any warrant of distress for the levying of any sum assessed by any poor-rate it shall be returned that no sufficient goods can be found, it shall be lawful for any two or more justices of the peace, "if in their discretion they shall so think fit," to issue their warrant of commitment against the person with relation to whom such return shall be so made. Now the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 14 is inconsistent with the local Act, and cannot operate to repeal it. Under the local Act the justices have no discretion to commit, but are bound to commit; but under the 12 & 13 Vict. they may exercise their discretion whether they will commit or not. The effect, therefore, of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 14 would be to repeal the provision in the local Act, and, there being no express words to effect that, the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 14 does not apply to this case. Besides, the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 14, s. 2, enacts, that the warrant of commitment is to be for costs and expenses, whereas under the 11 Geo. 4, c. lxxvi. these were not provided for: (Doe dem. Bywater v. Brandling, 7 B. & C. 660, Lord Tenterden, C. J.)

Archbold, contrà, was told to confine his argument to the point as to the discretion of the justices to commit under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 14.—It is only the same discretion that they had previously under the 43 Eliz. c. 2. (He was then stopped.)

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—We are all of opinion that there is nothing in the local Act to prevent the justices acting under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 14.

Rule absolute.

POWELL v. SPENCER.

Production of documents—14 & 15 Vict. c. 99.

Where a judge at chambers made an order on the defendant to allow plaintiff to inspect, &c. a bill of costs and letter, stated on affidavit to have been sent by the plaintiff to the defendant, although the defendant swore that he did not recollect ever receiving them, and that he could not discover any trace of them, and that it was impossible for him to comply with such order, if made:

This Court refused to rescind the order of the judge, inasmuch as the matters alleged in the affidavit of the defendant would be an answer to an attachment for disobeying the order, if moved for.

Field moved for a rule nisi to rescind an order of Erle, J. for production by the defendant of a bill of costs and the letter accompanying it. It appeared that this was an action by the plaintiff, an attorney, to recover his bill of costs, and that he had sent a bill of costs, with a letter accompanying it, to the defendant, in 1849, pursuant to the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 76, s. 37; and that Erle, J. had made an order at chambers calling on the defendant to produce and allow the plaintiff to inspect such bill of costs and letter so sent, under the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6, notwithstanding an affidavit by the defendant that he never recollected receiving such bill of costs and letter, that he had caused a search to be made for them, and that he had not been able to discover any trace of the same, and that it was impossible for him to comply with such order if made. It is now submitted that there was no evidence before the judge at chambers as to these documents being in the possession of the defendant.

COLERIDGE, J.—Is it not for the judge to determine that?

Field.—This affidavit shows that the defendant cannot possibly comply with the order.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Then that would be an answer to an attachment for disobeying the order.

Field.—But it might be said, if the defendant were to lie by until an attachment is moved for, that he ought to have asked the relief of the court earlier, as he knew when the order was made it could not be complied with.

By the COURT.—The defendant shall sustain no prejudice for that reason. Rule refused.

HEYWOOD AND OTHERS v. POTTER.

Copyright: design.

By the 4th section of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, the proprietor of a registered design for paper-hangings, is bound to put the letters "Rd." and the number, on the pattern pieces containing the whole design, published to the world, though such pieces may be of so small size as to be inapplicable to papering walls, such pieces being articles of manufacture within the above section.

So held per Lord Campbell, C. J. and Wightman, J. Coleridge, J. dissentiente.

Case for the infringement of a copyright design for paper-hangings.

There were two counts in the declaration; first, for applying the registered design of the plaintiffs without leave; and, secondly, for selling after notice that the design had been so applied without consent.

The 6th and 11th pleas were substantially the same, and averred that certain articles of manufacture to which the plaintiff's design had been applied were published by him without having thereon the letters "Rd." together with the number, as required by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, s. 4.

At the trial before Lord Campbell, C.J. in London, it appeared, that the plaintiffs had sold pattern pieces of paper-hangings of the registered design, without having the letters "Rd." or the number on them as required by the above provision, and that the defendant had bought some of them, and imitated the design, without being aware that the design was a registered one. Paper-hangings are usually sold in lengths of twelve yards each; but these pattern pieces were of so small a size as not to be applicable to papering walls. It was thereupon contended for the plaintiffs that these pieces were not such articles as required the letters "Rd." and the numbers on them, according to the above Act. The learned judge was of a contrary opinion; and the jury found the verdict on the above pleas for the defendant, and, in answer to a question left to them, they also found that it was not the practice of the trade to publish such pattern pieces, without the letters "Rd." and the number upon them, when the design was a copyright one.

By the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100 (for consolidating and amending the Laws relating to the Copyright of Designs for ornamenting Articles of Manufacture), s. 3, the proprietor of any new and original design applicable to the ornamenting of any article of manufacture, &c. shall have the sole right to apply the same to any articles of manufacture for the term of three years, so far as regards the article of manufacture (paper-hangings) in the fifth class mentioned in the section.

By sect. 4 no person shall be entitled to the benefit of this Act unless (among other things), after publication of such design, every such article of manufacture to which the same shall be so applied, published by him, hath thereon the letters "Rd." together with such number or letter or number and letter, and in such form, as shall correspond with the date of the registration of such design.

A rule nisi having been obtained to set aside the verdict on the above pleas and enter it for the plaintiff,

Webster now showed cause.—The question depends on the meaning of the words "every such article of manufacture," in sect. 4. It is submitted that every piece of paper-hanging containing the entire design, is an article of manufacture within that section; and therefore these pattern pieces were such. The design and the article to which it is applied must be taken in combination; and the combination must have the letters "Rd." and the number put on them. By sect. 17 no registered design, the copyright whereof has not expired, shall be open to inspection, except to the proprietor or a party authorised by him. Where then is a stranger to learn that a design is registered if the marks and letters required by sect. 4 are not put on pattern pieces like these? Sect. 4 was for the protection of the public, to guard them from imitating registered designs; and that object would be entirely frustrated, if pattern pieces like these do not require to be lettered and numbered under sect. 4.

Bramwell and Lush in support of the rule.—The words "article of manufacture," in sect. 4, mean a commercial article, in the state in which it is sold for public use; and as these pattern pieces are not applicable to papering walls, they are not such articles of manufacture as were contemplated by that section. Paper-hangings are usually sold in lengths of twelve yards each, and the whole design of a paper-hanging might be contained on pattern pieces of two or three inches square. The words "article of manufacture" must receive the same meaning throughout the Act; and a party would, if the meaning contended for by the defendants is right, be liable to the penalty under sects. 7 and 8, for imitating the design, though with no intention of sale. Further, it is submitted, that a piece of an article, which such a pattern is, is not an article of manufacture within sect. 4. Then, as to the protection of the public, what protection is there after the sale by the manufacturer? The retailer may cut up the article into as many pieces as he pleases, and sell them without the letters or numbers on them: (Itiego de la Branchardiere v. Elvery, 18 L. J. 381, Ex.)

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—I am of opinion that the plaintiffs have not complied with the conditions imposed by the Legislature in granting protection to designs. It seems to me that the Legislature, in giving that protection, required that every portion of the manufacture containing the design, published and put forth to the world by the inventor, should contain certain numbers and the letters "Rd." in pursuance of sects. 3 and 4 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, in order that the public might be aware that such design was registered, and be cautioned not to imitate such design. Now here in the paper-hanging trade, it turns out that the pieces of paper that are sold for the purpose of being put on walls, are generally twelve yards in length, but the manufacturers are in the habit of selling smaller portions, not for papering walls, but to be used as patterns in the course of business. The question is, whether such patterns are articles of manufacture within sect. 4 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100. Here the plaintiffs did sell patterns of this nature, the design of which had been registered, but which patterns did not contain the letters "Rd." or any number upon them, and it was by reason of such omission that the defendants imitated the design, without the smallest idea that they were infringing a copyright design. It seems to me that such patterns are articles of manufacture, and are sometimes sold for money, and sometimes given away to the customers of the manufacturer. But it cannot make any difference that patterns of such dimensions are not applicable to papering walls, for they are equally articles of manufacture used in the trade, and the mischief to be guarded against may equally arise in either case. If such patterns are marked with the letters and numbered, parties will consider that they belong to a registered design, and that they are not to imitate it; but, if they are not so denoted, they may reasonably suppose that the design is not registered. I see no hardship in this case, as it is the general though not the universal practice of the trade that manufacturers do put on such patterns the letters "Rd." with the number of the design, and if the plaintiffs had complied with the usage of the trade the defendants would not have imitated their design.

COLERIDGE, J.—I confess I have come to a different conclusion in this case. The question is whether these patterns are properly articles of manufacture within sect. 4 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100. In the literal sense no doubt they are. To ascertain the proper sense, it is not very material to inquire whether such articles are usually sold for papering walls, or what the practice of the trade has been (considering how recently this Act of Parliament has passed); but, looking to the whole Act, the court must determine the intention of the legislature. The object of the Act was to protect the application of designs to articles of manufacture. And by sect. 8 articles of manufacture are arranged in several classes, paper-hangings being class 5. Now, common sense points out that paper-hangings may mean two different things, the pattern and the thing itself. There is a broad distinction between the pattern of a paper-hanging and the paper-hanging itself. The mischief that would result from allowing patterns to go out without being lettered and numbered is not a sound argument in this case. It is said that the object of the letters and numbers is that every one may know that the design is registered; but how is such object protected by the construction of the Act contended for by the defendant? If the article is capable of being subdivided, how is the purchaser of one of the subdivisions to know that the design is registered? All the subdivisions may go out to the world except the one containing the letters and number. Therefore, it comes to the same thing whether a manufacturer cuts a piece of the length of twelve yards into patterns and sends such patterns to the retailer without the letters and number upon them, or whether the retailer cuts up such lengths into smaller pieces and so sells them.

WIGHTMAN, J.—After some doubt, I think that the plaintiffs are not entitled to the protection of the Act. The question really is whether these patterns can be considered articles of manufacture within sect. 4. If they can, no doubt they should have had the letters "Rd." with the number upon them. Paper-hangings, to be within class 5 of sect. 8, it is said by the plaintiffs, must be such paper-hangings as are used for papering rooms. I find great difficulty in saying what are such paper-hangings. The inquiry would be a difficult one in many cases. It appears to me that it would defeat the obvious intention of the Act, if the publisher or proprietor of the design could send out to the world, patterns such as these, without having on them the requisite letters and numbers.

Thursday, Jan. 13.

HOLT v. ELY.—Bramwell moved for a rule for a new trial. The question was whether the plaintiff had been induced to pay money by a misrepresentation. Rule nisi.

TUCKER v. RAVENHILL.—Bramwell also moved for a new trial herein. Rule nisi.

WALSH v. IONIDES.—Lord CAMPBELL, C. J. delivered judgment. Rule absolute for prohibition as to part.

REG. v. ST. PANCRAS. Postponed to next term.

WILTSHIRE v. COTTERELL.—Whateley and Phipson showed cause. Keating and Hodgson, contrà. The question was whether a granary, threshing-machine, and certain rick-straddles, passed under a deed. Cur. adv. vult.

BESSELL v. WILSON.—O'Malley and Lush showed cause against a rule to enter the verdict for the defendant. Hugh Hill and Willes, contrà. The question was as to the protection afforded by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 2, to a magistrate who had issued a warrant to apprehend the plaintiff, he having been convicted under the Copyright of Designs Act, summoned for non-payment of the penalty, and having attended by counsel and attorney only, not in person. Cur. adv. vult.

Friday, Jan 14.

RATHER v. ALLHUSEN.—Tried before Lord Campbell, C. J., in London; verdict for the plaintiff 517*l*. Crowder moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. Rule nisi.

CROMONT v. ASHLEY AND WIFE.—Tried before Lord Campbell, C. J., when the plaintiff was nonsuited. Udall moved for a new trial. It appeared that the writ of summons was specially indorsed under the Common Law Procedure Act, sect. 25, and the plaintiff also delivered further particulars with the declaration, differing from those indorsed on the summons. At the trial the learned judge confined the plaintiff's proof to the particulars indorsed on the writ. Rule nisi.

KERNOT v. PITTIS.—Tried before Lord Campbell, C. J. in London; verdict for the plaintiff. Willes moved to set aside the verdict and enter it for the defendant. Rule nisi.

MANLEY v. BOYCOTT.—Action on a promissory note payable by the defendant to a banking company, of which the plaintiff was the public officer. The note was joint and several, the defendant on the face of it being a principal. There were three pleas on which the defendant had the verdict, showing that the defendant was surety only. W. H. Watson (Fry and Normen with him) moved to enter up judgment non obstante veredicto on those three pleas, or for a new trial: (Smith v. James, 19 L. T. 104; Harrison v. Cortauld, 3 B. & Ad. 36.) Rule nisi.

COCHRANE v. MADDEN.—Tried before Wightman, J.; verdict for the defendant. W. H. Watson moved for a new trial. Rule refused.

WOOD v. MOYES.—Tried before the Under-sheriff of Middlesex; verdict for the plaintiff, 2*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* Pearson moved for a new trial: (Turner v. Mason, 14 M. & W. 112.)

Rule nisi, unless the plaintiff, within a week, consent to reduce the verdict by one guinea.

CHAPPELL v. HUNTER.—Prideaux moved to set aside the exigi facias, and all subsequent proceedings, for irregularity. Rule nisi.

THE MAYOR OF BERWICK-UPON-TWEED v. RENTON.—This was a rule for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence. W. H. Watson and J. Brown showed cause, and Knowles and Manisty in support of the rule.

Rule absolute on payment of costs.

COURT OF COMMON BENCH.

Reported by DANIEL THOMAS EVANS and R. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

Thursday, Jan. 13.

INGRAM v. KNOWLES.

The fact of a tenancy may be proved by parol evidence, although there is a written agreement; but not so the duration of the tenancy, which must be proved by the production of the agreement.

This was an action of trespass tried at Westminster, at the sittings after last term. Verdict for the plaintiff, damages 1*s.*

Horn, for the plaintiff, now moved for a rule for a new trial. Both the plaintiff and the defendant were builders, and the action was brought against the defendant for breaking down a wall which separated a piece of ground, the subject-matter of the dispute, from some premises of his own, and for depositing thereon bricks and old building materials. The defendant pleaded not guilty, and that the close was not the close of the plaintiff. At the trial, evidence was given that the plaintiff was in possession of the close down to a certain day, but the agreement under which he occupied, being unstamped, was not produced; and the only proof of any tenancy was the evidence of the person who had the letting of the land, and who stated that he let the close to the plaintiff, and that there was a piece of paper—that he applied for the payment of the rent, but it was not paid. Shortly after the first trespass the close was let to the defendant. The Lord Chief Justice told the jury (as was now stated by Horn) that he should leave it to them as the case of an easement; that there was no evidence of any tenancy, and that they could not presume a tenancy from year to year, or at will, without the agreement being in evidence; and that they could only give damages for the trespass before the lease to the defendant. It was now contended that there was evidence of a tenancy; and R. v. The Inhabitants of Holy Trinity, 7 B. & C. 601, and Strother v. Barr, 5 Bing. 136, were cited, to show that parol evidence of the fact of a tenancy was admissible.

MAULE, J.—This case differs from those cited in this, that it was not only necessary to prove a tenancy, but also the duration of it. The plaintiff shows some sort of tenancy in the land, and has obtained 1*s.* damages. In order to entitle him to more he must show the duration of the tenancy; and to do that he must produce the agreement. He does not do so; but merely gives the evidence of the man who let the land. The jury are not satisfied that it lasted a longer time than would entitle him to 1*s.* damages. The substance of the summing-up seems to be that, in order to entitle the plaintiff to recover more than nominal damages, the plaintiff ought to show the duration of his tenancy; he has the means of showing it; and his not having done so raises a presumption that it would do him no good. I think that is correct.

CRESSWELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. It is admitted that another person was seized in fee; and the plaintiff showed a bare possession under an agreement not before the court. He rested his case on an inference from bare possession. He did not choose to go further; and only showed himself entitled to nominal damages.

WILLIAMS, J. concurred. Rule refused.

PEACHEY v. ROWLAND AND ANOTHER.

A contractor is not liable for an injury caused by the improper conduct of his sub-contractor.

A. the defendant, contracted to make a sewer, and sub-contracted with B. for excavating it. A.'s carts were to carry away the surplus earth. B. left a heap of earth, which overturned the plaintiff's carriage: Held, that there was no evidence to go to the jury.

This case was tried in Middlesex, before the Lord Chief Justice, under whose direction a verdict was found for the defendants.

Piggot now moved for a rule for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. It appeared that the defendants had contracted to make a sewer, and had sub-contracted with one Ansel for the excavating, and another person for the brick-work; and Evans, one of the defendants, stated at the trial that he could not interfere with the man who had contracted to excavate the sewer, but that his carts were to take away the surplus earth after the sewer had been filled in. After the sewer was constructed the earth was piled up over it about a yard high, to allow for sinking, and railings with a light were placed round it; when it was in this state the defendant Evans saw it. Afterwards the railing was taken away, and the plaintiff's carriage was upset by the earth, and his horse killed.

It was now contended that the evidence showed that the defendants had not abandoned all control over the work, one of them having seen it after the earth was piled up, and the refuse earth being removed by their carts; and that the jury ought to have been asked whether Ansel was the servant of the defendants: (Overton v. Freeman, 21 L. J. 52, C. P.; Knight v. Fox, 5 Ex. 721; Burgess v. Gray, 1 C. B. 578.)

MAULE, J.—It was necessary for Ansel to have placed so much earth upon the sewer; and if he put too much, the defendants are not to be held liable for what he did under his contract with them. If a man employs another to do a thing, and there are several ways of doing it, one criminal and another innocent, and he does it in a criminal manner, the employer is not liable. It would be inconvenient to distinguish the present case from Overton v. Freeman. I think the defendant Evans in substance showed that he and his partner had nothing to do with this matter. They did not employ Ansel to make this heap, but to do what might be done in a proper manner. He did it in an improper manner; but they are not to be liable for that. We are not to look with extreme scrupulosity for a grain of evidence where there is practically no evidence: we are to take it as no evidence at all for the purpose in hand. If the verdict had been found upon it, it would have been set aside. In Burgess v. Gray it does not appear that the barrel fell into a highway; and it was there contended by the counsel for the defendant that the remedy was against some one else; and the question was whether there was evidence that the men engaged in the matter were servants of the defendant. Lord Denman said there was. The circumstances are very different, because the fact of a man lowering a barrel as servant of another man is evidence of the other man lowering it; but that does not show that there was any evidence here to go to the jury.

CRESSWELL and WILLIAMS, JJ. concurred.

VOLANT v. SOYER AND SYMONDS.

Attorney and client—Privileged communication—Title-deed—Misdirection—Surprise.

In an action of debt for work and labour, &c., the defendant called one M., who was the attorney of H. (a third party), to produce a deed of assignment from defendant, and S., his partner, to H., for the purpose of showing that at the date of the assignment the partnership, and with it the liability of the defendant had terminated. The attorney refused on the ground that it was his client's title-deed, and the judge ruled that he was justified in withholding it. The judge also refused to look at the deed for the purpose of ascertaining whether it really was, as alleged, the title-deed of H., and to admit secondary evidence of its contents: Held, on motion for a new trial on the ground of the improper rejection of evidence, and for misdirection:—First, that the attorney was justified in withholding the deed, and the judge in declining to enforce its production.

Secondly, that the judge was not required to examine the deed to ascertain whether or not it was a title-deed.

In asking for a new trial on the ground of surprise, it is not sufficient to state that charges of perjury and forgery were for the first time imputed to the defendant at the trial, and that, being thus taken by surprise, he had not an opportunity of rebutting those charges and establishing his case; but the party applying must show affirmatively that he has additional evidence to offer, with which he was not prepared at the trial.

This was an action of debt brought to recover a sum of 54*l.* 18*s.* for work done, for money paid, and on an account stated. The defendants pleaded, 1st, never indebted; 2nd, payment. The cause was tried before Jervis, C. J. in Middlesex, at the sittings after Michaelmas Term; verdict for the plaintiff for full amount claimed. The plaintiff, as appeared on the trial, was clerk to the defendants (Soyer and Symonds) whilst they were joint proprietors of "The Symposium" at Gore-house, for services rendered in that capacity. The defendant Soyer suffered judgment to go by default, and was subpœnaed as a witness against the co-defendant Symonds. In the course of the trial the defendant called Mr. Michael, an attorney formerly engaged in this suit, to produce a deed of assignment of the property at Gore-house, the copyright of certain books, &c. from the defendants to one Hart, for the purpose of proving that the partnership had legally terminated at the date of the assignment. Byles, Serjt. thereupon objected to the production of the deed on the ground that it belonged to his client, and was his title-deed; and thereupon the attorney refused to produce it. The learned judge held the objection valid, and refused to examine the deed to ascertain whether or not it was, as alleged, a title-deed; and his Lordship also refused to admit secondary evidence of its contents. In the course of his examination at the trial, the defendant Symonds produced a receipt for money paid to the plaintiff for his services, dated 5th Nov. 1851, and containing the words "up to this date." On the other hand the plaintiff and another witness both swore that those words were not in the receipt when plaintiff signed it; and that it was not given as a discharge up to that day, but in respect of services rendered up to a certain time previously. The Lord Chief Justice left this question to the jury, who found that the words "up to this date" had been added since the plaintiff signed the receipt.

Horn (Woollett with him) now moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the verdict and all subsequent proceedings should not be set aside and a new trial had; first, upon the ground that the learned judge should not have rejected the evidence of Michael, he being liable to produce the deed; secondly, the improper rejection of secondary evidence of the contents of the deed; thirdly, misdirection in this—that his Lordship ought to have directed the jury that the partnership between the defendants had terminated at the date of the assignment; and, lastly, on the ground of surprise, the defendant having sworn that until the crime of forgery was imputed to him at the trial, it had never been intimated to him that the receipt had been altered by the addition of the words "to this date." As to the first point, the deed was a trust-deed signed by both parties, of which the defendant Symonds was cestui que trust, and by its production the trustee could not be damnified. Inspection, in analogous cases has been ordered, and the judge should have looked at the documents: (Blakey v. Porter, 1 Taunt. 386; King v. King, 4 Taunt. 666; Broom v. Rose, 6 Taunt. 288.) If the deed had been deposited with Michael as a trustee for others, it would be admissible: (Pickering v. Noyes, 1 B. & C. 263; Lord Falmouth v. Moss, 11 Price, 455; Nixon v. Mayoh, 1 Moo. & Rob. 76; Harris v. Hill, 3 Starkie, 140.) To make such an objection valid, the attorney should show that his client also objects to the production of the deed: (Marston v. Downes, 1 A. & E. 31.) But having refused to order Michael to produce the deed, on the ground of privilege, the judge ought to have admitted secondary evidence, which was offered in the form of a copy of the deed, prepared in Michael's own office, which had been read by him and delivered as a true copy. Then, as to the point of misdirection, the assignment was an act of bankruptcy. By the assignment the business was at an end, and the authority of the partners ceased; for one partner cannot afterwards pledge the credit of the other, and the judge should have so directed the jury. Lastly, the defendant was taken by surprise when the receipt was pronounced by the plaintiff to be a forgery. Nothing of the kind was said of it when the plaintiff inspected the deed before the trial; and the defendant never suspected any such charge would be made until plaintiff's counsel called upon the court to impound the receipt as being a forgery.

JERVIS, C. J.—In this case there should be no rule. To take the objections in their order, as raised by Mr. Horn; first, it has been objected that when Michael, the attorney of Hart, declined to produce the title-deed of his client, I should have ordered him to do so. I disallowed the production of the deed on this ground, that it was entrusted to him in his professional capacity as attorney for a third party, and should therefore be considered confidential. But there are other grounds on which the attorney might have declined to produce the deed; for instance, he might have objected on the ground of lien, even though, in the case of a broker, it has been held that he is bound to produce a deed upon which he may have a lien. But it is not necessary to consider the question on that ground, for this case is governed by the common principle which precludes an attorney from producing his client's title-deeds or any other documents confidentially entrusted to him. Perhaps under the new regulations, the defendant by taking the proper course might have compelled the production of the deed. Neither, for the same reason, was I required to look at the deed myself. Then comes the question of misdirection. That depends upon a point which did not in fact arise; for the deed of assignment was not in evidence. I could not tell the jury the effect of it; that is to say, that the partnership had terminated before the accruing of the plaintiff's claim. The remaining question is that of surprise. The statement of facts may be thus given:—the defendant charges the plaintiff with perjury, and the plaintiff charges defendant with both perjury and forgery. The only ground on which in this case a new trial can be asked on this point would be that the party seeking it would, if it were granted, be prepared at the second trial with additional evidence; but no such promise is made here. Were we to grant a new trial merely because the evidence conflicts, and one party imputes perjury to another, who recriminates in like manner, we must grant one wherever plaintiff and defendant contradict each other, which is a precedent we cannot allow. It would be highly impolitic to do what is here asked of the court. The defendant Symonds need not be so sensitive, for it is quite consistent with the facts of this case, as Mr. Horn has shown, that he is not guilty of either perjury or forgery. For these reasons I think there should be no rule.

MAULE, J.—I am of the same opinion. With respect to the refusal of the Lord Chief Justice to enforce the production of the deed of assignment, I think it was properly made. The deed was asked for as the deed of assignment to a third party, from that party's attorney, and the latter was justified in refusing to produce it, on the ground that it was the title-deed of his client, and because it came into his possession in his confidential character as an attorney. Every person employing an attorney has a right to be protected by him. (His Lordship referred to Harris v. Bell, supra.) I do not share the doubt of the Lord Chief Justice as to the probable effect of the power newly created for enforcing the production and inspection of documents. I think that the old rule as to the protection of the client still remains in its full integrity; and that an attorney cannot now any more than before the Common Law Procedure Act be compelled to produce documents entrusted to him in a confidential character. Therefore, I consider the refusal of the judge to require the production of the deed was just and proper. As to the admission of secondary evidence, what the Lord Chief Justice has said is true; for the primary evidence being properly shut out, secondary evidence must be also inadmissible. With respect to the question of misdirection, there was no evidence before the court of the termination of the partnership, so that the judge could not direct the jury that the liability of plaintiff had ceased. Then, as to the question of surprise, the case stands thus: a receipt was put by defendant purporting to be signed by the plaintiff, and giving acquittance up to its date. The plaintiff says, The receipt was not in its present state when signed by me. This was a question for the jury, who found that the words "to this date" were not on the receipt when plaintiff signed. The defendant Symonds having a receipt dated 5th Nov. added that it extended up "to that date," probably thinking that he was entitled so to do. This was not a very grave offence at the most, for it is not uncommon to see persons in a respectable sphere of life differing between themselves concerning sums so small as to be insufficient to induce either party to make a wilfully false statement. On these grounds then the rule must be refused.

CRESSWELL, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. With respect to the first point, I think that the case cited by my brother Maule is sufficient to show that the attorney was not liable to produce the deed. Neither was the learned judge who tried the cause required to examine the deed for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not it related to Hart's title. The deed was called for as a title-deed, and was intended to be used as a title-deed to show that the partnership had ceased, and the property had vested in a third party. With reference to the third point,—that is, the surprise, I do not think sufficient materials have been laid before the court to justify it in granting a new trial. The only ground on which a rule could go in such a case would be that the party seeking it would be prepared with additional or stronger evidence. But if we granted the rule it does not appear that any better evidence could be adduced, at the second trial, by the defendant; the most that can be said is, that if a new trial were granted the defendant would, perhaps, be in a position to lay fuller arguments before the court. That, however, is not a ground sufficient to disturb the verdict and grant a new trial.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am also of like opinion. I think the learned judge was quite right in the course he took upon the single point of law (for there is but one); and that the attorney was justified in refusing to produce the deed. This case is not so strong as that of Harris v. Bell, supra. With respect to the granting a rule on the ground of surprise, I was at one time inclined that the rule should go, because the imputation of forgery seemed to lie on the defendant, and because it evidently took him by surprise; but my learned brothers have convinced me of the impolicy of such a course as regards other cases, and that in reality there is nothing here injurious to the character of the plaintiff. Rule refused.

COMMON PLEAS.

BLYTH v. DENNETT.

Landlord and tenant — Ejectment — Notice to quit — Waiver by demand of rent.

A mere demand of rent accrued due after notice to quit, without acceptance of such rent, is not a waiver of the notice to quit.

In an action of ejectment to recover possession after a notice to quit, the evidence showed that the plaintiff demanded, but did not receive, rent accrued due subsequent to the notice. The tenant, on the demand, said: "If I continue to pay my rent it will all go on right?" and was answered: "Yes; all will be right." The judge, instead of deciding, as a question of law, whether the demand of rent was a waiver of the notice to quit and a recognition of a fresh tenancy, put it generally to the jury to find what was the intention of the parties, whether to continue or terminate the tenancy:

Held, no misdirection; and that the question, as a question of fact, was properly left to the jury.

This was an action of ejectment brought to recover possession of a house and premises. Verdict for the plaintiff. The cause was tried at Westminster during the sittings after Michaelmas Term.

F. Edwards now moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the verdict should not be set aside on the ground of misdirection. The question at the trial was, whether a demand of rent, subsequent to notice to quit, was a waiver of the notice, and an acknowledgment of a fresh tenancy. The notice to quit expired at Lady-day, 1851; but the tenant held on down to the trial. It was proved that after the notice was given the landlord repeatedly applied for rent accrued due both before and after the notice. The plaintiff in fact brought elsewhere an action of debt for rent, in which the particulars of demand claimed for several quarters accrued due subsequent to the notice. [JERVIS, C. J.—I told the jury that if there had been payment of rent accrued due after the notice to quit, the plaintiff's case was at an end.] On the several demands for rent, the defendant from time to time promised to pay, and this, it is contended, amounts to a fresh agreement for further tenancy. [MAULE, J.—You say that asking rent was the same as taking rent, as regards waiver.] Yes. [JERVIS, C. J.—Is it a question for the jury or the court?] It is a question of law for the court, and should not be put to the jury. If then it be, as I contend, a question of law, the point is whether such a demand of rent is waiver of notice to quit, and evidence of the recognition by the landlord of a new tenancy. [WILLIAMS, J.—You say it is the same as putting in a distress?] Yes, and there are authorities to show that conduct such as this amounts to waiver. There is an authority in favour of this application in Green's case, Cro. Eliz. 3. Payment of rent accrued after notice was held to be waiver in the case of Goodtitle dem. Charter v. Cordwent, 6 T. R. 219. Acceptance of rent under such circumstances is an acknowledgment by the landlord of a subsisting tenancy. The express point was raised in Doe dem. Nash v. Birch, 1 M. & W. 402. The court should have left to the jury to find the facts only, and have decided the point of law itself, instead of leaving generally to them to find whether, on all the facts of the case, there had been waiver of notice. This was the misdirection.

JERVIS, C. J.—I am of opinion there should be no rule in this case. The facts were these: The defendant being in arrear with his rent, the plaintiff, his landlord, gave him notice to quit, and sent his son to demand rent due. The defendant said to him, "If I continue to pay my rent it will all go on right?" The son answered, "Yes, all will be right." It was, therefore, a question for the jury, what was the intention of the parties, whether to continue or terminate the tenancy, and thus a question of fact and not of law.

MAULE, J.—I am of the same opinion entirely. Evidence being given that plaintiff said "All will go on right if you pay the rent," it cannot be held that this amounts to waiver. I think, therefore, that a rule should not go.

CRESSWELL, J.—I think this was altogether a question for the jury, and not for the court.

DALTON v. MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.—This was an action of debt brought by a married woman named Ann Dalton, to recover dividends due to her upon certain shares in the Midland Railway Company. Pleas, never indebted. COMMON BENCH.

the verdict should not be set aside on the ground of misdirection, and also that the verdict was against the weight of evidence. The facts of the case are peculiar. The plaintiff bought the shares by means of a Mr. Mitchell, a sharebroker, from one Demisse, and they were duly transferred to her in the books of the company, and registered in her name by the secretary. When the half-yearly dividend became due, the secretary enclosed a cheque for it to Mrs. Dalton. This was in August 1850. A forged transfer of these shares from Dalton to one Eslin was afterwards presented to the company by Mitchell (who shortly after absconded), and a transfer thereupon made. On the 4th October following, Ann Dalton wrote to the secretary cautioning the company that there was reason to believe a forged transfer had been sent to them in favour of Eslin, and the secretary replied that there was no stock standing in her name, it having been transferred on a certificate bearing her signature to Eslin. She then brought her action to recover her dividends on the shares. At the trial it appeared that, though the shares were purchased and the action brought in the name of Ann Dalton, she was in fact a married woman, and her husband living in America. To make out her case, the plaintiff undertook to show that she was registress of the shares, and as such entitled to the dividends; and the mode in which she proved this was by showing that the company had registerered a mere piece of paper, it being a forgery. For the defendants it was shown that what they did, they were bound to do; and that was to register a transfer which on the face of it appeared good. There was no evidence before the court that Demisse had ever assigned the shares to the plaintiff. [JERVIS, C.J.—That is your first point; but it is not good—you cannot have a rule on that. MAULE, J.—Mitchell has cheated somebody, that is clear; and the question is, whether the plaintiff or defendants must suffer?] The next point is, that this is not an action maintainable by the plaintiff, she being a married woman, and the property in her husband. Upon the transfer from Demisse, the title to the shares vested in the husband, and as the property is in him, the duty goes with it. [MAULE, J.—The answer to that is, that this is plea in abatement.] JERVIS, C. J.—You may take a rule on the last, but not on the first point. Rule nisi.

SHARP v. SAUNDERS.—Macaulay, Q. C., asked the court not to take this case in its turn on the morrow, as it would be inconvenient. Mixed for Tuesday.

PENN v. FORBES.—Creasy moved herein for a rule to show cause why an award and judgment signed thereon should not be set aside, on the ground that the arbitrator did not allow the defendant sufficient time to produce his witnesses: or why the case should not be referred back to the arbitrator. It was an action to recover 165*l.* for goods and machinery. The first meeting under the submission to reference was on Dec 5, and an appointment was then made for the 8th, which was enlarged to the 13th. Finding a witness from Devonshire could, by his evidence, reduce the claim to 100*l.*, he was written for, but did not get the letter till the 14th, when he came on, but missed the mail, and then wrote to defendant. Application was, on the 17th, made to the arbitrator to make another appointment, which the witness should attend; but he declined, having, as he said, made his award, though he had not published it. JERVIS, C. J.—Take a rule to show cause. Rule nisi.

COLES v. STACEY.—Montague Smith showed cause against a rule obtained by Morgan Lloyd, for a prohibition to the Judge of the County Court of Wiltshire. The affidavit upon which the rule was obtained stated that the claim was reduced within 50*l.* by a set-off of 16*l.*; but in the particulars of demand the plaintiff did not treat this sum as a set-off, but gave credit for it in the ordinary manner; and it was now shown on affidavit that a balance had been struck before action brought, and a sum within 50*l.* agreed upon. MAULE, J.—It is clearly not a set-off, and the defendant's affidavit does not show that credit had not been given for it. Rule discharged.

LANG v. TODD.—Addison moved for a rule to show cause why Lang should not pay a certain sum awarded to Todd. In the award he was directed to pay it to Matthew Popplewell, but it was not stated in the award that it was to be paid to him as Todd's agent: (Comyn's Digest, title "Arbitrament," E. 7; 1 Salk. 74; Adcock v. Wood, 20 L. J. 435, Ex.; 21 L. J. 204, Ex.) Rule nisi.

CLOTHIER v. GANN.—Prentice moved for a rule calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the taxation of costs by the Master should not be reviewed. The declaration contained only the common count for wages. Pleas—1. Except as to 50*l.* 12*s.* never indebted. 2. Except as above, set-off. 3. Except as above, payment. 4. Payment into court of 50*l.* 12*s.* Replication—Issue joined upon the first plea. Traverses of second and third plea; and as to the fourth, money taken out of court. The case was referred to arbitration, and the award was in favour of the plaintiff on the first issue, and for the defendant on the others. The question was whether the Master was right in allowing 52*l.* 10*s.* for the plaintiff's evidence: (Harrison v. Watt, 16 M. & W. 316). If the plaintiff's evidence had been confined to the first issue, there is no doubt that he would have been entitled to all the costs of his evidence. But as it extends to the second and third issues, he is not entitled to expenses for proving the defendant's case. (The Master was referred to, and stated that he had acted upon the principle of Harrison v. Watt.) Lush contrà. The Court directed the Master to consider whether the plaintiff had been called upon the set-off and payment, as well as upon the general issue.

The rest of the day was occupied with the part-heard case of Peterson and Ayre.

Monday, Jan. 16.

QUARTERMAINE AND ANOTHER v. BITTLESTONE AND ANOTHER.—This was an action of trover to recover possession of certain furniture which had been seized by the officers of the Court of Bankruptcy as being within the order or disposition of the bankrupt. The defendants pleaded not guilty and no possessed. The cause was tried before Maule, J. at the Leicester Summer Assizes, and the matter turned into a special case for the opinion of this court. Bramwell, Q. C. and Hayes (Willes with them) were heard for the plaintiffs. Bittlestone (with him Willmore, Q.C. and Macaulay, Q.C.) was heard for the defendants. The case lasted the entire day, and the court took time to consider its judgment on one point, intimating that it would take the arguments on the other points next special paper day. Cur. adv. vult.

Tuesday, Jan. 18.

PETERSON v. AYRE.—This case, after a rambling discussion, was disposed of by the Court saying the facts before them did not enable them to decide the matter, and there must be a new trial.

Wednesday, Jan. 18.

MATTHEWS v. OSBORNE.—This was an action for mesne profits of copyhold premises, the main question being whether, the plaintiff being a trustee, there had been a sufficient surrender to his use, so as to enable him to maintain his action. Chambers, Q.C. Goodeve, and Newham showed cause, and Bramwell, Q.C. and Willis appeared in support the rule. The case occupied the whole day. Part heard.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by FREDERICK BAILEY and C. J. B. HERTSLET, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

Thursday, Jan. 13, 1853.

ROBINSON AND ANOTHER v. WAIT AND ANOTHER.

Charter-party—"Usual and customary terms"—Right to sue.

A charter-party between A. and B. to carry cargo to Calcutta on the usual and customary terms. It appeared that the usual and customary terms gave the consignee a right to send a cargo home, and entitled him to the commission on such return cargo:

Held, that the consignor might sue for such commission.

This was an action upon a charter-party, dated 6th Feb. 1851, and entered into between the plaintiffs as owners of the ship and the defendants as owners of the cargo, whereby the former undertook to carry 700 tons of salt, to be shipped on board at Liverpool, and to deliver the same to Messrs. Ewen and Co. at Calcutta, on "the usual and customary terms." It was not disputed that these words gave the consignee a right to send a cargo home, and entitled him to the commission on it. The declaration assigned two breaches: first, that the defendants did not ship a portion of the cargo; and, secondly, that they did not consign the salt to Ewen and Co., whereby the plaintiffs had lost divers gains, profits, and commission, &c. At the trial before Wightman, J. at Liverpool, the plaintiffs contended that under the words "usual and customary terms," the defendants were bound to deliver to the consignees mentioned in the charter-party; and to prove damage a party in the Calcutta firm was called, who said that there was an agreement between the plaintiffs and Ewen and Co., by which the former were entitled to one-half of the commission on the return cargo; but this evidence was objected to and excluded, on the ground that the agreement was in writing and ought to have been produced. The plaintiffs then contended that, inasmuch as the consignment was for the benefit of Ewen and Co., and the contract was entered into with them (the plaintiffs), they had a right to sue as trustees for Ewen and Co.

The learned judge, as to the last point, held that the plaintiffs could not sue in the capacity of trustees for Ewen and Co. and so directed the jury, and a verdict was accordingly entered for the plaintiffs for nominal damages only, leave being reserved to move to increase the damages to 150*l.*, if the court should be of opinion that the plaintiffs could recover as trustees for Ewen and Co.

A rule having been obtained accordingly, Rowe now showed cause.—The plaintiffs cannot upon this declaration recover on behalf of Ewen and Co. The damage they allege is loss sustained, not by Ewen and Co. If a man enter into an agreement with another for the benefit of a third party, he may sue on behalf of that party; but the mere fact of a third party being entitled to some benefit is not sufficient: (Lamb v. Vice and others, 6 M. & W. 467; Stansfield v. Hellawell, 6 Ex. 708). The house at Calcutta was in no way a party to this contract, but is merely remotely and indirectly benefited by it.

MARTIN, B.—If a man contract to do something for the benefit of a third party, the party with whom the contract is made may sue, and indeed is the only person who can sue.

PARKE, B.—The words in the charter-party were inserted for the benefit of Ewen and Co.; and the contract was so far made on their behalf.

Wilkins, Serjt. (with him Aspland), contrà, were not called on.

THE COURT said the case was clear enough, and recommended the defendants to accept the offer of the plaintiffs to take a verdict for 75*l.* Rule absolute accordingly.

Saturday, Jan. 15.

THE DUBLIN AND WICKLOW RAILWAY COMPANY v. PIDCOCK.

Liability for calls—Companies' Clauses Consolidation Act—"Subscriber."

A subscriber to a company is a man who pays under a subscription, and he is not a subscriber till he has signed the deed. The mere payment of a deposit will not make a man responsible as a subscriber, although his name has been put on the register by the company without his knowledge or consent.

The case established by the production of the registry, showing an entry of a man's name in it, may be rebutted by the fact that he had not executed the deed; and until he has done so he is not a subscriber or entitled to shares, and the company has right till then to put his name on the register.

EXCHEQUER.

This was an action for calls on fifty shares in the Dublin and Wicklow Railway Company. At the trial before Martin, B. at the sittings in last Michaelmas Term, it appeared that the defendant applied on the 29th April 1845 to the provisional committee in the usual form for an allotment of one hundred shares; that he received a reply from the secretary, dated 11th June, allotting him fifty shares, and requesting him to pay a deposit on such allotment of 1*l.* 10*s.* a share, on or before the 30th of June; and in the letter of allotment it was also stated, that the shares would be forfeited if the deposit was not so paid; and, further, that the parliamentary contract and subscribers' agreement must be signed on or before the 20th August. The defendant attended on the 17th June and paid the deposit on the fifty shares, but did not sign the deeds, and was never called upon to do so. His name was, however, inserted in the register of shareholders, and on this document the plaintiffs at the trial rested their case. For the defendant it was contended that such prima facie case was robutted by the fact that the defendant had never executed the deeds, the doing which alone authorised the company to put his name upon the register; and the court having so ruled at the trial, the plaintiffs were nonsuited.

H. Hill, Q.C. now moved to set aside the nonsuit, and to enter a verdict for the plaintiffs, on the ground that the above direction was incorrect. The question was, whether the fact of the defendant's name being on the registry was not in itself sufficient to constitute him a shareholder, although he had not in fact executed the deeds. The 8th section of the Companies' Clauses Consolidation Act (8 Vict. c. 16) enacts that "every person who shall have subscribed the prescribed sum or upwards to the capital of the company, or shall otherwise have become entitled to a share in the company, and whose name shall have been entered on the register of shareholders hereinafter mentioned, shall be deemed a shareholder of the company." Here the defendant is within the description of a shareholder contained in that clause. [ALDERSON, B.—A subscriber is a man who pays under a subscription; and he is not a subscriber till he has signed the deed. I think, also, he must be a person who, according to the 21st section of the Act, has paid the whole sum. That the defendant clearly has not done. MARTIN, B.—I have very little doubt that it was intended that a contract of some sort should be signed; and the jury are not to draw an inference from the mere payment of a deposit that the person thereby intended to bind himself as a subscriber.] Fox v. Clifton, 2 M. & S. 146; 9 Bing. 115; 6 Bing. 776; and Collyer on Partnership, 736, were cited.

PARKE, B.—I think that in this case there should be no rule. The company has the management of this register, and might put down any person's name, and so make him liable, if the mere fact of the name being on the register were sufficient. Here there is, first, the application by the defendant for 100 shares; then a letter telling him he may have fifty, and that he is to pay a deposit and sign certain deeds before a certain day; he does pay the deposit, but he never signs the deeds, and the question is whether this is sufficient to bring him within the 8th clause of the Companies' Clauses Act—whether he had so subscribed as to be entitled to the fifty shares. It appears to me, from this letter of allotment, that it is clear he was not to have the benefit of the shares until he had signed the Parliamentary contract and the subscribers' agreement, and brought his letter and exchanged it for scrip—all which, I think, were conditions precedent to his right to the shares. Here the defendant never signed, and, not having done so, he is not a subscriber; he could not recover the deposit he has made; that he chooses to forfeit, and he has a right to do so if he please.

ALDERSON, B.—The only proof of an agreement with the defendant is the register; but the defendant says, "You had no right to put my name there;" you have only a right to put the names of such as are shareholders, or those who have, according to the 8th section of the Act, "subscribed the prescribed sum;" and, looking at the 21st section, I think that means "shall have rendered themselves responsible by subscribing the deed." What has the defendant done? He says, I will pay and subscribe; then he pays, but does not subscribe; and as he has not subscribed, they had no right to put his name on the register.

MARTIN, B.—I am of the same opinion. I should be very sorry that it should be held that this Act entitles railway companies to put who they will upon the register. If they have any remedy, though I think not, it would be by action upon the contract; but I agree with Parke, B. that the defendant had a right to sacrifice his money if he pleased, and was not obliged to go on with the bargain.

POLLOCK, C.B.—I quite agree that in this case there should be no rule. If there be any difficulty it arises from the ambiguous meaning of the word "subscriber." That word sometimes refers to the payment of a sum of money by a person, and sometimes to his putting down or subscribing his name. I think the Act of Parliament means the putting down the name; and if taken in the other sense, I think a man can only be said to be a subscriber when he has paid the whole, and by such payment become entitled to some benefit; but the payment of this deposit cannot be held to make him a subscriber.

Rule refused.

SHAW v. BECK AND ANOTHER, Executors, &c.

County Court—Practice—Evidence in reply—Discretion of judge.

Upon an interpleader summons the plaintiff put in and proved an assignment by way of mortgage to him of the goods in question seized by the bailiff. The defendant then proved the deed fraudulent as against creditors; the County Court judge held it fraudulent, and declined to hear the plaintiff's evidence tendered in reply to negative the fraud:

Held, upon an appeal to this court, that the County Court judge was wrong in rejecting the evidence tendered by the plaintiff in reply to negative the fraud. A new trial was directed.

This was an appeal from the County Court of Halifax, arising upon an interpleader summons obtained by the officer of the court, who had levied an execution upon certain goods to which a claim had been set up by the plaintiff Shaw, who alleged that the goods in question had been assigned to him by way of mortgage for securing 50*l.* 15*s.* which had become absolute by reason of non-payment on the 9th April, 1852. A power of sale was contained in the mortgage given by Mellor, the mortgagor, to Shaw, and a schedule of the goods annexed. The execution of the deed being proved, the defendant then gave evidence that it was fraudulent, whereupon the plaintiff wished to offer evidence of the circumstances under which it was given, so as to negative fraud; but the County Court judge rejected it, and held the deed to be fraudulent; the defendant contending that the plaintiff should have given such evidence, if at all, in the first instance, when he offered proof of the deed, &c. The question for the opinion of the court, therefore, was, whether under the circumstances the plaintiff should have done so when he first proved a primâ facie case, or whether he could not give evidence to negative fraud in reply to the defendant's case—whether the County Court judge was right or wrong in rejecting the plaintiff's evidence, which was tendered in reply to the case made by the defendant.

Hugh Hill, Q.C. for the plaintiff.—It does not appear from the case how the executors were suing; if in tort, there would be no debt until judgment, and they could not be creditors so as to be enabled to dispute the validity of the deed, which would be good and binding at all events between themselves or third parties not creditors. The real question, however, is, whether the judge of the County Court was correct in not allowing witnesses to be examined by the plaintiff to rebut fraud, after fraud had been proved or attempted to be proved by the defendant. In the first place, the plaintiff may prove a primâ facie case on his part by proving the deed, &c. to show his title to the goods. Then, if the defendant shows that the deed and the transaction, from the circumstances under which the deed may have been given, were fraudulent, the plaintiff may prove by way of reply that there was no fraud connected with it. How can the plaintiff know in the first instance what the defendant is going to prove? [PARKE, B.—The rule appears to be laid down by Lord Tenterden in Brown v. Murray, Ry. & M. 254.] This is the most convenient course, and is in accordance with the general practice.

Atherton, Q. C.—The only point to be determined now is the second question raised in the case, whether the plaintiff was not bound in the outset of his case to prove it perfectly, as he must have known that fraud was intended to be proved by the defendant, and not to lie by to see if fraud was proved in fact, and then tender evidence to negative it. [MARTIN, B.—Is not the same course to be pursued as in an action upon a bill of exchange, for instance, with a plea of fraud?] The judge is to exercise his discretion at all times as to how the case shall be conducted, and whether evidence should be given at one particular time or another; and that appears to be the decision come to by the C. P. in Wright v. Wilcox, 19 L. J. 338, C. P. as to the practice at Nisi Prius, on evidence in reply. That was an action of trespass for false imprisonment. The defendant justified, first, on the ground that the plaintiff had stolen some "chaff" belonging to the defendant; and, secondly, on the ground that the defendant had reasonable cause for suspecting the plaintiff of stealing his "chaff." The plaintiff gave some evidence of the honest possession of some chaff, and some peculiarities in that chaff were spoken to similar to those in the chaff found in the plaintiff's drawer, and claimed by the defendant as his stolen property. No mention was made of linseed either in the pleadings or in the course of the plaintiff's case by cross-examination or otherwise. The defendant called witnesses, who proved that in the chaff lost by him, and also in that found in the plaintiff's drawer, linseed was found mixed. The plaintiff then proposed and was allowed by the judge to call her father, who was in court, to prove that he had bought linseed some months before the alleged felony and mixed it with chaff, and sent it to the plaintiff, and to produce the invoice which he had received for that linseed. The court there did not appear to wish to lay down any general rule as to the admission of evidence in reply, but held that it was in the discretion of the judge to allow such evidence to be given by way of reply, and that he had rightly exercised such discretion. [ALDERSON, B.—The discretion should be always one way, that is, to receive the evidence; as a general rule for the learned judges of the County Courts it may be always as well perhaps that they should hear as much as they can. But suppose in a case of felony the name of the parish had been omitted to be proved by the prosecutor, and some evidence given on behalf of the prisoner to negative the supposed place, can any one doubt that the judge would immediately have the witness or witnesses called to prove the correct parish?] The question is whether the County Court judge has a discretion to exercise, and if so, whether he wisely exercised that discretion by rejecting the evidence. In 2 Phillips on Evidence, 409 (edit. of 1843), it is laid down that the question whether evidence ought to be admitted in reply is entirely for the discretion of the judge, looking at the circumstances of each case: (Taylor on Evidence, p. 275.)

Hill, in reply (was stopped by the court).

Pollock, C. B.—We are all of opinion that there must be a new trial in this case, as the judge of the County Court should have received the evidence offered by the plaintiff in reply to the fraud alleged by the defendant. In ejectment the practice is common enough, although I don't at this moment recollect the cases upon the subject, that if a defendant proves some title to defeat the plaintiff's primâ facie case, the plaintiff may prove something else to defeat that case the defendant has set up, and so go on: (the learned Chief Baron afterwards mentioned Doe dem. Sturt v. Mobbs, Car. & Marsh. 1; Rowe v. Brenton, 8 B. & C. 737, and other cases in reference to it.) This case differed altogether from Middleton v. Barnard, 18 L. J. 433, Ex. where the case had been closed; and also from Jacobs v. Tarleton, 11 Q. B. 421, where the evidence offered in reply was held properly rejected, because it was not in contradiction of the defendant's case, but merely confirmatory of the plaintiff's primâ facie case. In Wright v. Wilcox, in the C. P. the evidence was received, not rejected. Where an action is brought by the heir-at-law claiming as such, if the defendant proves a devisee, then the heir-at-law would be at liberty to rebut the devise. In this case a deed is put in showing title primâ facie to the goods claimed; the defendant answers that by saying it was fraudulent as against creditors; the plaintiff then desired to give evidence to negative the supposed fraud, and I must say I think he was at liberty to do so: the evidence should have been received, and the plaintiff had a right to say, I shall not in the first instance offer this evidence, until I see what is proved by the defendant in answer. It is better, therefore, to adhere to the general current of authority that it is only incumbent on him to prove, in the first instance, just as much as is necessary to establish his primâ facie case. In ejectment a primâ facie case is made, then a primâ facie answer, which may be again rebutted, and so they go on: the judge here, therefore, should have received the evidence, and there must be a new trial.

PARKE, B.—I am of the same opinion; yet, after the case of Wright v. Wilcox in the C. P. I will not say it is not in the judge's discretion; but the judge ought to have exercised that discretion in this case by receiving the evidence. Browne v. Murray, Ry. & Moo. 254, was a decision by Abbott, C. J. and is in my opinion quite correct. That was an action for a libel, where the general issue was pleaded, and also special pleas in justification; it was there held the plaintiff may, in the outset, give all the evidence he intends to offer to rebut such justification, or he may do so in reply to evidence produced by the defendant; but he is not entitled to give part of such evidence in the first instance, and to reserve the remainder for reply to the defendant's case. That is the rule generally acted on in the Superior Courts, and should be adopted in the County Courts. Certainly there are no pleadings, as all is there by parol; the bailiff having seized the goods for the execution creditor, the plaintiff claims them by virtue of this deed which he gives in evidence. If fraud be imputed to the plaintiff by the defendant, it is incumbent on him to prove it; and when he has done so, it was then competent to the plaintiff to give evidence to negative that alleged fraud. No consideration was necessary to support the deed, and the deed therefore was primâ facie good. It was incumbent on the defendant then to prove fraud, which he appears to have done to the judge's satisfaction, and I am far from saying he was wrong in that as far as it went; but it certainly was open then to the plaintiff to be allowed to tender evidence to disprove the fraud; the judge refused the evidence offered, in which I think he was wrong. There must be a new trial.

ALDERSON and MARTIN, BB. concurred.

New trial.

ROSSITER, Executor, &c. v. CAHLMANN AND OTHERS.

Weights and measures—Imperial measure.

A contract was made to supply palm oil at so much per gallon, old measure, by the plaintiff on the coast of Africa to the defendant, who was to send his vessel there for it. Defendant pleaded that such a contract by that measure was void under the Weights and Measures Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63):

Held, that the Act did not apply to such a contract as this.

Declaration for goods sold and delivered, which consisted of a quantity of palm oil.

Plea, that the contract was for the sale of palm oil by the gallon, old measure.

Replication, that the contract was at a certain rate or price per gallon, old measure; the oil to be procured in parts beyond the seas; to be shipped in a vessel of the defendants' to be sent there by the defendants for the purpose of receiving the same.

Rejoinder, that the contract was made in England, and to be paid for here, and that the contract was by a measure other than those by law authorised.

Demurrer to the replication.

Montague Smith, in support of the demurrer.—The plaintiff is entitled to judgment. The question is, whether the contract entered into for the supply of palm oil from the coast of Africa is illegal, because it says that it was to be at so much per gallon, old measure; and it will be contended on the other side that all such local and customary measures are abolished by the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63. (He was stopped by the court.)

Field, contrà, called upon.—This replication affords no answer and is bad in substance, inasmuch as the contract set forth in the replication and in the rejoinder is wholly void by the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63. That is "An Act to repeal an Act of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, relating to Weights and Measures, and to make other provisions instead thereof;" and by the 6th section it is enacted that, after the passing of this Act, the measure called the Winchester bushel, and the lineal measure called the Scotch ell, and all local or customary measures, shall be abolished; and every person who shall sell by any denomination of measure other than one of the imperial measures or some multiple or some aliquot part, such as half, the quarter, the eighth, the sixteenth, or the thirty-second parts thereof, shall, on conviction, be liable to a penalty not exceeding the sum of 40*s.* for every such sale: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall prevent the sale of any articles in any vessel where such vessel is not represented as containing any amount of imperial measure or of any fixed local or customary measure heretofore in use." By the 21st section it is enacted that "any contract, bargain, or sale, made by any such weights or measures, shall be wholly null and void." The contract was made in England, and to be performed in England; this should be taken as admitted by the pleadings. [POLLOCK, C. B.—The Act only applies to England, Ireland, and Scotland.] The oil was to be delivered on the coast of Africa, but paid for here. [MARTIN, B.—Why are we to infer there was no measure of that description used out there? It does not appear there was any to be sent out.] It would be measured here when brought home, as it was to be paid for here, and the contract was entered into here; the Act expressly says any such contract shall be null and void.

POLLOCK, C. B.—We are all of opinion that the statute does not apply to such a contract as this, and therefore there must be Judgment for the plaintiff.

ANDERSON AND OTHERS v. THORNTON.—Sir F. Kelly moved for a new trial herein, on the ground of misdirection and that the verdict was against the evidence. Cur. adv. vult.

LEVI v. COTTRELL.—Watson, Q.C. moved for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence and for misdirection.

Rule nisi unless defendant would consent to a stet processus.

WOODHOUSE v. CRAIG.—The Attorney-General moved in this case, tried before Martin, B. in Middlesex, to set aside the plaintiff's verdict for 1050*l.* and enter a nonsuit or verdict for the defendant. The defendant was the vicar of Leamington, and the plaintiff registered officer of a bank. The defendant kept two accounts at the bank, one his private account, and the other on the church account; the bankers sued him for a balance of account, and signed judgment for the whole of the debtor side of the account, but issued execution for that which they thought to be a balance due to them: the defendant considered the 1050*l.* had already been allowed to them in the account. Rule nisi.

REG v. HARTLEY.—Phinn moved that the body of defendant be brought into court. He had been taken under an extent at the suit of the Crown, but was afterwards discharged under some order of a Commissioner of Bankruptcy, which it was considered he had no power to grant.

Rule accordingly.

BAIL COURT.

Rex v. Power.—Meade moved in this case, tried before the under-sheriff of Middlesex, to set aside the plaintiff's verdict, and for a new trial on the ground of surprise. The action was for 8*l*. Pleas—Never indebted, statute of limitations, and payment. The plaintiff and defendant were the only witnesses called, and they swore directly contrary to each other; the defendant would now be enabled to confirm his evidence by other testimony, with which he was not prepared on the former trial, not knowing at that time what the plaintiff's testimony would then be.

Saturday, Jan. 15.

Martin v. Bebaby.—This cause has already been tried twice, on each occasion a verdict having been returned for the plaintiff. Bramwell, Q. C. now moved for a new trial, or to enter a verdict for the defendant, or that the court would proceed under the 24th section of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, to "give judgment according to the very right and justice of the case." It was ultimately arranged that Martin, B. should settle the special finding, and the court should then say whether they would grant the rule.

Symons v. Edistow.—Tried in London before Pollock, C.B.—Verdict for the plaintiff, with nominal damages on the 1st count, and 60*l*. damages on the 2nd count. Bramwell now moved to enter a verdict for the defendant on the 1st count, or for a new trial, or in arrest of judgment.

Rule nisi granted.

Else v. Platt.—In this case Hindmarch moved for a rule to plead several matters, the application having been refused at chambers by Martin, B. Rule nisi granted.

Forsyth v. Bristowe.—Quain moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to show cause why he should not amend his replication, as tending to embarrass the fair trial of the action. The application was made under the 52nd section of the Common Law Procedure Act; a previous application having been made to Martin, B. at chambers. The action was on two mortgage deeds and two collateral bonds; the plea, statute of limitations, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 5; replication, "that the defendant within the twenty years made an acknowledgment within the meaning of the Act." This, it was contended, would be bad on special demurrer. They ought to state more fully the acknowledgment on which they intend to rely. Parke, B.—They must clearly state whether the acknowledgment is in writing, or by part payment. Rule nisi granted.

Parker v. Watson.—Hugh Hill, Q. C. appeared in support of the demurrer, but was stopped by the court. Hall, contrà, called upon. Judgment for the plaintiff.

Frenelin v. Hamilton, Bart. Executor, &c.—The declaration set out an agreement by the late Sir James Cockburn to grant the plaintiff a lease. Sir J. Cockburn died before it was carried into effect, and this action was against his personal representatives for not performing their part in reference to it, the plaintiff averring performance on his part, with an allegation of special damage, to which there was a general demurrer. Honeyman appeared in support of the demurrer, and contended the declaration, which had been twice before amended, was bad on several grounds; first, there was no consideration for the promise: (he was then stopped.) Horn, contrà, called upon to support the declaration.

Leave to amend on the usual terms, and to plead again or amend, if necessary.

Reg. v. Newhouse.

Indictment for libel—Taxation of costs—Jurisdiction of judge.

At the Spring Assizes in 1852, an indictment for libel was tried under the commission of oyer and terminer. Subsequently, and after the following Summer Assizes, the costs were taxed under the provisions of the 6 and 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 9. Upon an application in this term to Erle, J., who was one of the judges of oyer and terminer before whom the libel was tried, for a rule to review such taxation:

Held, that as a judge of the Queen's Bench he had no power to interfere, nor had he under the commission of oyer and terminer, such commission having expired on the issuing of a fresh one for the Summer Assizes.

This was an indictment for libel preferred at the Hampshire Sessions, and sent by the justices to the assizes for the county for trial. The defendant pleaded first, that the libel was a privileged communication, and, secondly, a justification. At the trial at the last Spring Assizes, a verdict was found for the defendant on the first plea, and for the Crown upon the second.

By the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 9, it is enacted that "in case of any indictment or information by a private prosecutor for the publication of any defamatory libel, if judgment shall be given for the defendant, he shall be entitled to recover from the prosecutor such costs sustained by the said defendant by reason of such indictment or information; and that upon a special plea of justification to such indictment or information, if the issue be found for the prosecutor, he shall be entitled to recover from the defendant the costs sustained by the prosecutor by reason of such plea; such costs, so to be recovered by the defendant or prosecutor respectively, to be taxed by the proper officer of the court before which the indictment or information is tried."

NISI PRIUS.

Subsequently to the trial, and after the next assizes, namely in September, both the parties went before the clerk of assize for the Western Circuit for the purpose of having their respective costs taxed, when the expenses of certain witnesses of the prosecution called to rebut the plea of justification were disallowed.

Massey now moved, on the part of the prosecution for a rule, calling upon the defendant to show cause why the taxation of costs should not be reviewed on the ground of the disallowance of certain witnesses. [Erle, J.—Is it a record of this court?] No, the indictment was tried under the commission of oyer and terminer. [Erle, J.—That being so, I don't see what jurisdiction I have to interfere.] If that be so, it will almost be impossible to review a taxation under this Act of Parliament, as the commission of oyer and terminer expires so soon.

Erle, J.—Upon this application it is sufficient for me to say that, sitting here as a judge of the court of Queen's Bench, I have no jurisdiction whatever over the clerk of assize. The two judges of oyer and terminer would have had jurisdiction down to the time of a new commission appointing their successors. In this case a fresh commission has issued (for the last Summer Assizes) and I have therefore no further power in the matter. Rule refused.

Habeas corpus—Infant—Right of father to custody.

The father of an infant entered into a contract, whereby A. B. was to have the charge of the child until it was twenty-one years of age, the father paying a certain sum periodically in respect thereof, and having free access to it. Upon a habeas corpus obtained by the father to obtain back the child:

Held, that the contract was no bar to his right to have possession of it.

Prentice on a former day obtained a writ of habeas corpus to bring into court a young female child now in the possession of its uncle, that it may be delivered over to the custody of its father.

The writ being now returned, the return was read, wherein it was stated that, the father and mother having lived unhappily together, the mother during her last illness requested that the child might be brought up by its uncle, and upon this a contract was entered into by the father that the uncle should have the care of the child until it was twenty-one years of age, the father paying a sum per month in respect of it, and having all reasonable means of access.

Heneker now, in support of the return, contended that as the child was in the custody of the uncle under a contract with the father, it could not be said to be improperly detained against his will, which was the ground upon which this court would interfere.

Prentice, contrà, argued that, notwithstanding the child originally was placed in the custody of the uncle with the father's consent, yet the father had a natural right to revoke that consent at any time, and obtain the child back: (Rex v. De Manneville, 5 East, 221; Rex v. Greenhill, 4 A. & E. 624; Ex parte Skinner, 9 B. Moore, 270.)

Erle, J. wished, as this was a somewhat new question, and of much importance, to consider it until the next day. Cur. adv. vult.

His Lordship on this day (Wednesday, Jan. 19) said: I have looked into the cases that have been decided, and it seems to me that the arrangement made between the father and the uncle, that the child should be brought up by the uncle, is in the nature of a consent given by the father, and a contract by him to pay for the maintenance of the child. It being in the nature of a consent by the father, I think he is at liberty to revoke that consent, and the child must be delivered up to him. I am bound to say that the father has a right to the custody of the child.

Order accordingly.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

FIRST SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER IN HILARY TERM.

(Before Erle, J.)

Wednesday, Jan. 12.

Practice of the court.

Erle, J., after disposing of an undefended action, said: In conformity with the practice adopted last term, in all cases of verdicts against acceptors of bills of exchange and makers of promissory notes, and of cheques, execution will issue in four days; but where the parties are only liable secondarily execution will not issue for fourteen days, as such parties may be called upon to pay quite unexpectedly.

Ogle asked whether this practice would be acted upon without application to the judge.

Erle, J.—It will.

Ogle afterwards said that Mr. Baron Platt had just held in the Exchequer that in all money demands execution should issue in four days.

Erle, J.—I am at a loss to know what, with the exception of ejectment, is not a money demand. The law has recently been revised, and it is considered that execution in fourteen days is going fast enough, unless the judge may think that there are special circumstances which require his interference. The practice in this court will be as I have stated it.

Thursday, Jan. 13.

Erle, J., at the sitting of the court, said: I may as well mention, with reference to the time of issuing executions, that the judges have made a rule applicable to executions after verdict in term. According to that rule the execution is to issue within fourteen days after verdict, and that is to be the general rule, subject to exceptions in case of special circumstances, such as the defendant making away with his goods, and so on. The practice I mentioned yesterday of execution in four days was a practice entered into until the judges settled the rule; they have now settled it, in the way that I have stated. The rule will take effect from this time.

Clarson and Wife v. Allen.

Case—Negligence—Dangerous opening.

A tradesman had in his house, between the shop and the back-door, a dangerous opening. Whilst A. was in his shop as a customer the shop was closed for the night, and he directed her to go out by the back-door; in doing so she fell down the hole. Another person had before fallen down, and the defendant had, just before the accident, been cautioned as to the danger:

Held, that he was liable for the injury to A.

It appeared that the defendant carried on business as a linen-draper and hosier, and that on the night of the 16th Oct. the plaintiff's wife went into the defendant's shop as a customer; that whilst there the defendant's assistant put up the shutters and fastened up the front entrance, and defendant said that he would take Mrs. Clapson and the other customers out by the private door. Mr. Twentyman, one of those customers, was taken out that way. There was a trap-door in the passage through which he passed, which was open, leaving uncovered a hole with a steep staircase. Mr. Twentyman nearly tumbled into it, and observed to the defendant that it was very dangerous. Shortly afterwards Mrs. Clapson was directed to go out by the same way. She went into the passage, and, the place being quite dark, she fell down the staircase and was seriously hurt. The wife of the defendant had some time before fallen down the same hole.

Erle, J. in summing up the case to the jury, said: A man has a right to keep his private house in whatever state he pleases; but if he has a place to which the public are invited, and in which there is great danger where a man, according to ordinary experience, would not be led to expect any, then, if damage ensues, the person who keeps that public place is responsible for that damage. If, therefore, there was in this case want of care on the part of the defendant, the plaintiff is entitled to your verdict.

Sheriff—Writ of Execution—Priority.

If writs of execution are lodged with the sheriff, they are entitled to priority over writs subsequently placed in his hands, unless there has been fraudulent collusion to keep them unexecuted.

The action was in case against the defendants as Sheriff of Middlesex, for making a false return to a writ of fi. fa. issued by the plaintiff against Lord Glengall, and placed in the hands of the defendants for execution. It was proved on behalf of the plaintiff that Lord Glengall had some property which might have been seized by the sheriff.

For the defendants it was shown that before the plaintiff's writ of execution was placed in the hands of the sheriff, several other writs against Lord Glengall, to an amount far exceeding the value of the goods belonging to Lord Glengall, had been lodged with the defendants; and, it was contended that the sheriff could not execute the last writ, until the others had been satisfied.

Erle, J. said: I take the law to be this, that if writs are lodged with the sheriff for execution, they are entitled to priority over writs subsequently deposited with him, unless such prior writs have been kept unexecuted by fraudulent collusion. I (the jury, therefore think that in this case there has been no such fraudulent collusion, the defendants are entitled to a verdict. Verdict for the defendants.

DANCEY v. RICHARDSON.

Case — Negligence — Boarding-house-keeper — Loss of goods — Liability.

A boarding-house-keeper does not incur the same liability as an innkeeper in respect of a lodger's goods. He is bound to use the same care as a prudent person would use with regard to his own premises and goods; and if he does so he is not responsible for any loss.

Nor is he responsible for the negligence of his servant, unless he knew that such servant was a negligent servant.

The declaration was in case, averring that the defendant kept a boarding-house in Weymouth-street; that the plaintiff was in her house as a lodger and guest, and that the defendant undertook to take care of her goods; that the defendant did not take care of the goods of the plaintiff, but that through the carelessness and negligence of the defendant, a valuable dressing-case and box of the plaintiff were stolen and lost from the boarding-house. The defendant pleaded not guilty; that she did not keep a boarding-house; that the plaintiff did not become a guest there; and that the plaintiff did not become a guest on the terms mentioned in the declaration

The defendant kept a boarding-house in Weymouth-street, and the plaintiff, who had arrived from Paris, went to lodge there. When about to leave, the page belonging to the establishment went up to the plaintiff's bedroom to call her for dinner, and was told by the plaintiff to take her dressing-case and box down stairs, and then to fetch a cab. He did so, and the plaintiff went into the dining-room. She then asked the butler to get her some biscuits; and he went out for that purpose, leaving the outer door partly open. During his absence the defendant saw a man go out of the door with the box and dressing-case, and, supposing him to be the cabman, took no notice; but upon finding that no cab was there she gave the alarm; but the thief had disappeared. When the police came the defendant said that there had been a robbery there some time before; that she had repeatedly cautioned her servants not to leave the door open; and that on this occasion the butler had gone out, leaving the door ajar.

It was contended for the defendant that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence in sending out one servant for a cab and the other at the same time for biscuits. No doubt the defendant was bound to take care of her lodger's goods; but so was the lodger bound to take care of them; and if the loss resulted from negligence on the part of the plaintiff, the defendant would not be responsible.

ERLE, J. in leaving the case to the jury, said: You must bear in mind the degree of care which the law requires of a person in the situation of the defendant. It is very different from the care required from an innkeeper. By law an innkeeper is responsible for goods brought into his inn, and would be responsible for them if stolen, unless the owner had contributed to their loss; but there is no such extensive responsibility with respect to the keeper of a boarding-house: in such a house a person must look after his own goods to a much greater extent. A person keeping a boarding-house is bound to use such care as a prudent owner would use with regard to his own premises. If he does so he will not be responsible for any loss. Has there been then, on the part of Mrs. Richardson, such conduct as would be negligence if tried by the standard of what the conduct of a private person would be? A boarding-house keeper is not responsible for the negligence of her servant, unless that servant is known by her to be a negligent servant. If you think that there has been negligence on the part of the defendant, then consider whether or not the conduct of the plaintiff has contributed to the result. If so, you will find your verdict for the defendant.

Verdict for the defendant.

STUMP v. GABY.

Devise — Voidable estate — Confirmation — Right of entry — Solicitor and client.

To a bill by a party claiming as the heir-at-law of A. W. against parties in possession of the estate, alleging that the defendants had acquired the estate under and by virtue of a conveyance from A. W. to H. G. who was his solicitor, that at the date of the purchase A. W. was in embarrassed circumstances, and that the consideration was inadequate; and praying that such transaction might be set aside, and that any testamentary disposition by A. W. in favour of the defendants who represented H. G. in confirmation thereof might be declared void. A plea stating that, by a codicil to his will, A. W. after reciting the sale and conveyance to the defendants, and that a party had thought fit to threaten that such conveyance should be disputed, in order to prevent all dispute, he ratified and confirmed the conveyance and devised the estate to the defendants in fee — was (affirming the decision of the court below) allowed.

The interest which A. W. had in the estate after the sale thereof, assuming he could have set it aside, was not a mere right of entry, which under the old law could not have been devised, but an equitable estate, and devisable under the old law.

A voidable estate may be confirmed by will; and this codicil was a valid confirmation.

A conveyance may be so fraudulent as to be void at law, as a conveyance; but the conveyance in this case was not a conveyance at law, nor was it a voidable conveyance at law: but it might, perhaps, have been set aside by the vendor in equity upon equitable grounds.

If a man conveys his interest in an estate to his attorney in a manner which the attorney cannot maintain as a conveyance, he is still, in the view of the court, owner of his estate, subject to his paying to his attorney, when the transaction is impeached, the money which the attorney has paid.

If an attorney takes an undue advantage of communications which are not made to the client, which would give him a right in a court of equity, he would, in the view of that court, still be considered as owner; he might devise that right, not as a legal but an equitable estate.

A conveyance to an attorney may or may not be good in a court of equity; it is certainly good at law, if there is no startling fraud upon the face of it.

A deed, properly executed by a client to his attorney, is primâ facie good, and can only be impeached in a court of equity on equitable grounds, under certain circumstances.

If a client sells to his attorney, who has not disclosed circumstances which would enable the former to set aside the deed in equity, yet if he, having ascertained that he has a right to set it aside, and that it is impeachable, chooses to confirm it, the estate in the hands of the latter will be perfect.

If an attorney, in acquiring an estate from his client, commits what may be considered a fraud, and afterwards claims and obtains from him a confirmation, the former must show fair dealing upon that confirmation, and that he communicated to the latter the fact of its being in his power to set aside the conveyance, and that it was with a full knowledge of all the circumstances of his right so to set it aside he confirmed it.

This was an appeal from a decision of the late V. C. Lord Cranworth, allowing a plea. The facts were these:—Ayliffe White, by his will dated in 1760, devised the estate in question (after certain uses and trusts which failed) to his son Henry Boswell White for life; remainder to his grandson, Ayliffe White, son of the said Henry Boswell White, for life; remainder to the first and other sons of Ayliffe White, the grandson, in tail male; remainder to the second and other sons of Henry Boswell White in tail male; remainder to testator's son Francis for life; remainder to the first and other sons of Francis in tail male; remainder to testator's son James for life; remainder to James's first and other sons in tail male; remainder to testator's own right heirs. The testator died in 1761, and left Henry Boswell White his eldest son, Francis his second, and James his youngest, and the said Ayliffe White the grandson, all surviving. Francis and James both died without issue male. Henry Boswell White held the estates for life, and died without issue male other than Ayliffe, and on his death Ayliffe, the grandson, became tenant for life. Ayliffe White, the grandson, had no issue, and was the heir-at-law of the testator, and during his life he claimed to be entitled to the reversion in fee limited to the testator's right heirs in the event of his (Ayliffe) dying without issue male; he executed an absolute conveyance of the estates, subject to the contingency of his having issue male, to one Ralph Hall Gaby. Francis White, the second son of the testator, had one son, who died without issue male, but leaving four daughters, who, upon the death of Ayliffe White, the grandson, without issue, became the coheiresses-at-law of the testator, and also the coheiresses-at-law of Ayliffe White, the grandson. The plaintiff was the eldest son of the second daughter. The case made by the bill was, that Ayliffe White, the grandson, had executed a conveyance of the property to Gaby, who was his solicitor, under the pressure of embarrassed circumstances, and for an inadequate consideration, and that such conveyance ought to be set aside; and that the plaintiff claimed to be entitled to them either as heir-at-law of Ayliffe White the grandson, or of the testator. Gaby, the purchaser, was dead, and the defendants claimed under him.

To this bill the defendants put in a plea which was, in effect, the will of Ayliffe White, the grandson, whereby,—after reciting that some time in the year 1812 he had conveyed to Gaby the hereditaments in question, and "that certain persons had threatened to dispute such conveyances,—in order to prevent all dispute, he therefore ratified and confirmed the conveyances made to him the said Gaby, and for further assurance and confirmation gave and devised unto him the several hereditaments, to hold to him, his heirs and assigns for ever."

This plea was allowed by Lord Cranworth, V. C., and this was an appeal from his decision.

Cottrell (in the absence of Sir William Page Wood), in support of the appeal, contended that Ayliffe White having conveyed away his estate during his life, was not seised of such an estate as could pass by his will; under the old Wills Acts he must have been seised at the time of making his will and of his death of the same estate; that he was not, in fact, seised at either of these periods, inasmuch as he had granted the estate and all his interest therein, "both at law and in equity," before he made his will. So long as the conveyance remained unavoided, the whole estate remained in the grantee. The test of that position was that, without further corroboration on the part of the grantor, the whole estate would under the conveyance have been well vested in the grantee; and if the whole estate had been so vested, that then Ayliffe White had nothing in him upon which his will could operate. So long as the conveyance continued in force, all the interest which Ayliffe White had in the estate was a right of action, which right was not before the new Wills Act devisable. He cited Goodtitle v. White, 15 East, 174; Cave v. Holford, 3 Ves. 669; Attorney-General v. Vigor, 8 Ves. 281; and the other cases there cited.

Bethell and J. V. Prior appeared for the defendants, but were not called upon to address the court.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I had thought this was a concluded point, and I believe it has actually been decided. There is a case in which the question was raised as to the effect of a devise after a void contract, and I have always considered that there was no point to be raised upon it. The case set up by the bill is, that the person under whom the plaintiff claims executed a conveyance to his attorney which could be set aside on equitable grounds; that he is the heir-at-law of such person, and that he has a right to set it aside. The plea, which seems to cover the bill in that, and indeed in all respects, says, in answer, that the person whose heir-at-law the plaintiff is, and whose deed he professes to set aside, did himself, by his will, confirm that deed, and, moreover, that he devised the estate; and so, if he had the fee, it passed by his will. The answer in the argument was—First, that you could not devise a right of entry; and, secondly, that the confirmation was of no value, because it was not shown that the person confirming was aware of all the circumstances under which the fraud existed, and that he had a right to set it aside. Now, upon the first point, under the old statute, you could not devise a right of entry; that is a settled point of law; but this is no right of entry. How could he enter? Where was the right of entry? The whole legal fee-simple passed by the conveyance, and this testator had no legal estate or right of entry at all. Whether that was a deed which could be maintained in this court or not is another question; but it is quite clear that the entire legal fee-simple passed by that deed, and that the person who executed it had not the slightest remedy at law to set it aside, because it is not put as a case of that monstrous degree of fraud that the deed of itself was void. There are cases in which a conveyance may be so fraudulent as to be void at law as a conveyance, but this was not a conveyance at law at all, nor was it a voidable conveyance at law; but it was a conveyance which I will assume could be set aside in equity upon equitable grounds. But then, what is the interest of a man in an estate which he has conveyed to his attorney in a manner which the attorney cannot maintain—that is, which he cannot maintain as a conveyance? Why he is still, in the view of this court, owner of his own estate, subject to the repaying to his attorney, when he impeaches the transaction, the money which the attorney has paid; he remains owner subject to the estate which he had conveyed away to his attorney for an improper price. If an attorney takes an undue advantage of communications which are not made to the client, which would give a right in this court, even then he remains owner of his estate, and he may devise that estate as an equitable and not a legal estate. It could be open to no question as to right of action; but leaving the conveyance to have its full operation at law, and looking at the equitable right to set it aside in this court, he is in this court owner of that estate, subject to the repaying to the attorney the money which he had paid. He has, under the old law, a devisable estate; and I believe there are authorities disposing of the very point. My strong impression is that the very point is concluded by authority; but if it is not, I am ready, as far as my opinion goes, to make an authority now, and to decide the point. There is not the slightest doubt that the equitable estate is in him, subject to what I have before stated, and that he may devise by will. Well then, in the clearest terms, he has devised it. The question of descent is prevented; it would have gone to the heir-at-law supposing there had been no disposition. There is a clear devise of fee simple of the estate, if the man had it; and if he had it, as I am of opinion he had, then it passed. But then as to the confirmation. It is said that a conveyance to an attorney may or may not be good in this court; it is certainly good at law, beyond all question, where there is no absolute startling fraud, such as that upon which a jury would find that there was no deed at all executed; but a deed properly executed by a client to his solicitor is primâ facie good, and you can only impeach it in this court on equitable grounds, under certain circumstances. Now assuming this to be impeachable, the man who has made it addresses himself in his will to the very case. He says—"I find a person who has married into my family, and who will claim after me on my death, has threatened to set aside this deed; now I do hereby confirm the deed." It is said that there is something in the Statute of Wills to prevent that confirmation. I do not understand that; the Statute of Wills merely says that a man having an estate shall have power to devise it; and therefore that point refers to the question which I have considered, namely, whether he had the estate or not; and I am clearly of opinion that he had the equitable estate. It is beyond dispute that a man may confirm, if he pleases, a voidable conveyance which he has made. A man may sell to his attorney, where the attorney has not disclosed circumstances which would enable the client to set aside the deed in equity. Yet if the client afterwards, having ascertained that he has a right to set it aside, that it is impeachable, or that he may impeach it, chooses to say that he will confirm it, he clearly may do so. Now the difference here is between contract and disposition by will. If I deal with my attorney, and he commits what in this court may be considered a fraud in obtaining my estate, and he afterwards claims and obtains from me a confirmation—he has to show fair dealing upon that confirmation, and that he communicated to me all knowledge that I was perfectly aware that I could set aside the first deed, and that I confirmed with a knowledge of all the circumstances of my right to set it aside. That is established. I have no intention to disturb that which is, I think, so properly settled. But what has that to do with this case? There is no dealing with the attorney. There is a disposition by a man of his own property and his own right in favour of a person with whom he has previously dealt; he might give it to any one he pleased. Why should he not give it by way of confirmation if he thought proper to the man with whom he had had dealing? He is not in the dark on the subject. He says, a person who will claim after my death means to dispute this, therefore there is something to be disputed—that is, somebody else thinks so; I do not think so. He has got the absolute right of disposition; it is testamentary—it is not contract; it is a disposition by will, and his will must be the guide under which the court must act. He has not only devised the estate, but my opinion is that if he had simply said "I confirm it," without any devise at all, that would have been a valid confirmation—not as a dealing with an attorney whose estate I will assume wanted confirming, but as a confirmation to a party by his will, giving, in effect, to the attorney, the advantage of not having his conveyance disturbed, just as he might have given any part of his estate to a stranger. He gave the same right as he himself had. I must dismiss this appeal; but as it is instituted in formâ pauperis, it is no use giving costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Practice—Chancery Amendment Act.

An appearance had been entered to a bill by a plaintiff for a defendant who had absconded. Notice of filing replication under the 28th Order of Aug. 1852 was (under the circumstances of the case) ordered to be served at the defendant's last place of abode, with directions to advertise in the Gazette and two country papers.

A defendant to a bill had absconded, and an appearance had been entered for him by the plaintiff. The 77th and 78th Orders of May 1845 being no longer applicable, and the defendant, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, being considered to have traversed the case made by the bill, it was asked how notice of the filing of the replication directed by the 28th Order of Aug. 1852 was to be served.

Renshaw applied.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Under the circumstances let the notice of filing the replication be served at the defendant's last place of abode, and let advertisements be published in the Gazette and two country papers. I must be understood as making no general order. The order I now make has reference only to the present case.

COURT OF APPEAL.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

January 14 and 19.

Ex parte JAMES JAMES and JAMES CUSHION, re TRATT, a bankrupt, deceased.

Costs—Trustee and cestui que trust—Public policy.

A., when in difficulties and insolvent, procured from an insurance office, for a small consideration, an assignment to B. of an annuity and arrears payable by him to the office, secured on some leasehold property belonging to A. Afterwards A. became bankrupt, and B. purchased the equity of redemption in the leaseholds. A bill in Chancery was filed by the assignees against B.; and the sale of the annuity, and of the equity of redemption of the leaseholds, was set aside with costs upon the usual terms. By an order in bankruptcy, it was declared that the direction in the decree as to costs was to be without prejudice to any question between A. and B. A. obtained his certificate, and died, having previously assigned all his property for valuable consideration to C. The leaseholds were sold by the assignees, and, after payment of all creditors and costs, there remained a surplus in court:

Held, reversing the decision of the Commissioner, that whether B. was to be regarded as a mere trustee of the annuity and leaseholds for A., or whether A. and B. had both combined together for the purpose of defeating A.'s creditors, in the former case because B. had set up a title adverse to A., and in the latter upon grounds of public policy, B. was not entitled to his costs as against A., and that consequently A. or his assignees for value were entitled to the surplus.

This was a petition by way of appeal from the decision of Mr. Commissioner Evans, praying that the sum of 596*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* being the surplus of the estate of the bankrupt after paying all debts and interests, and proper costs and charges, then in the hands of the assignee or accountant, should be paid to the petitioner James James, as trustee for the petitioner James Cushion.

Mr. Henry Smith Cafe, an auctioneer, also claimed the 596*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* for the costs of a suit which had been instituted against him by the assignees of the bankrupt under the following circumstances:—The bankrupt, Joseph Tratt, a plumber and glazier, being in great difficulties, had committed an act of bankruptcy in the month of July 1838. Mr. Tratt was at that time possessed of leasehold property which was charged with an annuity to the Globe Insurance Company, on which there was then due arrears to the amount of 499*l.* On the 8th Nov. 1838, the trustees of the Globe Insurance Company, and Mr. Tratt, in consideration of 900*l.* paid to the Company for the purchase of the annuity, executed an indenture of that date by which it was assigned with the arrears to Henry Smith Cafe absolutely. On 21st Nov. 1838, Mr. Tratt was declared bankrupt, and assignees were appointed. On 27th Dec. 1838, the equity of redemption of the leasehold premises comprised in the annuity deed and in the assignment thereof to Henry Smith Cafe were put up to sale by public auction, and were purchased by Mr. Cafe for 120*l.* Mr. Cafe was in the year 1843 appointed creditors' assignee in the place of Mr. D. Jonathan, deceased, but, on the 1st Feb. 1848, Mr. Cafe was removed from being such assignee, and Mr. S. Baskett, W. Mitchell, and Martha Sharpe were on that day appointed sole assignees. On the 27th March, 1848, the assignees filed a bill in Chancery against Mr. Cafe, praying that he should be declared a trustee of the annuity, and the arrears thereof for the plaintiffs, as assignees of the estate and effects of the bankrupt, subject to such lien as he might have thereon in respect of the 900*l.* paid by him to the Globe Insurance Company; and also that it should be declared that the purchase by Mr. Cafe of the leasehold premises was fraudulent and void as against the creditors of the bankrupt, and that he and Edward Leech (his trustee) were trustees thereof for the plaintiffs, as assignees of the bankrupt, subject only to such lien thereon as he might have in respect of the purchase-money of 120*l.* paid by him for the purchase of the said equity of redemption, with lawful interest thereon. Upon the cause coming on to be heard before Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, then Vice-Chancellor, his Honour said that he was of opinion, from the answers and evidence, first, that the interests and rights which the directors of the Globe Company sold to Mr. Cafe for 900*l.* were not at any time during the year 1838 worth so little as 1200*l.*; secondly, that in contracting originally to take the price of 900*l.* they meant to confer a benefit on Tratt; thirdly, that without his consent they would not have assigned or sold as they did at that price to Mr. Cafe; fourthly, that they sold and assigned to him, and took his money, in the belief that Tratt would and was in some manner to derive advantage from the transaction; fifthly, that the transaction was intended and understood by Tratt and represented by Cafe, as intended and understood by the latter to be a transaction from which Cafe was in some manner to derive advantage; sixthly, that Tratt at the time was considered by Cafe to be, and was in fact, not only embarrassed, not merely in difficulties, but hopelessly insolvent. . . That there was a common understanding between each of them to make unjust gains—Cafe by the lowness of the price for the annuity, and Tratt by the promise held out by Cafe that he would advance and pay him money, or otherwise help him in his difficulties; and that both Cafe and Tratt had the bankruptcy of Tratt in contemplation, and had entered into the transaction with the Globe Insurance Company with the view of improperly abstracting the pecuniary benefit to be derived thereby from the creditors of Tratt. His Honour therefore set aside both sales according to the prayer, upon the usual terms. And it was, amongst other things, ordered that it be referred to the Taxing Master to tax the plaintiffs their costs of those suits. And it was ordered that the amount of such costs, after deducting the sum of 20*l.* and such sum (if any) as should be set off against such costs as thereinbefore mentioned, should be paid by the defendant Cafe to the solicitor of the plaintiffs.

It may be here mentioned that Mr. Tratt, in his examination on Jan. 16, 1839, swore that Cafe purchased the annuity with his concurrence, and that there was no agreement as to any benefit to be derived by him in consequence of Cafe's making the purchase. Mr. Tratt, however, when he made that statement, was in great difficulties, and receiving small weekly or monthly payments from Cafe.

By an order of the 2nd Aug. 1850, made by V. C. Knight Bruce, on a petition in bankruptcy, the said H. S. Cafe consenting thereto, it was amongst other things ordered that Cafe should be discharged from being an assignee of the estate of the bankrupt, and should account before the Commissioners, &c. And it was ordered that the said H. S. Cafe should pay to such of the petitioners as were living their costs of and occasioned by the said petition, so far as they had been increased by any evidence in his behalf in support of his title to the leasehold premises in the said petition and former order mentioned. And it was referred to W. Vizard, Esq., an officer of the court, to tax such costs between the parties in case they differed about the sum. And the court declared that this order and the decree, so far as they directed the payment of any costs, were to be without prejudice to any question between the said H. S. Cafe and the said bankrupt or his representatives. And the court ordered that no part of the surplus estate of the bankrupt be paid to the said bankrupt or his representatives without previous notice to the said H. S. Cafe.

By an order in bankruptcy, dated the 1st May, 1852, it was ordered that the defendant, H. S. Cafe, should pay to the official assignee of the bankrupt the sum of 158*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.* the balance due from him on the accounts directed by the decree, and that it should be referred to the Taxing Master to tax the petitioners' costs of the suit, since the last taxation as between solicitor and client; and that such costs when taxed should be paid by the defendant H. S. Cafe; and that thereupon all further proceedings in the cause should be stayed.

The bankrupt obtained his certificate of conformity on the 21st Jan. 1839, and on the 4th June, 1845, Mr. Tratt, for valuable consideration, assigned the leasehold premises and all his property and effects to the petitioner James James, as a trustee for the petitioner James Cushion. Mr. Tratt died in 1847.

All the creditors of the bankrupt were paid in full, and, the leaseholds being sold, there remained in court a surplus of 596*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.* Notice having been given to Mr. Cafe of the intention of the petitioners to apply to the Commissioner for the payment to them of the surplus, he appeared to oppose the application, and insisted that he was entitled to the surplus, because he had during the several proceedings in bankruptcy, and in the suit instituted against him, paid and disbursed according to the several orders and decrees made in each proceeding respectively, as for costs to the petitioners and plaintiffs, amounting to the sum of 585*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.* Whereupon Mr. Commissioner Evans refused to grant the prayer of the petition, or to make any order thereon. The petitioners thereupon presented their petition of appeal.

Russell and Cooke for the appellants, contended it was clear upon grounds of public policy, that Cafe ought not to be allowed his costs; consequently that the surplus ought to belong to the petitioners, as the assignees, for valuable consideration of Tratt. Reynell v. Sprye, 21 L. J. N. S. Ch. 638, and M'Neill v. Cahill, 2 Bligh, N. S. 316, were referred to.

Bacon, Pigott, and Hardy, for Mr. Cafe.

Bury for the assignees.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—This purchase (I am now speaking of the annuity) must, upon the evidence, have been made by Mr. Cafe, I think, in one of two ways—either as a trustee for Mr. Tratt, in which event there is no question but that the present controversy must be decided in favour of the present petitioners; or, if he did not purchase as trustee for Mr. Tratt in the ordinary sense in which I have been using the expression, the purchase must be taken to be the result of a combination between Mr. Cafe and Mr. Tratt to withhold property, for the benefit of one or either or both of them, from the creditors of Tratt, a failing and fallen man in worldly circumstances.

COURT OF APPEAL.

Now, in that state of things, as far as the title to the property goes, public interest requires that the purchase should be considered as a trust, and that, for the sake of society, without regard to the merits or deserts of either of the parties, the man so acquiring property should not be heard to state that he has acquired it. I am of opinion that the disparity of circumstances was such as to create a gross inequality, and to prevent Tratt having any voice in the matter, and that there are also consequences of advantage to society, which is deeply interested in preventing men from gaining by such a transaction. The property must be considered as having remained in Tratt, whether by means of trust, or by the same result as a trust, as far as mere title is concerned. It has been suggested, and fairly argued, that the costs of the suit, as between Cafe and Tratt, ought to be borne by Tratt; that is not my view of the case. The defence to the suit for setting aside the purchase was not put by Mr. Cafe on grounds which Mr. Tratt is bound to recognise, nor on grounds which this court can allow Mr. Cafe to charge against him; they must remain where the law has thrown them. With respect to the account between Mr. Cafe and Mr. Tratt, it must to a great extent be taken as a stated account; but there are certain allowances which would be just as between Cafe and Tratt, which could not have been made as between the creditors and Mr. Cafe, and we shall be glad to receive suggestions as to the mode in which these shall be made. With regard to the claims made by the assignees, I have not a clear apprehension.

Lord Justice TURNER.—This is an application by a party, who for present purposes must be assumed to represent the bankrupt, for the surplus of the bankrupt's estate. Primâ facie that surplus must belong to them. It is attempted to be intercepted by a claim of Mr. Cafe, and the claim rests on this:—A suit was instituted against Mr. Cafe by the assignees, for the purpose of getting part of the bankrupt's property, and he was compelled to pay the costs. This was followed by an order in bankruptcy, by which it was declared that the directions in the decree as to costs were to be without prejudice to any question between Cafe and Tratt. Looking, therefore, to the probability of a surplus, the truth of the case is this: Supposing the property had not been sold under the bankruptcy, but that from other funds of the bankrupt's estate, all the debts had been paid, to whom would the equitable right to this property remaining vested in the assignees belong? Who could call for an assignment of the legal estate from the assignees,—would it be in Tratt, or his assignees, or in Cafe? Now, in determining that question it is to be considered what were the circumstances under which Mr. Cafe became purchaser of the property and of the annuity. Now it is clear that a confidential relation anterior to October 1850 existed between Tratt and Cafe; it is equally clear, and it is the common case on both sides, that the transaction was intended to be beneficial to Tratt; and it is not disputed that the Globe intended to confer a benefit on Tratt, who was in a position of great difficulty, and no one was acting on his part. Now can it be doubted that, as between Tratt and Cafe, the former would have had an equity to consider this a trust of the purchase from the Globe. But it was said that Tratt was examined under the commission, and that he had said that there was no arrangement between him and Cafe that Cafe was to be a trustee for him, and that therefore the case could not now be set up that Cafe was a trustee for Tratt. But what was the situation of Tratt at the time he gave this evidence? He was in a state of dependency upon Cafe, and was receiving from him small weekly and monthly payments. It is clear, therefore, that when this representation was made by Tratt he was under the influence of Cafe, and that no statement then made by him, according to the principles laid down by Lord Eldon in Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swanst. 2, can bind him so as to extinguish the equity, to set aside the transaction, and make Cafe a trustee for him. That being the state of things, it is said that the court would not have given costs as against Cafe if a bill had been filed against him by Tratt; but what was the defence made by Cafe in the suit which was actually brought against him? Now it is clear that, in the suit which was instituted against him by the assignees of Tratt, Cafe was claiming for his own benefit independently of Tratt. It is equally clear that the same view would have been taken by the court if the suit had been instituted against him by Tratt. From the year 1840 to the year 1848, when the suit was instituted by the assignees, Cafe treated the property as his own; there was no recognition of the title of Tratt. Now if Cafe had put in an answer stating that he was beneficially interested, the court would have made a decree against Cafe with costs; and as the representatives of Cafe cannot be in a worse position, it is clear that there is no ground for the claim of costs set up by Mr. Cafe.

ROBERTS v. BERRY.

Demurrer—Specific performance—Time whether of essence of contract.

COURT OF APPEAL.

In a bill filed by a purchaser for specific performance, it appeared that the abstract to the title of ground-rents, purchased at an auction on 22nd July, was to be furnished within seven days from the day of sale by the vendor to the purchaser, on his application for the same, and the objections to the title were to be taken within eight days from the delivery of the abstract, or be considered as waived. The purchase was to be completed on the 8th Aug. On the 24th July the purchaser's solicitor called for the abstract, but, owing to the absence of the mortgagee, who had the title-deeds on the Continent, the abstract was not delivered until the 3rd Aug. On the same day the purchaser's solicitor wrote to rescind the contract for non-delivery of the abstract, requesting a return of the deposit which had been paid at the time of the purchase:

Held, that time not being of the essence of the contract, the court below had properly overruled a demurrer to the bill:

Held also, per Turner, L. J., that the accidental circumstance of the mortgagee's absence on the Continent was a sufficient ground for overruling the demurrer.

This was an appeal from the decision of the M. R. overruling a demurrer put in by the defendant to the plaintiff's bill, which sought specific performance of an agreement for the purchase of freehold ground-rents, and to restrain the defendant from proceeding with an action at law or prosecuting any other action at law against the plaintiffs for the recovery of the deposit. The bill amongst other things stated, that on 22nd July, 1852, the plaintiffs put up for sale by public auction certain ground-rents, together with certain cottage residences, according to certain printed particulars and conditions of sale, in three lots; and the freehold ground-rents comprised in lot 1 of the printed particulars were described as follows, that is to say:—Lot 1. Freehold ground-rents of 43*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* per annum, arising from nine houses, Nos. 1 to 9, Upper Mary-street, Bromley, in the county of Middlesex, Nos. 1, 2, and 3, let on leases which expire at Midsummer 1925, and Nos. 4 to 9 on lease which expires Nov. 1, 1891, as under: No. 1 at 2*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* per annum, Nos. 2 and 3 at 5*l.* 7*s.* per annum, and Nos. 4 to 9, 35*l.* per annum: rack-rental value about 135*l.* per annum. That the third of the said conditions of sale was as follows (that is to say):—"The purchaser shall, immediately after the sale, pay into the hands of the auctioneers a deposit of 20*l.* per cent. in part of his or her purchase-money, and sign an agreement for the payment of the remainder to the vendor on or before the 8th Aug. next, at which time the purchase is to be completed; but if such purchase is not completed on the said 8th Aug., the purchaser thereof, from whatever cause the delay shall arise or be occasioned, shall pay interest on the remainder of his purchase-money at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum, from that day until the day of completing his or her purchase, without prejudice to the right reserved to the vendor by the last condition: the purchaser will be entitled to receive the rents as from the day of completing the purchase or possession, as the case may be." And that the fourth of the said conditions of sale was as follows (that is to say):—"In order to save expense, within seven days from the day of sale, the vendor shall, at his own expense, on application for the same, make and deliver to the purchaser or his solicitor an abstract of title, commencing with a conveyance to the vendors, and on the completion of the purchase title-deeds of earlier date will be handed over to the purchasers; and no earlier title shall be required; and the purchaser shall make his or her objections or requisitions (if any) in regard to the title, and cause the same to be delivered at the office of the vendor's solicitor, within eight days from the receipt of his or her abstract; and all objections or requisitions which shall not be made within the time above specified shall be taken to be waived, and shall not under any circumstances be capable of being afterwards made or adduced; but in case any requisition or objection shall be so delivered or made, and be such that the vendor's solicitor should consider it advisable to abandon the contract, the vendor shall, on returning or tendering to the purchaser his or her deposit money, be at liberty to rescind the contract altogether by a note in writing under his or her hand, without any further claim on the part of the purchaser for interest, costs, expenses, or otherwise. Lots 1 and 2 are comprised in one conveyance: the largest purchaser in amount will be entitled to the custody thereof, who will covenant with the other purchasers in the usual way for production; and as to Lot 3, being part of a larger estate, the whole thereof being comprised in one conveyance, the purchaser shall have a conveyance from the vendor with the usual covenant to produce the said conveyance, and any other document that may relate to this and other portions of the estate. Lots 1 and 2 are sold subject to a rent-charge riding over this and other property of very considerable value; no objection shall be taken on this account, and no compensation or allowance shall be made, and no evidence required on what property the said rent-charge is made." The bill then stated that the defendant John Robert Berry attended the sale by auction, and was the highest bidder for Lot 1, and was declared and became the purchaser of the freehold ground-rents comprised in Lot 1, for the sum of 800*l.*, and paid to the plaintiffs his deposit of 160*l.* on the purchase-money, and signed an agreement bearing date the 22nd July, 1852, for the purchase of the said ground-rents, and for the payment of the remainder of the purchase-money according to the third condition. That the 2nd and 3rd lots were not sold at the said auction, and that some negotiation took place between the said defendant and the plaintiffs relative to the purchase of the said Lot 2, which, however, went off; and that pending such negotiation Henry Farnell, the solicitor of the said defendant, by letter dated the 24th day of July, 1852, called upon the plaintiffs to send to him an abstract of the title of the said freehold ground-rents with a copy of the said contract. That the title-deeds of the said freehold ground-rents were in the possession of a mortgagee of such ground-rents, and that the plaintiffs immediately applied to the solicitors of such mortgagee to furnish the said abstract of title to the said freehold ground-rents to the said Mr. Farnell; but that, owing to the absence of the said mortgagee on the Continent, such abstract could not be at once furnished. That, however, on the 3rd Aug. 1852, Messrs. Finch and Shepheard, the solicitors of the said mortgagee and of the plaintiffs, sent an abstract of the title of the said freehold ground-rents to Mr. Farnell, with a letter from the said Messrs. Finch and Shepheard to the said Mr. Farnell, dated the 2nd Aug. 1852, together with a copy of the said contract, and which letter stated that the said abstract could be examined with the deeds at any time the said Mr. Farnell might appoint. That the said Mr. Farnell received the abstract letter and copy of contract sometime in the course of the day of the 3rd Aug. 1852. That the plaintiffs received from the said Mr. Farnell a letter, dated the 3rd day of August, 1852, and written, as the plaintiffs believed, after the said abstract of title had been received by him, and which, except the formal parts, was as follows (that is to say): "Not having received the abstract of title to the lot purchased by Mr. Berry agreeably to the conditions, I presume there is some difficulty regarding the title; I will therefore thank you to return me the deposit of 160*l.* paid by my client, and I do hereby rescind the contract on his behalf;" and that on the 5th Aug. 1852, the Messrs. Finch and Shepheard received a letter from the said Mr. Farnell, dated Aug. 1852, but without stating any precise day, and which, except the formal parts, was as follows (that is to say): "I beg to acknowledge the receipt this day of abstract of title to freehold premises at Bromley, Middlesex, purchased by my client, Mr. John Robert Berry, at auction, on the 22nd July last, and to refer you to my letter of yesterday, addressed to the auctioneers, Messrs. Roberts and Roy, rescinding the contract on the part of Mr. Berry for the reason therein stated; the abstract shall be returned as you may direct." That some further correspondence took place between the said Mr. Farnell and Messrs. Finch and Shepheard, and that the plaintiffs refused to rescind the said contract, and the said abstract was returned to the said Messrs. Finch and Shepheard by the said Mr. Farnell on the 20th Aug. 1852; and he, on the part of the said defendant, and with his sanction, stated that the said defendant rescinded the said contract, demanded the repayment of the said deposit money of 160*l.*, and intended to proceed for the recovery thereof at law. The bill then stated that the said defendant refused to perform his agreement for the purchase of the said freehold ground-rents comprised in the said Lot 1, and had served the plaintiffs with a writ of summons in her Majesty's Court of Q. B. in an action at law for the recovery of the said sum of 160*l.*, and he threatened and intended to proceed in the said action at law, unless restrained by injunction.

J. Hinde Palmer, for the appellant, contended that the demurrer ought to have been allowed by the Master of the Rolls; that in a similar case, Parkin v. Thorold, 2 Sim. N. S. 1, the present Lord Chancellor, when Vice-Chancellor, had held that time was of the essence of the contract, and dissolved an injunction which had been obtained to stay the trial of an action brought for the return of the deposit. It was true that the Master of the Rolls, who had decided the present case, when Parkin v. Thorold came on before him for hearing (16 Jur. 959), held, that time was not of the essence of the contract, but the decision of Lord Cranworth, when Vice-Chancellor, ought to be followed, more especially as it was the tendency of modern decisions to hold that persons concerned in contracts relating to land were bound as in other contracts to regard time as material. This was shown by the cases cited in Parkin v. Thorold, 2 Sim. N. S. 1; that Webb v. The Portsmouth Railway Company, 19 L. T. 2, was an important authority. [Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—Was Lennon v. Napper cited in any of these cases?] It does not appear that it was; but the Master of the Rolls considered this a better case for an appeal than Parkin v. Thorold: [Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—Lord Redesdale, who was a perfect master of equity jurisprudence, in that case, which arose upon the subject of renewals in Ireland before the Tenantry Act (19 & 20 Geo. 3, c. 30), lays down the law upon this subject with admirable perspicuity and precision: (see 2 S. & L. 684.) He says: "The courts, in all cases of contracts for estates in land, have been in the habit of relieving, where the party from his own neglect had suffered a lapse of time, and from that or other circumstances could not maintain an action to recover damages at law; and even where nothing exists to prevent his suing at law, so many things are necessary to enable him to recover at law, that the formalities alone render it very inconvenient and hazardous so to proceed. Nor could, in many cases, the legal remedy be adequate to the demands of justice. Courts of equity have therefore enforced contracts specifically, where no action for damages could be maintained; for at law, the party plaintiff must have strictly performed his part, and the inconvenience of insisting upon that in all cases, was sufficient to require the interference of courts of equity. They dispense with that which would make compliance with what the law requires oppressive; and in various cases of such contracts, they are in the constant habit of relieving the man who has acted fairly, though negligently. Thus, in the case of an estate sold by auction, there is a condition to forfeit the deposit, if the purchase be not completed within a certain time, yet the court is in the constant habit of relieving against the lapse of time; and so in the case of mortgages; and in many instances, relief is given against mere lapse of time, where lapse of time is not essential to the substance of the contract."]

Teed and Hislop Clarke, for the plaintiffs, were not called upon by the court.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE said that it must be sufficient to dispose of this demurrer to say the point might be better dealt with at the hearing than at that time. It did not, however, depend on that. The question was whether, if the case were brought to a hearing and the facts were either proved or admitted, and there were no other evidence in case, and nothing in the answer, specific performance would be decreed. His lordship thought it would. There was nothing on the face of the contract to show that time was of importance; and he apprehended when time, from the nature of the case, was not shown to be of importance—of the essence of the contract, courts of equity had long been in the habit of relieving in such cases. His Lordship said he could not express the rule better than by referring to the words of Lord Redesdale in Lennon v. Napper. That is to say, the court would relieve against the legal effects of lapse of time in such cases, provided that time was not made expressly of the essence of the contract, or there were other circumstances in the case which might render it so. The defendant must show that. It was not inconsistent with the present decision that upon the answer of the defendant, or upon the answer and evidence, the bill might be dismissed, especially in a case like this, where the time was limited within which the purchaser was bound to furnish an abstract of title, and that the time was past, was part of the defendant's case. [His Lordship here read the 4th of the conditions of sale.] One effect of that might be of importance with regard to the question before them; but, as the court must take the whole bill to be proved or admitted, his Lordship was of opinion that this was a case for specific performance, and that he agreed in the conclusion of the learned judge, which was perfectly consistent with a case being made at the hearing on which bill might be dismissed with costs.

Lord Justice TURNER.—The demurrer must be overruled, he thought, on this ground alone; viz. that the delivery of the abstract was prevented by the accidental absence of the mortgagee on the Continent. This was sufficient to overrule this demurrer. He, however, concurred with all that had fallen from Lord Justice Knight Bruce, that time might or might not be of the essence of a contract, by the stipulation of the parties, by the state of the property or surrounding circumstances; and the question here was, whether it was made so by any of these modes. His Lordship was clearly of opinion that it was not. The doctrine of the court was to look at the substance, and not at the mere form of a contract. Here the contract was in substance for a sale on one side and a purchase on the other; but it was not made essential that it should be completed at any particular time. The abstract, it was true, was to be delivered at a particular time, but it was not said that if the abstract were not delivered at such time, the contract was to be at an end. That the demurrer ought therefore to be overruled, and the appeal dismissed.

Teed asked for costs.

Their LORDSHIPS, however, thought that the costs, both at the Rolls and on the appeal, as to the demurrer, should be costs in the cause.

MORRIS v. STUART.

Rights of cestui que trust of mortgage debts against a purchaser—Duty of purchaser as to purchase-money—Lis pendens—Notice.

The purchaser of a mortgaged estate paid the purchase-money to the receiver in lunacy, to be administered under an order made on petition in lunacy by the mortgagee to carry out the sale. The mortgagee, however, was trustee of part of the mortgage debt for a third party, who, pending the contract for sale, filed his bill in Chancery to establish the trust, and gave notice to the purchaser:

Held, that the purchaser was bound to see to the application of the purchase-money; but the cause was allowed to stand over, that the cestui que trust might go in and establish his claim under the petition in lunacy.

By deed of the 9th Sept. 1840, C. E. Thompson mortgaged certain household furniture and other personal effects to James Morris, for the sum of 200*l.* and interest. James Morris died shortly after, having appointed the plaintiff James Morris and two other persons, who renounced probate, his executors. On the 29th Aug. 1842, C. E. Thompson mortgaged a messuage called Scott's Lodge and certain lands to J. Sandford, to secure 500*l.* and interest; and subsequently Sandford advanced to E. C. Thompson 246*l.* the amount of principal and interest due to the estate of James Morris, the testator, for the purpose of paying it off, and took a fresh security for 700*l.* in addition to the 500*l.* previously secured, and also a transfer of the security of the 9th Sept. 1840, in order that the furniture and effects therein might be comprised in the fresh mortgage. James Morris, the executor, accordingly gave up the deed to W. Hardy, the solicitor of Sandford, having indorsed thereon a memorandum acknowledging the payment of principal and interest. The 246*l.* however, was not paid to James Morris. In 1843 and 1844 Sandford, being indebted to R. Trimen and H. Westmacott, deposited with them his mortgage deeds by way of security for repayment of the several sums due. Sandford became of unsound mind in 1846, and his brother, the Rev. Humphrey Sandford, was appointed receiver of his estates. E. Sandford, sister of the lunatic, paid off the debts due to Trimen and Westmacott, and took possession of the mortgage and title-deeds of Scott's Lodge. Ont he 15th Feb. 1848, C. E. Thompson released an equity of redemption in Scott's Lodge to H. Sandford, in trust to sell and pay Miss Sandford and the debt due to the lunatic's estate on the securities, and the surplus to C. E. Thompson. H. Sandford accordingly sold Scott's Lodge by public auction to Lord Dudley Coutts Stuart for 900*l.* Pending the contract James Morris, the executor, filed his bill against the lunatic and his guardian, E. Sandford, and C. E. Thompson, for the purpose of having it declared that J. Sandford was a trustee for him for the sum of 246*l.*, and that as to that he had a lien on the estate of Scott's Lodge. In 1849 the case was heard, and a reference was directed to the same Master who had charge of the lunacy matter, to take the accounts and to make inquiries as to the mode in which the mortgages were created. The plaintiff gave the defendant due notice of the filing of the bill and the decree, and registered the suit as a lis pendens. In the meantime the accounts were taken in the lunacy, and in July 1850 the contract for the purchase of the estate was confirmed, and the debt of E. Sandford was ordered to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale, and then the costs of completing and of the proceedings in lunacy. The estate was accordingly conveyed to the purchaser, and the surplus purchase-money, amounting to 400*l.* and upwards, was paid to H. Sandford, and by him carried to the account of J. Sandford in the lunacy for March, 1851. The Master made his report, certifying that the costs directed to be taxed amounted to 317*l.*, leaving about 90*l.* of the 400*l.* which was applicable to the satisfaction of the first mortgage. On the 26th July, 1851, the suit of Morris v. Sandford came on to be heard on further directions, and it was declared that the mortgage for 500*l.* was the first charge, and the 700*l.* the second; and that J. Sandford was a trustee of the second for the plaintiff James Morris to the extent of 246*l.* The plaintiff now filed his lien against Lord Dudley Stuart, charging him with notice of the trust, and praying that the 246*l.* and interest might be paid by him or raised out of the estate.

K. Parker and Hetherington, for the plaintiff, insisted that, after payment of E. Sandford's charge, the surplus purchase-money belonged to the plaintiff, exclusive of the costs and proceedings in lunacy, and that the defendant, who had notice of the trust, was bound to see to the application of the purchase-money.

Wilcock and Birkbeck, for defendant, cited Bishop of Winchester v. Payne, 11 Ves. 194; Wigg v. Wigg, 1 Atk. 383; Story v. Lord Windsor, 2 Atk. 630.

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS was clearly of opinion that Lord D. Stuart must have had notice of the plaintiff's rights, inasmuch as a suit had been instituted for the purpose of establishing a trust, and his having previously entered into the contract did not affect the question, for the application of the purchase-money only, and not the sale, is in dispute. If the money had been sufficient to pay all the charges on the estate, and the defendant had paid it to Mr. Sandford notwithstanding the notice by the plaintiff, the plaintiff would have had a claim on the estate to the amount of the charges; but the first mortgage and interest, together with the costs in lunacy, absorbed all the purchase-money except a few pounds, and the defendant relies upon having paid the purchase-money in discharge of these claims. The plaintiff, on the other hand, disputes the application of the purchase-money in payment of the costs at all, and at present it is impossible to decide as to the propriety of the payment. So long as the order in lunacy stands it must be assumed to be correct; but the plaintiff ought to have had an opportunity of disputing it. The cause therefore must stand over for six months, to give the plaintiff time to take steps to dispute the order, with liberty to either party to appeal.

An application was made to the court to pay a sum of money out of court to a lady who was appointed attorney for certain parties in America, who were cestuis que trust of the fund, and an order was made accordingly. It turned out, however, that the lady was too ill to attend personally to receive the money; and

SWALLOW v. BINNS.

Practice—Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act—Personal representative.

A parent was interested for life under a settlement made by him, and after his death his children were to take. Some of the children died in the lifetime of the father, the tenant for life, and he was their sole next of kin. The father died, and his executors proved his will. A special case was set down for the opinion of the Court on the true construction of the settlement, and to this the executors of the tenant for life, the father, were parties:

Held, that upon proof of the death of the children during the life of the tenant for life, and that they died intestate, the executors of the father might be appointed to represent the estates of those children, for the purposes of the special case, under the 44th sect. of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

The 51st sect. of the same statute applies only in those cases where there are some of the parties interested, in every point of view, before the court.

This was a special case submitted to the court under the provisions of Sir George Turner's Act (13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, s. 13), on the construction of a deed of settlement. The settlor, Mr. Nathaniel Binns, by an indenture dated in September, 1821, assigned certain personal estate to trustees, upon trusts for investment, and alteration, and variation of securities; and upon trust to pay the dividends, interest, and annual produce to the settlor for his life, and after his decease upon certain trusts for the benefit of his children. It was the obscure wording of these trusts that occasioned the necessity for the case being submitted for the opinion of the court. The children were to take, sons at twenty-one, and daughters at twenty-one or marriage; but it was doubtful whether all such sons and daughters were to take, or whether only such of them as should survive the father, the tenant for life. Some of the children did, in fact, die in the lifetime of the tenant for life, but they all attained the age of twenty-one, and no personal representative of any of them existed. The father, the tenant for life, died, having made a will, and appointed executors, who proved the will, and they were parties to the special case.

Wickens now moved for leave to set down the case, and submitted whether it was or was not necessary that some person should be appointed to represent the deceased children for the purposes of the case. (a)

Selwyn for the defendants.—Here there are some of the parties interested in the subject-matter of the special case before the court, and perhaps, therefore, the court can, under the provisions of the 51st section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, now determine the question without resorting to the enactment contained in section 44. The 51st section for this purpose enacts, "It shall be lawful for the court to adjudicate on questions arising between parties, notwithstanding that they may be some only of the parties interested in the property respecting which the question may have arisen . . . without making the other parties interested in the property respecting which the question may have arisen, or interested under the same settlement, will, or other instrument, parties to the suit."

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The 51st section relates to cases where there are already some of the parties interested in the question in every point of view before the court. In this case the question is not between the surviving children, but between the surviving children and the representatives of deceased children; and although the surviving children are before the court, there are no persons who represent the interests of the deceased children or any of them. If satisfactory evidence be produced that the father, the tenant for life, survived the deceased children, in which event he would be the next of kin of each of them; and also satisfactory evidence that each of the deceased children died intestate; the Court may then, under the 44th section of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, appoint the executors of the father to represent the deceased children for the purposes of this special case.

The motion then stood over for the production of this evidence, and ultimately the order was taken for the executors of the father to represent the deceased children.

MORRELL v. TINKLER.

Practice—Master in Chancery Abolition Act—Reference to accountants or to persons of science.

Where, before the passing of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, a cause had been referred to the Master to take accounts of a partnership, a petition was presented under the 42nd section of it, after it came into operation, that the prosecution of the decree might be transferred to the judge at chambers in order to have the assistance of an accountant. The Court held that to be the proper course, and ordered accordingly.

The statute does not give the Master jurisdiction to call in the aid of accountants or men of science.

This was a bill filed for the purpose of taking partnership accounts; and before the Master in Chancery Abolition Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 80) came into operation a decree was made directing the usual accounts to be taken in the Master's office. The 42nd section of that statute enacts that "it shall be lawful for the said court, or any judge thereof, in such way as they may think fit, to obtain the assistance of accountants, merchants, engineers, actuaries, or other scientific persons, the better to enable such court or judge to determine any matter at issue in any cause or proceeding, and to act upon the certificate of such persons." A petition was now presented by the plaintiff, which, after setting forth the proceedings had in the suit, and the reference directed by the decree, prayed that the accounts and inquiries so ordered to be taken and made in the Master's office, might, in lieu thereof, be prosecuted and made and taken before the judge at chambers.

Rolt and Bearan, in support of the petition, stated that the suit related to the affairs of a partnership between bankers which had continued for the long space of thirty-one years. One of the partners had died, and by his will appointed the plaintiff, the surviving partner, the trustee under and the executor of his will. The accounts being of so long standing, it became important that the assistance of some accountant should be obtained, and it was with that view that the petition was presented. It had already been decided by Kindersley, V. C. in the case of Mildway v. Methuen (16 Jur. 965), that the Act of Parliament did not warrant the court in authorising the Master to call in the assistance of an accountant, but that the course to be adopted was that now adopted. The case of Mildway v. Methuen was that of an architect and builder who claimed to be a creditor of a testator in an administration suit, in respect of large works performed in buildings; and, the Master having made a separate report, the court gave the creditor leave to bring an action. All this took place before the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80 came into operation; but, on that statute coming into operation, the creditor presented a petition praying a reference back to the Master, instead of the action being brought, with power to the Master to call in the assistance of a builder and surveyor under the provisions of the above-mentioned section. Kindersley, V. C. however, held that the Legislature did not intend that the court should delegate its new power to the Master, but that the proper course would be to discharge the order made, by which liberty was given to bring the action, and to transfer the inquiry directed by the original decree to the judge in chambers, who would then be in a condition himself to call in and avail himself of the assistance of builders, surveyors, and such other scientific persons as he might deem proper. Counsel, therefore, now asked upon the present petition that a similar course should be adopted.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—It has already been held that the Act does not give the Master any authority to call in the assistance of such persons; and I agree with the decision of Kindersley, V. C. which has been cited. I have no power to authorise the Master to employ an accountant; and the proper course, therefore, to be adopted in order to obtain the benefit of the powers conferred by the Act of Parliament in question, will be to make the order in compliance with the prayer of the petition; and I so order accordingly.

DENSEM v. ELWORTHY.

Practice — Parties — Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act.

A testator directed his estates to be sold, and the produce divided between several persons. A bill was filed for the administration of the trust, and the trustees of the will and the parties entitled to the produce were made parties. One of these persons had married, and her share was settled for her benefit and that of her husband and the children of the marriage:

Held, that under the 9th rule of sect. 42 of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, the trustees of the settlement of the shares so settled must be parties, and that the interests of the children of the marriage would be sufficiently represented by the trustees.

A testator by his will devised his real estate to trustees, upon trust to sell the same, and to divide the produce thereof among the persons who were therein named the residuary legatees of his personal estate. A bill was filed to execute the trusts of the will, and the defendants were the devisees in trust and all the residuary legatees. One of the legatees, a lady, had married, and on her marriage a settlement was executed of her share under the will, and the trusts were declared for herself and her husband and the children of the marriage, in equal portions. The husband was also a party to the suit, but the trustees of the settlement were not parties, nor were the children of the marriage. At the hearing of the cause, after the Statute for the Amendment of the Practice and Course of Proceeding in the Court of Chancery came into operation, a question was raised whether the suit was not defective for want of parties, or whether the trustees of the settlement and the children of the marriage were not to be considered as cestuis que trust under the will of the testator, and as such sufficiently represented by the trustees of his will within the intent and meaning of the 9th rule of the 42nd section of that Act, or whether it was necessary to bring the trustees of the settlement and the children of the marriage or either of the three classes before the court as parties to the suit. The point was of importance, as upon a sale an objection might be taken to the title.

Karslake, for the plaintiffs.

Follett, for the defendants.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—When the Act of Parliament expressly enacts that trustees shall represent the persons beneficially interested in the estate, I have not the slightest idea that any purchaser will be allowed to say that, because some of the cestuis que trustent are not parties to the suit in which the decree is made, he can object to the title. Under the Act the suit may be instituted by one of the residuary devisees or legatees, and the decree may then be made and the other parties may be served with notice of the decree. This practice has been substituted for the former one, of bringing all the cestuis que trustent before the court in the first instance—a practice which has its origin probably in the right of the purchaser under the decree to covenants for titles from the parties beneficially interested, but which practice is in truth a source of unnecessary difficulty and expense in the prosecution of suits. The present suit is not, however, framed in the manner authorised by the new Act. The plaintiff has brought before the court all the residuary legatees, but not the trustees of the settlement of one of the shares. I am of opinion that, the suit being framed in this form, the trustees of the settlement should be made parties; but I think those trustees will sufficiently represent the children of the marriage, and that the latter need not be made parties.

Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Acts—Appeals from the Master's decisions.

Daniel and Selwyn appeared on behalf of an appellant from a decision of the Master, and were about to move, in pursuance of the notice which had been given, when

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that it was desirable that all appeals from the Master in these winding-up cases should be taken at once to the Lords Justices. Their Lordships were willing to hear these motions in the first instance; and as by far the majority of these cases were ultimately taken before the Lords Justices, the course his Honour proposed would save the time of the court, and also much expense to the parties.

Daniel was willing to adopt this course, but did not know whether Glasse, who appeared as counsel on the other side, would consent.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR said that it was of no consequence whether counsel consented or not. If it were mentioned to the Lords Justices that it was his Honour's recommendation that they should hear the motion in the first instance, they would do so.

Daniel suggested that the notice of motion was for this branch of the court.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR replied that the same notice would be available for the Lords Justices' Court; but if any difficulty should arise in this respect that would be set right by their Lordships.

BERNASCONI v. ATKINSON.

Will—Construction—Misnomer and misdescription—Admission of parol evidence.

A testator by his will gave the residue of his personal estate equally between two persons by name, one of whom he called and described as "my first cousin V. B. son of my late uncle P. B." The testator has no cousin named V. B. He had one cousin named G. V. B. son of his, the testator's, uncle J. B., and another cousin named F. B. son of his, the testator's, uncle V. B.

Held, that G. V. B. was the cousin who was entitled to the share of the residue.

Held, also, that evidence of the surrounding circumstances when the will was made was admissible to show who was intended to take.

In this case the question was on the construction of a will. The testator, Bartholomew Bernasconi, of Alfred-place, Middlesex, and of Harrow Weald, by his will dated in the month of April 1852, after making various bequests, gave and bequeathed his residuary personal estate as follows: "unto my sister Jane Ann Blackwell, wife of Mr. Thomas Blackwell, and to my first cousin Vincent Bernasconi, son of my late uncle Peter Bernasconi, in equal shares." The state of the testator's family was as follows: he had a first cousin named George Vincent Bernasconi, son of his uncle Joseph Vincent Bernasconi; and two first cousins, Frederick Bernasconi and Alexander Bernasconi, who were the sons of his uncle Peter Alexander Bernasconi; but he had no first cousin named simply Vincent.

George Vincent Bernasconi claimed to be the person intended by the testator, and therefore entitled to the half of the residue; and thereupon the suit was instituted. Affidavits were filed, from which it appeared that the testator was well acquainted and was on terms of intimacy with the plaintiff, and who was spoken of by him and by others as "Vincent;" that Alexander left England for Russia, and had not been heard of for many years; but that Frederick resided in London, and was in humble circumstances, and did not visit at the house of the testator. Evidence was also adduced, but which was ultimately rejected, to prove that the name Vincent Bernasconi was that given by the testator when he gave instructions for his will, and that the words "son of my late uncle Peter Bernasconi" were added by the solicitor who drew the will without any authority or direction from the testator, the solicitor himself believing that Vincent was the son of Peter. Frederick Bernasconi was the only one of the family who claimed in opposition to George Vincent Bernasconi.

Tuesday, Jan. 18.—THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I reserved my judgment in this case, because I was anxious to consider whether any, and if any what, parol evidence could properly be admitted; for it is of the utmost importance to adhere to the rules which have been laid down upon that subject, otherwise there is danger of reviving the very mischief which the Statute of Frauds intended to prevent. The firs question then is, whether there is so much doubt as to which of the claimants is entitled to the property as to induce the court to hold that there has been an intestacy? All the authorities establish that the declaration of an intestacy should be the last resource, and that the court is bound, if possible, to discover the meaning of a testator; and it becomes necessary, therefore, here to decide what evidence shall be received for that purpose. The first canon in construing a will is, that the language must be taken to be entirely the testator's own; and though the will may have been drawn by another person, the testator must be taken to have read it over and adopted it. Secondly, it is equally clear that the words must be taken to be used in their natural sense, if possible; and unless, taking them in that sense, they are equally applicable to two persons or things, no extrinsic evidence can be admitted. Thirdly, there is the case where the description is not strictly applicable to any one; but the popular sense of the words used, or the general language used by the testator, points to one result: in such a case the court has a right to look at all the circumstances surrounding the testator at the time of making his will. But the present case goes one stage further; for not only are the words in their natural sense applicable to any one, but they are equally applicable to two persons. In such a position the cases lead to this result, that it is the duty of the court to lean against intestacy. I have made these observations in consequence of some evidence having been given that the description, "the son of my uncle Peter," was introduced by the solicitor who prepared the will, without the direction of the testator. No evidence of that description can be received. The only case in which evidence can be received of the intention of a testator is when a description is as applicable to one person as to another. In Hiscocks v. Hiscocks, 5 M. & W. 360, Lord Abinger says: "The description applies partially to each, and it is not easy to see how the difficulty is to be solved. If it were res integra we should be much disposed to hold the devise void from uncertainty. But the cases Doe dem. Huthwaite, 3 B. & A. 632, Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, and others, are authorities against this conclusion. If, therefore, looking at the surrounding facts to be found by the jury, the court can clearly see, with the knowledge which arises from those facts alone, that the testator meant either the lessor of the plaintiff or the defendant, we may so decide, and direct the jury accordingly; but we think that for this purpose they cannot receive declaration of the testator of what he meant to do in making his will." In Camoys v. Blundell, 1 Ho. of Lords' Cases, Lord Brougham, though he differed from the other Lords upon the particular case, expressed the same opinion upon the necessity of avoiding an intestacy, and he puts the case of a devise to A. B., eldest son of C. D., A. B. being second son of C. D., and says: "You are left to satisfy yourself in the best way you can whether you will go by the description and not the name, or by the name and not the description, seeing you must elect to abide by the one or the other." It appears to me that there are circumstances which enable me to say who is meant in the present case; and the question is, whether the testator was most likely to make a mistake in the name or the description of the person he intended to take. An argument may be drawn in favour of Frederick on the ground that, in fact, in all the reported cases the description has prevailed over the name. But there are peculiar reasons in each case why that should be so. Here there is nothing to show any partiality for the sons of one uncle over the other. But it is said that it militated against the idea of his having made a description that he has rightly described another legatee, the sister of the plaintiff, and it cannot be supposed that he should not know that two legatees are brother and sister. But that only amounts to the same thing, namely, that the testator has made a mistake; and it must be admitted that he has done in any case. But, going to the external evidence, the matter becomes so plain, that I think no jury would hesitate. A letter was put in addressed to plaintiff as his cousin Vincent, and I admit that letter merely to show that the testator was in the habit of calling the plaintiff Vincent, and not George Vincent; and then there is the fact of one of the two nephews visiting at the house and the other not. I have assumed in favour of Frederick that the son in Russia was forgotten, because, if plaintiff's claim is rejected, and the matter is left between the two sons of Peter, there is nothing to point to one rather than the other, and an intestacy must be the consequence. But, assuming he was forgotten, I consider the evidence points out the plaintiff as the person intended by the testator, and the decree I shall make will be in accordance with that opinion.

Practice—Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act—Binding declaration.

Where on the construction of a bill the court held that certain persons were entitled for life, and at their deaths their respective then surviving children were entitled to their shares:

Held, that it was a case wherein the court would, under the 50th section of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, declare the future rights.

A testator bequeathed his residuary personal estate in such manner as that the court, upon the construction of the will, had held that certain brothers and sisters of the testator were entitled to equal shares for life, and after their deaths their children were entitled absolutely.

Shadwell, W. J. Bovill, and Jessel, for the several parties.

Jessel.—Will the court make a declaration of the rights of the children, that is, whether they will take the share of their respective parents, or whether all the children are entitled equally to the whole fund; and also, whether any children born after the death of the testator will be entitled? The 50th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, is as follows: "No suit in the said court will be open to objection on the ground that a merely declaratory decree or order is sought thereby, and it shall be lawful for the court to make binding declarations of right without granting consequential relief."

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—This case seems to come within the power conferred by that section, and I may make a declaration; and I do declare that such children as were alive at the death of each parent will be entitled to, and will take equally among them, the share of the deceased parent.

Covenant by the reversioner for nonpayment of rent reserved by an indenture of lease (10th Sept. 1834) to G. W. Veasey.

The declaration averred that after the making of the indenture, all the estate, &c. of Veasey, by assignment thereof, came to and vested in the defendant.

Plea 3. Traverse of the above averment.

At the trial before Coleridge, J. in Easter Term last, the defendant put in a deed in the following form, to prove that he was an underlessee merely, and not the assignee of the term. The indenture, dated 5th August, 1841, was between W. Bonfield and T. Bonfield of the one part, and the defendant of the other part. It recited a joint and several bond by W. and T. Bonfield and the defendant, conditioned for payment of 1,000*l.* to Warner; and a similar bond to the like amount to Goodman; and a joint promissory note by the three, W. B. and T. B. and the defendant, to Day, for 1,500*l.* with interest. It further recited that the defendant had executed the bonds and the promissory note, as surety for J. B. and W. B., on their agreeing to indemnify him from loss by an assignment of the estate and effects of T. B. and W. B. and entering into the following covenants. The operative part of the indenture then demised to the defendant, by way of underlease, buildings and land, including a wharf (the Bonfields being the assignees of the residue of a lease thereof), to have and to hold to the defendant for the residue of the term, wanting one day. The indenture then assigned to the defendant the stock, goods, &c. on the wharf and premises, and all other the joint stock and effects wherever situate, and all debts owing to them, and also all other moneys, furniture, personal estate, &c. of the Bonfields', at law and in equity; habendum to the defendant, with power to give receipts. Provided that the premises were underleased, and the goods, &c. assigned, to indemnify the defendant from all liability and loss which might occur by reason of his having become surety as aforesaid. Covenant, that on payment by the Bonfields of the sums for which the defendant had so become liable, and on keeping the defendant harmless, &c. the indenture should become void. Proviso for the defendant repaying himself the moneys he might have to pay by reason of the suretyship, out of the debts and profits of the said business, or by mortgage or sale of any of the effects and premises assigned, together with interest at five per cent. and the expenses of carrying the deed into execution. Covenant on the defendant's part to reassign and release in case the Bonfields should duly pay the moneys and interest due on the bonds and note without calling on the defendant. Covenant to indemnify the defendant against the bonds and note, and all actions, demands, &c. in respect of the same. Covenant by Bonfields for further assurance.—In witness, &c.

The deed was stamped with a deed stamp, 35*s.*; and on the second skin with the further stamp of 25*s.* It was objected that these stamps were insufficient; and that the deed should have been stamped with an ad valorem stamp. The objection was overruled, and the verdict directed for the defendant on the third plea.

Ogle having obtained a rule nisi for a new trial on the ground that the above stamps were insufficient, and that the deed ought not to have been admitted in evidence:

J. Brown showed cause against, and Ogle and Malcolm supported the rule.

JUDGMENT.

Thursday, Nov. 11.—Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—In this case the question is whether the assignment of chattels to secure to the assignee an indemnity in case he should be called upon to pay the amount secured by a bond which he had entered into as security for the assignor, is a mortgage liable to an ad valorem stamp. Is it an assignment to secure the repayment of money to be lent, advanced, or paid at a future time? If the debt so due is paid by the surety, the amount of that debt is so much money paid for the principal. If the defendant had bound himself absolutely to the payment of the debt of the principal at a future time, and the assignment had been made to repay what he should so pay, the instrument would clearly have been within the words of the statute. And although he bound himself only to pay in case the principal should make default, still the assignment was to secure the repayment of money at a future time, in case of that contingency happening. A security for contingent and future debts is as much within the sense and meaning of the statute as a security for certain future debts. In Watson v. Macquire, the assignment was, in effect, the same as in this case. John Watson was indebted in 600*l.* to Sabin and Lamb; and Henry Watson the plaintiff was bound in 600*l.* as surety for John; and John Watson entered into a bond to the amount of 600*l.* to indemnify him, in case he should be obliged to pay the 600*l.*; and upon this bond the ad valorem stamp of 5*l.* was paid. John also gave to Henry the benefit of the assignment in question of his goods and chattels, as an additional security for the 600*l.* that had been secured by the bond of the brother. It was assumed throughout that the assignment was a mortgage requiring an ad valorem stamp, and that it was within the exemption of the statute for additional securities, provided it had an ad valorem stamp. The objection relied upon was that the assignment secured 600*l.* and interest, and was therefore an indefinite sum. This objection was overruled. The judgment, in effect, decides that an ad valorem stamp was necessary; but that the 5*l.* paid on the bond was sufficient for the additional security. We are therefore of opinion that an ad valorem stamp was necessary.

County Court—Prohibition—Jurisdiction.

A cargo was sold to plaintiff, to be delivered at any port in the United Kingdom. The price to be paid on delivery of the shipping notes and the policy of insurance. A demand of the shipping notes and the policy was made at Liverpool, and refused, but the cargo was ordered to be delivered at Drogheda. Thereupon plaintiff sued in the County Court at Liverpool, and, in the particulars annexed to the plaint, alleged his claim to be for 43*l. damages for non-delivery of the cargo.*

Held, on motion for prohibition, that, the plaintiff not having a cause of action for nondelivery of the cargo arising within the jurisdiction of the Liverpool County Court, the writ must go to restrain the proceedings as to that, but that, as the plaintiff had a cause of action arising at Liverpool for not delivering the shipping notes and the policy, the writ would not be a general prohibition as to the whole cause, for the plaintiff could apply to the County Court to amend his particulars of demand.

A rule nisi having been granted for a prohibition to the judge of the County Court at Liverpool to restrain him from further proceedings in this cause, under the following circumstances:—In December last the defendant, having a vessel with a cargo of Indian corn at Queen's Town, in the cove of Cork, an offer of purchase was made by a Mr. Meakin, broker in Liverpool; and the defendant the same day returned on answer stating what his lowest price was; but the defendant, before he received any reply from Mr. Meakin, disposed of the cargo. In the meanwhile Meakin had sold the cargo to the plaintiff, a merchant at Drogheda, on the terms stated in the judgment. Meakin sent orders to the captain of the vessel to proceed to deliver the cargo to the plaintiff at Drogheda, but he, acting on the defendant's instructions, refused to do so; whereupon the plaintiff sued in the County Court at Liverpool, on a plaint containing particulars of demand for 43*l.* damages for nondelivery of the cargo, and 3*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.* for plaintiff's expenses in coming from Drogheda to Queen's Town.

Milward showed cause, and Cowling supported the rule.

It was contended that the County Court had no jurisdiction, as the parties did not reside within the district, nor did the cause of action arise within the jurisdiction: (9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 60.)

Cur adv. vult.

JUDGMENT,—Tuesday, Jan. 18.

LORD CAMPBELL, C. J.—This was an application for a prohibition to the judge of the County Court of Liverpool, and we think that the rule ought to be made absolute, but with modifications. The application was for a general prohibition to stay all proceedings upon a plaint. Now we are extremely reluctant to interfere with the jurisdiction of a County Court, unless its jurisdiction has been clearly exceeded; but if it has been, it is our bounden duty to interfere by granting a prohibition. In the present case there is a suit brought in the County Court in respect of a contract whereby it was agreed that a cargo of corn on board a ship should be sold, and that it should be delivered at any port in the United Kingdom; and that upon handing over certain shipping documents and the policy of insurance, the price should be paid. At Liverpool there was a demand made on the vendor to hand over the shipping documents and policy of insurance, which he did not do; and the action was brought by the purchaser upon that contract. Now, in the particulars of demand, it was stated that the action was brought for the nondelivery of the cargo; if it were only for that, that would not be a cause of action arising within the jurisdiction of the County Court of Liverpool, because the cargo was to be delivered at Drogheda, and might have been delivered at any part of the United Kingdom. But under this plaint it is possible that the plaintiff may proceed for a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the County Court of Liverpool, for not having handed over to him the shipping documents, with the policy of insurance. The contract was made in Liverpool, and the breach of it took place in Liverpool; therefore we cannot say that there should be a general prohibition. There are ancient authorities to show that there may be a partial prohibition. I remember those authorities being acted upon in the case of Dr. Frees, which was a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court for immoralities, some part of which were barred by the statute, and others were not barred, and a prohibition was granted with respect to all which were barred by the statute. Now we think the proper course will be to grant a prohibition against proceeding on that breach which is not in the jurisdiction of the County Court; and therefore we think the rule should be made absolute, prohibiting the plaintiff from proceeding upon the said plaint in respect of the breach of contract mentioned in the particulars to the said plaint annexed, and that was for not delivering the cargo. Now this will allow the plaintiff, although he is prohibited from proceeding for that which was contracted for as to the cargo, still to proceed under this plaint for the breach of contract in not delivering over the shipping documents and policy of insurance at Liverpool; and then he may apply to the judge of the County Court, and the judge of the County Court may, in his discretion, allow the particulars to be amended, and to be restricted to that breach of the contract which took place within the jurisdiction of the County Court. Therefore the rule will be made absolute to that extent. Rule absolute accordingly.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF ST. LEONARD'S, SHOREDITCH.

Pauper lunatic—Order of removal to asylum by officiating clergyman and relieving officer—12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, s. 5.

The 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, s. 5, does not apply to the case of a pauper lunatic removed to an asylum by an order made by the officiating clergyman and the relieving officer under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, s. 48; and therefore the costs of maintenance in the asylum are chargeable on the parish of settlement of the pauper, and not on the common funds of the union.

On an appeal against an order of justices, obtained by the parish of St. Bartholomew-the-Less, adjudging Mary Leach, a lunatic pauper, to be settled in the parish of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, and ordering that parish to pay the sum of 1*l.* 18*s.* for the costs of the examination and conveyance of the said pauper to the lunatic asylum, and also 3*l.* 17*s.* costs of maintenance in the asylum, and also a further weekly sum so long as the said pauper should continue therein, the sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this court upon a special case.

By the case it appeared that the pauper had resided for more than five years next before her removal to the hospital hereafter stated, in the parish of St. Bride's, in the city of London, and that, becoming ill, she was taken to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, in the parish of St. Bartholomew-the-Less, also in the city of London, and whilst there she became insane; whereupon she was removed to the union workhouse of the two parishes of St. Bride's and St. Bartholomew, and whilst there at the charge of the parish of St. Bartholomew she was removed, by an order made by the officiating clergyman of St. Bride's and the relieving officer of the union, to a lunatic asylum at Peckham. It was admitted that the pauper had a settlement in the parish of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, Middlesex.

The question for the court was, whether the order of maintenance obtained by St. Bartholomew-the-Less was legally made upon St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, or whether the maintenance of the lunatic should be charged to the common fund of the union.

Huddleston, in support of the order of sessions.—It is not denied that the pauper had a settlement in St. Leonard's, Shoreditch. The question raised is, whether the charge of the pauper is to be borne by the parish of St. Leonard's, or whether it is cast, by the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, s. 5, on the common fund of the union comprising the parish wherein such pauper lunatic was resident at the time of the removal to the asylum. The pauper was removed to the lunatic asylum by the order of the officiating clergyman and the relieving officer, under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, s. 48. The 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, s. 5, was passed, to remove the effect of the decision in Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Leulen Roothin, 18 L. J. 187, M. C., which decided that an order for maintenance of a lunatic pauper in an asylum under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, might be made on the parish of settlement, notwithstanding five years' residence previous to the removal to the asylum in another parish. But the words of section 5 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, do not apply to the case of a pauper removed to an asylum by an order of the officiating clergyman and the relieving officer, but only to a removal by an order of justices. The words are: "The costs and expenses incurred in the obtaining any order of justices for the removal and maintenance of a lunatic pauper removed under any such order to any asylum, if not exempt from removal by the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, shall be borne by the common fund of the union comprising the parish wherein such pauper lunatic was resident at the time when so removed to such asylum, notwithstanding the order for the payment thereof shall have been upon the overseers of the parish of settlement, or upon the treasurer or guardians of the union in which such parish shall be comprised. The question is, whether the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66 is applicable to this state of things. By the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, s. 57, a pauper lunatic is deemed to be settled in the parish from whence sent to the asylum, till adjudged to be settled in some other parish. Here it is found that the pauper was chargeable to St. Bartholomew-the-Less while in the hospital. If the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, s. 5, only applies to the case of a removal of a pauper lunatic by order of justices, and the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66 has no application, the chargeability must be on the parish of settlement, St. Leonard's, Shoreditch.

Bodkin for the appellants.—The time during which the pauper was in the hospital is to be excluded by the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, s. 1 (Reg. v. Hartfield, 21 L. J. 65, M. C.; Reg. v. St. Andrews, 21 L. J. 69, M. C.; and it must be taken as if the pauper was residing in St. Bride's during the time. The words of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, s. 5, are, "the costs in obtaining any order of justices for the removal and maintenance of any lunatic pauper." Here the order of the officiating clergyman and the relieving officer was not for the maintenance of the pauper, but the order of the justices was. [COLERIDGE, J.—You must get it to a case where the pauper was removed by the order of justices before you can have the benefit of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, s. 5.]

LORD CAMPBELL, C. J.—I am of opinion that the order of sessions ought to be confirmed. It is admitted that the justices have authority to make an order for the costs of the maintenance of a pauper lunatic on the parish of settlement or the union wherein it is comprised. The question is whether they had a right to make it on the parish of the settlement in this case. No doubt, before the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, s. 5, the burden of maintenance was cast on the parish of settlement; but that statute is relied on, and, if this case is within it, the charge is cast upon the union comprising the parish where the lunatic was resident when removed to the asylum, and not on the parish of the settlement. One does not see why sect. 5 is confined to the case where a pauper lunatic is removed to an asylum by an order of justices, when power is given to the officiating clergyman and the relieving officer to make such order. The section, however, is expressly confined to a removal by order of justices: "who shall be removed under any such order," refers to the last antecedent, which is "any order of justices." Then the law remains in this case as it was before, and the charge falls on the parish of settlement. This order of sessions was therefore rightly made.

Misdemeanour—Procuring indecent prints with intent to sell.

A count in an indictment charging defendant with having possession of indecent prints, with intent afterwards to sell them, is bad; but a count charging defendant with procuring indecent prints with intent to sell is good, as the procuring is an act done.

Indictment.—The first set of counts charged the defendant with having possession of indecent prints, in order and for the purpose of afterwards selling them.

The second set of counts charged the defendant with having procured indecent prints, for the purpose of afterwards selling them.

At the trial of the indictment at the Middlesex Sessions the defendant was found guilty, and judgment having been pronounced, the defendant brought a writ of error, which now came on to be argued.

Metcalfe, for the plaintiff in error.—The first set of counts is clearly bad. The mere possession, whatever the intent that may be charged, is no offence. There must be some act averred to carry out that intention. [LORD CAMPBELL, C. J.—It would be difficult to say at what moment the offence begins. It may be a mere passing intention in the mind.] Rex v. Sutton, 2 Stra. 1074, in which Lord Hardwicke held that the having coining tools in possession, with intent to make counterfeit coin, was a misdemeanor, was overruled in Rex v. Heath, R. & R. C. C. 184, where it was held that having counterfeit silver in possession, with intent to utter it, is not an offence. Then as to the second set of counts. No doubt the note to the case of Rex v. Heath will be relied on, where it is said, "But the facts seemed to afford grounds for a good indictment, by stating that the defendant acquired or procured the bad money with intent to circulate it, or packing up or delivering it to the bookkeeper with intent to circulate it." (MS. Judg.) [LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.—How do you distinguish this class of counts from Rex v. Fuller, R. & R. C. C. 308; where it was decided that procuring base coin with intent to utter it is a misdemeanour?] Would it be any offence to make a picklock key? The 11 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 1, could hardly have been necessary if this is an offence.

LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that the conviction must be affirmed. We have decisions to guide us with respect to both classes of counts. As to the first class, R. v. Heath is an authority that these are bad. No act is alleged to have been done, and the facts stated are consistent with the prints having come innocently into the defendant's possession; and it may have been a mere passing intention in the defendant's mind to make them public. These counts do not amount to a misdemeanour. With respect to the other counts, we have the solemn decision of all the judges in Rex. v. Fuller, that procuring base coin with intent to utter it is a misdemeanour. Applying that case to the present, is it not a misdemeanour to procure indecent prints with intent to sell them? The publication of indecent prints is an offence against morals, and indictable at common law. Procuring indecent prints with intent to sell them is an act done which is the beginning of the misdemeanour. On authority and principle, therefore, these counts are good.

The rest of the Court concurring,

ROBERTS AND OTHERS, Appellants, v. CHURCHWARDENS, &c. OF AYLESBURY, Respondents.

Poor-rate—Market—Toll—Stallage.

Market-tolls are not rateable; and the fact that they are so are and always have been payable in a particular room in the market-house, of which the owner of the tolls is also the owner, does not make them so.

The lessee of stallage dues is rateable to the poor in respect thereof.

Case stated by a judge's order under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 11, for the opinion of this court, after notice of appeal against a poor's-rate made on the appellants. The rate or assessment, and so far as it is necessary to set out the same for the present case, is as follows (that is to say),

Name of occupier	Name of owner.	Description of property rated.	Name or situation of property.	Estimated extent.	Gross estimated rental.	Rateable value.	Rate at 6*d.* in the pound.
				A. R. P.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
William Roberts, James Tonge, Joseph Tonge, and James Tonge the younger.	Acton Tindal.	Market house, with the ground belonging thereto, used and occupied for the tolls of the markets and fairs.	Market square, Kingsbury and other parts of the town.		160 0 0	128 0 0	3 4 0

The notice and grounds of appeal, so far as it is necessary to set out the same, are as follows (that is to say): "That if, in and by the said rate, it is intended to rate the said William Roberts, James Tonge, Joseph Tonge, and James Tonge the younger, for or in respect of the tolls of or arising from the markets and fairs held, in the said parish of Aylesbury, they say that they are not, nor are or is any or either of them, liable to be rated or assessed for or in respect of such tolls" "That the said William Roberts, James Tonge, Joseph Tonge, and James Tonge the younger, are not the occupiers of, and have no title to, and are not liable to be rated or assessed for any ground belonging to the market-house, and situate in Market-square, Kingsbury, and other parts of the town, save only the ground on which the said market-house is erected and stands." "That there is no ground belonging to the said market-house situate in Market-square, Kingsbury, and other parts of the town, save only the ground on which the said market-house is erected and stands." "That if, in and by the said rate, it is intended to rate the said William Roberts, James Tonge, Joseph Tonge, and James Tonge the younger, for or in respect of the tolls of or arising from the market and fairs held in the said parish of Aylesbury, as attached to or inseparable from the occupation of the said market-house, then they say that such tolls are not attached to or inseparable from the occupation of such market-house. That if, in and by the said rate, it is intended to rate the said William Roberts, Joseph Tonge, and James Tonge the younger, as inhabitants of the parish of Aylesbury, in respect of their share of the profits of or arising from the tolls of the market and fairs held in the said parish, the said William Roberts, Joseph Tonge, and James Tonge the younger, say that they are not liable to be so rated."

By an indenture of lease dated and made on the 12th Oct. 1848, between Acton Tindal, of Aylesbury, in the county of Buckingham, Esq. (lord of the manor of Aylesbury-with-Bierton in the said county), of the one part, and the appellants, of the other part, the said Acton Tindal granted, demised, leased, and to farm let unto the appellants, their executors and administrators, all and every the tolls and duties payable at the market and fairs of Aylesbury aforesaid, in respect of corn, grain, and seeds, and of horses, oxen, sheep, and kine, and of all other cattle, merchandise, and other articles sold at the said market or fairs, and all rights and profits of stallage, piccage, and all other tolls, duties, rights, profits, privileges, and advantages whatsoever, incident or belonging to the said market and fairs, and to or with the same now or heretofore severally belonging, held, occupied or enjoyed, granted, demised, or letten or accepted, reputed, deemed, taken or known as part, parcel, or member thereof, or appertaining or incident thereto, together with the market-house at Aylesbury aforesaid, and the corn-bins and toll-room therein, and also all that building with the appurtenances lately used as the cage, for the purpose of depositing therein stalls, grain, and other articles of merchandise, and for all the other purposes of holding the said market and fairs, but for no other use or purpose whatsoever (except and always reserved out of the said demise unto the said Acton Tindal, his heirs and assigns, and for his and their friends, agents, and servants, with or without surveyors and workmen, to enter and go into and upon the said market-house and premises, at his, her, or their free will and pleasure, to examine the state and condition thereof, and also except and reserved out of the said demise unto the said Acton Tindal, his heirs and assigns, the full and free use of the said market-house and other rooms therein, for any purpose not connected with the holding of the said market or fairs, on any day other than a market or fair day, or other than a period for the collection of tolls, and of which the said Acton Tindal, his heirs or assigns, shall give six hours' notice to the appellants or either of them, their or either of their executors or administrators; he the said Acton Tindal, his heirs or assigns, doing no damage or spoil to the said demised premises, or to the stalls or other property of the appellants, or the survivor of them, their executors or administrators), to have and to hold, receive, perceive, take and enjoy the said tolls of the said market, fairs, and other profits and advantages incident to or belonging to the said market and fairs, and the said market-house, corn-bins, and all and singular other the premises thereinbefore in the said indenture mentioned, and thereby granted and demised, or intended so to be, with their and every of their appurtenances (except as before excepted), unto the said appellants, their executors and administrators, from the 11th Oct. 1848, for and during and unto the full end and term of seven years from thence next ensuing, and fully to be complete and ending, yielding and paying yearly during the said term unto the said Acton Tindal, his heirs and assigns, the rent of 210*l.* of lawful money, in the manner and at the times in the said indenture in that behalf mentioned.

Under and by virtue of the above demise, the appellants, on the 12th Oct. 1848, entered upon, and thence hitherto have been, and were at the time of the making of the rate appealed against, and still are, in the actual occupation, receipt, perception, and enjoyment of the above-mentioned tolls, market-house (except for any purpose not connected with the holding of the said market or fairs on any day other than a market or fair day, or other than a period for the collection of tolls as in and by the said lease is excepted), and other tenements, hereditaments, and premises demised to them by the said indenture of lease of the 12th Oct. 1848, as tenants thereof to the said Acton Tindal. Three of the appellants, viz. William Roberts, Joseph Tonge, and James Tonge the younger, are, and were when the said rate was made, inhabitants of the parish of Aylesbury aforesaid, and the remaining appellant, James Tonge, is, and was when the said rate was made, an inhabitant of the parish of Pendleton, in the county of Lancaster. The said Acton Tindal, as such lord of the manor as aforesaid, was at the time when the said indenture of lease was made, and thence hitherto hath been and still is, the owner of the soil of the streets and squares of the town of Aylesbury aforesaid, and he and his predecessors in title as lords of the manor aforesaid, or their lessees, have, as far back as living memory goes, collected and received at the market and fairs aforesaid certain tolls and duties, in kind or in money, upon the sale of wheat, barley, oats, beans, peas, rye, vetches, turnip and clover seed, trefoil and all other grass seeds sold in the said market and fairs, and also upon the sale or exchange of all horses, mares, or geldings, bulls, oxen, cows, calves, sheep, pigs, and other cattle and stock sold or exchanged in the said market and fairs, and also upon all fruit, vegetables, poultry, eggs, butter, and all other goods and articles of merchandise in any way exposed for sale in the said market and fairs, and also for stallage. The tolls upon corn, grain, and seeds being generally taken in kind, a small measure full from each sack, and tolls upon fruit, vegetables, poultry, eggs, butter, and all other goods and articles of merchandise, being money payments charged for and upon each stall or stand, upon which the same are respectively exposed for sale as hereinafter mentioned, at the discretion of the said lord of the manner for the time being, or his lessees, according to the situation of such stall or stand or other circumstances affecting the same.

The said market and fairs at Aylesbury aforesaid have always, as far back as living memory goes, been and still are holden in a large square, there called the Market-square, and along the sides of the streets and highways surrounding and leading to such square, and also in another open space or square there called Kingsbury, which adjoins and opens into the Market-square aforesaid, and in another place called Pitcher-hill; all the said places where such market and fairs being within the parish and manor of Aylesbury. The market-house hereinbefore mentioned is a building standing in the centre of the said Market-square, and has existed as far back as living memory goes, in its present state and situation. The ground-floor of which building is an open space, upon which sacks of corn and other grain and seeds are deposited and exposed on market days for sale, and on an upper floor in the same building the corn-bins are from time to time let out to the farmers and others who frequent the said market and fairs for the purpose of depositing in such corn-bins, for their own convenience, any corn or other grain and seeds which they may be desirous of leaving upon the spot. The lower part of the market-house has also, as far back as living memory goes, been from time to time let out for the hustings at elections, and upon other public occasions for pecuniary considerations, by the lord of the manor for the time being or his lessees; but the use of the said market-house and other rooms therein for any purpose not connected with the holding of the said market or fairs on any day other than a market or fair day, or other than a period for the collection of tolls, have been expressly excepted and reserved by and to the said Acton Tindal, in and by the said lease as aforesaid; the said market-house has never, since the execution of the said lease, been so let out by the appellants.

Upon about one-half of the Market-square aforesaid stalls have been, as far as living memory goes, and still are usually placed, upon the market and fair days, on which stalls meat and other goods and articles are exposed for sale; but neither these stalls nor any other stalls, stands, or stables in the said market and fairs aforesaid are in any way affixed to or driven into the soil: and the other half of the said Market-square, and also the said open space or square called Kingsbury, is commonly used for the sale of horses, cows, pigs, sheep, and other live stock. These usually either stand at the sides and corners of the street, or in Kingsbury aforesaid, or are tied to the rails surrounding the Market-square, or are inclosed in pens formed by four hurdles tied together at the corners, no part of such pens being in any way affixed to or driven into the soil. Upon certain portions of the sides of the streets surrounding the said Market-square, and also upon certain portions of the sides of the said other streets leading thereto, and of Kingsbury aforesaid, fruit, vegetables, poultry, and other goods and articles are exposed for sale; generally either in baskets or on stalls, or upon stands or tables placed upon, but in no way affixed to or driven into, the soil.

The above statement as to the tolls, stalls, and the mode and places of holding the fairs and markets, and of exposing for sale and selling the live stock and various merchandise, articles, and things above mentioned, is to be taken to be true as far back as living memory goes. The lords of the manor and their lessees for the time being also, as far back as living memory goes, and the appellants have since the date of the said lease, been in the habit of letting to various parties on fair days and other occasions, the right and privilege of placing and erecting temporary theatres, booths, or shows upon various open spaces of ground, situated within the parish and manor of Aylesbury, and have derived therefrom considerable pecuniary profit, but none of such theatres, booths, or shows have been or are in any way affixed to or driven into the soil. All the tolls on the corn, grain, and other seed exposed for sale in the said market-house as aforesaid have been, as far back as living memory goes, and still are received in the said toll-room of such house, but all the other tolls and duties hereinbefore mentioned are and always have been, as far back as living memory goes, collected and received in those parts of the said parish of Aylesbury, wherein and whereon any live stock, merchandise, articles, and things in respect of which such last-mentioned tolls and duties are payable as aforesaid are exposed for sale. It is admitted that the appellants are in fact rated in and by the said rate for the said market-house, and for all the land so far as the same is demised to them in and by the said lease, and for the stallage, piccage, and all the tolls held, occupied, received, and enjoyed by them, within the parish of Aylesbury. It is agreed that the Court of Q. B. shall, if it shall see fit, be at liberty to draw such inferences from the facts above stated as the Court of Quarter Sessions upon the trial of the said appeal might have drawn. The appellants contend that at the time the rate appealed against was made, they were and still are rateable to the relief of the poor of the said parish of Aylesbury in respect only of the said market-house. The respondents on the contrary contend, that the appellants were when the said rate was made, and still are, rateable in respect of all the property they are rated for, in and by the said rate as aforesaid.

The question for the opinion of the court is, whether the appellants were, when the rate appealed against was made, rateable to the relief of the poor of the parish of Aylesbury in respect of all or any portion of the property in respect of which they are rated in and by the said rate as aforesaid.

If the court shall be of opinion that the appellants were, when the said rate was made, rateable in respect of all the property in respect of which they are so rated as aforesaid in and by the said rate, then the said rate is to be confirmed. If the court shall be of opinion that the appellants were, when the said rate was made, rateable in respect of some portion only of the said property in respect of which they are so rated as aforesaid, then the court is required to state in respect of which portion they are so rateable, and the said rate upon the appellants is to be amended and reduced according to the annual rateable value of such portion. It being agreed that such rateable value as last aforesaid shall be ascertained and determined, upon and according to the principle laid down by the judgment of the court, by two valuers, one to be chosen by the appellants, and the other by the respondents, or, in case of their disagreement, by their umpire, to be by them chosen before they enter upon their valuation. The court is also requested to adjudge the costs to be paid by the appellants or respondents.

O'Malley, (with him Worlledge), for the respondents.—First. There is a distinction between market tolls and tolls connected with the occupation of the soil. Market tolls per se are not rateable, inasmuch as they are unconnected with the possession of corporeal property, and the owner of them, therefore, cannot be rated as an occupier; but the tolls on the corn, grain, and other seeds exposed for sale in the market-house have always been (from time immemorial), and still are, received in the toll-room of the said house, and there is an occupation in respect of which rateability attaches. The actual permanency of the tolls seems to be annexed to the freehold of the soil, Com. Dig. "Market," F. 1. [COLERIDGE, J.—The room in the market-house is a convenient place for paying and receiving the tolls; but that does not alter the incorporeal character of the tolls. They must be collected somewhere; but collection in a particular room does not convert tolls into a corporeal hereditament.] Secondly. The appellants are rateable in respect of the tolls "on all fruits, vegetables, poultry, eggs, butter, and all other goods and articles of merchandise in any way exposed for sale in the said market." There is a difference between market tolls, which are levied on things sold, and stallage, or dues in the nature of stallage, which are levied on things exposed for sale. [COLERIDGE, J.—Stallage and piccage are for the use of the soil itself. WIGHTMAN, J.—If fruit, for instance, be exposed for sale in the market, and for the mere exposing some toll is leviable, that would still be toll only; but if the exposing to sale be by means of a particular standing in the market, that would be stallage.] Then, at all events, the appellants are rateable for stallage, which arises from property in the soil: (Mayor of Northampton v. Ward, 1 Wils. 107; Mayor of Norwich v. Swetton, 2 W. Bl. 1179; R. v. Marquis of Salisbury, 8 A. & E. 716; R. v. Bell, 5 M. & S. 221; Mayor of Newport v. Saunders, 3 B. & Ad. 411; Lord Pulham v. Pickersgill; 1 T. R. 660.)

Pashley, Q. C. (with him Wells), contrà.—This is an attempt to rate the owner of a market in respect of the tolls payable for goods sold on the stalls in the market. [Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—The sale has nothing to do with it. Is there not use and occupation of the soil for the day? WIGHTMAN, J.—Stallage is in the nature of a ground-rent. COLERIDGE, J.—It is a mode of measuring the rent.]

According to the case, neither the stalls nor the stands or tables are in any way affixed to or driven into the soil. This case, therefore, is to be governed by that of R. v. Joliffe, 2 T. R. 90. [Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—That case relates to a wayleave, and has peculiarities of its own; but in general wayleaves, those of the county of Northumberland for instance, are rateable.] In the case of the Northumberland wayleaves there is an actual occupation of the soil. [WIGHTMAN, J.—So there is in stallage.] The case shows that the exposure to sale is not all on stalls or stands. [Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—In principle I see no difference between placing the basket of goods on the soil, and placing it on a stand or table on the soil.] In R. v. The North and South Shields Ferry Company, 1 A. & E. 140, it was held that the tolls from a ferry simply were not rateable.

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—The questions in the case are now reduced to the single one, whether the appellants may be rated in respect of the stallage; for Mr. O'Malley has properly given up the claim in respect of the tolls not connected with the actual use of the soil, but says that stallage is the use of the soil, and the dues for it a rateable subject. It is quite clear to me that stallage is rateable under the 43 Eliz. Stallage is the licence to erect a standing in a market; here the person who has that licence gets the right of use and occupation of the standing at market times, and has to pay for it whether goods be sold or not, and it is not a part of the consideration from him that goods shall be exposed for sale. The person, however, who has the stall, or right of standing for the time, has the exclusive use of it; and I cannot distinguish such a right of standing from the wayleaves in the north of England, which have always been rateable.

COLERIDGE, J.—The persons rated in this case are not those who pay toll and occupy on the market days, and have a short and fluctuating possession, but the lessees of the owner, who have given them the right to use the land in a particular way during their term. Those lessees have an occupation by those to whom they underlet day by day for money. I cannot conceive a more fit case for rating. The case of R. v. Joliffe is distinguishable; it related to two wayleaves; as to one, the defendant was not an occupier at all, because another person was rightfully the exclusive occupier; as to the other, though he had the right to the wayleaves, he had not exercised it; to have rated him in that case, it would have been like rating in this case those who were going to market.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion. Stallage is like a special ground-rent or compensation paid by the person having the possession of the land on the market-day to the owner. Much of the argument of Mr. Pashley is founded on the application of "toll" to this species of rating. That, to my mind, is not at all applicable.

CROMPTON, J.—The appellants occupy the land and derive a profit from it; in respect of that they are rateable.

Judgment for the respondents, without costs.

CORCORAN v. GURNEY.

Ship—Policy of insurance—Average loss—Stranding.

A vessel bound from Nantes to Dublin was obliged, from stress of weather, to run into the Bay of Palais. The gale increased, and the captain let go the two bower anchors and chains. In consequence of the large anchor dragging, and for the preservation of the ship, cargo, and crew, and particularly to prevent the ship from going on shore, the captain slipped his two chains overboard, got the ship under sail, and succeeded in entering the tidal harbour of Sanzon, where, by reason of its being then low water, the ship took the ground. She was detained there a month, and floated only eight days in the month, and then at the top of spring tides:

Held, that the ship was stranded in the harbour of Sanzon within the meaning of the usual memorandum in a policy of insurance.

This was an action on promises brought by the plaintiff against the defendant for money due on an average loss under a policy of marine insurance, and for money paid by the plaintiff for the use of the defendant, and for money received by the defendant for the use of the plaintiff, and for money due to the plaintiff from the defendant on an account stated. The defendant has pleaded, first, that the loss was within the meaning of the memorandum in the said policy, and that the ship mentioned in the said policy was not stranded; secondly, he has paid 20*l.* into court; and lastly, to the indebitatus counts of the declaration he has pleaded the general issue. The plaintiff has joined issue on the last plea, has traversed the first, and to the second has replied damages ultra; and issue having been joined on the said first and last pleas, by the consent of Joseph Maynard, attorney for the plaintiff, and John Nurlseoe Pearce, for the defendant, and by the order of Erle, J. the following case has been stated for the opinion of the court:—

The ship Victorine, in the pleadings mentioned, sailed from Nantes bound for Dublin on the 6th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1850, with a cargo of barley and flour, and prosecuted her voyage without any accident or misadventure until the 10th day of March in the same year, when, from stress of weather, the captain was obliged to bear up and run into the Bay of Palais, on the coast of France. While the said ship was lying in the said bay the wind increased to a gale from north-east to east, and in consequence thereof the captain let go the bower anchors and chains, paying, in the meanwhile, due attention to the pumps. At half-past eight o'clock in the forenoon of the same day, the large anchor dragged, and in consequence thereof, and after consulting with the officers and crew, and for the preservation of the said ship and cargo and of the lives of all on board, and particularly with the purpose of preventing the said ship from going on shore, the captain slipped his two chains overboard, got the said ship under sail, and succeeded in entering the port of Sanzon, which is situated to the north of Point Bœuf on the French coast, and is a tidal harbour, where, by reason of its being then low water, the said ship took the ground. Whilst lying in the said harbour, and in consequence of the natural flux and reflux of the tide the said ship floated about eight days in the month only, and then only at the top of spring tides. By reason of the wind being contrary the said ship got nieped, and was therefore unable to leave the said harbour until the 10th day of May in the same year, when she proceeded to sea, and was then found to make water, in consequence of her having been so long on the ground and of being thereby strained, so that it became necessary to keep the pumps going. The said ship reached the Dublin river on the 21st day of May in the same year, and her cargo was then found to be damaged. The question for the opinion of the court is, whether the said ship was stranded in the harbour of Sanzon. If the court shall be opinion in the negative thereof, then the plaintiff agrees that a judgment shall and may be entered against him of nolle prosequi immediately after the decision of this case, or otherwise as the court may think fit; but if the court shall be of a contrary opinion, then the defendant agrees that judgment shall be entered against him by confession for the sum of 154*l.* damages, immediately after the decision of this case, or otherwise as the court may think fit, and that judgment shall be entered accordingly.

Bovill, for the plaintiffs.—The rule of law on this subject is well settled by a variety of cases; and it is this:—If a vessel takes the ground, that is a stranding within the meaning of the memorandum in the policy, unless it can be shown that she took the ground in the ordinary course of navigation, or unless she only remains aground for an inconsiderable period of time; and the reason is that the insurers must be taken to have contemplated all such groundings as are incidental to almost every voyage. So if a ship goes into a tidal harbour and takes her proper place there, and then, as the water falls, settles down upon the ground, that is clearly not a stranding within the memorandum; but if, as in this case, to avoid peril, she is driven by stress of weather to run aground, whether in or out of a tidal harbour, that, it is submitted, is a stranding. It is casus fortuitus, and out of the ordinary course of navigation. (He cited M'Dougle v. The Royal Exchange Assurance Company, 4 Camp. 283, 4 M. & S. 503; Herrn v. Edmonds, 1 Brod. & B. 388; Kingsford v. Marshal, 8 Bing. 458, 464; Barrow v. Bell, 4 B. & C. 736; Bishop v. Pentland, 7 B. & C. 219; Wells v. Hopwood, 3 B. & Ad. 20; Magnus v. Buttemer, 21 L. J. 119, C. P.)

Sir F. Thesiger (G. L. Browne with him) contrà. The true test in these cases is whether the vessel takes the ground by the mere operation of natural causes, in which case there is no stranding, or whether it does not arise from something extraordinary and fortuitous. In the present case nothing occurred out of the ordinary course of navigation. The vessel met with stormy weather, and the captain made sail for a port of refuge. He entered a tidal harbour at low water, and took the ground; but that is no uncommon occurrence; on the contrary, it is quite in the ordinary course of navigation for vessels to enter such harbours when it is known that there is not water enough to float them; and even if they enter at high water they inevitably take the ground when the tide falls. (In addition to the cases above mentioned he cited Carruthers v. Sydebotham, 4 M. & S. 77; Rayner v. Godmond, 5 B. & Ald. 225; Bolton v. Dobson, 1 Marsh. Ins. 281.)

Bovill, in reply.

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—I am of opinion that in this case there was a stranding within the meaning of the memorandum to the policy. We have some excellent guides as to what is and what is not a stranding. On the one hand, Lord Tenterden (in Wells v. Hopwood) says that "where a vessel takes the ground in the ordinary and usual course of navigation and management, in a tide-river or harbour, upon the ebbing of the tide or from natural deficiency of water, so that she may float again upon the flow of the tide or increase of water, such an event is not to be considered a stranding within the sense of the memorandum." On the other hand, Tindal, C. J. (in Kingsford v. Marshall), says that "where the taking of the ground does not happen solely from those natural causes, which are necessarily incident to the ordinary course of the navigation in which the ship is engaged, either wholly or in part, but from some accidental or extraneous cause," then it is a stranding. Now, was not the taking of the ground in the present case occasioned by some accidental or extraneous cause? The ship was bound from Nantes to Dublin; she encounters a gale of wind, and is in great danger when off a place near Palais. She is dragging her anchor, and for the safety of the cargo and crew, and particularly to prevent her from going on shore, the captain runs her into the harbour of Sanzon, where she took the ground. If she had been run on a bank outside the harbour, it would have been a clear case of stranding; then, does it make any difference that she got within the harbour? If, indeed, she had once been in good safety in the harbour, and afterwards grounded by the fall of the tide, that would not have been a stranding; but she never was in good safety in the harbour. It was from her extraordinary peril that she went there at all; and by reason of the state of the weather she was compelled to take the ground in such a manner that she floated only eight times in a month, and then at the top of spring tides. With the exception of Bolton v. Dobson, before Lord Kenyon, which has been much shaken, all the cases lay down the same rule; and in applying that rule to the circumstances of this case, I think we cannot dismiss from our consideration the fact that the ship was flying for safety when the event happened; and that being so, I do not see how it can be said that she took the ground in the ordinary course of navigation.

COLERIDGE, J.—I agree that the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment. Where the vessel takes the ground by reason of something which is ordinary and regular, as where she is in her proper place in a tidal harbour, and is expected to take the ground when the water falls, in such a case there is no stranding; but if the event arises from something out of the ordinary course, as in Wells v. Hopwood, and Bishop v. Pentland, it is a stranding. Here the vessel would never have been in the place where she took the ground but for the stress of weather; and if this was not to be considered a stranding, we must hold that there cannot be a stranding in a tidal harbour into which the vessel is driven by stress of weather.

WIGHTMAN, J.—Adopting the expressions of Lord Tenterden in the case referred to (Wells v. Hopwood), that "where the ground is taken under any extraordinary circumstances of time or place, by reason of some unusual or accidental occurrence, such an event shall be considered a stranding within the meaning of the memorandum," it seems to me that they are directly applicable to this case, and that the vessel took the ground under an extraordinary circumstance of time, it being then low water, and by reason of an accidental occurrence.

CROMPTON, J. concurred. Judgment for plaintiff.

REG. v. THE CHURCHWARDENS, &c. OF ST. ANDREW IN WORCESTER.

Poor—Bastard—Settlement after age of sixteen—Stat. 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 71.

A pauper, who was born a bastard after the passing of 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, has the settlement of his mother only until he attains the age of sixteen. After he has attained that age his birthplace becomes his place of settlement, unless he has acquired another settlement in his own right.

This was a special case stated for the opinion of this court.

CASE.

On the 5th March, 1852, two justices of the peace for the county of Hereford duly made an order for the removal of Amelia Preece, single woman, and her illegitimate child, Elizabeth, from the parish of Bodenham, in the county of Hereford, to the parish of St. Andrew's, in the city of Worcester. Against this order the churchwardens and overseers of St. Andrew's gave due notice of appeal. The parties have agreed to state the facts of the case for the opinion of the Court of Q. B. under the provisions of the stat. 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 11. The pauper, Amelia Preece, was born in the appellant parish of St. Andrew's, the 14th Sept. 1834; she was the bastard child of one Susan Preece. Susan Preece in 1836 married one William Norman. Neither Susan Preece nor William Norman had ever any settlement in the appellant parish of St. Andrew's, but have always had, and now have, respectively a settlement elsewhere.

The respondents contend that, having been born a bastard in the appellant parish, that parish is the place of the pauper's legal settlement, and that, having attained the age of sixteen years in Sept. 1850, she thenceforth no longer had her mother's settlement, wherever it might be, but from that time was legally removable to the appellant parish.

The appellants contend that the facts above stated show that the pauper never was settled in the appellant parish; that under the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 71, the pauper was at her birth settled in the parish which was the settlement of her mother, Susan Preece; and that the pauper followed, and still retains, the settlement which her mother, the said Susan Preece, gained by her marriage with the said William Norman. If the court should be of opinion that the pauper had and followed her mother's settlement only till she attained the age of sixteen years, and that on attaining that age, she was legally removable to the appellant parish by reason of her birth, then the order of removal is to be confirmed, otherwise it is to be quashed.

The 71st section of 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, enacts, "that every child which shall be born a bastard after the passing of this Act shall have and follow the settlement of the mother of such child until such child shall attain the age of sixteen, or shall acquire a settlement in its own right, and such mother, so long as she shall be unmarried, or a widow, shall be bound to maintain such child as part of her family until such child shall attain the age of sixteen.

W. H. Cook, for the respondents.—The effect of the 71st section of the Poor Law Amendment Act is, to substitute for the period of nurture, during which under the old law the bastard child was not removable to the place of its birth settlement, because it could not be separated from its mother, a period of sixteen years, during which, but no longer, it was not merely to follow, but actually to have, the settlement of the mother. At the termination of that period, the bastard is put in the same situation as that in which, under the old law, the illegitimate child after the expiration of the period of nurture was; he becomes removable, and to the place of his own settlement; that is, he no longer follows or has the settlement of the mother. [CROMPTON, J.—Suppose the mother should die when the bastard was of the age of ten?] Following her settlement further would then be out of the question; but he would have her then settlement until he should attain the age of sixteen. He may follow the settlement of his mother without having the rights of settlement; but he cannot have the settlement of the mother without all the rights of settlement. The statute says he is to have them "until" he has attained the age of sixteen; that means up to that time, and no longer.

Selfe, contrà.—The settlement of the mother at the time of the bastard attaining the age of sixteen becomes his permanent settlement. Under the old law the child was irremovable until the age of seven, if removal caused separation from the mother. Under the present law the mother's settlement, and each successive settlement of the mother, is given to the child until it has attained the age of sixteen. At the age of sixteen the child ceases to acquire fresh settlements with the mother, but retains what it has got. Under the old law the child derived no settlement from the mother; under the present it takes the mother's settlement; and the only difference between the bastard child and the legitimate child without a paternal settlement is, that at the age of sixteen there is a statutory emancipation, and no fresh settlement can be acquired. This is the fair conclusion from the statute; for it is entirely against all notions of a settlement that it should expire by mere efflux of time. The section in fact changes the law which makes the place of birth the place of settlement; and made the mother's place of settlement, when the child attains sixteen, the place of its settlement.

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—This is a very plain case. This section admits of only one construction. Before the last Act the place of birth was the place of settlement, subject only to this, that the child could not be separated from the mother during the age of nurture; but now the Act provides that the child shall have and follow the settlement of the mother until it attains the age of sixteen. Mr. Selfe says that that provision has made a change in the law, so that the place of birth is no longer at any time the place of settlement; but if that was the object of the Legislature, the language of the Act is quite inadequate to express it. The Act says what shall be the place of settlement until the child attains the age of sixteen; but what is to happen then? If he is not to have the settlement of the mother, what settlement is he to have? The words "until he attain the age of sixteen" override the whole, and apply to the word "have" as well as to the word "follow;" so that he is to have the settlement until he is sixteen, but no longer. At that age the operation of the clause ceases, and, the old law coming in force, the child is remitted to his birth settlement. It was necessary to introduce the word "have" in order to prevent disputes in case of the separation of the mother and child during the sixteen years. This is not like the case of a woman with a settlement marrying a man with none, because there the settlement "suspended will remain;" but this is a settlement expressly conferred for the period of sixteen years, and no longer.

COLERIDGE, J. and WIGHTMAN, J. concurred.

CROMPTON, J.—I at first felt some doubt upon this point; but the decision is according to the grammatical construction of the words, and I have no doubt it is right. Order confirmed.

COE v. LAWRENCE.

Municipal corporation—Clerk to the justices, conducting prosecutions as attorney, contrary to the statute—Penalty.

By the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 102, the justices in a borough are prohibited from appointing as their clerk any alderman, councillor, clerk of the peace, or any person employed in the office of the clerk of the peace of the same borough; and the clerk to the justices is prohibited from being employed or interested in the prosecution of any offenders committed by such justices to the quarter sessions or assizes. The section then imposes a penalty of 100l. upon "any person, being an alderman, councillor, clerk of the peace, or person employed in the office of the clerk of the peace, who shall act as clerk to the justices, or otherwise offend in the premises:"

Held, that although it was probably the intention of the Legislature to apply the penalty to all the offences previously mentioned in the section, that intention was not sufficiently expressed; and that a clerk to the justices, who was engaged as attorney in prosecuting offenders committed by them, did not forfeit the 100l., unless he was also either an alderman, councillor, clerk of the peace, or person employed in the office of clerk of the peace.

Debt for penalties. The first count of the declaration stated that, after the passing of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, the justices of the borough of Ipswich committed a certain offender for trial at the quarter sessions; and that the defendant was afterwards employed as attorney for reward in conducting the prosecution of that offender at the quarter sessions, he being at that time clerk to the committing justices; whereby he had forfeited 100*l.*

The 2nd count alleged that he was interested in the said prosecution; and there were several other counts in the same form as the 1st and 2nd, relating to the prosecution of other offenders.

The defendant had, under the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, pleaded not guilty, and also demurred to the declaration; and the demurrer now came on for argument.

Stat. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 102, enacts, that it shall be lawful for the justices of every borough to which a separate commission of the peace shall be granted as aforesaid, at their first or any other meeting, and they are hereby respectively required to appoint a fit person to be the clerk to the justices of such borough, to be removable at their pleasure, and so as often as there shall be a vacancy in the said office of clerk to the justices by death, resignation, removal, or otherwise: provided that it shall not be lawful for the said justices to appoint or continue as such clerk to the justices, any alderman or councillor of such borough, or clerk of the peace of such borough, or the partner of such clerk of the peace, or any clerk or person in the employ of such clerk of the peace: provided also, that it shall not be lawful for the said clerk to the justices, by himself or his partner, to be directly or indirectly interested or employed in the prosecution of any offender committed for trial by the justices of whom he shall be such clerk as aforesaid, or any of them, at any court of gaol delivery or general quarter sessions; and any person, being an alderman or councillor, or clerk of the peace of any borough, or the partner or clerk, or in the employ of such clerk of the peace who shall act as clerk to the justices of such borough, or shall otherwise offend in the premises, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of 100*l.*, one moiety thereof to the treasurer of such borough, to be paid over to the credit and account of the borough fund of such borough, and the other moiety thereof, with full costs of suit, to any person who will sue for the same in any of his Majesty's Courts of Record at Westminster.

Cowling, in support of the demurrer.—The declaration is bad, because it does not allege that the defendant was an alderman, councillor, or clerk of the peace, or person employed in the office of the clerk of the peace; and by sect. 102 of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, the penalty is only imposed upon a person filling one of those offices. It is true that the clause prohibits the clerk to the justices from being concerned in prosecuting offenders committed by them; but the penalty does not, according to the literal construction of the words, apply to that case; nor was it necessary that it should, because the justices might at any time dismiss their clerk if he violated the Act of Parliament. The penalty is directed against the offence of an unqualified person acting as clerk to the justices. [Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—His dismissal would not be a punishment for the offence of violating an Act of Parliament. If no specific remedy is given by the Act, he would be indictable for a misdemeanour.] That may be so; but the court cannot stretch the language of a penal clause so as to include a person who is not clearly within it.

G. Hayes, contrà.—The intention of the Legislature is perfectly clear. The penalty was intended to enforce the two distinct prohibitions contained in the early part of the section. If it had been intended to apply to the first only it would have followed that immediately, and the words "or shall otherwise offend in the premises," would have been useless. The rule that a penal clause is to be construed strictly can hardly avail the defendant in this case; because his construction would render him liable to indictment, followed by fine and imprisonment; whereas the plaintiff's construction will subject him only to a pecuniary penalty. It is absurd to suppose that the Legislature has imposed the penalty upon a clerk to the justices, who, being an alderman, councillor, or clerk of the peace, illegally conducts prosecutions; for that is a case which it could not contemplate as occurring, because it has prohibited any of those officers from being appointed or acting at all as clerks to the justices. [COLERIDGE, J.—A double penalty may be intended; one for acting as clerk to the justices, and another for improperly conducting prosecutions.] It is inconceivable that the penalty should have been imposed in that case, but none in the case of a duly-appointed clerk to the justices similarly misconducting himself. In order, therefore, to give effect to the plain intention of the Legislature, the court will introduce the words "any person who," and read the clause thus: "any person being an alderman, &c. who shall act as clerk to the justices, or any person who shall otherwise offend in the premises, shall forfeit," &c.

Cowling, in reply.—If it were permissible to alter the language of an Act of Parliament, for the purpose of bringing a defendant within the operation of a penal clause, the plaintiff's argument might be correct; but it is not.

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—I cannot tell what the Legislature may have meant to enact by this clause. Probably they may have intended that the penalty sh uld apply to both prohibitions in the earlier part o" the clause; but they have not carried that intention into effect. Quod voluit non dixit. To subject the defendant to a penalty we must see that there are words which affect him; but this defendant is not an alderman, councillor, clerk of the peace, or person employed in the office of the clerk of the peace; he does not come within any of those descriptions; then has he committed an offence for which the penalty is imposed? It is suggested that by inserting the words "any person who" before the words "shall otherwise offend in the premises," the penal clause will apply to him; and so it would; because he is a person who has offended in the premises. But the penalty is not imposed upon all persons who offend in the premises, but only upon "any person being an alderman, councillor," &c. Therefore the defendant is not one of those who are made liable to the penalty. What is wanting is a nominative case to the verb "shall" which will include the defendant; but I am afraid that we should not be justified in putting in three words, which are not to be found in the Act, and thereby rendering a class of persons liable to a penalty upon whom it has not been imposed by the words of the Legislature. I may regret that the real intention should not be carried out on account of a careless and inaccurate mode of expression; but it is far better that we should adhere to the grammatical construction of the language used; and when the mischief which follows from Acts of Parliament being thus drawn is made apparent, some remedy may perhaps be applied.

COLERIDGE, J.—I am of the same opinion. This clause is most inaccurately drawn; for, according to the words, there would be no penalty for improperly appointing a disqualified person, though there is a penalty upon a disqualified person who acts. So as regards this very case, I do not doubt that the intention was to make the penal clause applicable to all the offences previously described; but we cannot so construe it if we give to the words their ordinary grammatical construction. To give effect to that intention we must introduce another antecedent and relative, which would alter the meaning of the words as they stand; and I have never yet heard that it is permissible to do so for the purpose of bringing any one within the meaning of a penal clause. Indeed, I think that it is against the sound rule of construction as applied to any instrument, to introduce words so as to alter its meaning.

COURT OF COMMON BENCH.

Reported by DANIEL THOMAS EVANS and R. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

Thursday, Jan. 20.

MARKER v. KENRICK.

Demurrer.

An action on the case will lie for waste by a lessee, although there is an express covenant against it in the lease, the remedies being cumulative.

A. the lessee of a coal-mine, cuts through the barriers of the mine. The lessor brings an action on the case for injury done to his reversion. Plea, setting out the lease, and alleging that the grievances complained of consisted of a particular mode of working the mine, provided for by the covenants in the lease. Demurrer.

Held, that the action would lie, although the plaintiff might have sued on the covenant.

The declaration stated that, before and at the times of the committing of the grievances thereinafter mentioned, the defendant was tenant to the plaintiff of divers beds, veins, seams, and mines of coal, cannel, slack, ironstone, and other minerals, with the appurtenances, in the parish of Ruabon, in the county of Denbigh, for a certain term of years, the reversion of and in the same beds, veins, seams, and mines of coal, cannel, slack, and ironstone, and other minerals respectively, then and still belonging to the plaintiff; and it was the duty of the defendant as such tenant to work and manage the said beds, veins, seams, and mines in a proper and tenantable manner. Yet the defendant, well knowing the premises, but contriving and intending to injure and aggrieve the plaintiff in his reversionary estate and interest of and in the said beds, veins, seams, and mines, theretofore, and whilst he the defendant was tenant thereof as aforesaid, and whilst the plaintiff was so interested therein as aforesaid, to wit, on the 1st day of June, in the year of our Lord 1850, and on divers other days and times between that day and the commencement of the suit, worked and managed the said beds, veins, seams, and mines in an improper and untenantlike manner; and then, to wit, on the several days and times aforesaid, wrongfully and unjustly, without the leave or licence and against the will of the plaintiff, cut, made, dug, bored, and broke through a certain barrier, to wit, of coal, which formed and ought to have been left as the boundary between the said mines of the plaintiff and a certain other mine adjoining thereto; and thereby then caused and permitted large quantities of water to escape, run, and flow from the said other mine into the said mines of the plaintiff, and to flood the same; and then also, to wit, on the several days and times aforesaid, wrongfully and injuriously made and caused and procured to be made certain roadways, passages, and communications, carried and brought divers large quantities of coal gotten from the said other mine into and upon and through the said mines of the plaintiff, and brought into and laid and deposited upon the said mines of the plaintiff divers large quantities of earth, spoil, and rubbish, and kept the same as deposited thereon, to wit, and by the means and in the manner aforesaid rendered the said mines of the plaintiff less workable than they would otherwise have been; by reason of which premises respectively the said beds, veins, seams, and mines of the said plaintiff were greatly injured and deteriorated in value, and rendered less productive and profitable than the same might and otherwise would have been; and the plaintiff was greatly injured, prejudiced, and aggrieved in his said reversionary estate and interest.

Pleas.—1st, Not guilty; 2nd, That the defendants were tenants under the indenture of lease, by which they covenanted (inter alia) that they would, at all times during the continuance of the said term, constantly carry on and effectually work the said beds, veins, seams, and mines so demised as aforesaid, in a fair and husbandlike manner, with a sufficient number of experienced and able miners, colliers, and labourers, not fewer than twelve at any time; provided the coal, cannel, slack, and ironstone that should be from time to time gotten and raised could be disposed of for profit, and by which the lessors (whom the plaintiff represented) covenanted for quiet enjoyment during the term under the reservations, forms, covenants, payments, and agreements thereinbefore mentioned, and that the alleged grievances in the said declaration mentioned were and constituted, and each of them was and consisted, of a carrying on, managing, and working of the said demised mines, veins, seams, and beds of coal and minerals in a particular manner, and that the manner of carrying on, managing, and working the same was and is provided for by the said covenants in the said first-mentioned indenture in that behalf contained as aforesaid, which still remained in full force. 3rd, Leave and licence.

Upon the first and third pleas there were issues in fact, which remain undisposed of. To the second plea the plaintiff demurred.

Lush, in support of the demurrer.—The defendant says that if the grievance complained of is a violation of a covenant in the lease, the plaintiff ought to have sued on the covenant instead of in case. But the breaking through the barrier would clearly be waste, and the subject of an action on the case, if there were no covenant; and that remedy is not lost by there being a covenant respecting the same matter: Kinlyside v. Thornton, 2 W. Bl. 1111; Muskett v. Hill, 5 Bing. N. C. 709; Boorman v. Brown, 3 Q. B. 511; 2 Williams's Saunders, 252, C.) Secondly, the covenant does not include this, the barrier or boundary being no part of the mine.

J. Brown (Welsby with him), contrà.—If the last point put for the plaintiff is good, namely, that no action of covenant would lie, then no action would lie; for, subject to the provisions of the lease, there is a covenant for quiet enjoyment; and therefore, if there is no breach of a covenant, the tenant is entitled to the benefit of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, and cannot be sued. Secondly, the remedies are not cumulative. The rights of parties must be governed by their express contracts where there are covenants, and therefore the plaintiff should now have sued on the covenant. Kinlyside v. Thornton is shaken by more recent cases: (Schlenker v. Moxey, 3 B. & C. 129.) [JERVIS, C. J.—This action does not arise out of the contract, but by common law for waste; in the case you have cited there would have been no action but for the deed] Baker v. Harris, 9 Ad. & El. 539. [MAULE, J.—No doubt, where there is an express covenant, the remedy by assumpsit is merged in the higher remedy. JERVIS, C. J.—Yes, or, in other words, an implied promise does not arise where there is an express one by deed.] So also an action in the case cannot be maintained.

JERVIS, C. J.—Kinlyside v. Thornton is expressly in point. Where waste has been committed an action on the case may be maintained, although there is an express covenant.

MAULE, J.—I am of the same opinion. Where waste has been committed, or an injury has been done to the reversion, an action on the case will lie. Mr. Brown answers, there is an express covenant. Well then, the plaintiff is entitled to both remedies. It has been so held where the promise is not under seal, and its being under seal makes no difference.

CRESSWELL and WILLIAMS, JJ. concurred. Judgment for the plaintiff.

COUNTY COURT APPEAL.

WINCH v. WINCH.

Jurisdiction of the County Court.

Statute 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 65, enacts, "that the jurisdiction of the County Court under this Act shall extend to the recovery of any demand not exceeding the sum of 20*l. which is the whole or part of the unliquidated balance of a partnership account, or the amount or part of the amount of a distributive share under an intestacy, or of any legacy under a will.*" By 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 1, the jurisdiction was extended to the recovery of any demand not exceeding 50*l. An action was brought in the County Court of Kent to recover a legacy of* 50*l from the executors. This involved a question of devastavit, and the judge, doubting his jurisdiction, gave judgment for the defendant:*

Held, that the above clauses gave him jurisdiction, and that there must be a new trial:

Semble, that when a judge has doubts about his jurisdiction he ought to exercise it.

This was an appeal from the decision of the judge of the County Court of Kent at Margate upon a case settled by the judge. The following is a copy of the case as settled:—"This was an action to recover a legacy of 50*l.*, the plaintiff having by his particulars abandoned any excess on account of interest. Charles Winch, the father of the plaintiff, died on the 7th Jan. 1850, having by his will, dated the 13th Sept. 1849, devised and bequeathed certain real estate, and all his residuary personal estate, to Mary Radcliffe and the defendant Amy Winch, upon trust to convert the same into money, and therewith to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses; and 'in the next place to pay the following legacies, viz.: To the said Amy Winch, 50*l.*; to each of his sons, Charles Winch and John Winch, 50*l.*; and to his son James, 20*l.*; and he directed that such legacies should be retained by and paid to his said daughter and sons respectively as soon as his trustees should have funds in hand sufficient for the purpose." And he directed his trustees to pay the residue of the said trust funds and moneys in manner in his will mentioned. The will then contained the following words: 'Whereas I have lent my son Frederick Winch, or otherwise paid or advanced or expended for his use and benefit, several sums of money to a very large amount, the whole of which I have forgiven, with the exception of the sum of 600*l.*; now I do hereby will and direct that the trustees and executors of this my will shall allow him my said son Frederick Winch the period of six years to pay the same without interest: provided he my said son Frederick Winch shall liquidate such debt by instalments of not less than 50*l.* in each of the first five years of such period of six years; the first instalment to be paid at the expiration of twelve calendar months from the day of my decease.' And the testator appointed the said Mary Radcliffe and Amy Winch executrixes; and he empowered them, 'notwithstanding anything therein contained which might appear to be construed to the contrary, to compound or allow time for the payment of any debt or debts due to his estate, and to satisfy all dividends against his estate, whether by strictly legal evidence or not, and to settle all accounts between him and any person or persons on such terms as they his said executors should in their discretion think expedient, and to refer any matters in difference relating to his affairs to arbitration.' Mary Radcliffe renounced, and the will was proved by Amy Winch alone on the 5th Feb. 1850. On the hearing of this cause assets were admitted to have been received by the defendant to the amount of 2638*l.*, and it was admitted that she had paid the funeral and testamentary expenses and debts of the testator to the amount of 2785*l.* It was also admitted that no money had been paid by Frederick Winch to the defendant in respect of his debts, but that she had in the month of Jan. 1851 commenced an action of debt against him in the Court of Exchequer of Pleas, and obtained final judgment (in an undefended action) for 681*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.*, besides 21*l.* 12*s.* 7*d.* for interest. The judgment was obtained on the 26th day of Feb. 1851; but the defendant did not take any further proceeding under the judgment until the 25th Jan. 1852, when a fi. fa. was issued and the stock-in-trade and effects of Frederick Winch (who was a trader at Margate) were seized. The execution was, however, defeated by the subsequent bankruptcy of Frederick Winch. The plaintiff, under these circumstances, sought to charge the defendant with assets, alleging that she, the defendant, was liable to the payment of the devastavit

"The Court, however, doubting its jurisdiction, gave judgment for the defendant, against which the plaintiff appeals.

"The question for the opinion of the court is whether, under the 65th section of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, as extended by the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 31, the judge of the County Court has jurisdiction to charge the defendant under the above circumstances with the payment of the legacy.

"(Signed) CHARLES HARWOOD."

Byles, Serjt. for the plaintiff.—The question for the court is, whether the County Court has jurisdiction under the 65th section of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, as extended by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 1, to try a question which in the Superior Courts would be called a devastavit. I do not quite understand why the judge doubted his jurisdiction. Piers v. Wilson, 6 Ex. 833, seems to be decisive on the point.

MAULE, J.—The Act gives jurisdiction to try a question of legacy, and that implies jurisdiction to try a devastavit. The 65th section says expressly that the jurisdiction shall extend to the recovery of an unliquidated balance of a partnership account. That is much the same kind of question.

Byles, Serjt.—To ascertain what the share of the residue is, as in Piers v. Wilson, it is necessary to see what claims there are upon the assets.

Channel, Serjt. for the defendant. The only point is that the executrix is also trustee, and there is a discretion given to the trustee to compound or allow time for the payment of any debt.

MAULE, J.—Well, that would be evidence in a devastavit.

JERVIS, C. J.—It is unfortunate that counsel were not employed in this case before the judge of the County Court. The judge seems to have forgotten the old maxim to "amplify." I should have thought where he entertained doubts about his jurisdiction, he would have exercised it. There must be a new trial; but as the point was started by the judge, there will be no order as to costs.

Monday, Jan. 24.

FOSTER BARKER AND ANOTHER v. THE OXFORD, WORCESTER, AND WOLVERHAMPTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

Contract by director of railway company—8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, ss. 85, 86, and 87.

By the 85th section of the Companies' Clauses Consolidation Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16), no person interested in any contract with a registered public company shall be capable of being a director, and no director shall be capable of being interested in any contract with the company during the time he shall be a director. Sect. 86 enacts that if any director, at any time subsequent to his election, be either directly or indirectly concerned in any contract with the company, then the office of such director shall become vacant, and he shall cease from voting or acting as a director:

Held, on the construction of the above clauses, that a contract entered into by a director with a company of which he is director is not thereby void; but the director becomes disqualified, and his office vacant.

This was an action for non-acceptance of a quantity of iron rails.

Covenant.—The declaration was by three plaintiffs, of whom Barker was one, on a contract under seal, by which the plaintiffs agreed to make and supply to the defendants, and the defendants agreed to accept and receive, a certain quantity, to wit, 17,500 tons of iron rails at certain intervals, to be paid for by prices ascertainable in a certain manner. Averment of plaintiffs' readiness and willingness to supply said rails. Breach: That after supplying 3000 tons of the said rails, the defendants refused to accept and receive any further quantity, and discharged the plaintiffs from making and supplying any more, to the damage, &c.

Plea.—That the plaintiff Barker, at and before the time of the making and entering into the said contract in the declaration mentioned, was a director of the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway Company.

Phipson, in support of the demurrer.—This question turns upon the construction of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16 (the Companies' Clauses Consolidation Act). The 85th section of that Act says, that "no person holding any office or place of trust or profit under the company, or interested in any contract with the company, shall be capable of being a director; and no director shall be capable of accepting any other office or place of trust or profit under the company, or of being interested in any contract with the company, during the time he shall be a director." That clause must, it is contended, be read in conjunction with the subsequent (86th) section, which says: "If any director, at any time subsequent to his election, accept or continue to hold any other office or place of trust or profit under the company, or be either directly or indirectly concerned in any contract with the company, or participate in any manner in the profits of any work to be done for the company, &c. then, in any of the cases aforesaid, the office of such director shall become vacant, and thenceforth he shall cease from voting or acting as a director." These clauses, when read together, show the intention of the Legislature to have been that, in such a case as this, the director shall be disqualified and not the contract annulled. It is remarkable that the statute says that during the time a party is a director he shall not accept any other office or place of trust under the company. [MAULE, J.—On looking into the plea, there is no averment that the plaintiff Barker was interested in the contract, any more than the declaration shows he was a director. The two sections referred to evidently contemplate that a director may take an office or a place of profit under the company; but if he does, he becomes disqualified further to act as a director.] The Legislature, in sect. 87, evidently recognise in some cases a contract in which a director is interested. That section provides "that no person, being a shareholder or member of any incorporated joint-stock company, shall be disqualified or prevented from acting as such director, by reason of any contract entered into between such joint-stock company and the company incorporated by the special Act; but no such director shall vote on any question as to any contract with such joint-stock company." Taking these three sections together, it will be seen that the object of the Legislature was that, whilst a party is a director, he shall not take any other office under the company; and if he makes or participates in any contract with the company, he becomes thereupon disqualified, but the contract is not avoided. For this reason, judgment should be given for the plaintiff.

Gray, contrà.—It is submitted that by the 85th section a director is prohibited from entering into a contract with the company, and if he does so the contract is void; and for this reason,—that if a director has a voice in bringing about his own contract, the general interest of the body of shareholders might be seriously prejudiced. If the court should hold otherwise, it will negative the manifest purpose of the Legislature, which was to protect the general body of shareholders from jobbery and disadvantageous contracts. The director entering into the contract here declared on had an interest in that contract, and, therefore, such a construction as the plaintiff would have the court put upon the 85th section would remove from the shareholders the security and protection intended to be thrown over them by that section of the statute. The 85th section, construed with regard to its clear purpose, prevents a director from making a contract with the company. [JERVIS, C. J.—Then you would enlarge the words in order to prevent the mischief which you say the Legislature intended to avoid.] Yes, if it were necessary; but there is no need of enlarging the words; they are sufficient to support this plea in their present form. With respect to the 86th section, it is submitted that that is intended to meet another state of circumstances. Suppose a director takes an interest in a contract by the death of a relative, the contract having been made by another person, but its interest falling to him; he is simply disqualified by that section, and the contract not avoided. It was to meet such a case as that supposed that the 86th section was enacted. If a contract is entered into by a director, whilst he is a director, as in the present case, then it is void under the 86th section. [MAULE, J.—Suppose after the contract a man is elected a director?] In such a case, though the form of election has been gone through and is in itself good, the law prevents his acting as a director. The 86th section is only intended to apply to a case where the director had no interest in the contract at the time when it was made. If he is a party to a contract when it is entered into, then the contract is of no effect. [WILLIAMS, J.—Do you say the contract is absolutely void, or only voidable at the election of the company?] It is void. [MAULE, J.—The office is vacated by the 86th section; there can be no doubt of that.] The question is, whether the court will not so construe the words of the Act, as that the director shall not be capable of entering into such a contract at all.

Phipson in reply. There is no distinction between a party entering into office and one making a contract with a company as regards this point. What can be the meaning of the words in the 86th section that, "if a director, subsequent to his election, continue to hold any office or place of trust, or be concerned in any contract with the company, the office of director shall become vacant," if it be not the mere vacating of the office, and not the avoiding of the contract? That section, it is contended, shows that the legislature never intended to annul the contract. In addition to this, the 87th section expressly recognises a contract where a director may have interest as a member of a joint-stock company.

JERVIS, C. J.—I am of opinion that in this case the plaintiff is entitled to the judgment of this court. It is not because a presumed intention of the legislature will be contravened by this decision that we should be justified in extending in the case before us the language of the statute. (His Lordship here reviewed the 85th, 86th, and 87th sections.) I think, considering these sections together, that their meaning is, not that a director shall be wholly prohibited from making and entering into a contract, but that if he does contract with the company the penalty shall be his instant disqualification.

MAULE, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion, and for the same reasons as have been stated by the Lord Chief Justice.

CRESSWELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. The statute does not say that the contract shall be void.

WILLIAMS, J. concurred.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, Jan. 20.

HOPPER v. JONES.—This was a demurrer to a declaration. The action was brought against the defendant in the character of a surety for his son, who had been apprenticed to the plaintiff and another person who were partners. Breach, "that he did not well and truly serve the plaintiff." The question intended to be raised was whether, where two persons agree to take an apprentice and teach him their trade, and he agrees to serve them and learn their trade, the words throughout being expressly joint, there is any liability to serve one of them separately. Unthank in support of the demurrer. MAULE, J.—If a joint service was meant, you should have taken issue by traversing the allegation that the apprentice agreed to serve the plaintiff.

Leave to amend on payment of costs.

Friday, Jan. 21.

TAYLOR v. ADDYMAN.—Kemplay moved for a rule to show cause why an order of Martin, B. for a writ of prohibition to the County Court of Yorkshire should not be set aside, on the ground that the County Court had not jurisdiction. The action was brought to recover one petty cash-book, one receipt-book, a collecting-book, an account-book, and other documents of the value of 50*l*. Judgment was given for 50*l*. and 7*l*. 9*s*. 2*d*. for costs. The cause was tried before a jury, and the defendant, at the trial, raised the question of jurisdiction, contending that this was an action of detinue, as appeared by the particulars of demand delivered, and therefore the court had no jurisdiction. The judge of the County Court thereupon altered the particulars of demand, so as to change the form of the action to trover; the defendant still objected to the jurisdiction, but the cause proceeded to judgment. Martin, B. on application by the defendant at chambers, made the order expressly to raise the question of jurisdiction before this court. Williams v. Archer, 5 C. MATTHEW v. OSBORNE.—This case was resumed, and occupied the remainder of the day. Part heard.

Saturday, Jan. 22.

BLACKMAN v. ASPLAND.—Prentice moved for a rule calling upon Cooper, the attorney for the defendant, to show cause why he should not pay the costs of a summons to the plaintiff to appear at Judges' Chambers, and of the proceedings thereupon, on the ground that the summons had been taken out contrary to the orders of his client. Rule nisi.

EVELYN v. WILLIAMS AND OTHERS.—Bramwell, Q.C. moved for a rule calling on the defendants to show cause why two orders of Talfourd, J. to set aside a judgment and for particulars of breaches, should not be set aside, and why the judgment should not be restored, and why the costs should not be paid by the attorney of the defendants. An action of ejectment under the Common Law Procedure Act was brought by the plaintiff, founded on a breach of covenant and right of re-entry. The declaration was served on the four defendants, who occupied several tenements as weekly tenants under the lessee of the plaintiff. Judgment, for want of appearance within sixteen days, was signed. The sixteenth day was the Wednesday after Christmas-day, and the last of the days during which the law offices are closed for the Christmas holidays. Appearance was entered on the 17th. The judgment was set aside by Talfourd, J. on the ground that, it being impossible for the defendants to enter appearance when the offices were closed, appearance on the seventeenth day was sufficient. Since then it had been discovered that appearance had been entered by an attorney in London, without any directions from the defendants, and that that was done in order that the lessee might try the case in the names of the four defendants, who were men of straw. A rule was now asked for both on the latter ground, and also on the ground that Talfourd, J. was wrong in his decision. Rule nisi on both points.

Monday, Jan. 24.

CHWYKLEY, app.; FULLER, resp.—This was an appeal from the County Court of Chelmsford. The action was brought to recover the sum of 50*l*. damages for a breach of a contract by reason of the defendant not taking the plaintiff into partnership in the month of July last. The action was tried on the 28th Oct. and a verdict found for the plaintiff, with 30*l*. damages. The plaintiff put in evidence a correspondence consisting of several letters between himself and defendant, which were relied on as forming the contract. After several letters had passed between them upon the subject of the partnership the defendant, on the 21st July 1852, wrote to the plaintiff word that "a circumstance quite unexpected, and very important," had occurred, which prevented his completing the proposed arrangement. At the trial the plaintiff relied on the previous letters as forming the contract, and it was then objected, on the part of the defendant, that the letters could not be read in evidence without a stamp, and that they did not constitute an agreement in point of law, and that the plaintiff ought to be nonsuited. The judge held that the letters did not require a stamp, and refused to nonsuit the plaintiff, or to decide the question whether the said letters did or not amount to a contract in point of law, but left the question to the jury whether it was a contract binding on the parties or not. The questions for the court were, first, whether the letters forming the alleged agreement were admissible in evidence without a stamp; secondly, whether the refusal of the judge to nonsuit the plaintiff on the ground that the said letters, admitted in evidence, formed no binding agreement upon which the said action could be maintained, was wrong in point of law; and thirdly, whether the judge was wrong in leaving to the decision of the jury the question whether the letters formed such an agreement as would be binding on both parties. Honeyman, for the appellant, and Channell, Serjt., for the respondent, were heard. By the COURT: There must be judgment of nonsuit entered in this appeal, with costs to the appellant. (The case will be duly reported.)

Judgment of nonsuit.

GIBSON v. GIBSON.—This was an appeal from the County Court of Durham, held at Gateshead. It was an action to recover 80*l*. for money had and received. Milward, for the appellant; and Udall, for the respondent. Milward did not ask judgment, but only prayed a new trial. (The case will be duly reported.) The court ordered a new trial; but reserved their opinion as to whether costs should follow until they had consulted the judges of the other courts.

Judgment for a new trial.

Tuesday, Jan. 25.

BERRY v. ALDERMAN.—This cause was tried before Talfourd, J. at the present sitting. Collier now moved for a new trial on the grounds of—firstly, misreception of evidence; and secondly, that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence.

Rule nisi on the first point; the court to consult Talfourd, J. on the second point.

DUNNETT v. HOWARD.—Honeyman moved for a rule to show cause why an award in this cause should not be set aside on three grounds. Rule nisi on the first ground.

LEVY v. COOK.—This cause was tried before Talfourd, J. at the present sittings. Temple now moved for a rule to show cause why a new trial should not be had, on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence The court said they would consult Talfourd, J.

Stands over.

DUNCAN v. TINDALL.—The arguments in this case were resumed. Channell, Serjt. and Lush, for the plaintiff. Shee, Serjt. and Rochfort Clarke, for the defendant. The COURT were of opinion that the rule must be absolute to enter the verdict for the defendant on the first issue; that the 34th sect. of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89 (The Ship's Registry Act) extends to any contract for the sale of a ship, or part of a ship, and that such a contract must, therefore, be by an instrument in writing reciting the certificate of registry. Rule absolute.

Wednesday Jan. 26.

LEVY v. COOK.—Temple renewed his application in this case for a new trial, the court having yesterday expressed a purpose to consult Talfourd, J. JERVIS, C.J.—You say this is not a debt; but the statute uses the words "debt or claim." Temple.—There is nothing on the face of the schedule from which it can be ascertained who was the holder of the bill. JERVIS, C.J.—If the finding of the jury was correct, the 93rd section does not apply. By the COURT.—In this case there must be no rule. Rule refused.

FENN v. FORBES.—This action was brought for the recovery of 165*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*, being the price and value of certain iron machinery. The defendant pleaded never indebted. It appeared that the goods were furnished in the months of January, February, and March 1851, on the terms of three months' credit, and were ordered by the defendant himself, who gave as his address, 9, Ely-place. At the expiration of the term of credit application was made for payment at the above address, but the defendant was not to be found. The plaintiff repeated his calls about five times a week for five or six months, and during all this time no complaint as to the quality of the goods supplied was made. The defendant, after much delay and trouble, was served with process in this action, and the case was referred to arbitration. At the hearing of the case before the arbitrator a postponement was asked for on the part of the defendant, for the purpose of enabling him to produce a witness whose evidence was to the effect that the machinery ordered was defective and valueless. The plaintiff's counsel objected to the adjournment, and urged that the defendant ought to have been better prepared with his case. The adjournment was, however, made, and was followed by some other adjournments, and at length the arbitrator peremptorily fixed the 9th Dec. last for the hearing and determining of the case, when judgment was given for the plaintiff. Creasy having obtained a rule on a former day, calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the award and final judgment signed and entered up herein should not be set aside, on the ground that the arbitrator did not give the defendant sufficient opportunity of producing a material witness for examination, or why the case should not be referred back to the arbitrator for reconsideration: Bytes, Serjt. (with him Woollett), now showed cause against the rule, limiting himself by direction of the court to the last part of the rule. He contended that the cause ought not to be sent back to the arbitrator, because it was an endeavour to delay the plaintiff in obtaining the fruits of the judgment. He stated the substance of long affidavits to show that the purpose of defendant was delay alone. Creasy was not heard in support of the rule. JERVIS, C.J.—This rule must be made absolute on terms. The defendant must bring the money into court and pay the costs of this application. The money must be lodged within a week, otherwise this rule will be discharged with costs.

Rule accordingly.

MATTHEWS v. OSBORNE.—The arguments in this case were resumed for the third time. Needham, before the reply, asked leave to name, upon the point whether copyhold admittance can be presumed, the case of Wilson v. Allen. JERVIS, C.J.—We cannot go into that point now. Willis was then heard in support of the rule. (He cited Wagstaff v. Wagstaff, 2 P. Wms. 261, and other cases.) The case will be duly reported.

SHARMAN v. SANDERS AND OTHERS.—This was an action for work and labour, to which defendants pleaded payment in goods, &c. To this the plaintiff rejoined that he was an artificer within the meaning of the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 37 (the Truck Act); which the defendant by his rejoinder denied. It appeared at the trial that the plaintiff had been employed by the defendants to remove a large quantity of ironstone, for which he was to be paid so much per ton; the payments to be made every month. He had hired a number of men, who worked under him (he himself also working), and had received in payment tickets for goods at a shop established near the spot by the defendants The learned judge before whom the cause was tried, in summing up, told the jury that they were to consider what the agreement between the parties was. If they thought the contract was that the plaintiff should do the work or cause it to be done, such contract would be fulfilled by the performance of the work, though the person so agreeing to perform, or procuring it to be performed, might be absent at the time, but in that case he would not be an artificer within the Act; but if, on the other hand, they were of opinion that it was part of the engagement that he should be obliged to attend, and was responsible to them for not attending, he (the learned judge) should direct them that he would be an artificer within the Act. A verdict having been found for the plaintiff, a rule, calling the plaintiff to show cause why there should not be a new trial on the ground of misdirection, was obtained, against which Bytes, Serjt., Willmore, Q.C. and Willes now showed cause, contending, on the authority of Riley v. Warden, 2 Ex. 59, that the ruling of the judge was correct. Macaulay, Q.C. and Bittleston were heard in support of the rule. The COURT were of opinion that the judgment in Riley v. Warden was sound, and that the ruling of the learned judge was correct; therefore the rule must be discharged. The case will be fully reported. Rule discharged.

EXCHEQUER.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by FREDERICK BAILEY and C. J. B. HERTSLET, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

MORGAN, Administrator, &c. v. THOMAS.

Administration relating back to the death of the intestate. The widow of a deceased tradesman, intestate, carried on her late husband's business, and incurred a debt for which an execution issued against her. She retained possession of her late husband's goods, which were seized by the sheriff; subsequently to the action against the widow, her son, who lived near her, took out administration to the effects of his late father, and claimed all the goods, &c. as such administrator: Held, that he was entitled to do so; that the administration does not relate back to the death of an intestate, except in cases which are for the benefit of the estate in a rightful course of administration, and not for the administrator's own personal advantage.

This was an action brought against the defendant, a sheriff, to recover the value of certain goods taken in execution. The plaintiff's testator died in 1849, intestate, leaving these goods; his widow continued in possession of them afterwards, and in 1850, the execution creditor having trusted the widow, who carried on the business of her late husband, and she not having paid the amount due and owing from her, in 1851 an action was brought against her for it, which proceeded to judgment and execution; a notice was then served upon the officer in possession that these goods had been assigned to one Thomas Lewis. That proceeding however failed; and in March afterwards, the son, who had been living in the neighbourhood, took out letters of administration. The cause was tried at Carmarthen, before Crompton, J. when a verdict was found for the plaintiff; and a rule nisi having been obtained to set aside that verdict and enter it for the defendant,

Davidson and Bowen showed cause; but,

Evans, Q. C. and Grove were called upon to support the rule.—The son (the plaintiff) knew of the mother's business with the execution creditor, her having the goods of the testator in her possession, and the whole of the transactions; and he chose, in order to try to defeat the execution, to step in and say, I had no administration then, but I have since taken out administration; I am therefore entitled to the whole of my late father's effects—the goods you have seized—although in the possession of my mother at the time, now belong to me as such administrator, and you are not entitled. No one can doubt but that the obtaining this administration by the son was a trick to defeat the execution; the rent and expenses, in fact, exhausted the whole of the produce; and the question therefore is, whether the grant of administration relates back to the death. There are cases where the letters of administration have been held to have a relation to the death of the intestate, so as to give a validity to acts done before the letters were obtained. If a man take the goods of the intestate as executor de son tort and sell them, and afterwards obtain letters of administration, the sale is good. Kenrick v. Burgess, Moore, 126, is a case directly in point. [PARKE, B.—Stewart, administrator, &c. v. Edmonds, sittings after Hil. T. 1828, coram Abbott, C. J. is directly against you. There the intestate had sent some plate to the defendant, a silversmith, for safe custody, and was at the same time indebted to him in a sum exceeding the value of the plate. The plaintiff, after the death of the intestate, and before he obtained letters of administration, assented to the defendant retaining the plate in satisfaction of his debts; he afterwards took out administration, and brought trover for the plate. For the defendant Whitehall v. Squire, 1 Salk. 295, was cited; but the Chief Justice held, that the assent was not binding upon the administrator.] In Parsons v. Mayesden, 1 Freem. 152, it was laid down that, if a man takes the goods of the deceased by the consent of him to whom administration is afterwards granted, this is no defence if he is sued as executor de son tort: (Curtis v. Vernon, 3 T. R. 587; Mountford v. Gibson, 4 East, 441; and Foster v. Bates, 12 M. & W. 226, were also referred to.)

POLLOCK, C. B.—I am of opinion that this rule must be discharged. What was done or known by the son, the plaintiff, who administered to the effects of his late father, was not in the character of administrator in any way whatever; but what the counsel for the defendant contend is, that as the plaintiff subsequently became the administrator, that grant of administration related back to the time of the death of the testator, and that, between the death of the testator and the letters of administration being obtained, the party who afterwards became administrator permitting his mother to have the goods, and knowing that she transacted business with the execution creditors, must be taken to have assented to all that was done, and therefore these goods are liable under the execution; but there is no evidence whatever, in the first place, of any such assent, although the jury so found; there is really no evidence at all in the case to bear out any such proposition; all that appears is that he lived in the same neighbourhood as his mother, who had these goods, but that he, up to the time of obtaining administration, in no way interfered. The cases which have been cited are all different to the present, and none of them bear out anything like the proposition which has been here contended for, except the case in Moore, which is not a decision upon the point, nor are the observations there made conformable with the more modern cases; the rule, therefore cannot be sustained.

PARKE, B.—I am clearly of the same opinion; I have not the least doubt whatever upon the subject. In the first place, there is no evidence whatever of any assent that the goods should remain with the mother, to be liable to her debts, or otherwise; the son had, in fact, no power at that time, nor had the widow, to deal with these goods; and upon the authority of all the cases, which are uniform upon the subject, it is clear that the grant of administration relates back to the death of the testator only, in cases which must be for the lawful benefit of the estate, and in a rightful course of administration. There is no case to the contrary, except the one referred to in Moore's Reports, and that is only a dictum, not a decision upon it, and does not apply to the present case. The duty of an administrator is to collect in the estate, and then properly apply the money arising from it.

ALDERSON, B.—The jury have found, no doubt, in this case, that there was an assent on the part of the administrator; but there is not the least ground for it,—there was no evidence whatever to justify their doing so. It is really only necessary to state the proposition upon the facts proved, and it answers itself.

MARTIN, B.—I am also of the same opinion; there is no evidence whatever to go to the jury enabling them to find such an assent as has been mentioned. The administrator would have to collect the testator's debts, and divide the surplus between himself, his mother, and the other children, and it was for the defendant to show that an assent was given to the mother to retain the goods; yet that was not so, and that is enough to discharge this rule. But I agree with what the court has said also upon the authorities in point of law on the subject. If no administration had been taken out, and the widow had been left in possession of the goods for a long time, say some fifty years for instance, it might perhaps be fairly left to a jury to say whether the husband had not given them to the wife, and there would not be much difficulty about it; but that is a different case to the present.

Rule discharged.

BOODLE v. DAVIS.

Judgment—Execution—15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, ss. 128, 129. (a)

Semble, that the 128th section of the Common Law Procedure Act applies to a judgment more than a year and a day old when that Act came into operation.

Cole moved for a rule to show cause why a suggestion should not be entered upon the roll pursuant to the 129th section of Common Law Procedure Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76.) In this case the judgment was signed in April 1850, more, therefore, than a year and a day had elapsed before the coming into operation of the Common Law Procedure Act, but less than six years; and the question was, whether in such a case the 128th section of that Act applied. The application was made for the purpose of ascertaining the opinion of the court whether the 128th section applies so as to make the judgment good for six years. If the court should think it unnecessary, it will reject the present application.

ALDERSON, B.—This is an application quia timet. You want to know whether the court will support it?

PARKE, B.—You must now argue that your application is necessary, and we must decide whether it is or not; my present impression is that it is not. I don't feel any doubt that the 128th section applies to existing judgments. Rule granted.

Cole declined to draw up the rule.

SCOTHORNE v. THE SOUTH STAFFORDSHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Liability of Carriers—Contract to carry—Right of owner to countermand.

Goods were delivered in Staffordshire, directed to the ship Melbourne, East India Docks; subsequently a countermand was given to a clerk at the London station, and they were desired to be sent to Bell Wharf, Ratcliffe-highway; by mistake they were delivered according to the original address: Held, that the railway company was liable for the loss.

(a) The 128th section enacts that, "during the lives of the parties to a judgment, or those of them during whose lives execution may at present issue within a year and a day without a scire facias, and within six years from the recovery of the judgment, execution may issue without a revival of the judgment." And the 129th section enacts that, "in cases where it shall become necessary to revive a judgment by reason either of lapse of time or of a change, by death or otherwise, of the parties entitled or liable to execution, the party alleging himself to be entitled to execution may either sue out a writ of revivor in the form hereinafter mentioned, or apply to the court or a judge to enter a suggestion upon the roll to the effect that it manifestly appears to the court that such party is entitled to have execution of the judgment, and to issue execution thereupon."

EXCHEQUER.

This was an action brought to recover the value of certain goods delivered to the defendants to be carried to London. The declaration alleged that the defendants contracted to deliver the goods according to the direction of the plaintiff; the original direction on the goods was that they were to be delivered on board the ship Melbourne, about to sail for Australia. Subsequently, however, the plaintiff's son, for whom the goods were intended, called at the Euston station and desired the clerk there to send the goods to Bell Wharf, Ratcliffe-highway; but, by some mistake, they were sent as originally directed. At the trial a verdict was returned for the plaintiff. A rule to enter a nonsuit having been obtained, on the ground that under the circumstances the defendants were not liable, and that the judge should so have directed the jury,

James, Q.C. (with him Hawkins) now showed cause, and contended that this case was not distinguishable from the case of Muschamp v. The Lancaster and Preston Junction Railway Company, 8 M. & W. 421, and Watson v. The Ambergate, &c. Railway Company, 15 Jur. 448. The company is bound to carry the goods from the place from which they are sent, and to deliver them at the place to which they are directed. It is contended by the company that the transit of the goods terminated at Euston-square; but that is not so, if the cases referred to are law; and the clerk undertaking to carry the goods on to another place does not make a new contract—it is a mere incident.

Gray, in support.—The original contract is not disputed; it was this—that in consideration of the sum paid, the goods should be delivered on board the Melbourne; and the plaintiff afterwards directed the defendants to deliver the goods at Bell Wharf, Ratcliffe-highway. The declaration is not framed on a mere continuance of the original contract, but on a new contract entered into with the clerk to deliver the goods at Bell Wharf; and it is a question whether the clerk had authority to bind the company; and there is no evidence that he had such authority. The cases cited are not in point. [Alderson, B.—The contract alleged in the declaration is, that the defendants undertook to deliver the goods according to the direction of the plaintiffs. Martin, B.—A delivery to the company to carry is not an absolute delivery. The plaintiff has a right to stop them when he pleases, and he may countermand the order at first given at any time and in any manner he likes.] If a man choose from some caprice to stop at an intermediate station, after having directed his goods to London, is the company bound to stop the train and unload the trucks to get at the goods? [Martin, B.—The question of reasonableness of the demand would in such a case arise. Alderson, B.—This is not a contract to deliver at the docks, but to deliver according to the plaintiff's direction. It is quite clear that the clerk could not make a new contract. If therefore this is a new contract, the defendants are right; but if the original contract was to deliver according to the direction from time to time to be given, the plaintiff is entitled to recover. The fallacy of the argument on the part of the defendants is this, that, as they say, a person putting on a direction makes a contract with the carrier to carry to that particular place; but that is not so; the contract is to deliver according to the directions to be from time to time given.] The direction and written bill described the goods to be delivered on board the Melbourne in the East India Docks, and I cannot see how that can be held to be a contract to deliver in London, at any place to be afterwards named by the plaintiff.

Alderson, B.—I am of opinion that this rule ought to be discharged. The plaintiff made a contract with the defendants that the latter should carry these goods all the way to London. So far the responsibility of the defendants is not disputed; then the question is, what was the contract to deliver according to the plaintiff's direction in London? The first direction was to send the goods to the ship Melbourne at the East India Docks; but the son of the plaintiff having altered his mind, a direction is given to the agent of the defendant to deliver the goods at another place, and not according to the direction on the outside of the parcel. By an error that is not attended to, but it is sent to the East India Docks. Then has the contract been obeyed? The defendants undertook to deliver according to the direction and they did not do so, and are, therefore, responsible, and this rule should be discharged.

Platt, B.—I am of the same opinion. The contract was to deliver according to the directions of the plaintiff, and to take the goods to whatever place he might direct; and part of the contract is that such direction as to the carrying is subject to countermand. Were the defendants bound to carry the goods against the will of the proprietor on board this ship, although the plaintiff desired them not? Surely not. The clerk who took the order to carry the goods to Bell Wharf was the agent of the defendants to receive the countermand, as the jury found.

Martin, B.—I quite agree. In this case a woman made an arrangement with the defendants that they should carry certain goods. It is said that that is a contract; but if she had come back in an hour and said, My son has altered his mind and is not going to Australia, do you mean to say that the defendants can say, No, we have entered into a contract, and insist upon the goods going to Australia? A carrier is employed as a bailee, and I have no hesitation in saying that a man is entitled to have his goods delivered to him at any place at which they can reasonably be got at. I can conceive a case in which a man might give authority to carry to a certain place, and that they are packed and placed accordingly, and that it might be impossible without the greatest inconvenience to get at them; but I think that, if a man during a railway journey is discontented with the mode of travelling, he has a perfect right to stop and to have his luggage delivered up to him whenever he chooses. The clerk was the person authorised to receive the countermand, and agent for the purpose of carrying out the directions of the persons sending goods.

Rule discharged.

Cross v. Jordan.

Ejectment by landlord for nonpayment of rent—Judgment by default—Form of affidavit.

Upon motion for judgment in ejectment, under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), sect. 210, an affidavit stating that three-quarters of a year's rent were in arrear, and that there was "no sufficient distress to be found upon the premises countervailing the said arrears of rent then due," is sufficient.

Phipson moved in this case for judgment in ejectment under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 210. This section is a re-enactment of 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 2. The writ issued on the 4th Dec.; there being no tenant in possession, a copy was affixed to the door of the premises on the 9th Dec.; and the affidavit proceeded to state that three quarters' rent were in arrear, and no sufficient distress was to be found on the demised premises countervailing the arrears then due. In Doe dem. Powell v. Roe, 9 Dowl. 548, Coleridge, J. in the Bail Court, appears to have held that the affidavit must be precise in the statement that half a year's rent is due, and that a landlord has no right to lie by for a length of time and then seek thus to render the provisions of the section available. The precise words of the statute, however, appear to conclude the question. And suppose, for instance, the rent to be payable yearly—would not the statute apply? In Doe dem. Gretton v. Roe, 4 C. B. 576, the Court of C. P. seem to have thought it sufficient if the goods upon the premises were insufficient to countervail all the arrears then due. This affidavit is therefore sufficient.

Parke, B.—It seems to me, reading the words of the Act in the ordinary way in which Acts of Parliament are to be read, that if half a year's rent at least was due and payable before the writ was sued out you may proceed upon this affidavit. That is, I think, the proper construction of the Act.

The rest of the Court concurring,

The North-Eastern Railway Company v. The North-Western Railway Company.

New rules—Rule 67—Construction—Setting down case for argument.

After issue joined in error either party may set down the case for argument four days before the day of hearing.

Willis applied to the court to put a construction on rule 67 of the New Rules. That rule says, that "after the suggestion of error in law, alleged and denied, as prescribed by the Common Law Procedure Act 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 149), is entered, either party may set down the case for argument, and forthwith give notice in writing to the opposite party, and proceed to the argument thereof as on demurrer, without any rule or motion for a concilium. In this case there was a suggestion of error from this court, and the officer refused to file and enter such suggestion, except for a day in term. Chitt. Arch. p. 505, states the time to be ten days, but that is altered to four.

Parke, B.—The rule says you may set down the case and proceed to argument as on demurrer; for a demurrer four clear days is all that is necessary. That is all that is required.

The Court said that the opinion of the court as to the construction of the rule might be intimated to the officer.

Platt and others v. Elce and another.

Infringement of patent—Pleading.

To an action for the infringement of a patent the defendant may plead non concessit, and also a traverse of the specification.

This was an action for the infringement of a patent dated Dec. 11, 1848, of which Edmund Hartley was the first inventor; he enrolled the specification, and assigned it to the plaintiff on July 13, 1849. The declaration alleged that the said Edmund Hartley was the first inventor of a machine for spinning cotton and other fibrous substances, to which the plaintiff became entitled; and that the plaintiff had subsequently disclaimed as to the fibrous substances, and all such parts of the machine as might be supposed to relate to flax manufacture. The defendant proposed to plead—first, Not guilty; second, that the patentee was not the inventor; third, non concessit; fourth, that the invention was not a manufacture; fifth, that the invention was not new; and, sixth, a traverse of the specification; but upon an application to Martin, B. at chambers, for leave to plead several matters, he struck out the third and sixth pleas. Subsequently Hindmarch applied to the court, when a rule nisi was granted.

Webster now showed cause.—The learned judge at chambers thought that non concessit and a traverse of the specification ought not to be pleaded together. If the plea of non concessit is good for anything, it is good for all purposes; and under it any ground of invalidity may be raised. The ground of objection should be stated. [Parke, B.—Is not non concessit sufficient?] No. If it be, it is good for every thing, and no other plea is necessary. The class of cases relied on to support this application relate to grants of land or franchise, and in such cases you are dealing with things that had an anterior existence; but here there is no such anterior existence, and the analogy, therefore, ceases, and those cases are not applicable; and, moreover, since the New Common Law Procedure Act, the court will not feel itself so strongly bound by precedent, but will reconsider points, and decide them according to the spirit shown by the present course of legislation. Then, as to the affidavit of the truth of the pleas: it merely follows the words of the Act of Parliament (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 81), that "the defendant is advised, and believes that he has just ground to traverse the several matters proposed to be traversed by him," &c. It may be doubted whether this plea amounts to a traverse, since a part of the patent has been disclaimed; and under the new Act the court will not feel bound to allow things merely because they have been allowed before. I can resist the plea of non concessit unless the court holds that it is bound by cases prior to the Common Law Procedure Act; and if so, I say that the attention of the court in those cases has not been called to the fact that the old authorities were cases which related to land, offices, &c. (Bennett v. Smith, 13 M. & W. 552; Bedells and another v. Massey, 8 Scott's N. R. 337, were referred to.)

Hindmarch was not called on; but he referred to the case of Holmes v. The London and North-Western Railway Company, 20 L.T. Rep. 112.

Martin, B.—Upon the plea of non concessit, as I always understood it, you put in issue the grant of the patent; and with respect to the specification, the issue is, whether it sufficiently specified the matter for which the patent was obtained.

By the Court—

Rule absolute.

Forsyth v. Bristowe.

3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 5—15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 52—Replication to a plea of Statute of Limitations to a deed—Amendment.

To an action on two mortgage deeds and collateral bonds the defendant pleaded the Statute of Limitations under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 5. Replication, an acknowledgment within the twenty years within the meaning of the statute.

On an application under the 52nd section of the Common Law Procedure Act, the Court ordered the replication to be amended so as to show on what description of acknowledgment the plaintiff intended to rely, but refused to put him on terms as to giving dates and stating particulars of such acknowledgment.

This was an action on two mortgage deeds and two collateral bonds. The defendant pleaded the Statute of Limitations under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 5. Replication—"That the defendant within the twenty years made an acknowledgment within the meaning of the Act."

On the 15th inst. Quain obtained a rule under the 52nd section of the Common Law Procedure Act, calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the said replication should not be amended, as tending to embarrass the fair trial of the action.

Milward now showed cause. The question is, what is the proper replication to a plea of the Statute of Limitations to a deed? [Parke, B.—There are two modes pointed out by the statute for making an acknowledgment, the one by writing, signed by the party or his agent, the other by part payment. Alderson, B.—The question is, whether you should not split your replication, and run the risk of having to pay the costs of the one on which you fail; in the 5th section of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, there are two methods of acknowledgment pointed out, and on special demurrer you would have to state on which you mean to depend. Parke, B.—You do not mean to say that before the late Act this replication would not have been bad on special demurrer. I almost think it would on general demurrer.] I should with great confidence contend that it would have been good. (He referred to Arnott v. Holden, 22 L. J. 14, Q. B.) [Parke, B.—There was no special replication there.] The latter part of the 5th section provides that "the plaintiff or plaintiffs in such action on any indenture, &c. may by way of replication state such acknowledgment" &c.; the statute gives me the subject of this replication, and I am entitled to use the language there adopted. [Parke, B.—The statute says "such acknowledgment," which is, by reference to the prior part of the section, either an acknowledgment in writing or by part payment. You can reply double if you can make an affidavit as to the truth of your replication. ALDERSON, B.—Surely you can't deny that, in the words of the new Act, this is "so framed as to prejudice, embarrass, or delay the fair trial of the action." Suppose the defendant brings witnesses to disprove both acknowledgment by writing and by part payment, you may say you intended to rely on either the one only, and he may have to pay the costs of his witnesses brought to prove the other mode of acknowledgment.]

PARKE, B.—The only question is, whether this mode of replying does not prejudice and embarrass the defendant. I think it does; the plaintiff knows on what acknowledgment he means to rely; and why should he not state it in his replication, instead of making the defendant come prepared to disprove the several methods of acknowledgment when one only is necessary, and so be put to useless expenses?

ALDERSON, B.—You could not in such a case apportion the costs, and gross injustice would be the result. You may state the acknowledgments in as many ways as you please, so that you split them, and make an affidavit of their truth. Rule absolute.

On Quain applying that the plaintiff might be put on terms as to giving dates, &c., and some particulars of the acknowledgments on which he meant to depend, the Court said they could not impose terms; if the replication was split so as to state the several matters, and supported by affidavit, that was all they could require.

SHAW v. THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

Patent Law Amendment Act—Inspection.

The plaintiff having brought an action against the defendants for the infringement of a patent for some machinery was permitted, with scientific witnesses, to inspect the defendants' machinery. He subsequently discontinued his action. Having commenced a fresh one, he applied, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, s. 42, for a second inspection:

The court refused to make the rule absolute, on the ground that there had already been an inspection.

This was an action against the Bank of England for the alleged infringement of a patent Bovill (with him Webster) now showed cause against a rule calling upon the defendant to show cause why the plaintiff should not be allowed, in company with three other scientific persons, to inspect a machine used in the Bank of England for paging books. It appeared that the plaintiff's patent had been obtained in 1845, and according to his own showing he had submitted it in that year to the Bank of England, with a view to their adopting it. He afterwards complained that Mr. Oldham, who was then the chief engineer of the bank, and who invented a machine in 1845, before the plaintiff's patent, had pirated his patent, and had not only used it in the Bank of England, but had sold the machine to persons in Manchester and other places. He did not however apply to the Bank of England on the subject until the month of December 1851, Mr. Oldham having died a few weeks before. The plaintiff then brought an action against the Bank of England for the alleged infringement of his patent, and in that action he had been allowed to inspect the machine in company with Mr. Woodcroft and Mr. Fothergill, two scientific witnesses, who had reported on the subject. The plaintiff did not in his affidavit state what were the opinions of those gentlemen, nor did he produce any affidavits from them that in their opinion the machine was an infringement of his patent; neither did the declaration specify what machinery was an infringement of his patent. This action was stopped by the bankruptcy of the plaintiffs, and, having commenced a fresh action, he now sought to obtain a second inspection of the same machinery. This was an application with which the Court of Chancery would not comply. The 42nd section of the New Patent Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 83), under which this rule was obtained, is not intended to apply in a case like the present, where the plaintiff had already had an inspection, not only on his own part, but on that of two scientific witnesses. If the Bank of England were to be compelled to exhibit their machinery in this way, not only would the rights of the inventors of the machinery there be endangered, but the private affairs of the bank would be unnecessarily and dangerously exposed.

The plaintiff in person supported the rule, contending that it was absolutely necessary for the ends of justice that he should be allowed another inspection of the machine. The action was now nearly ready for trial in the Court of Queen's Bench.

[ALDERSON, B.—We must have something definite before us. You have not brought the affidavits of the scientific witnesses who examined the machine before, neither do you state in your rule what machinery you desire to inspect; you merely say the machinery mentioned in your pleadings. If we were to make the rule absolute to inspect the machinery mentioned in the pleadings, you would inspect nothing; for there is nothing mentioned in your declaration. The machinery is mentioned in the breaches, which must accompany the declaration under the new Act.

POLLOCK, C.B.—As at present advised, I see no reason for making this rule absolute.

The plaintiff.—Then will your Lordships discharge the rule on the ground that there was a previous inspection?

PARKE, B.—Yes; and no ground for a second inspection. Rule discharged.

MILLINGTON v. BROWN.

Order to amend on payment of costs.

A plaintiff having obtained an order to amend his declaration on payment of costs, served a copy on the defendant, and an appointment was made to tax the costs. The defendant's attorney then consulted his special pleader, and incurred certain costs; but the plaintiff abandoned his order and declined to amend:

On application to the court, a rule to show cause why the plaintiff should not pay the costs incurred by the defendant was refused.

In this case Pearson moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to show cause why he should not pay the costs incurred by the defendant by reason of the plaintiff having obtained an order to amend his declaration. The question was, whether a plaintiff, having obtained a judge's order to amend his declaration upon payment of costs, could afterwards abandon his amendments without paying the costs necessarily incurred by the defendant. The facts of the case were these. The plaintiff on the 16th Sept. last got a judge's order to amend his declaration on payment of costs. On the same day he served a copy of the order, and an appointment was made to tax the costs. The defendant then went to his pleader and gave him instructions to prepare special pleas. [POLLOCK, C.B.—Why did not the defendant wait till the plaintiff took another step in pursuance of his order. You ask us to grant a rule, the expense of which may be 20*l.*, upon a mattter of some 5*l.* costs, the whole of which might have been saved if the judge's order had been properly drawn up. ALDERSON, B.—It is a far more convenient course to provide for these things in the order to amend. That would save all the expense, trouble, and anxiety of an application to the court. MARTIN, B.—The defendant went to a pleader to prepare special pleas upon an imaginary declaration, without waiting to see what he had to plead to.]

POLLOCK, C. B.—We are all of opinion that there should be no rule. Why should the court put one of the parties to an expense of 15*l.* or 20*l.* to settle a question of costs, which, perhaps, may not amount to more than 2*l.* or 3*l.*? Rule refused.

RUCK AND ANOTHER v. PERRY.—Tried on the 15th inst. Verdict for the plaintiffs. This was an action on a bill of exchange for 200*l.* dated the 5th July 1852, drawn by the plaintiffs and accepted by the defendant, payable three months after date. The defendant pleaded, as to 50*l.* payment, and, as to the residue, that before the action he had, at the request of the plaintiffs, and with their concurrence, accepted a bill of exchange for 292*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* payable to Robertson and Co. at four months, in full satisfaction and discharge, &c. At the trial the defendant began, and it appeared from his evidence that the bill for which this action was brought became due on the 8th Oct.; that he had called on the plaintiffs to explain that he could not pay it, and offering to pay 50*l.* on account, and proposed that plaintiffs should draw for the residue at three months; to this arrangement the plaintiffs assented, and the defendant thereupon paid the 50*l.* and was desired to call on the morrow. On his calling he was put off from day to day, and at last was told that the bill for the residue should be sent for his acceptance, but this was not done, and ultimately he was told he must go and settle the matter with Robertson and Co. Upon his going there, Robertson made an account due amounting to 292*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* for which the second bill (not yet due) was given, and the plaintiffs subsequently repudiated the matter altogether, saying the matter was Robertson's, and ultimately, when this bill became due, brought this action. Notice had been given to Robertson to produce the second bill, but he had failed to appear on his subpœna duces tecum. Platt moved for a new trial. The COURT said, that if an affidavit of the facts was made, they would probably grant a rule, on payment of costs; and an affidavit being produced later in the day, Rule nisi, to come on as a motion.

SMITH v. DOD.—Trespass for breaking and entering and taking goods, for excessive distress, and for not selling for the best price. Plea—General issue. The plaintiff was tenant under an agreement with R. G. Dod, dated 17th April, 1851. Moses Dod, the defendant, collected the rents and managed the property. He had collected two quarters; and the third was due Christmas 1851. In Feb. 1852 Moses Dod put in a distress for that quarter's rent, and in the authority to distrain treated it as rent due to himself, and the broker put in the distress in his name. The learned judge who tried the cause told the jury that he thought the distress was not authorised in point of law, and that if the defendant was authorised to distrain he should have stated that he distrained for the right owner. Pigott now moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. Rule nisi.

The cause was tried at Stafford before Cresswell, J. and was brought to recover a sum of money due in respect of work done upon a specific agreement to be completed in a certain time. The work was not finished by the time expressed; but the question was, as the learned judge left it to the jury, whether the defendant did not so interfere as to prevent the plaintiff from quite completing at the proper time, and whether there was not an extension of the time beyond the 18th Dec. by defendant. Gray (Scotland with him), contrà, called upon by the court to support the rule. The defendant being under arrest in July 1846, and being most anxious to procure his release, had given to one Pierrepoint, a clerk of Robinson, an attorney, 5*l.* and a stamp for a promissory note, with his, the defendant's, name written on it. On May 12, 1851, defendant obtained his certificate from the Court of Bankruptcy, and on Oct. 20, 1852, the blank stamp was filled up at a month's date, and indorsed by Robinson to Semple, and by Semple to plaintiff. Rule nisi.

GREATREX v. HAYWARD.—Mellor, Q. The stream was an artificial one, created by the defendant. The COURT thought that the plaintiff had never enjoyed it as of permanent right against the defendant; that the case had been, in fact, decided by this court already by the cases of Arkwright v. Gell, and Wood v. Waud, from which it was not distinguishable, and therefore his remedy, if he had any, must be in the Court of Error. Hayes, contrà, not heard.

BAIL COURT.

Reported by T. W. SAUNDERS, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Monday, Jan. 24.

(Before ERLE, J.)

REG. v. HENRY BLACKBURN.

Murder—Admission of a party to bail who is committed upon a charge of murder.

In this case, on the night of 24th Oct. last, two elderly persons (man and wife) of the name of Blackburn were murdered in their house, situate near the town of Stafford. Four persons were thereupon apprehended, including Henry Blackburn, a son of the deceased. Upon the investigation before the magistrates, the said Henry Blackburn, together with three others, were committed to Stafford gaol to take their trials at the next assizes for wilful murder. Subsequently to this investigation, the coroner held an inquest, when much additional evidence was received, and which went strongly to show that the said Henry Blackburn was in no way a party to the murder. The jury, by their verdict, found the said Henry Blackburn not guilty, but returned a verdict of guilty against the others.

Scotland now moved for a certiorari to remove the depositions taken before the justices and the coroner into this court, and for an order that the said Henry Blackburn may be bailed in the country; and he relied upon the facts as deposed to before the coroner as evidence of the innocence of the said prisoner.

BAIL COURT.

ERLE, J. thought sufficient grounds had been stated to justify his granting the application, and that the certiorari should go to remove the depositions taken before the magistrates, but not those taken before the coroner, as they were sufficiently verified, and before him already; and that there should be a rule to be served upon the justices and the prosecutor for admitting the prisoner to bail in the country,

Writ and rule accordingly.

THE QUEEN v. SKIPPEN.

Municipal election—Absence during a ward election of the alderman of the ward.

Willes moved for a rule calling upon a Mr. Skipper to show cause why an information in the nature of a quo warranto should not be filed against him for exercising the office of town councillor of Norwich. It appeared that Norwich is divided into several wards, one of which is called the sixth ward, and that on the 1st Nov. last there were two vacancies for that ward, which were to be filled up. By sect. 43 of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, the ward elections are to be held before the alderman of the ward and two assessors; and by sect. 16 of the 1 Vict. c. 78, the mayor is empowered in case of the illness or incapacity to act of any alderman at any election to appoint another alderman to act in the room of such alderman during such illness or incapacity. At the election in question the alderman for the ward was absent through illness, and no other alderman had been appointed to supply his place, nor was there any one present to represent him, except during a portion of the time, when his son attended for him, and in consequence of such absence the votes of several voters had been rejected. Notwithstanding this Mr. Skippen had been declared duly elected, and had taken his seat. Upon these grounds it was now contended that the election was void. Rule nisi.

Willes also moved upon the same facts for a rule against a Mr. Kitten, who was the other councillor elected for the same ward, to fill the other vacancy.

FARTHING AND ANOTHER v. REED.

Practice—Sect. 101 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76.

Under sect. 101 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, the defendant served the plaintiffs with notice to proceed to trial, whereupon the plaintiffs, upon an affidavit showing that the mother of the defendant had arranged to pay the debt by instalments, and was actually paying them, obtained a rule calling upon the defendant to show cause why he should not be restrained from taking any further proceedings to compel them to proceed to trial, or why the time for proceeding to trial should not be enlarged. It not appearing, however, that the payment by his mother was with the consent or knowledge of the defendant, the court refused the first part of the rule, but enlarged the time for going to trial for a twelvemonth.

Under the foregoing section the plaintiff is not bound to wait until a suggestion has been entered by the defendant, but may come to the court at once upon being served with the notice.

In this case the attorneys for the defendant had served the plaintiffs with notice under sect. 101 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, to proceed to trial; and early in this term (see LAW TIMES, 15th inst.), Hance, on the part of the plaintiffs, obtained a rule calling upon the defendant to show cause why he should not be restrained from taking any further proceedings to compel the plaintiffs to proceed to the trial of the cause, or to show cause why the time for proceeding to trial should not be extended. Upon moving for this rule, an affidavit was used which disclosed that the action was brought to recover a debt, and that pending the action the defendant called upon the plaintiffs and admitted his debt, with the exception of a small sum, and then offered terms of settlement, which, however, were refused, whereupon the action proceeded, and the defendant pleaded "never indebted, except as to 1*l.* 4*s.*" Subsequently he obtained a commission in the army, and left the country; his mother, however, arranged with the plaintiffs, and agreed to pay the debt by instalments, which are in the course of payment, which was the reason alleged for not proceeding to trial.

By the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 76, after providing for the giving of notice to proceed to trial as a substitution for the old practice of moving for judgment as in case of a nonsuit, it is enacted that, "if the plaintiff afterwards neglects to give notice of trial for such sittings or assizes, or to proceed to trial in pursuance of the said notice given by the defendant, the defendant may suggest on the record that the plaintiff has failed to proceed to trial although duly required so to do (which suggestion shall not be traversable, but only be subject to be set aside if untrue), and may sign judgment for his costs; provided that the court or a judge shall have power to extend the time for proceeding to trial with or without terms."

Keane now showed cause, and contended that the motion was premature, and in wrong form; that the statute itself had pointed out the course to be pursued if the defendant acted wrongly in giving the notice, namely, to wait until the suggestion is entered, and then to move to set it aside if untrue, for if the plaintiff had any valid and sufficient cause for not proceeding to trial, then the defendant would fail in showing that they had been duly required to go to trial. That the plaintiff should have waited, therefore, until the defendant had entered his suggestion, and sought to obtain his costs, and then have moved to set it aside. [ERLE, J.—The plaintiffs say by their present application, that the power to ask for the interference of the court arises as soon as the notice is given, without waiting till the suggestion is entered and being called upon to pay the costs; they endeavour to avoid going to trial, but if unsuccessful in that, they wish to have the time enlarged.] They cannot at this stage ask for an enlargement of the time for going to trial,—the Act gives no such right. He also argued upon the facts that it did not appear that the payment of the debt by instalments by his mother was known to or by the consent of the defendant, and therefore he was not bound by her acts.

Hance was not called upon.

ERLE, J.—I am certainly against you upon the construction of the statute; but it does not appear that the mother is paying the debt with the concurrence of the son; if it did, it would be another thing. I think, therefore, that the latter part of the rule only should be granted. What time, therefore, do the plaintiffs wish?

Hance.—A twelvemonth.

ERLE, J.—Very well, then, let the time for going to trial be enlarged for a twelvemonth.

Rule accordingly.

A. by mistake took B.'s lamb from a field together with his own flock. Afterwards he discovered the mistake, but notwithstanding that discovery sold it with his own: Held, a larceny, inasmuch as the original taking was a trespass, and the trespass continued up to the time of the fraudulent appropriation.

At the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace for the county of Durham held at the city of Durham (before Rowland Burdon, Esq. Chairman), on the 18th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1852, the prisoner was indicted for having on the 5th day of October 1852, stolen a lamb, the property of John Burnside. The prisoner pleaded not guilty. On the trial it was proved that on Friday, the 1st day of October, in the year of our Lord 1852, John Burnside, the prosecutor, put ten white-faced lambs into a field in the occupation of John Clarke, situated near to the town of Darlington. On Monday, the 4th day of October, the prisoner went with a flock of twenty-nine black-faced lambs to John Clarke, and asked if he might put them into Clarke's field for a night's keep, and upon Clarke agreeing to allow him to do so for one penny per head, the prisoner put his twenty-nine lambs into the same field with the prosecutor's lambs. At half-past seven o'clock in the morning of Tuesday, the 5th Oct. the prosecutor went to Clarke's field, and in counting his lambs he missed one, and the prisoner's lambs were gone from the field also. Between eight and nine o'clock in the morning of the same day, the prisoner came to the farm of John Calvert, at Middleton St. George, six miles east from Darlington, and asked him to buy twenty-nine lambs. Calvert agreed to do so, and to give 8*s.* a-piece for them. Calvert then proceeded to count the lambs, and informed the prisoner that there were thirty instead of twenty-nine in the flock, and pointed out to him a white-faced lamb; upon which the prisoner said, "If you object to take thirty, I will draw one." Calvert, however, bought the whole, and paid the prisoner 12*l.* for them. One of the lambs sold to Calvert was identified by the prosecutor as his property, and as the lamb missed by him from Clarke's field. It was a half-bred white-faced lamb, marked with the letter "T," and similar to the other nine of the prosecutor's lambs. The twenty-nine lambs belonging to the prisoner were black-faced lambs. On the 5th Oct., in the afternoon, the prisoner stated to two of the witnesses that he never had put his lambs into Clarke's field, and had sold them on the previous afternoon, for 11*l.* 12*s.*, to a person on the Barnard Castle-road, which road leads west from Darlington.

There was evidence in the case to show that the prisoner must have taken the lambs from Clarke's field early in the morning, which was thick and rainy.

It was argued by the counsel for the prisoner in his address to the jury that the facts showed that the original taking from Clarke's Field was by mistake; and if the jury were of that opinion, then, as the original taking was not done animo furandi, the subsequent appropriation would not make it a larceny, and the prisoner must be acquitted. The Chairman, in summing up, told the jury that, though they might be of opinion that the prisoner did not know that the lamb was in his flock until it was pointed out to him by Calvert, he should rule that in point of law the taking occurred when it was so pointed out to the prisoner and sold by him to Calvert, and not at the time of leaving the field. The jury returned the following verdict:—The jury say that at the time of leaving the field the prisoner did not know that the lamb was in his flock, and that he was guilty of felony at the time it was pointed out to him.

The prisoner was then sentenced to six months' hard labour in the house of correction at Durham; and being unable to find bail, was thereupon committed to prison until the opinion of this court could be taken upon the question, whether Charles Riley was properly convicted of larceny.

Liddell, for the prisoner.—It being found in effect that the original taking was by mistake, the subsequent appropriation would not convert the innocent taking into a felony. That is the result of the recent cases of R. v. Thurborn, 1 Den. C. C. 387; R. v. Thristle, 1 Den. C. C. 501; and R. v. Preston, 2 Den. C. C. 360. The case put by Martin, B., in the latter case, of an umbrella taken by mistake, is quite in point. [PARKE, B.—I should say that the case put would be felony; because, though the taking is in first instance by mistake, it is a trespass; and the trespass continues up to the time of the appropriation animo furandi. In the cases of finding lost property a different consideration obtains; because the finder has a good title against all but the real owner.] There was no fresh taking, and the original taking was disputishable. He referred to 1 Hale P. C. 505; 2 East P. C. 661; 2 Russ. on Crimes, 12; Leigh's case, 2 East P. C.)

Grey, contrà, was not called upon.

POLLOCK, C. B.—We are all of opinion that the conviction is right. The case is distinguishable from those cited. Reg. v. Thristle decides only that if a man once gets into a rightful possession, he cannot, by a subsequent fraudulent appropriation, convert it into felony. So in Reg. v. Thurborn, in the elaborate judgment [illegible] rule is laid [illegible] that the mere taking [illegible] appropriation of it; and [illegible] [illegible] to his own use, he is not guilty of felony. In Leigh's case also the original taking was wrongful, but here the original taking was innocent. I am not desirous of calling in aid the technicality of a continuing trespass; and I think this case may be decided upon the ground either that there was no taking at all by the prisoner in the first instance, or a wrongful taking; and in either case, as soon as he appropriates the property, the evidence of felony is complete.

PARKE, B.—I think that this case may be disposed of on a short ground. The original taking was not lawful, but a trespass, upon which an action in that form might have been founded; but it was not felony, because there was no intention to appropriate. There was, however, a continuing trespass up to the time of appropriation, and at that time, therefore, the felony was committed. Where goods are carried from one county to another they may be laid as taken in the second county; and the difference between this and Leigh's case, as well as the others cited, is that the original taking was no trespass.

WILLIAMS, J., TALFOURD, J., and CROMPTON, J., concurred. Conviction affirmed.

MYERS v. PERIGAL.

Mortmain Act, 9 Geo. 2, c. 36—Shares in a banking company—The doctrine as to what consists of real estate and of estates or interests savouring of realty considered—The various kinds of property which may be rated considered.

Shares in a joint-stock banking company, established under the 7 Geo. 4, c. 46, having an interest in freehold and other lands vested in the trustees of the bank, are not within the Mortmain Act.

A testator directed his executors to convert into money all the residue of his personal estate, except his shares in the Durham and Northumberland District Bank, at Newcastle, and to invest the proceeds in Government securities, and to pay the dividends arising therefrom, and the dividends arising from his said shares in the Durham and Northumberland District Bank, unto his wife for her life; and after her decease to sell and convert into money his said bank shares, and invest the same in Government securities, which, with the Government securities before directed to be purchased, he directed to stand in his name for ever, and the proceeds thereof to be from time to time received by certain societies:

Held, reversing the decision of the court below, that the bequest of the shares, subject to the prior life estate, was a legal bequest within the statute 9 Geo. 2, c. 36.

This was an appeal from part of a decree made by the late Vice-Chancellor of England.

The facts were these:—Timothy Myers, by his will, dated 24th June 1844, among other things, directed his executors to convert into money all the residue of his personal estate (except his shares in the Durham and Northumberland District Bank at Newcastle), and to invest the proceeds in Government securities, and to pay the dividends arising therefrom, and the dividends arising from his said shares in the Durham and Northumberland District Bank, unto his wife for her life; and from and after her decease to sell and convert into money his said bank shares, and invest the same in Government securities, which, with the Government securities hereinbefore directed to be purchased, he directed to stand in his name for ever, and the proceeds thereof to be from time to time received by the following societies, namely, the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, the Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts, the Church Missionary Society, and the Church Building Society. The testator died on 4th Feb. 1845, leaving his said wife, now his widow (the plaintiff), him surviving. The will was proved by the defendants Perigal and Robinson only. The widow instituted a suit for the administration of the testator's estate, to which the executors, the next of kin, and two of the societies mentioned in the will, which were incorporated, and the secretaries of the two other societies, which were unincorporated, were parties.

By the decree the Master was directed to take an account of the testator's personal estate possessed by the defendants, his executors; to distinguish what part of it (if any) consisted of money due on mortgages or of railway debentures, shares in bridges, or of chattels real or otherwise savouring of the realty, and to inquire and state whether the testator had standing in his name at the death [illegible] and other shares in the Durham and Northumberland District Bank; and this decree further ordered, that such shares should be without prejudice to any question on the statute of Mortmain.

The Master found that the testator was, at his death, possessed of 1,200*l.* due on a mortgage of certain leasehold tenements; a debenture of the Newcastle and Carlisle Railway Company for 600*l.*, a debenture upon the tolls of Morpeth Bridge for the like sum; and that he was also, at his death, possessed of the following chattels real, namely, 580 shares in the Durham and Northumberland District Bank, the property of which consisted, amongst other things, of freehold and copyhold hereditaments, and money due on mortgage of freehold, copyhold, and leasehold hereditaments; and that the aforesaid mortgage for 1,200*l.*, railway debenture, bridge debenture, and bank shares were all chattels real or savouring of the reality, except as far as the bank shares and railway debenture were respectively altered or varied in respect of their nature or quality of such chattels real as aforesaid (if they were at all so altered or varied), by a certain deed of settlement dated the 1st July 1836, whereby the shares in the bank were declared to be personal estate, and by an Act of Parliament of the 13th April 1839, whereby the shares in the railway were declared to be personal estate.

The Durham and Northumberland District Banking Company existed under the provisions of the Joint Stock Banking Act, 7 Geo. 4, c. 46, and under a deed of settlement of the 1st July 1836; the capital of which consisted of 500,000*l.* divided into 50,000 shares of 10*l.* each. The business of the company was to be exclusively confined to banking purposes, and no part of its funds was to be invested in the stocks, &c. of any foreign country, or in the purchase of land or other real estate, except for the purposes thereinafter mentioned. All the property of the company, as between the shareholders thereof and as between the irrespective real and personal representatives, was to be considered and deemed to be personal estate, so that each and every of the shareholders should as between and among themselves have a distinct and separate right to his shares in the capital or joint stock of the company; and the same was to be vested in him to and for all intents and purposes, and subject to his disposition by deed or will, or in cases of intestacy to be transmissible to his personal representatives as part of his personal estate and distributed accordingly, but under and subject to such provisions in the deed of settlement as should for the time being affect such shares. The company was empowered out of the funds of the company to purchase in fee simple, or for any other estate, or to take a lease of, any houses, buildings, &c. and to fit up the same, &c. for the use and purposes of the company, and if necessary to sell, exchange, or assign the same, &c. for the benefit of the company, and that such lands, houses, and buildings, &c. should be deemed personal estate; and as to such of the funds and capital or property of the company for the time being in the hands of the company as should not be employed or appear necessary to be employed in the ordinary business thereof, the directors for the time being were, so far as they conveniently could, to accumulate the same at interest, and for that purpose might from time to time lay out and invest the same, either in the names of the trustees for the time being of the company or of such other persons as they might appoint, in or upon some or one of the Parliamentary Stocks or Public Funds of Great Britain, or in Navy or Exchequer Bills, or on India Bonds or Bank or East India Stock, or on mortgage or purchase of freehold, copyhold, or leasehold lands, tenements, and hereditaments in Great Britain, or in the purchase of stock in this company, or of annuities for one or more life or lives, or of any other description as they might think proper; and any board of directors, when they should deem it expedient, might cause any of the funds or property so by this article authorised to be laid out and invested as aforesaid to be disposed of, called in, or otherwise converted into money, and the money arising thereby to be again laid out and invested in and upon any of the stocks or securities as aforesaid; and so from time to time as occasion might require.

The property of the bank, at the time of the testator's death, consisted, among other things, of certain freehold and copyhold hereditaments, and money due on mortgage of freehold or copyhold or leasehold hereditaments.

On the hearing of the cause on further directions the late Vice-Chancellor of England decided that the debenture of the Newcastle and Carlisle Railway Company was not within the provisions of the Statute of Mortmain; but that the debenture upon the tolls of Morpeth Bridge and the shares in the Durham and Northumberland District Bank were: (vide 10 Sim. 536.)

From so much of that decree as related to the shares in the Durham and Northumberland District Bank the four societies appealed.

On the hearing of that appeal before Lord Truro, L.C., the plaintiff, and those representing the next of kin of the testator living at his death, contended that the bequest of the proceeds of the sale of the testator's shares in the bank to the said several societies was restrained or rendered void by the Act of the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, for restraining the disposition of land, viz. the same being [illegible]. The defendants who represented the Society for promoting Christian Knowledge and the Church Missionary Society, the Society for the Incorporated Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, and the Church Building Incorporated Society for promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels, respectively contended that the last-mentioned bequest of the proceeds of the sale of the said bank shares was a valid bequest, not restrained by the said statute. His Lordship thereupon sent the following question for the opinion of the Court of C. P.: Was the said bequest made by the will of Timothy Myers, of his shares in the Durham and Northumberland District Bank, from and after the decease of his wife, a legal bequest within the stat. 9 Geo. 2?

The judges of that court certified in favour of the bequest.

The cause was now heard on the equity reserved.

Elmsley and Faber appeared for the plaintiff.

Renshaw for the next of kin.

Craig and Wetherell for the charities.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In this appeal cases have been cited bearing on either side of the question; but there can be no doubt that anything which is dedicated to a charity and which savours of realty is within the Act of Parliament. The words are very express: "interest in real estate." You cannot dedicate any interest in, or any charge or incumbrance on, any real estate. Anything that savours of realty is within the Act. In the case of the Skerries lighthouse, the lighthouse was the service for which payment was made, and that was in the nature of an interest. In many of the cases there was an interest in land,—an interest in an easement dedicated to the charity; and beyond all doubt that is a gift which falls directly within the terms of the Act of Parliament. Some of the cases have gone a considerable length; for instance, that of the security on poor rates, and also of the security on tolls. In the one case they were mere loans—personal estate—and could hardly be considered as savouring much of realty; but in the other there is an actual assignment of the very tolls, and of the turnpike gates; so that there is real property, which is vested in the trust, under which the money has been raised; and therefore in those cases there is something more than a savouring of realty. Then we come to the cases in which, by construction, it may be said there is an interest in real estate, such cases as that now before the court, where the difficulty arises. Now it is impossible to deny that the current of modern authority has set against the old cases. There was an inclination to carry the provisions of the Mortmain Act beyond even the intention of the framers. Perhaps the inclination is now setting in a little stronger the other way; but my inclination would be neither one way nor the other, but to put as plain and sensible a construction as I can upon the terms of the Act of Parliament, as far as to obey, as the court is bound to obey, the provisions of the Act; but not to give it an enlarged construction; that is not the province of the court. The province of the court is to give it a construction which satisfies the framers of the Act itself, and which meets the real intention of the Legislature. Now take this case independent of the authorities. Did or did not this Act of Parliament intend to strike at an interest of this nature? If we look at the intention of the man who buys the shares—the purchaser—we shall have no doubt that he no more intended to obtain an interest in real estate than he intended to buy part of the property for his own immediate use. That is perfectly clear; because his interest is simply an interest in all respects personal estate by the very constitution of the partnership itself, which might go and remain in him as personal estate, and would go to his executors as personal estate, and his real representatives never could take the slightest interest in any portion of the real estate which might be acquired by this partnership. I am not at all impressed with the argument that a case might arise in which a surviving partner in a very large company might buy up the shares and might become possessed of the whole real property as it then existed. What if he did so acquire it? it would be in a new right: that is—the partnership being at an end—he would find himself in possession of the real property, an owner of real estate; and I am not impressed at that moment with the distinction of real estate, everybody in this court and in the country knows that such an owner might elect to take it as real estate even as between his real and personal re-representative. Now while this case was argued, the learned counsel was under the necessity of admitting that property for the purpose of carrying on the partnership trade would not fall within the Act of Parliament; and why not? Is real estate more obnoxious to the principle contended for because it happens to be one of the subjects of investment? It might again be sold, and so changed from realty into personality, and from personality into realty, just as often as it suited the purpose of accumulation, that is, with a view to profit, and not with a view to hold it. The property purchased to carry on the trade must at least be coexistant with the carrying on of the trade. Take for instance the case of a dock company: beyond all question the dock itself is real estate, that is, the dock itself, the property which has been excavated and formed into a dock, is the solid earth, although it is covered with water; that is real estate, and so it must remain as long as the partnership exists. Now it is not denied that the offices, and the land belonging to the offices, would be property not falling within the Act of Parliament. Why is that excepted? There is but one reason for it, because the subject itself is an interest in trade, and in trade only, and these things are the necessary adjuncts or incidents to the carrying on of that trade. In that view therefore there is an exception. Now suppose, for example, this banking company had purchased a real estate under the provisions of their deed; that, no doubt, they were at liberty to do, but at liberty to do so only for the purpose of a quasi investment—not to purchase it as real estate, and retain it as real estate, but to purchase it as they would a vessel or anything that was the subject of value in order to sell it to advantage at a future period, and they are bound to sell it by the term of the deed. If they did sell it, what were they to do with the money? Why, invest it in the funds. Therefore it is not property as real estate as regards any partner. The true way to try it would be this—let there be a real estate bought by the trustees, or the persons in whom the right was vested by this partnership deed, and let us see what the interests and rights of any partner would be in that real estate. Could any one member enter upon it and claim any portion of it? Clearly not. Suppose there was a house upon it, and that the house was empty: could he say, I will go and reside in it—I am a partner—I have a right as a tenant in common to make use of this property in common—this house is empty, and I will take my family and pass my summer recess there—could he do that? He could not. Could any two or more of them against the rights of others do so? Clearly not. He has not a right to step upon the land, as land. His whole interest is in the shares which he has purchased generally in the Banking Company—representing the dividends and profit to which he is entitled in respect of those shares. Would any incumbrance of his affect that real estate so bought? Clearly not. Would any interest in that real estate descend to his real representative? Clearly not. What is his interest beyond that of its being property which represents for the time being a portion of the capital out of which his profit is to come? This partner has not any higher interest, and never can obtain any higher interest, in respect of his shares, than as an individual partner seeking profit out of the property of the partnership in whatever shape that property may be found. Observe what the difficulty would be. If he dies at one moment, you find no real property, but you find the same interest, the same capital to be disposed of, and the same beneficial interest neither more nor less. If he dies at another moment, you find some real property. Could that alter the destination, or could it alter either the quantum of interest or the nature of the property to be given by him? Clearly not; because his legatees would take neither more nor less than just the same interest, if there was no real property purchased, which they would take if there was real property purchased. Therefore, upon all principle, I should hold it to be perfectly clear that this is not a property within the Act of Parliament. Now, the authorities are certainly difficult to reconcile; but all the later authorities tend no doubt one way. The case of probate duty, for example, introduces no difficulty on my mind any more than the case cited out of 1st Term Rep. 219. The land does not cease to be liable to its rateability to poor rates and any other rates; you cannot exempt it, except by an express Act of Parliament. But that does not alter the question at all of what your interest is in a fund composed of other property as well as that, out of which your interest arises. It may be liable just the same as a stock-in-trade is liable by law, except so far as it is annually exempted from the liability by law. Stock-in-trade is as much liable as real estate is; we do not think so, generally speaking, because we know it is not rated: but it is equally rateable; and it is only because Parliament exempts it by special Act of Parliament from time to time that it is not rated. That will not touch it; probate duty touches it, because that is a simple fiscal law. The question is, in what respect is property charged? Its being charged for the sake of revenue can in no respect touch the rights of parties independent of the revenue. Now, I think those questions do not touch this case. A more difficult question, if there be one, was with respect to the cases in which, notwithstanding a similar declaration, the Court of C. P. held that partners had still an individual right of voting in respect of the property. I admit there is considerable difficulty in reconciling that with the other authorities, because the Act of Parliament (I am speaking of the Act of Parliament as to the right of voting) merely says, the equitable right shall be as good as the legal right; and the Court of C. P. was of an opinion that, notwithstanding the clause in the partnership deed declaring the property should be considered as personal estate only, yet real property which they had purchased for the purpose of carrying on their trade, and vested in two trustees, was property in which they had all an equitable interest and in respect of which they had a right of voting. That is touching the point very closely no doubt, but it turned upon this, or else it is inconsistent with the other cases,—that you cannot take away that right of voting in respect of property except by Act of Parliament. It is an inherent right while the property remains, of which you cannot divest yourselves. It is either that, or it is not distinguishable from the other cases. But that very same Court of C. P. which held that doctrine has now by its certificate told me that it holds the case now before the court does not fall within the principle of that case. I am relieved, therefore, from that authority, so far as it is supposed to bear upon that case, because the same court has certified to me that they are of opinion that the case does not fall within the Mortmain Act. Therefore, although they were of opinion, upon grounds which they deemed satisfactory, that the right of voting remain under the Acts relating to elections, yet they were of opinion that doctrine did not extend to a case in respect of a right of property beyond the right of voting. Looking then at the current of authorities, I must say I entirely agree with them as to the general principles, although some of them have gone a good deal further than that which is now before me; I think that even the last case before Lord Langdale went further. There there was, as regards the bonds, an actual assignment of the undertaking and of the rates, and therefore that case no doubt clashes with other cases, and has to be maintained upon the authority of that learned judge. I am not called upon to express any opinion about that, because this case is not open to the same observations. This is a case in which I consider the interest simply that of a partner in a general concern, part of which concern they had at the time as real property, but not as real property in which it could be predicated of any partner that he had any interest. Properly speaking, he has his interest only in the partnership, the property of which may or may not, according to the circumstances, consist partly of real estate. My opinion, therefore, clearly is that the certificate of the Court of C. P. rightly tells me what the law is, and in conformity with that certificate I must hold that in this case the property was well given to the charity.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

STORRS v. BENBOW.

Practice—Chancery Amendment Act—Hearing of appeal.

An application to enlarge the period for a re-hearing or an appeal under the provisions of the 6th Order of the 7th July, 1852, concerning appeals, the five years limited by the 1st of such orders having elapsed before such orders were made, was directed to be made by petition, and not by motion.

In Jan. 1833 William Townsend Storrs, the plaintiff in this suit, then an infant, filed his bill by his next of kin against the executors of Wm. Townsend, claiming a legacy of 500*l.* under the will of the said Wm. Townsend, as being a child born to a child of one of the testator's brothers. By a decree of Sir John Leach, dated the 8th July, 1833, it was declared that the children in esse only at the time of the death of the testator were entitled to the legacies of 500*l.* each bequeathed by the testator's will to each of the children of either of his brothers; and it was referred to the Master to inquire whether the plaintiff was in esse at the time of the testator's death.

The Master made his report, dated the 20th Nov. 1833, whereby he found that the plaintiff was in esse at the time of the testator's death. The report was, by an order dated the 23rd Jan. 1834, absolutely confirmed. No further proceedings were taken until the 21st Dec. 1852, when a supplemental order to the effect of a supplemental decree was obtained under the 52nd sect. of the Chancery Amendment Act, whereby the present defendants, the trustees of the testator's will, were made parties to the suit.

The plaintiff is still an infant, and will not have attained twenty-one until the 29th Oct. in the present year.

Shebbeare, on behalf of the defendants, applied to the court by motion on the 16th instant that, the period of five years, limited for appeal by the 1st of the orders of the 7th Aug. 1852, concerning appeals, having elapsed before such orders were made, the Lord Chancellor would enlarge the period for appeal under the provisions of the 6th of such orders.

COURT OF APPEAL.

The Court was of opinion that the application should be made by petition.

Jan. 21.—Shebbeare, on behalf of the defendants, now presented a petition stating the circumstances above mentioned, and praying that the time for a re-hearing or an appeal from the decree of the 8th July, 1833, might be enlarged until the first day of next Easter Term.

Rogers appeared on behalf of the infant plaintiff, and did not oppose.

An order was made accordingly.

Wednesday, Jan. 19.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. WYGGESTON HOSPITAL.

A petition had been presented in the name of the Attorney-General. On the hearing, the Attorney-General appeared, and asked that it might be dismissed—it had been presented without his consent. The Court, regarding that officer as any other party making a similar request, granted the application.

A petition in the name of the Attorney-General was preferred before the Master of the Rolls, for the purpose of making certain inquiries before the Master as to certain leases which had been granted, of land belonging to the charity, and as to certain other matters, for the purpose of carrying into effect a decree made on the hearing of the cause. The Master of the Rolls, on the hearing of the petition, which had stood over in order that the Attorney-General might be served, refused to make any order, but directed certain inquiries to be instituted under the direction of the Attorney-General.

This was an appeal from that order.

Wickens, on behalf of the Attorney-General, who had not been served, objected to the petition being heard, and asked that it might be dismissed.

Lloyd, Follett, and Morris, for the petitioner, contended that after a decree was pronounced in a cause, no consent on the part of the Attorney-General was necessary for the prosecution of ulterior proceedings. The relators were then domini litis, and at liberty to prosecute the decree without his concurrence. They cited The Attorney-General v. Ironmongers' Company, 2 Bea., 313; Attorney-General v. Corporation of Galway, 1 Moll. 97; Attorney-General v. Earl of Stamford, 2 Ph. 737; Corporation of Ludlow v. Greenhouse, 2 Bligh. N. S. 44; Attorney-General v. Mayor of Exeter, 2 Russ. 45; Attorney-General v. Compton, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 425.

Roupell and Metcalf appeared for the Charity Corporation, and R. Palmer and Freeling for the master and wardens of the hospital.

The LORD-CHANCELLOR.—There can be no doubt as to the manner in which I must act. This petition is professed to be presented in the name of the Attorney-General. The Attorney-General repudiates it; he asks that it may be dismissed, and as the case of that officer is not different to that of other parties who petition the court, it must, therefore, follow the ordinary fate of applications asked to be dismissed by the persons preferring them. This, it has been said, is an attempt on the part of the Attorney-General to control the court. In suits instituted by that officer he must be considered as the party who carries it on. He is the real party, though of late the relator has been considered too much, and the Attorney-General too little. As a general rule, when the Attorney-General appears and asks that a petition which is presented in his name may be dismissed, I shall give great weight to what he asks.

Petition dismissed.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Dec. 16 and 17.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES, assisted by MAULE, J.)

JONES v. BEACH.

Principal and surety—Promise to pay—Whether joint liability made several.

A surety, on notes for which he was jointly liable, on being written to for a fresh note for the amount, payable jointly and severally, in reply stated by his solicitor that he would pay the amount and interest due on the joint security in the course of a post or two:

Held, overruling the decision of the court below, that the surety, neither in equity nor at law, had thereby rendered himself severally liable.

This was an appeal from the M. R. under the following circumstances:—A claim had been filed by Andrew Jones against M. Beach, the executrix of John Beach, to obtain payment out of his estate of the sum of 800*l.* secured by three joint promissory notes, given and signed by J. Beach, deceased, and W. Stubbs, for the sum of 100*l.* each, bearing date respectively the 2nd June 1842, the 1st Aug. 1842, and the 2nd March 1846, upon which interest had been paid to A. Jones down to the 8th July 1850. The notes had been signed by Beach as a surety only. On the 20th June Mr. Pumphrey, the plaintiff's solicitor, wrote to J. Beach as follows:—"Sir, Mr. Stubbs is bad, and I am about making him a bankrupt, but I find I cannot proceed against him without troubling you in the affair. I have no desire to proceed against either; and, in order to avoid this, I ask you whether you will join Mr. Stubbs in a fresh note for 300*l.*, payable jointly and severally. As the notes in my possession are made payable on demand, and are not jointly and severally, you had better see your solicitor hereon immediately. I shall await your reply a post or two, and if I have no reply I shall at once proceed against both of you." Thereupon Mr. Gwillim, the solicitor of Mr. Beach, wrote to Mr. Pumphrey the following letter: "Sir, Mr. Beach, of this city, has brought me your letter, and has instructed me to inform you, that it is his intention to pay off the 300*l.* due to your client on the joint note of himself and Mr. Stubbs. I shall be glad if you will let me know the amount due for interest, and Mr. Beach will be prepared to remit the money in the course of a post or two. I presume you have the notes." The death of Mr. Beach shortly afterwards put an end to the negotiation, and, Mr. Stubbs having become insolvent, the claim was filed either to obtain payment of the debt, or for the administration of the estate of Mr. Beach. The M. R. held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree upon the letter, without further reference to the original notes, and that the forbearance to sue was a sufficient consideration for the promise.

J. Hinde Palmer, in support of the decree of the M. R. contended, in the first place, that even if in law it should be held that the liability was joint, still in a court of equity it would be held to be several, so as to support the claim.

Willcock and Charles Hall, for the appellants, were not called upon by the court on this point.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE said that if the separate liability at law was established, the equitable right would follow; but supposing no such legal liability to exist, the question of liability in equity would depend on whether there was evidence direct or circumstantial that the joint note did not accurately express the intention of the parties concerned in the transaction, and that there was a contract, independent of the note, binding Beach in equity. His Lordship was not prepared to say that the circumstance of a joint security led to the inference that it was meant to be joint and several. Beach had agreed to be surety for Stubbs to Jones; but there were two ways of his being so, and the evidence did not show that a joint and several liability was the way intended. It had been said that the transaction was equivalent to a joint loan, and that therefore a several as well as a joint liability was created. This was a point not needful to be now decided, but his Lordship would not be disposed to adopt the view suggested unless after great consideration. On the materials in the case, and on general principle, there did not appear to be any equitable liability distinct from the legal liability, and therefore, if there was no separate liability at law, the claim must fail.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH concurred.

Dec. 17.—The cause having stood over until this day in order that their Lordships might have the assistance of Maule, J. in deciding whether Mr. Beach, under the letters which have been set out, had at law become jointly and severally liable with Mr. Stubbs for the 300*l.*

Counsel were heard on both sides.

MAULE, J.—In this case it is alleged that Mr. Beach being liable on certain joint promissory notes with Stubbs, who has become bankrupt, his estate is to be charged in respect of a several liability not arising out of the promissory notes. Under the notes the estate of Mr. Beach could not be liable; that has not been contended; but the liability is alleged to arise on certain letters. (His Lordship here read the letter from the plaintiff's solicitor above set out.) This letter contains an offer to change the joint debt into a joint and several debt, but this offer was not accepted. (His Lordship here read the answer as above given.) This seems to me to contain nothing more than a statement by the solicitor of the intention of his client to pay, and the question is whether this is any acceptance of a new contract. I do not think it amounts to that. These two letters then do not make out a contract—the first contains an offer, and the second does not accept it. The second states an intention to pay, and admits a joint liability, which of course might be enforced. Another and subsequent letter has been read by counsel, which, as far as I gathered its contents, seemed quite to confirm this view of the case, and to show that the parties did not consider that any new contract had been made. I therefore think that the estate of Mr. Beach is not chargeable.

The LORDS JUSTICES concurred, and the plaintiff's claim was therefore ordered to be dismissed with costs.

Re THE JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES WINDING-UP ACTS, 1848 AND 1849, AND THE DIRECT EXETER, PLYMOUTH, AND DEVONPORT RAILWAY COMPANY, ex parte WOOLMER AND OTHERS.

Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Acts, 1848, 1849—Official manager—Payment of costs.

Proceedings having been instituted improperly in the Master's office by the official manager, on which he obtained an order which was reversed on appeal;

Held, that the official manager must pay the costs in the Master's office, but that he was entitled to his costs out of the estate of supporting the Master's decision in the court above, which it was overruled.

This was an application of Messrs. Woolmer, Bastard, and Kingdon, to discharge an order of the Master dated 29th Nov. 1852, directing them to lay before him a statement, in writing, of the application of a sum of 225*l.*, an item in the account of allowances of Mr. Tanner, as paid by him to Messrs. Woolmer, Bastard, and Kingdon, on account of the debts and claims on the company, and which sum had been previously allowed by the Master.

It appeared that the order now appealed from was made at the instance of the official manager, who objected to the allowance in question on the ground of a certain agreement which had been entered into between Mr. Tanner and Messrs. Woolmer, Bastard, and Kingdon, and in consequence of which it was contended that the sum of 225*l.* had never been in reality applied towards the debts of the company, as it was believed to have been when allowed by the Master. Their Lordships, however, discharged the order of the Master.

The question then arose as to the payment of costs.

Follett and J. V. Prior, who appeared for the appellants, argued that, as the proceedings before the Master turned out to have been improper, the official manager ought to bear the costs, although he had succeeded in persuading the Master to make the order which their Lordships had reversed, and that the same rule ought to apply both to the costs before the Master and on the appeal.

Roxburgh, for the official manager, contended that the official manager had only done his duty by bringing the matter before the Master, and that, as the Master had made an order, it was to be assumed that the application was a proper one. That it would be a great hardship if, in coming to support the decision of the court below, a person in the position of an official manager was held personally liable for costs, and it would be the first case in which such was ever held to be law. [Lord Justice TURNER referred to the case of The Grand Trunk Stafford and Peterborough Railway Company (Official Manager of) v. Brodie, 16 Jur. 678, where his Lordship as Vice-Chancellor had held that the suit being improperly constituted in its inception, and the evidence not justifying the institution of the suit on the merits, the bill should be dismissed with costs as against the official manager, although the official manager had obtained an order to carry on the suit in the place of a subscriber by whom it had been originally instituted.] Moreover the court had jurisdiction only over costs in matters before it, and not in those which were before the Master. This was clear from the 59th, 96th and 103rd sections of the Winding-up Act of 1848, and from the 12th section of the Winding-up Act of 1849. Lord Cottenham also had so decided in the case of Ex parte Marsh, re The Cambridge and Colchester Railway Company, 1 Mac. & Gord. 302; and that the official manager was not personally responsible for costs. [Lord Justice TURNER.—But what business had the official manager to originate proceedings in the Master's office for which there was no foundation?] That observation does not apply to this case, as the Master thought proper to make an order.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—We do not mean in this case to impute blame to the official manager; but the argument used in his behalf goes to the length of contending that, however oppressive or vexatious his proceedings may have been, he is not to be liable for costs. I can give no further weight to this argument than merely listening to it, for I cannot go with it. He has instituted proceedings before the Master, which we think he ought not, and that he ought to pay the costs; and this we order him to do. We do not, however, prejudice anything which the Master may direct as to his being indemnified out of the estate. I was disposed to deal in the same way with the costs here; but my learned brother thinks that would be a hardship, and I defer to his opinion, and direct that these costs be paid out of the estate.

Lord Justice TURNER.—I do not impute any blame to the official manager, further, at least, than this—that he has not exercised a discretion I think he was bound to do. There was no ground for the proceedings before the Master; and, although he obtained an order from the Master, if he had exercised his discretion he would not have applied for it. I think he must pay the costs incurred in the Master's office; but, having got an order, although indiscreetly, it would perhaps be hard upon him to make him pay the costs of having to come here to defend it; and therefore I think he must have his costs before this court out of the estate.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by J. MACAULAY, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Thursday, Jan. 20.

LOVELL v. GALLOWAY.

Practice—Injunction on bill of discovery for want of answer.

This was a motion for an injunction on a bill of discovery on the ground of the want of the answer of the defendant. The plaintiff had not exhibited interrogatories according to the new rules, the defendant not having appeared.

R. Palmer and Bruce, for plaintiffs.

Roupell and H. Clarke, for defendants.

The MASTER of the ROLLS held that, as the plaintiff might have filed interrogatories along with his bill, but had not done so, and therefore had not called on the defendant to answer anything, the defendant was not in default; and he refused the motion with costs.

ROBY v. SCHOLES.

Practice—Old and new rules as to orders nisi, four-day—Substituted service.

Where a decree had been made and served on a party, requiring him to do a particular act, and he did not comply, an order was obtained requiring him to do the act in a given time, and if he still refused, an order nisi, usually a four-day order, was made requiring him to comply, or, in case he did not, that an attachment should issue. That is the practice still, notwithstanding the order since 1841 requiring the act to be done in a limited time has an indorsement on it that if not obeyed the party is liable to be arrested.

An attempt must be made to serve the four-day order personally in the first instance; and if it cannot be done, then application must be made to the court for substituted service.

This was a suit for specific performance, which was decreed by the court, the thing required to be done being to pull down a part of a house which projected over a street in the town of Rochdale. The decree was served by substituted service, for which leave was given by the court. The decree not being made, an order was made requiring the party to obey the decree in three weeks from the service of the order. This order was attempted to be served, but without success, and an application was made to the court for substituted service, which was refused. The plaintiff then employed the sheriff's officer, who, after much difficulty, succeeded by stratagem in serving the order personally. On the order, requiring the act to be done in the three weeks, there was an indorsement, that "if you do not obey the order in the given time, you are liable to be arrested," &c.

Rogers now moved to commit the party for disobeying the order. The old practice required the order nisi or four-day order to go before the order to commit; but now, as the order to obey in a limited time has the indorsement as to liability to commitment, stated as the immediate result of disobedience, he submitted the four-day order was unnecessary.

The MASTER of the ROLLS thought there must be an order nisi to do the act in the time, or, if not, then you must come for an order to commit.

Rogers.—The last order was served by stratagem, your Honour having refused to make an order for substituted service; and we apprehend equal difficulty now in serving this order. Will your Honour give us an order for substituted service?

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—You must try to serve the four-day order, and if you cannot do so, you must come back and apply for substituted service.

GORDON v. JESSON.

Death of official assignee before answer—Substitution of new assignee—No affidavit is necessary in such a case, and the order may now be obtained as of course.

The defendant, Richard Valpy, the official assignee of a bankrupt, died before answer, and Thomas Bittleston was appointed official assignee in his place.

Bevan moved, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 51, that the usual supplemental order might be made. He said there might be a question whether, under the Bankrupt Act. 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 157, the new assignee ought not to be substituted; but observed that it had been held that this only applied to a plaintiff assignee: (1 Younge, 386; 1 Myl. & K. 217; 7 Beav. 484.) He also observed that no affidavit had been made in support of the application, inasmuch as the Act provided that "the usual supplemental decree might be obtained as of course, upon an allegation of the abatement."

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—No affidavit is necessary; the usual order may be made in this case; but it must be understood, for the future, that these orders may be obtained as of course.

CHAFFERS v. HEADLAM.

Practice—Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act—Personal representative.

Where a debtor executed a deed of composition with his creditors, by which he vested property in trustees for the benefit; he then made his will, appointing his wife and two others his executrix and executors, and gave all his property to his wife; the executrix alone proved the will, and died; a bill was filed against the trustees for an account, of the estate received by them; There was no personal representative of the widow, and no one could be found to undertake the office, and the debtor's estate was insufficient to pay the creditors under the deed:

Held, that this was a case within the 44th section of the stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, and that the suit might be prosecuted without a personal representative of the deceased debtor.

This was a creditor's suit brought under the following circumstances:—Thomas Wheldon, by a deed executed before 1850, conveyed and assigned certain real and personal estate to W. Headlam and another person, upon trusts for the benefit of the other parties to the deed, who were his creditors, and who thereby agreed to accept a stated composition on their several debts due from Mr. Wheldon. Mr. Wheldon by his will gave, devised, and bequeathed all his real and personal estate whereof he might die seised or possessed unto his wife, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, and appointed her executrix, and two other persons executors of his will. He died in 1850; and the widow alone proved the will. She died on the 19th June, 1852; and ten days afterwards Mr. Chaffers, one of the creditors of Mr. Wheldon, filed a bill against Mr. Headlam and the other trustee of the composition deed, on behalf of himself and all other creditors interested under that deed, for an account of assets Mr. Wheldon possessed by the defendants, and for the due application of the same. The stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86 having come into operation, a motion was made on behalf of the plaintiff that some person might be appointed to represent the estate of Thomas Wheldon, the debtor, under the provisions of the 44th section, which enacts as follows:—"If in any suit or other proceeding before the court, it shall appear to the court that any deceased person who was interested in the matters in question has no legal personal representative, it shall be lawful for the court either to proceed in the absence of any person representing the estate of such deceased person, or to appoint some person to represent such estate for all the purposes of the suit or other proceeding, on such notice to such person or persons, if any, as the court shall think fit, either specially or generally, by public advertisement; and the order so made by the said court, and any orders consequent thereon, shall bind the estate of such deceased person in the same manner in every respect as if there had been a duly-constituted legal personal representative of such deceased person, and such legal personal representative had been a party to the suit or proceeding, and had duly appeared and submitted his rights and interests to the protection of the court."

De Gex, for the plaintiff, moved ex parte upon affidavits, the substance of which were, that no probate or letters of administration to the estate of Mrs. Wheldon could be found to have been granted by the Prerogative Courts of Canterbury or York, or by the Diocesan Court of the Bishop of London: that she was living in the county of Middlesex up to her death; that it was believed she died intestate, and that no personal representative of her existed; that application had been made to persons who were akin to Mrs. Wheldon, who refused to have anything to do with her affairs; and that the solicitor to the defendants, the trustees, had omitted to make any reply to applications made to him for information as to any will, if any, left by her. By another affidavit, it was sworn "that the estate of the said Thomas Wheldon will be insufficient to pay the creditors interested in the aforesaid deed of composition the amount of their respective claims under the same, and that there will be no surplus arising to the estate of the said Thomas Wheldon; that the expense of obtaining letters de bonis non of the estate of the said Thomas Wheldon will, over and above the stamp on the same, amount to the sum of 25*l.* or more." Counsel submitted that, under these circumstances, the present was a case contemplated by the Act, and moved accordingly.

The Vice-Chancellor.—I am opinion that this is one of those cases for which the 44th section of the statute was intended to provide, and if there be no valid objection raised by the defendants, I think the order may be made. If notice has not already been given to the defendants, the motion must stand over for that purpose.

Notice was subsequently served on the defendants, the trustees, and

Nov. 25.—De Gex renewed the motion, but in the form "that the cause might proceed in the absence of the personal representative of Thomas Wheldon, the debtor."

Elderton, for the trustees, submitted to the order; but as it was in the nature of an indulgence, the plaintiff ought to pay the costs.

The Vice-Chancellor.—The case is one contemplated by the Act; the application is reasonable, and for the benefit of all parties, and is properly supported; and the costs must be made costs in the cause.

V. C. WOOD'S COURT.

FORBES v. FORBES.

Practice—further examination of witnesses.

Where an order was obtained for the further examination of witnesses out of the jurisdiction, which was not restricted by the words "not before examined on the same subject-matter," the Court Held that the order was not irregular.

In this case witnesses had been examined, and the plaintiff obtained the common order for the examination of witnesses in Scotland on a commission, without there being contained in the order the restrictive words, "not before examined on the same subject-matter."

Bolt and Bevir now moved to discharge the order for irregularity, by reason of the omission of the words of restriction.

Anderson and A. J. Lewis supported the order, observing that these words were never used excepting in orders issued from the Rolls, and argued that the matter was quite regular.

The Vice-Chancellor.—I see no reason, in principle, for the introduction of these words; but it is very inconvenient to have two different forms of an order of course. I will inquire into the practice, and mention the matter again.

Jan. 15.—The Vice-Chancellor.—In this case a motion was made to discharge an order for the further examination of witnesses, upon the ground that it was informal, by reason of its not containing words restricting the examination to witnesses who had not been before examined in the same matter. I have communicated with the usual authorities upon this point of practice, and it appears that the order for the further examining of witnesses is of course, without any restrictive words. Up to 1840 the orders were given out at the Rolls without any restrictive words, but it seems that shortly afterwards such words were introduced. The gentleman whom I have consulted has not the least recollection of the manner in which the restrictive words have been used, although he thinks it may have been probably from some direction which he has received. But he is quite unable to say positively that it is so. Under these circumstances I cannot, after the recent practice, hold that it is irregular to issue the order in the form in which it has been issued from the registrar, for all the other officers, except the gentleman at the Rolls, say that it does not appear to them that it should be varied at all. I therefore cannot discharge the order for irregularity. As to the costs, although I refuse the motion, it is not unreasonable that it should have been made, as the order may reasonably have been supposed to be irregular. The costs of the motion must be costs in the cause. I can only say this, that if the party moving feels himself aggrieved by this practice of the court, I am willing and perfectly ready to give an order in the form in which it is thought it should be given out.

Jan. 18, 23, and 24.

HARFORD v. REES.

Practice—Evidence—Examination of party under Lord Campbell's Act.

Under the authority conferred by the 2nd section of the Law of Evidence Amendment Act (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99), a plaintiff may compel a defendant to give evidence, and may take a decree against him.

The bill in this case was filed for obtaining the restitution of a sum of 6000*l.* A testator, named Ivyleaf, bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to the Bristol Royal Infirmary, at Bristol, the treasurer of which charity had been appointed an executor of the will. The bill charged that the testator lived in the house of Mr. Rees, and where he died; and that the plaintiffs, who were the treasurer and vice-president and two of the trustees of the infirmary, were told by Rees that Mr. Ivyleaf had no property of which the hospital could have the benefit; and that upon this representation, which was false, the treasurer who was so appointed executor had renounced probate of the will; and that subsequently Rees took out letters of administration with the will annexed, and by this means obtained possession of large property, part of which consisted of 6000*l.* standing in the testator's name. Part of the property was alleged to have been made away with to the other defendant in the suit, Lloyd. The evidence in the cause was taken subsequently to the passing of the Law of Evidence Amendment Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, and under the 2nd section of this statute the plaintiffs examined the defendant Rees, the administrator, as a witness on their behalf, to prove the participation of the other defendant, Lloyd, in the fraudulent misappropriation of the assets, with a full knowledge of the trusts of the will. That section of the statute enacts, that "on the trial of any issue joined, or of any matter or question, or on any inquiry arising in any suit, action, or other proceeding in any court of justice, or before any person having by law or by consent of parties authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence, the parties thereto and the persons on whose behalf any such suit, action, or other proceeding may be brought or defended shall, except as hereinafter excepted, be competent and compellable to give evidence, either viva voce or by deposition according to the practice of the court, on behalf of either or any of the parties to the said suit, action, or other proceeding." The case now coming on for hearing, Toller and Pirie, for the plaintiffs, prepared to read the evidence of Rees.

Selwyn, for the defendant Lloyd, objected, that the plaintiff having examined Rees as a witness could not have any decree against him, and as he could have no decree against him he could not have any decree against the other defendant, Lloyd, who was only charged with receipt through Rees. He cited the cases of The Attorney-General v. Dew, decided by Lord Justice Knight Bruce, when V.C., 2 De G. & S. 418; Rowland v. Witherden, before Lord Truro, 3 Mac. & Gord. 568, and a recent case, unreported, before the present M. R. He argued that before Lord Denman's Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 85), to amend which Lord Campbell's Act was passed, a defendant could not have been examined at all by a plaintiff without an order from the court permitting him to do so. Lord Campbell's Act, however, rendered the order not necessary; but neither of these Acts altered the rule of the court as to the consequence of a plaintiff examining a defendant, namely, that he thereby waived any decree against him. It was admitted that the statute removed the objection of interest in the parties examined, but left the other wholly untouched.

Forster, for the defendant Rees, was willing to submit to a common decree for an account, if the bill were dismissed against him as to the charges of fraud. He cited Champion v. Champion, 15 Sim. 101; and Barbel v. Allen, 21 L. J. 155, Ex.

Toller, for the plaintiff, in answer to the objection to the reception of the evidence, and also to the argument raised as to the consequence of its reception, submitted that the two Acts of Parliament mentioned had removed, as they were intended to remove, all objection whatever to a decree founded on the examination of a defendant.

The Vice-Chancellor.—The case had better stand over for the present, and the plaintiffs can then consider whether they will take the course offered by the counsel of the defendant Rees.

Jan. 24.—No arrangement was made, and the Court now decided the point on the objection.

The Vice-Chancellor.—This is the first time the question has arisen since the passing of the Act, which renders defendants not only competent, but compellable, to give evidence on behalf of either or any of the parties to the suit; and, looking at the words of that statute, I think it removes the only obstacle to examining a defendant, and taking a decree against him. I have been, however, desirous to delay my judgment, for the purpose of looking into the older practice. Under Lord Denman's Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 85), the objection arising from interest was removed; but still it was decided in Attorney-General v. Dew, that a decree could not be taken against a defendant who had been examined; and though the statute was not cited in that case, the judge must be taken to have had it in his mind; and in Rowland v. Witherden Lord Truro referred to it. It appears to me that these cases were rightly decided, because the interest of the defendant was not the only objection. There were, in fact, two objections; the one arising from the interest of the defendant, and that was an objection which co-defendants had a right to insist on, because it naturally induced a witness to attempt to throw the burden off his own on to their shoulders. The second objection was one which the party himself might insist on, and might say, You shall not take a decree against me founded on my own evidence; and he might demur to the interrogatories. This was settled in very early times. In Kildesley v. D'Fisher, Moseley, 195, Lord Chancellor King allowed the demurrer of a defendant to interrogatories, on the ground that as witness she need not answer when her interest was concerned; and so in Nightingale v. Dodd, Ambler, 688, Lord Hardwick said, "Suggestions in orders of this kind, viz., 'that the defendant is not interested,' must relate to the matters whereto he is examined; if he is examined to other matters in which he is interested, he may demur." Mr. Daniel, in his book, refers to Weymouth v. Boyer, 1 Ves. jun. 420, where it is laid down that a man cannot be examined for his own interest or against it; and the Act 46 Geo. 3, c. 37, which prevented witnesses refusing to answer on the ground of their own interest, was held not to apply to defendants in the suit. A defendant, therefore, when examined, had two courses; he might refuse to answer, or he might say, "You have chosen to examine me—you cannot now have a decree against me." But the Act of 1851 has changed the whole matter. That Act expressly referred to Chancery, and says that a party shall be not only competent, but compellable, to give evidence; and from the moment he was compellable, his sole ground of objection was taken away. To put any other construction on the Act would render it a nullity in all cases where there is only one defendant. It has been said that the Act was only intended to apply to cases at common law, and to repeal the proviso in Lord Denman's Act which was recited in it; and that cases at common law are different in principle, because the matter is brought to a single issue between a plaintiff and defendant: but that is not always so, and in many cases it is necessary to enter a nolle prosequi for the purpose of examining a co-defendant. On these grounds, I consider that the plaintiff has a right to take a decree against the defendant Rees, and the case will accordingly go on.

Bessell v. Wilson.

Protection of magistrates—Stat. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 2.—Conviction—Warrant—Summons to appear—Appearance by counsel or attorney.

Sect. 2 of stat. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, which provides that no action shall be brought against a magistrate for anything done under a warrant issued upon disobedience of a previous summons, applies only to warrants issued previous to a conviction or order, for the purpose of compelling appearance, and not to warrants issued after conviction for the purpose of enforcing payment of penalties.

Where a person, who had been convicted by a justice and ordered to pay penalties, neglected to pay, and was summoned for that neglect to appear before the justice to show cause why he should not be further dealt with according to law:

Held, that an appearance by counsel and attorney was an appearance according to the exigency of that summons.

Trespass for assault and false imprisonment.

Plea, not guilty by statute.

At the trial which took place before Lord Campbell, C. J. in London, during the sittings after last Trinity Term, the following facts were proved:—

The plaintiff had been convicted by an alderman of London for an infringement under the Copyright of Designs Act, and ordered to pay two penalties. Upon nonpayment, he was summoned to appear before the alderman to show cause why he should not be further dealt with according to law. This summons he attended by his counsel and attorney, but refused to attend personally. Thereupon the alderman issued his warrant for the apprehension of the plaintiff, requiring him to be brought in custody before a justice to answer the complaint, and be dealt with according to law. Under that warrant he was apprehended and imprisoned, with some circumstances of hardship and indignity, one of them being that his person was searched in compliance with a general rule acted upon at the police station. For that imprisonment (the conviction having first been quashed by the Court of Q. B.) he brought the present action, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff. In the following term a rule to enter a verdict for the defendant was obtained, on the ground that he was protected from that action by sect. 2 of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, which provides, "that for any act done by a justice of the peace in a matter of which by law he has not jurisdiction, or in which he shall have exceeded his jurisdiction, any person injured thereby, or by any act done under any conviction or order made or warrant issued by such justice in any such matter," may maintain trespass; "provided nevertheless, that no such action shall be brought for anything done under such conviction or order until after such conviction shall have been quashed either upon appeal or upon application to her Majesty's Court of Q. B.; nor shall any such action be brought for anything done under any such warrant which shall have been issued by such justice to procure the appearance of such party, and which shall have been followed by a conviction or order in the same matter, until after such conviction or order shall have been so quashed as aforesaid; or if such last-mentioned warrant shall not have been followed by any such conviction or order, or if it be a warrant upon an information for an alleged indictable offence, nevertheless if a summons were issued previously to such warrant, and such summons were served upon such person, either personally or by leaving the same for him with some person at his last or most usual place of abode, and he did not appear according to the exigency of such summons, in such case no such action shall be maintained against such justice for anything done under such warrant."

Jan. 18. (a)—O'Malley and Lush showed cause. —First: Statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 2, does not apply to this case. The part of the section which is relied upon here applies only to warrants issued for the purpose of compelling appearance previously to any adjudication; and it was introduced to meet the case where the magistrate ultimately dismisses the complaint, but has previously caused the defendant to be brought in custody before him to answer the charge. It was clearly not intended to enable a magistrate, who has made an illegal conviction, to protect himself from all consequences by issuing a summons before issuing a warrant. In this case there was no necessity for any warrant of arrest, nor any right to issue it. The magistrate, under statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, s. 9, was authorised upon nonpayment to issue a distress warrant for recovery of the penalties; and that without any summons. [Wightman, J.—That is questionable. Procter v. The Liverpool Gas Company, 6 Ad. & El. 466.] At all events, after summons issued, the neglect to appear would be equivalent to saying—"I have no cause to show," and then a warrant of distress might be issued against the goods of the defaulter, but not a warrant of commitment against his person. Secondly: In this case the plaintiff did appear according to the exigency of the summons; because his appearance by counsel and attorney was sufficient. The statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100 gave no remedy against the person at all; but by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 22, there is a power of imprisonment in default of distress. In this case there was no evidence that any distress warrant had issued; and therefore the only object of the summons was to call upon him to show cause why a distress warrant should not issue; and for that purpose personal attendance was quite unnecessary. R. v. Simpson, 1 Stra. 44; R. v. Haddock, 2 Stra. 1100; and R. v. Wyatt, 2 Ld. Raym. 1196, are authorities to show that personal appearance was not necessary; and statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 13, particularly recognises the right to appear by attorney.

Hugh Hill and Willes, contrà.—First: This case falls within the very words of sect. 2 of 11 & 15 Vict. c. 44. The imprisonment took place under a warrant, which had been preceded by a summons that was disobeyed, and the warrant has not been followed by a conviction or order. [Lord Campbell, C. J.—Does not that language imply that the Legislature is speaking of a summons and warrant leading to a conviction or order not subsequent to the conviction?] This warrant might have been followed by an order to pay. [Lord Campbell, C. J.—Is it not quite novel to bring a man in custody to shew cause why he should not pay a sum of money?] Not since stat. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 13, which authorises the proceeding. There must be a process of hearing, before the penalty can be enforced: (Ex parte Kinning, 10 Q. B. Rep. 730, 4 C. B. 507; Buchanan v. Kinning, 20 L. J. 252, C. P.; In Hammersmith Rent-charge, 19 L. J. 66, Exch.; Painter v. Liverpool Gas Company, cited supra; and Hammond v. Bendyshe, 18 L. J. 219, M. C.) In order to enforce the summons necessarily issued for that purpose the defendant was authorised to issue his warrant by sect. 13 of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. Secondly: Personal appearance was necessary. Although sects. 12 and 18 of the last-mentioned Act allow parties the assistance of counsel and attorney, they do not dispense with the presence of the party; and there is no authority for saying that in such a case as the present appearance by attorney is sufficient: (Com. Dig. "Attorney," B., 4, 5, 6.) The real object of the summons was to call upon the plaintiff to show why he should not be committed to prison; because distress warrants had in fact been previously issued, and returned nulla bona. They were not proved at the trial, because the point now taken was not then made; but there is upon the notes of the learned judge some evidence that an ineffectual attempt had been made to levy upon the plaintiff's goods. JUDGMENT.

Jan. 19.—Lord Campbell, C. J.—This was an action against Mr. Alderman Wilson for false imprisonment. In this case the action is primâ facie maintainable; the warrant granted by the defendant under which the plaintiff was arrested and imprisoned was illegal; the conviction had been quashed by this court, and the defendant had clearly exceeded his jurisdiction in requiring the plaintiff to be arrested and brought before him in custody to answer the complaint stated in the warrant. The defendant pleaded not guilty by statute, and relies for protection on the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 2. (His lordship referred to the words of the section.) The defendant contends that, although this illegal warrant was not followed by any such conviction or order, a summons had been issued previously to such warrant, and such summons was served on the plaintiff, and the plaintiff did not appear according to the exigency of such summons; and therefore this action is not maintainable against the justice for arresting him under the warrant. But we are of opinion that the summons and warrant referred to by the enactment must be a summons and warrant before conviction; and that it does not apply to a summons and warrant issued after the conviction with a view to the levying of penalties. The warrant here, which was issued after the conviction, recites that John Bessell had unlawfully neglected and refused to pay the two penalties with costs, as directed to be paid by him, and that a summons had been issued commanding him to appear to answer to the said complaint, and that he had neglected to be or appear at the time or place appointed by the summons, although proof was given that the summons had been duly served. The warrant then concludes in these words: "These are therefore to command you, in her Majesty's name, forthwith to apprehend the said John Bessell, and to bring him before me, or some other of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said city of London, to answer to the said complaint, and to be further dealt with according to law." Now this is not any proceeding pointed out by the preceding statute of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, to facilitate the performance of the duties of justices of the peace with respect to summary convictions and orders, or by any other statute, nor a proceeding which the Legislature could well have had in contemplation when it indemnified the justices for what was done under a warrant preceded by summons to appear. Supposing it to be fitting that after a conviction imposing a penalty, which justices may issue a distress-warrant to levy, they shall issue a summons calling on the party convicted to answer a complaint that he had neglected and refused to pay, it never could have been supposed that a justice, on a default to appear, instead of issuing a distress-warrant, might issue a warrant to arrest and imprison the party, and to bring him in custody before the justice to answer for not appearing. This is not a warrant granted by the justice to procure the appearance of the party with a view to a future conviction or order, and therefore there would be no indemnity to the justice for what was done under it, although a summons to appear had been previously served even, if the party had not appeared according to the exigency of such summons. We are further of opinion that if this summons and warrant did come within the 2nd section of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, it could not be justly said that the party did not appear according to the exigency of the summons. The object of the summons may reasonably be taken to be that he might show cause why a distress warrant should not issue. During the argument there was a suggestion that distress warrants had been issued; but, at the trial, such prior distress warrants were not given in evidence, or even alluded to. At the time and place appointed by the summons, the plaintiff did appear by his counsel and attorney; and his counsel urgently pressed that he might be heard to show cause, on the ground that the conviction was illegal and void; but the alderman refused to hear him because the party was not personally present. We think that in so refusing the alderman was wrong in point of law. The legitimate object of the summons did not render necessary the personal appearance of the party, and that object might be better answered if he appeared by his counsel and attorney. In criminal cases, after a verdict of guilty, this court requires the personal appearance of a party; but, generally speaking, the judges are contented to have any question of fact or law discussed by counsel without the personal appearance of the client. It is unnecessary to consider the general law respecting occasions where the party in the course of legal proceedings is privileged to appear by attorney or counsel, as the Legislature has plainly intimated in such a case as that which we are here considering, that an appearance by counsel or attorney is sufficient. The statute of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, which is in pari materiâ with chapter 44, not only by section 12 allows, on the hearing of an information and complaint, that the parties may plead by counsel and attorney, but by section 18, which specifies what is to be done first at the return of the summons, when the complaint is to be heard, and the complainant or defendant do not appear, goes on to say: "But if both parties appear, either personally or by their respective counsel or attorneys, before the justice or justices who are to hear and determine such complaint or information, then the said justice or justices shall proceed to hear and determine the same." Upon the whole, it seems to us that the defence set up has entirely failed, and that the verdict which the plaintiff obtained ought not to be disturbed, and the rule, therefore, will be discharged. Rule discharged.

(a) At the close of the argument Lord Campbell, C. J. made the following observations in reference to the practice of searching prisoners:—"I wish," said his lordship, "to take this opportunity of correcting a misapprehension as to what is my opinion with respect to the practice of searching persons who are charged with offences. At the conclusion of the trial of this case, I expressed my disapprobation of the manner in which the plaintiff had been searched when taken to the station-house. I repeat the disapprobation which I then expressed, for there is no right in a case of this kind to inflict the indignity to which the plaintiff had been subjected. But I have been informed that an erroneous impression of what I said has gone abroad. It was supposed that I had said that there was no right in any one to search a prisoner at any time. I have not said so. It is often the duty of an officer to search a prisoner. If, for instance, a man is taken in the commission of a felony, he may be searched to see whether the stolen articles are in his possession, or whether he has any instruments of violence about him; and, in like manner, if he be taken on a charge of arson, he may be searched to see whether he has any fire-boxes or matches about his person. I take this opportunity of correcting the error, because I have received from that most useful officer, Sir Richard Mayne, to whom the country is much indebted for a most excellent discharge of his public duties, a communication stating that an idea has gone abroad that to search any person charged with an offence is forbidden by law. No such doctrine has been stated by me, nor would it be stated by any one who has the honour to occupy the seat which I now occupy. It may be highly satisfactory, and indeed necessary, that the prisoner should be searched. I have never said that searching a prisoner was always a forbidden act. What I said applied to circumstances such as existed in this case. If a tradesman should be charged with an offence such as that with which the plaintiff was charged in this case, and he appeared before the magistrate by counsel and not in person, and a warrant issued against him not charging him with any crime, but merely to make him appear in person, the act of searching him was contrary to law. It is said that the search here was justified, because the person in custody might have some instrument about him with which he might make away with or injure himself, or the alderman before whom he was brought. This does not appear a satisfactory reason; it assumes that when a man is apprehended, because he has in the first instance appeared by counsel, and not in person, he will take with him the means of committing suicide or murder. This is a most absurd supposition."

Reg. v. The Mayor and Assessors of Harwich.

Municipal corporation—Burgess list—Notice of objection.

The notice of objection required by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 17, to be given to the person objected to, need not describe his place of residence; and when the mayor and assessors in revising the burgess list had held that objection good, the Court issued a mandamus to compel them to adjudicate upon the case.

A rule nisi had been obtained for a mandamus to compel the mayor and assessors of Harwich to proceed with the revision of the burgess list for that borough, and to adjudicate upon the objection of one Joseph Gaup, who had objected to the name of James Broome being retained on that list.

The notice of objection was in the following form:—"To Mr. James Broome,

"I hereby give you notice that I object to your name being retained on the burgess list of the borough of Harwich. Dated, &c. "Joseph Gaup."

(Adding his place of abode and the property for which he was said to be rated in the burgess list.)

Upon the revision of the list by the mayor and assessors it was held that this notice of objection was insufficient, and the name of James Broome was therefore retained in the list.

Bliss, Serjt. now showed cause, and contended that that decision was right. The statute required that the notice should be in the form given in schedule D. form No. 3, or to the like effect. Now the form in the schedule was this:—"I hereby give you notice that I object to the name of Thomas Bates, of Brook's Farm, in the parish of (describe the person objected to as described in the burgess list,)" &c. [Lord Campbell, C.J.—That is the form of notice to the town-clerk.] The same form is given for the notice to the town-clerk, and also for the notice to the person objected to. [Lord Campbell, C. J.—Can it be necessary to tell the person objected to where he lives?] The statute prescribes the form.

Coleridge, J.—It is enough if the form is "to the like effect.

O'Malley and Lush, contrà, were not called upon.

Lord Campbell, C. J.—The form used substantially complies with the requirement of the statute. (a)

Reg. v. The Town Council of the City of York.

Regulation of borough gaols—Appointment of keeper of house of correction—Jurisdiction of justices and town council as to salary—Stat. 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 38.

The proviso to sect. 38 of stat. 1 Vict. c. 78, gives to the town council of a borough a control over the decision of the justices as to the amount of salary to be paid to the keeper of the gaol or house of correction, the word "confirmed" in that proviso being equivalent to "approved of."

Where, therefore, the justices had appointed a keeper of the house of correction at a salary of 120l. per annum, and made an order on the borough treasurer for payment of one quarter's salary, which was in arrear, and the treasurer and town council refused to pay so large an amount, the Court discharged a rule for a mandamus to compel them to do so.

A rule had been obtained calling upon the town council of the city of York to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue commanding them to confirm an order made by the justices of the said city in quarterly gaol session assembled, for the payment of 30*l.* by the treasurer of the said city to the keeper of the house of correction.

The rule was obtained upon affidavits, which disclosed that at the Easter gaol sessions of 1852 the justices had resolved that the salary of the keeper of the house of correction should be 120*l.* per annum; that they subsequently appointed Mr. Raper governor and keeper of the house of correction at that salary; that he entered upon his duties on the 1st June; that after the 1st Sept. when the first quarter's salary became due, he applied to the council for payment, but was refused on the ground that the council were not willing to give more than 90*l.* a year; and that at the December gaol sessions he applied to the justices, who made the order now in question.

Cowling showed cause.—This case depends upon the construction to be put on sect. 38 of 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, which enacts "that all the powers of regulation which before the passing of the said Act for regulating corporations (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76) were possessed by the justices having the government or ordering of any such gaol or house of correction; and all things by any Act of Parliament provided to be done at any general or quarter sessions of the peace in relation to the regulating of any such gaol or house of correction shall, subject to any such alteration as aforesaid, be exercised or done by the justices of the city or borough to which such gaol or house of correction shall belong, and for that purpose the justices shall hold a quarterly session at the usual times of holding quarterly sessions of the peace; provided that no order made by the justices in pursuance of these powers which shall require the expenditure or payment of any money shall be of force until confirmed by the council of that city or borough." The authority, therefore, as to the regulation of gaols which the justices had under stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 64, and which was transferred to the council by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 116, is by the above section restored to the justices, but with this qualification, that the town council may still exercise a control over the expenditure of the money: (R. v. Lancaster, 10 Q. B. 962.) The proviso to sect. 38 was clearly intended to give a discretion to the council; and that being so, they cannot be compelled by mandamus to confirm the order of the justices. Secondly, the order of the justices is bad, because it is made upon the treasurer of the city to pay, which is certainly ultra vires.

Bliss, contrà.—The power of framing the gaoler's salary belonged to the justices by the 6 Geo. 4; and the very object of the statute, 1 Vict. c. 78, ss. 37, 38, is to restore to them all the powers of regulation which had been taken by the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, still leaving to the town council the powers relating to the building of gaols; but if the argument on the other side is successful, all the most important powers of regulation will, in spite of the express provision of the Act, be transferred to the council. Almost every important step involves some expenditure of money; and it is contended that no effectual order which does involve the expenditure of money can be made by the justices without the sanction of the council. [Lord Campbell, C.J.—It may have been the intention to restore to the justices the powers of 6 Geo. 4, sub modo.] Practically, that would be a most inconvenient construction; for in many places it would operate to prevent the administration of justice altogether. It is clear that the town council have no power to order what is necessary to be done in regard to the regulation of gaols; and if their consent is necessary to give effect to the orders of the justices, it may be utterly impossible to make any provision for the proper custody of offenders. [Coleridge, J.—In the University of Oxford the same thing exists. The heads of houses originate measures, which Convocation can only negative or accept. However, it has sometimes been found inconvenient.] A power of confirmation is sometimes held to be ministerial only; and convenience requires that it should be so held in this case. (He referred to Reg. v. Bishop of London, 13 East; S.C. 15 East; Hammond v. Peacock, 1 Exch. 41.)

Lord Campbell, C. J.—This question is one depending entirely on the construction of the 38th sect. of 1 Vict. c. 78. This order was made under powers conferred by that section on the justices. May it not be that these powers were conferred sub modo? I see nothing absurd in such a construction, and it would appear as if such was the intention of the Legislature when it says that the orders are to be confirmed. "Confirm" may sometimes mean "verify" only, as in the case of auditors; but here, I think, "confirmed" means "approved of," so that the council are not bound to confirm what the justices have ordained; but they are to exercise a discretion. No doubt they could not absolutely refuse without any reason, but here they state that in their opinion a salary of 90*l.* a year only should be paid. I think that as to the propriety of the salary they have that power conferred on them, and here they may have had reason to think that a proper gaoler could be obtained for 90*l.* a year. It is necessary in all municipal or other corporations, such as the universities, for instance, that certain powers should be exercised, which are liable to abuse; but we cannot infer from the possibility of powers being unduly exercised, that they do not exist.

Coleridge, J.—The interpretation of the words of this section, as suggested by Mr. Cowling, is their natural and grammatical meaning, which is always to be preferred, if it satisfies the apparent intention of the Legislature, and is reasonable in itself. What is there unreasonable in saying in this case, that the powers given to the justices of making orders for the payment of money should not be of force unless confirmed by the council? Mr. Bliss contended that an order once made by the justices for the payment of money must be obeyed by means of orders to the treasurer issued by the council; but this is not the direct meaning of the Act, and I see no inconvenience in following its natural meaning.

Wightman, J.—By the Municipal Corporation Act all the powers of 4 Geo. 4 were transferred to the town council, and if there had been no subsequent alteration, the gaoler would have been appointed by them; but by 1 Vict. c. 78, all powers of justices under 4 Geo. 4 are to a certain extent taken away from the council, and the question is, what is the limit of this extent? Under the proviso, no order for the expenditure of any money shall be of force until confirmed. Now this is an order for the payment of money, and I think that something more than a mere indorsement of the order is meant by the word "confirm." It amounts, as my Lord has said, to "approved of." I cannot see that any inconvenience is likely to ensue from our giving this interpretation to the word. Rule discharged with costs.

QUEEN'S BENCH.

Conyers v. Hoskyns.

Practice—Amending indorsement on pluries writ—2 Will. 4, c. 39, s. 10—15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 222.

The original writ of summons was dated the 13th Oct. 1849, and was regularly continued till the 28th May, 1851, when a pluries writ was issued and served on the defendant. The indorsement of the date of the first writ on the pluries served was by mistake the 22nd Oct. 1849, instead of the 13th Oct. The defendant pleaded the Statute of Limitations, whereupon the plaintiff applied to amend the indorsement of the date of the first writ on the pluries and on the copy served, by altering the 22nd Oct. 1849, to 13th Oct. 1849:

Held, that as to the pluries writ the amendment might be made; but that as to the copy served it could not:

Semble, that defendant could not at the trial take advantage of the erroneous indorsement on the copy pluries served, after the amendment according to the truth on the pluries writ itself.

A rule nisi was obtained on a former day calling upon the defendant to show cause why the plaintiff should not be at liberty to amend the indorsement on the pluries writ of summons and copy thereof served, by altering the memorandum of the date of the original writ of summons from the 22nd Oct. 1849, to the 13th Oct. 1849, the latter being the correct day of the teste of the original writ, and the former being a mistake of the plaintiff's attorney's clerk. The object of the amendment was to prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations.

Crowder and Phinn showed cause.—Before the Common Law Procedure Act this amendment could not have been made. The 2 Will. 4, c. 39, s. 10, required that the pluries served should have on it at the time of the service, a memorandum of the date of the first writ of summons. Here the first writ was dated the 13th Oct. 1849; that was regularly continued; and on the 28th May, 1851, a copy pluries writ, with a memorandum that the first writ was issued on the 22nd Oct. 1849, was served. If the 22nd Oct. remains as the date of the first writ, the Statute of Limitations is a bar, but not if the 13th Oct. 1849 is substituted. It is now too late to cure the defect; for the copy pluries served was not indorsed as required by the 2 Will. 4, c. 39, s. 10. That was expressly decided in Medlicott v. Hunter, 5 Ex. 34, and Pritchard v. Bagshawe, 20 L. J. 161, C. P. The following cases were also referred to on this point: Roberts v. Bate, 6 A. & E. 778; Campbell v. Smart, 5 C. B. 196. Secondly, the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 222, does not apply to this case, as the writ was served long before that Act was passed; and the defendant had acquired a right to plead and had pleaded the Statute of Limitations. The maxim nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet, non præteritis, applies: (Moon v. Durden, 2 Ex. 22; Pinhorn v. Sonster, 21 L. J. 396, Ex.; Reg. v. Cronsan, 19 L. J. 20, M. C.; 14 Q. B. 221.) Then the 2 Will. 4, c. 39, is repealed by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 10, except for the purpose of supporting any writs issued under 2 Will. 4, c. 39. Thirdly, if this amendment were made now, it would not prevent defendant producing the copy served at the trial, and showing the original indorsement.

By the Court.—The amendment when made would be a substitution of the correct date of the first writ, instead of the erroneous date indorsed; and after that, it must be taken as if the amended date had always been on the writ. However, we should not refuse to amend on that ground merely.

M. Chambers, in support of the rule.—Before the Common Law Procedure Act there was a conflict of decisions as to the cases in which an amendment should be allowed in a writ of summons to prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations. In Williams v. Williams, 10 M. & W. 476; Galsworthy v. Nugee, 15 M. & W. 559; and Carne v. Malins, 20 L. J. 434, Ex., the amendment was allowed. Then the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76 came into operation on the 24th Oct. 1852, and from that day the courts had power to exercise its provisions on all proceedings then existing, and they are bound by it to exercise the power of amendment in the words of the preamble, so as to prevent "the failure of justice by reason of mistakes and objections of form." Sect. 222 enables the court "at all times to amend all defects and errors in any proceeding in civil causes, whether there is anything in writing to amend by or not . . . and all such amendments as may be necessary for the purpose of determining in the existing suit the real question in controversy between the parties shall be so made." This section applies to these proceedings which were existing when the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, came into operation. Besides, sect. 10 of that Act prevents the 2 Will. 4, c. 39, being now used to defeat this amendment, as it is repealed thereby for every purpose but that of supporting any writs issued under it.

Lord Campbell, C. J.—In this case I feel considerable difficulty in making this rule absolute in the terms in which it is drawn up; for it enables us to amend the copy of the writ served on the defendant, and that would be to indicate that the writ was served with the amended indorsement upon it. Therefore that part of the [illegible] discharged; but I am of opinion that the [illegible] ought to be made absolute. I do not feel it necessary to analyse the several authorities that have been cited; one or two of them seem to support the power to amend in this case, particularly that of Williams v. Williams. I place my judgment on section 222 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, which seems to me clearly to reach this case. Here the debt, for the recovery of which the action was brought, would have been barred on Oct. 22, 1849, by the Statute of Limitations; and on Oct. 18, 1849, a writ of summons was regularly issued and continued by alias and pluries writs down to May 28, 1851, when a pluries writ, regular in point of time, but having the memorandum of the date on the first writ of summons, by a clerical mistake as of Oct. 22, 1849, instead of Oct. 18, 1849, which was the true date of the first writ. If the pluries writ stands with its present indorsement, the plaintiff cannot take advantage of it, although regularly sued out in point of time, as a continuation of the first writ, so as to take the debt out of the operation of the Statute of Limitations. If we may amend it according to the fact, then the Statute of Limitations will be no defence, and the plaintiff can recover his debt. Under these circumstances, can it be said that the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, does not give us power to amend our own records according to the truth, by something that appears on our own records? The preamble to the amending clauses of the Act shows the intention of the Legislature. Between these parties there is a suit depending, and the real question in controversy is, whether the Statute of Limitations is a bar to the debt or not. Are we then not to order an amendment so as to make that issue to be determined according to the truth? There is nothing said about service of the writ in the 2 Will. 4, c. 39. As at present advised, I think that the defendant will in vain at the trial attempt to show that this amendment is a forgery, or to show as a defence what has been erased by this rule from the writ, for the amendment we make will show what was the original date of the first writ.

COLERIDGE, J. concurred.

WIGHTMAN J. concurred.

ERLE, J.—I am of opinion that we had the power of making this amendment before the statute; and if we had the power of amending the indorsement of the writ according to the truth before the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, à fortiori we have it now. This is an amendment in the common form; but it is said that if we allow it, we shall take away a vested right of the defendant to avail himself of the Statute of Limitations. It seems to me that every amendment takes away such a vested right of the opposite party to avail himself of a fatal defect. There is no need to amend the copy of the plurics writ served; and if we were to amend it we should be stating something that was not according to the fact. In Williams v. Williams and Culverwell v. Nugee, it was held that the courts had the same power to amend in cases like the present as in other cases. And, in some of the cases, I may observe, that a distinction has been made between an amendment according to the truth, and stating something in writing not according to the truth.

Rule absolute to amend the indorsement on the pluries writ.

REG. v. CHURCHWARDENS, &c. OF HESTON.

Order of sessions—Estoppel—Order for maintenance of lunatic.

An order of sessions was made quashing an order of removal from B. to H. on ground of a subsequent settlement in I. Subsequently an order of sessions was made quashing a second order of removal from B. to I., on the ground of a settlement gained in H. by hiring and service subsequently to that in I:

Held, that the removing parish B. was estopped by the first order from setting up the settlement by hiring and service in H. subsequent to that in I., as the same point was in dispute between the removing parish B. and H. when the first order was quashed, and such subsequent settlement might then have been set up in answer to the settlement in I., on which that order was quashed.

This was a case stated under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45 for the opinion of this court, by justice's order, after notice of appeal. The material facts are as follows:—On the 7th of February 1852 an order was made for the removal of Harriet Turner and her five children from the parish of St. Bride's to the parish of Heston, in Middlesex, the ground of removal being the birth settlement of the pauper's husband, William, and his father, John. This order was appealed against, and quashed by the Court of Quarter Sessions, on the ground that William had acquired a settlement by hiring and service in Isleworth parish in 1822. Another order was made in May 1852, at the instance of St. Bride's, on Isleworth parish, for the maintenance and expenses of William, the husband, a lunatic pauper, the ground of the order being the above-mentioned settlement by hiring and service in Isleworth in 1822. This order was also appealed against, and quashed by the Court of Quarter Sessions, on the ground of a subsequent settlement by hiring and service in Heston in 1851. In October 1852 a third order was obtained, at the instance of St. Bride's, upon Heston, for the maintenance and expenses of William, the lunatic, on the ground of the last-mentioned settlement by hiring and service in Heston in 1851. The question for the court was whether, on the hearing of the last order in Oct. 1852, the order of the 7th Feb. 1852 was an estoppel, and prevented St. Bride's from relying on the settlement by hiring and service in Heston in 1851.

Huddleston, in support of the order of sessions.—The real question is, whether an order adjudicating the settlement of the wife, quashed on appeal against an order of removal, is conclusive by way of estoppel, when an order is subsequently made for the maintenance and expense of the lunatic husband. [Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—The question comes to this—Is this an adjudication on the same facts, between the same parties, by a competent tribunal? COLERIDGE, J.—The point in the first order was the settlement of the husband.] The first order was as to the settlement of the wife; the last was for the maintenance and expense of her lunatic husband. There is a distinction between the two cases; and the first order is not conclusive: (Rex v. Wye, 7 A. & E. 761.) As to the effect of quashing an order, Rex v. Wick St. Lawrence, 5 B. & Ad. 526, is an authority. "An order of sessions quashing an order of removal is also conclusive between the contending parishes as to the point decided by it. Then the question is, what that point really is. It is that the parish to which the removal was directed to be made was not bound to receive the pauper. The court may have come to that decision either on the ground that the pauper was not settled in the parish to which he was sent, or that he was not chargeable, or was irremovable when the order was made." [COLERIDGE, J.—Here the first order was quashed on the ground that the husband had a settlement in Isleworth, by hiring and service; and the second order was quashed on the ground that the husband had gained a settlement in Heston by hiring and service, subsequent to that in Isleworth; and now you seek to show that the order of sessions, quashing the order of Feb. 7, was wrongly made, by reason of some fact since discovered, viz.—a settlement in Heston by hiring and service in 1851.] The Pauper Lunatic Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, s. 58, gives the justices power to inquire at any time into the settlement of a pauper lunatic sent to an asylum. This distinguishes the case from that of a common order of removal, as observed in Reg. v. St. Peter's, Droitwich, 9 Q. B. 886. If the order of Feb. 7 is held to be conclusive, the object of the above provision will be defeated.

Clarkson, contrà, was not called upon.

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.— The question here is, whether the order of the 7th Feb. with the additional evidence before us upon which it was made, estops the parish of St. Bride's from contending that at the time when the adjudication took place, in Oct. 1852, the pauper's husband was settled in Heston. The law on this subject is exceedingly well laid down in Rex v. Wick St. Lawrence, 5 B. & Ad. 526. I concur in that decision. It appears here that the point respecting the settlement of the husband on the 7th Feb. 1852 was adjudicated upon between the same parties before a competent tribunal, and that tribunal determined that the husband was not settled in Heston. Now the very same question arises on the order made in October, whether the husband was settled in the parish of Heston, and that was adjudicated upon when the order of removal of Feb. 7 was quashed, and it was adjudged that the husband was not settled in Heston. Mr. Huddleston allows that if the subsequent order had been an order of removal there would have been an estoppel, but distinguishes this as being an order of maintenance under the Pauper Lunatic Acts. The same question, however, arises on both orders. The validity of the order of maintenance depends on whether the husband was settled in Heston on the 7th Feb. 1852. That very same question between these same parties has been already adjudicated upon by a competent tribunal, and therefore the order of the 7th Feb. is an estoppel.

COLERIDGE.—I am of the same opinion. The first point is an elementary one pervading the whole law, and is not confined to orders of removal, viz:—That the same point between the same parties when once adjudicated upon is conclusive between them. But it is said that the order in this case is distinguishable because it is an order of maintenance of a lunatic pauper, and that by sect. 58 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, this point may be raised "at any time." Looking at the Act and the preceding section 57,—by which it is enacted that every pauper lunatic shall be deemed to be settled in the parish from whence sent to the asylum, until such parish shall in due course of law have established that such lunatic is settled in some other parish,—the object contemplated was the case of a poor lunatic, who can give no evidence on the point; and it may be an indefinite time therefore before it can be established where the pauper is settled. Consequently sect. 58 goes on to say that two justices at any time may inquire into the last legal settlement of any pauper lunatic confined in an asylum. The case of Rex v. Droitwich has nothing to do with this question. There the order was quashed on the ground that it ordered a repayment of the expenses of the lunatic to the wrong party. And we held that the grounds upon which the order was quashed might be given in evidence. We did not meddle with anything that had been already decided.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The grounds of distinction between this case and Rex v. Wick St. Lawrence, and for which the Pauper Lunatic Act is relied upon, do not appear to me to have the effect contended for. By the Act the justices may, at any time, inquire into the last legal settlement of the pauper; and, giving full effect thereto, this can only relate to the period at which the inquiry may be entered upon. But when once instituted, the question always remains the same as to the effect of the evidence; and what is conclusive at one time is so at another.

Order quashed.

R. v. EARNSHAW.

Quo warranto—Practice—Costs.

Where a rule for a quo warranto is made absolute by consent, the defendant undertaking to resign the office, the court will not exonerate him from the costs of a disclaimer if it should be necessary.

A rule nisi had been obtained for an information in the nature of a quo warranto, requiring the defendant to show by what authority he exercised the office of councillor of Oldham.

Cowling now appeared for the defendant, and stated that he did not wish to defend his title; but he asked that the rule should be absolute, the defendant paying the costs of this application, but not the costs of a disclaimer, if it should become necessary. Those were the terms imposed in Reg v. Morton, 4 Q. B. 149; and R. v. Appleyard, not reported; but in R. v. Sidney, 2 Pract. Rep. 144, Erle, J. in the Ball Court, refused to sanction that course.

Sir F. Thesiger, contrà, was not heard.

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—The latter case, before Erle, J. quite accords with my impression. Why should the costs of the disclaimer be thrown upon the relator?

Rule absolute generally.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, Jan. 27.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. delivered judgment in the following cases:—

HAYLOCKE v. SPARKE. Rule discharged.

MELLOR v. LEATHER. Rule absolute.

REG. v. THE ALDERGATE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Judgment for defendants on the principal point.

REG. v. KAY DINSDALE.—The Attorney-General moved for a rule for a criminal information against the defendant for writing a libellous letter to a clerk in the office of the secretary to the Master of the Horse. Rule nisi.

REG. v. A. WILSON.—Hugh Hill showed cause against a rule to set aside the side-bar rule requiring the defendant to pay the costs of the prosecution, pursuant to 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 11, he having removed the indictment into this court by certiorari, and having been subsequently convicted. The prosecution was for ill treating a child, and had been conducted by the City solicitor at the express request of the Lord Mayor. R. v. ——, 15 Q. B. 1060, and cases there cited, were referred to; but it was admitted in this case that the Lord Mayor would not be personally liable for the costs of the prosecution, which would be defrayed by the City. Sir F. Thesiger, contrà, was not called upon. By the COURT.—The Act was intended to indemnify a prosecutor from payment of costs to which he would otherwise be liable; but that is not this case. In a case where the costs of prosecution were to be defrayed by a subscription, it was held that the defendant could not be required to pay the costs under this Act. Rule absolute.

BIBBY v. LARPENT.—Paterson moved to set aside an order of Coleridge, J. allowing the defendants to take proceedings in error without putting in bail, and staying execution till a final decision in the House of Lords, on the ground of an improper exercise of discretion, and also excess of authority. The judge had no power to stay execution until decision in the House of Lords. Under the new Procedure Act, the record leaves this Court. By the COURT.—Still, after judgment in error the execution would proceed from this Court; and as the question raised in this case has been already decided in the Ex. Ch. the proceedings in that court would be formal only, and the case would go at once to the House of Lords. It is of course implied in the order that due diligence should be used in obtaining the decision of that tribunal. The Court will never interfere with the exercise of a judge's discretion at chambers; and there was clearly no excess of authority. Rule refused.

REG. v. NEW SARUM.—Crowder and M. Smith showed cause against a rule for a mandamus to the town council to pay to the county treasurer a sum of money for the expenses of conveying city offenders to the county gaol and maintaining them therein, including costs of repairing the gaol. The latter item was disputed by the borough; and the question now was, whether there had been a "special contract" between the city and the county, by which the payments were to be governed, within the meaning of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98, s. 18. Smirke, contrà, was not called upon. By the COURT.—This case is too important to be decided upon the rule. We think therefore the writ ought to issue; and our present impression is, that there was no special contract, and that the city is liable. Rule absolute.

REG. v. THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—J. Brown moved for a rule for a mandamus to enforce payment of a sum of money, pursuant to the verdict of a compensation jury. Rule nisi.

REG. v. CARR.—J. Brown showed cause against a rule for a quo warranto to try the defendant's right to the office of councillor of the city of Oxford. He admitted that Mr. Carr was disqualified, but the person who had allowed the use of his name as relator was not the person really moving in the matter. Welsby, contrà, was not heard. Rule absolute.

DOE v. ACKLAND.—J. Brown showed cause against a rule for a new trial herein. The question was as to the identity of the premises sought to be recovered. Channell, Serjt. and Lush, contrà. Rule absolute on payment of costs.

Friday, Jan. 28.

The Chelmsford Archbridge Company.—The Court delivered judgment herein; Coleridge, J. and Erle, J. in favour of making the rule absolute for arresting the judgment; and Lord Campbell, C.J. and Wightman, J. contrà.

Rule discharged.

Tidd v. Briggs.—Rose moved for a quo warranto calling on the defendant to show by what authority he exercised the office of town councillor of Trinity Ward in the borough of Blackburn. Rule nisi.

Reg. v. Coates.—The Attorney-General showed cause. The Court, without calling on the other side, made the rule absolute.

Baker v. Benson.—Tried before Crompton, J. when the plaintiff was nonsuited. E. James now moved for a new trial. Rule nisi.

Theobald v. Cotterell.—Action against the Sheriff of Middlesex for a false return. Tried before Erle, J. Verdict for the defendants. E. James moved for a new trial.

Rule refused.

Reg. v. The Mayor of Newwick.—Willes moved for a mandamus to fill up a vacancy in the office of alderman, the statutable period having been allowed to elapse.

Rule absolute in the first instance.

Re The Bishop of Chichester and Dr. Phillpotts.—Queany moved for a prohibition to restrain any further proceedings in a case of Bastiaen v. Bodwin in the Consistory Court at Chichester. Cur. adv. vult

Doe d. Parkinson.—Whateley showed cause against a rule nisi for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. The point turned on the construction of a will, but it is too clear to demand a report. Keating, in support of the rule, was not called upon. Rule absolute.

Saturday, Jan. 29.

Reg. v. Day.—Bramwell and Lush showed cause against a rule for a quo warranto as to the office of coroner; and the substantial question was whether certain votes had a legal freehold, so as to qualify them to vote, under the provisions of a local Act called the Bowmoor Act. T. Campbell Foster, contrà. Rule absolute, that the question may be raised in a special case, or upon a return.

Reg. v. Barnet.—No cause shown. Rule absolute.

Howard v. Hudson.—Trespass for false imprisonment in the Remand Ward of the Queen's Prison. The defendant justified under a commitment of the plaintiff under the Insolvent Debtors' Act. The plaintiff now assigned a detention for three days after he was entitled to his discharge pursuant to the warrant of the County Court judge. The defendant pleaded that he did not receive the warrant; and issue was joined upon that plea. At the trial before Erle, J. the evidence was that the defendant never received the original warrant, but that he received a certified copy and acted upon it as if it were an original, and led the plaintiff to believe that he had the original. The learned judge directed a verdict for the defendant, but gave the plaintiff leave to move. Parry now moved accordingly to enter the verdict for the plaintiff on the above issue, or for plaintiff non obstante veredicto. Rule nisi

Re Davey.—This was an application against an attorney, but the Master's report exonerated the defendant from the charges made against him. Rule discharged

Reg. v. The Judge of the County Court of York.—R. E. Miller moved for a rule for a mandamus requiring the defendant to issue his warrant to bring up a prisoner for redearing under the Insolvent Act. Rule nisi

Lord Cawdor v. Beresford.—Alexander and Willes showed cause against a rule to set aside an award Hugh Hill and Bullivant, contrà. Rule discharged with costs

Huntley v. Russell.—Mellor moved for a rule to set aside an award on the ground of a refusal to receive evidence. Rule nisi.

Taylor v. Hill.—Paterson moved for a rule to set aside an award. Rule refused.

Chapters v. Hunter.—Needham showed cause against a rule to set aside a writ of exgn. facias, and all subsequent proceedings, on the ground that the writ was tested on the return day of the capias instead of the quarto die post. The defendant knew of the irregularity as long ago as the 1st Nov. and made no application until the 6th Dec. Prideaux, contrà. By the Court.—The application is too late.

Rule discharged without costs

Re The Town Clerk of Hull.—Hugh Hill moved for a rule for a mandamus requiring the overseers of a parish in Hull to pay to the town clerk a sum of 48*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* as the contribution of the said parish towards the expenses of the town clerk in carrying into execution the Registration of Electors Act (6 Vict c. 18), according to the certificate of the council, under s. 55. Rule nisi

Re Blackwell.—Cowling moved for a rule for a mandamus to the corporation of Newcastle-upon-Tyne to permit Mr Blackwell to exercise the office of alderman. He was entitled to the office, judgment of ouster having been entered upon informations against the other candidates. Rule nisi.

Ex parte The Pinner and Rickmersworth Turnpike Trustees.—Wells moved for a rule for a writ of certiorari to bring up an order of justices, made under sect. 94 of the Highway Act, requiring the trustees to repair a turnpike-road. The objection was that there ought to have been a previous order upon the parish. Rule nisi

Reg. v. The Justices of Durham.—Cowling moved for a writ of certiorari to remove an order of quarter sessions, on the ground that an interested justice had taken part in the decision. Writ granted.

Re Hartley.—Paterdorff showed cause against a rule calling upon Mr. Hartley to deliver up a will. Kingdon, contrà. Rule absolute without costs.

Kitts v. Powell. (Argument continued.) Keating and Orby showed cause. Adjourned.

Monday, Jan. 31.

Reg. v. Newman.—The defendant was brought up for judgment for a libel on Dr. Achilli.

Fined 100*l*, and to be imprisoned until paid.

The Commissioners of Lynn Harbour v. The East Anglican Railway Company.—Sir F. Kelly moved for a rule calling on the defendants to perform certain works in pursuance of an award. Rule nisi.

Howard v. Brown.—This was a rule for an injunction and an account in an action for infringement of a patent. Atherton (Quain with him) appeared to show cause; and Sir F. Thesiger (Webster with him) contra.

Rule absolute for an account from date of writ.

Re The Bishop of Winchester and Dr. Phillpotts.—The Court gave judgment herein. Rule refused.

Court of Common Pleas.

Reported by Daniel Thomas Evans and R. Vaughan Williams, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

Quartermaine and others v. Bittleston and another, Assignees of a Bankrupt.

Bankruptcy—12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. ss. 125, 126, 127, 128—Goods of Bankrupt—"Goods in his order and disposition"—Order of the Court of Bankruptcy.

An order under the 125*th section of the Bankruptcy Act authorising the sale of goods, which the bankrupt has in his possession at the time of the bankruptcy as the reputed owner, with the consent of the true owner, must be specific, that is, must be so worded as to show what goods they are that in the Court of Bankruptcy ought to be dealt with by the assignees, and disposed of by them as bankrupt's property in respect of reputed ownership.*

Semble, that such order may be made by the Commissioner on an ex parte application.

Semble, also, that in some cases it would not be necessary that the owner of the goods should be specified, but only the goods themselves.

Semble, also, that the Commissioner, before making such order, ought to require a good prima facie case to be made out by the assignees.

Per Maule, J. "Reputed ownership" must be inferred from outward appearances.

This was an action of trover, tried at the Leicestershire Spring Assizes, before Maule, J., in which, upon the pleas of not guilty and not possessed, a verdict was found for the plaintiffs for 621*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* subject to a special case. The defendant Bittleston was the official assignee under the bankruptcy of F. G. Cuff, formerly the landlord of the Bell Hotel, Leicester, who was adjudicated a bankrupt on the 29th July 1851. The question for the court to decide was whether the plaintiffs, who were trustees for the children of the late Mrs. Cuff, or the assignees, were entitled to certain goods remaining on the premises of the Bell Hotel at the time of the bankruptcy. There were several points raised during the argument, but the case turned upon the effect of an order of the Commissioner of Bankruptcy in the following terms: "It is hereby ordered that all the goods and chattels which at the time the said E. G. Cuff became bankrupt were by the consent and permission of the true owner thereof in the possession, order, or disposition of the said E. G. Cuff, whereof the said E. G. Cuff was reputed owner, or whereof he had taken upon him the sale, alteration, or disposition as owner, shall be forthwith sold and disposed of by the assignees of the estate and effects of the said E. G. Cuff for the benefit of the creditors under the bankruptcy."

Bramwell, Q. C. Hayes, and Willes for the plaintiffs.—The question here mainly turns upon sections 125 and 128 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. It is submitted that these goods were not "in the possession, order, or disposition of the bankrupt," and that the order of the Commissioner is inoperative. The plaintiffs were, in point of law, the owners of these goods, subject to an equity of redemption. They had power to carry on the business; and as the house was an hotel, there was an obligation on them to keep it open and the business moving. They kept possession through Barton, though he appeared a mere guest in the house. [Cresswell, J. referred to Toussaint v. Harcourt, Holt's N. P. Cas. 335.] Even if a case of reputed ownership were made out by the assignees, that is not enough; the statute requires something more. Firstly, they must be in the possession, order, or disposition at the time of the bankruptcy; secondly, they must be in his possession, order, or disposition, as reputed owner. So that it will be seen mere reputed ownership is not sufficient; the bankrupt may be the reputed owner, and not have the goods in his possession, order, or disposition. Furthermore, it is intended by the statute that the bankrupt, in addition, must also have the goods in his possession as true owner. Here, as appears upon the facts, the goods were not in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, but in that of the plaintiffs. It was found, as a fact, that Barton was in the house, and he was the only person who had the order and disposition of the goods. (Toussaint v. Harcourt, supra; Jackson v. Irvine, 2 Camp. 48.) Those cases proceeded upon the ground that the possession was colourable and not real. As to whether Cuff was the reputed owner of the goods, it ought to have been shown and stated as a fact on the case that Cuff was the reputed owner. There is no presumption of ownership. [Maule, J.—The opinion as to reputed ownership is what may be inferred from outward appearances, and, in the case of an hotel-keeper, unless people have the means of knowing that he is no longer owner, they will infer from the house being kept open as usual that he is.] As to the circumstance of being an hotel-keeper, there is the case of Mulling v. Green, 1 Car. & P. 382. [Maule, J.—You need not argue the point any further; we are all of opinion that Cuff was the "reputed owner."] (He argued on other points, upon which however, as above-stated, the case did not eventually turn, citing numerous authorities.) Lastly, as to the sufficiency of the order. Under the 125th section, certain words which were in the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] fault. The [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

this case is entitled to satisfy the provisions of the Act. If [illegible] is entitled to answer [illegible] the Act requires, [illegible] the assignees [illegible] of all property of which the bankrupt was [illegible] possession, or which he has had the disposition with the consent of the true owner, at the time of the act of bankruptcy, does not satisfy the requisites of the statute. The Act of Parliament says (and we must assume an order is necessary for this purpose) that if any bankrupt at the time he becomes bankrupt shall, by the consent and permission of the true owner thereof, have in his possession, order, or disposition any goods or chattels whereof he was reputed owner, or whereof he had taken upon him the sale, alteration, or disposition as owner, the court shall have power to order the same (that is the goods of which he shall be in possession as reputed owner, or have the order and disposition of with the consent of the true owner) to be sold; and I think, in accordance with the decision of the Lords Justices, that an ex parte order is sufficient for the purpose. But, at all events, the order which is to be made in respect of the goods of which the bankrupt is in possession as reputed owner, with the consent of the true owner, must be specific. If that is necessary, this order does not comply with the requisite of the statute, because it in general terms authorises the assignees to sell and dispose of any goods of any kind, and at any time, of which this bankrupt might, at the time of the bankruptcy, have been in possession. And that that is the fair effect of the section I think may be gathered from the subsequent sections which follow immediately upon this section; all are governed by the general introduction with respect to the power of the court over certain descriptions of property; and if we see in the sections that immediately follow anything that would not be satisfied by a general order, but for which a specific order is required, and if the same words are used as are used in the other sections of the Act which require a specific order, it seems to follow that a specific order must be given to satisfy the words of the statute. Now that, for the purposes of some of the sections, a specific order is required, is manifest, because, if you look at the 126th section, you find it authorises the court to make a specific order "if any bankrupt, being at the time insolvent, shall (except upon the marriage of any of his children, or for some valuable consideration) have conveyed, assigned, or transferred to any of his children, or to any other person, any hereditaments, offices, fees, annuities, leases, goods, or chattels, or have delivered or made over to any such person any bills, bonds, notes, or other securities, or have transferred his debts to any other person or into any other person's name, the court shall have power to order the same to be sold and disposed of for the benefit of the creditor under the bankruptcy." Now it is plain in that case what they are to order to sell are the hereditaments and goods transferred, bonds assigned, and debts made over; but no one can say the assignees shall sell and dispose of any hereditaments transferred, all debts assigned, all bonds handed over; it must be that, upon petition (on ex parte application, possibly, according to the decision of the Lords Justices) the Commissioners must be satisfied that some property has been assigned, some bills made over, or that some debts have been transferred, and the order must be to sell the same, that is, the property assigned or bills transferred, which are the subject of the application to the Commissioner. So in sect. 127, where the bankrupt has any personal or real estate extended by a fraudulent extent, if the extent were made under certain circumstances, the court shall have power, and may recover the same against the person claiming under it. It is plain, therefore, that the power and authority of the court are directed to the specific article extended, and must be confined to that. Then, in the following section, the 128th—"If any bankrupt shall have any government stock, funds, or annuities, or any of the stock of any public company either in England, Scotland, or Ireland, standing in his name in his own right, it shall be lawful for the court by writing to order all persons whose act or consent is thereto necessary to transfer the same into the name of the assignees, and to pay all dividends upon the same to the official assignee"—there must be a specific order directing the subject-matter of the property which is brought before the Commissioner by a specific though an ex parte application. It seems to me, therefore, when you view this section in connection with the subsequent sections, taken with the interpretation put upon it in Heslop v. Baker in the Court of Ex., inasmuch as there must be an order to vest the property in the assignees, it must be a specific order, though made on ex parte application, directed to the particular goods, to satisfy the provisions of the statute; and I think it is not at all inconsistent with the view taken by the Court of Ex. of the section. They say the section is not for the mere purpose of authorising the sale, but that an order to sell and dispose of is an order to vest, those words comprehending everything which the assignees, when they get the property, can by possibility do with it, because if they get that they must dispose of it in some way, and that order to sell and dispose of vests, by implication, the property in the goods. If an order to sell be necessary, it seems to me that an order to sell must be an order to sell the particular property which is the subject-matter of the order. It is unnecessary to inquire whether these words were inserted by design, or accident, or negligence and inadvertence; I do not know how that is; those who have anything to do with framing an Act of Parliament are, of all others, the worst persons to put a construction on it. We must take it as it is in the enactment. If they were inserted by design, there is much to be said in favour of their introduction, because, if you recollect, the goods are to be taken as goods that are, by admission, the property of another person; and it is not unfair to suppose that at least a primâ facie case should be made before the Commissioner before the real owner of the goods be put to litigation to test the right of property. There is much to be said (and possibly by accident a great good may have been done) in favour of the beneficial amendment of the law of bankruptcy by these words. The words being there, we are bound to put a construction on them; and, taking them in connection with the case of Heslop v. Baker, the order does not satisfy the provisions of the Act, and the plaintiff is entitled to our judgment.

MAULE, J.—I am of the same opinion. It appears that the provision of this Act of Parliament varies from the provisions in former Acts. In effect (though it might have been doubtful at first, and we doubted it), the provisions in the former Acts vested at once, without anything more, in the assignees all property of which the bankrupt was reputed owner, or had or took upon himself the order and disposition. In those cases the former Acts at once vested the property in the assignees, from the time of the act of bankruptcy, as much as if the property had been the property of the bankrupt. Now, certainly, that was a provision in the Act of Parliament in which the interests of a bankrupt's creditor appear to have been more considered than those of the true owner. That was natural enough in those who were distributing the property of the bankrupt, and whose main object it was to cause a distribution of all property that ought to be distributed among the creditors of the bankrupt. Now there was danger under that, that property which ought not to be distributed might come to be distributed; and though that might not happen often, yet there was danger that the true owner might suffer considerable vexation if that state of things were allowed to exist; and when the assignees seized goods that belonged to a third person, that third person had no means of knowing whether they claimed them as the bankrupt's, in all time and independent of the bankruptcy, or whether they claimed them as being subject to the same distribution as the bankrupt's property, and therefore vested in the assignees by virtue of the reputed ownership. There was nothing to give the true owner any notice or warning as to whether it would be set up or not, and, indeed, it very constantly happened that the question was, whether a certain property was that of the person who was the true owner of it. The assignees would make a case, in which they would say, this is the property of the bankrupt; or if not, at any rate it was in his possession before the bankruptcy, and it came into the possession of the assignees as if the bankrupt was the true owner. Now, depriving a man of his undoubted property under these circumstances was a very harsh measure as far as he was concerned, and more particularly as it was put and considered as a sort of delinquency on his part, namely, as enabling a bankrupt to obtain false credit by passing for the owner of goods of which he was not the owner, so that in that state of things the assignees might, at their election, seize the property, and take on themselves the whole responsibility of proving it was in the reputed ownership of the bankrupt, with the consent of the true owner, without any control over it. Now, the object of this section, I think, is, that they shall not do that unless they are in a condition to make (it means not only to a jury, but to a competent court) such a primâ facie case that such a court can see they have authority over the case in which those goods have been seized. In order to that purpose being effectuated, it shall be considered what sort of order there ought to be. Now, I observe the order is something like, and has some sort of analogy to, the finding of a bill by a grand jury, that before a person's liberty be affected, or he shall be tried for a supposed offence, a primâ facie case must be made to a competent tribunal to show that he is a person in respect of whom a case exists that is fit to be tried by a jury. Now I think it is a similar function that is intended to be conferred upon the Court of Bankruptcy, and that, in order duly to execute that, you must go beyond showing simply what is suggested ingeniously by the learned counsel, when I objected to the order, supposing it to be an order in this form, namely, to take all the goods that were in the order or disposition of the bankrupt, at the time of the bankruptcy, which would be quite inoperative. He said it might just as well have left that to the assignees (or nearly as well), without showing anything more than such an order: but it was answered thus,—still there would be something to inquire into, whether there were assets arising out of the actual property of the bankrupt, whether or not sufficient to pay all his debts in full. That is a very rare case, I allow, though not an impossible one. I do not think the Commissioner would have taken the trouble to enter a new species of dealing with such a contingency as that; but I think the true object of the Act would effectuate that—that the Commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy ought to have an opportunity (ex parte, indeed, as held by the Lords Justices, but still to have an opportunity) of deciding on all the matters which the assignees would have to prove before a jury, in order to entitle them to take away the property from the person whose property it was. It seems to me not unreasonable, and seems to be gathered from the Act of Parliament, particularly with reference to what had gone before in the way of legislation, that the court ought to inquire as to all that a jury would have to inquire into on a trial, or that you are in the habit of inquiring into before certain functionaries; and if the assignees are not in a situation to make (in the absence of any opposition before the Court of Bankruptcy, or if they should dismiss their application before a Court of Appeal) a case for taking away certain goods, I think they ought not to be allowed to try the question before a jury. Now I do not think this order comes within the scope and intention of the Act. I do not think this order is sufficient. If the matter were tried before a jury, particular goods must necessarily be the subject of the trial. Upon a trial before a common jury they would have the power, and must necessarily inquire into the question whether certain particular goods were in the order and disposition of the true owner. Now this order does not apply to any particular goods, and it does not mention any particular owner; and I do not say it would be necessary absolutely in all cases that the goods of a particular owner must be specified; but it should be so worded as to show what goods they are that in the Court of Bankruptcy ought to be dealt with by the assignees, and disposed of by them as bankrupt's property in respect of reputed ownership. The order does not do that unless it does specify the things or the goods intended to be taken. Now this order entirely remits that to the assignees, to determine on their own inquiry, upon grounds not laid before the commissioners (or whether it had been laid before them or not)—leaves it to the assignees to seize any goods belonging to any person, whether or not they have been at all mentioned or put in question before the Court of Bankruptcy; and therefore I think it does not give to the true owner of the goods the benefit the Act of Parliament intended to give. One advantage would be this, that the true owner might always, by inspecting the proceedings in bankruptcy or by proper means, see whether any such order had been made; he would have some notice of the way in which his goods were sought to be taken away from him, whether as being in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, or in respect of their belonging to the bankrupt himself; and it would give notice and information on that subject, and he would have a remedy which he is intended to have. I therefore think that the plaintiff is entitled to the judgment.

CRESSWELL, J.—I am of the same opinion, for the reasons that have been so fully assigned by my Lord and my brother Maule. I do not think it necessary to add anything. I think the order is not sufficient.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am quite of the same opinion; it is unnecessary to decide more than that the order must point to the specific goods which are the subject of investigation.

JERVIS, J.—The order must be specifically directed to the goods which are the subject of the order, Judgment for the plaintiffs.

Thursday, Jan. 27.

MITCHELL AND WIFE v. CRASWELLER, AND ANOTHER.

Negligence of servant—Liability of master.

A master is not liable for the negligence of his servant, unless the servant is at the time actually engaged in the business of his master.

A.'s servant, after going with his master's horse and cart about the business of his master, on his return, before putting up the horse and cart, took another person home in the cart. On his way back he ran over a person:

Held, that A. was not liable.

This was an action in which it was sought to recover damages from the defendants for the injury caused to the plaintiff's wife by the negligent driving of the servant of the defendants. The first count of the declaration was for the injury done to the wife personally. The second count claimed damages for the husband

Plea, not guilty. Jervis, C.J. at the trial, allowed a plea to be added traversing the allegation "that the defendants were possessed of the cart and horse."

The facts were that the driver had been sent with the cart to deliver goods in the city, and upon his return the foreman asked him to take him home in the cart. This he did without the permission of the defendants, and on his way back he threw the plaintiff Mrs. Mitchell down, and did the injury complained of. The Lord Chief Justice directed the jury to find for the plaintiffs, and they assessed the damages at 30*l.* under the first count, and 10*l.* under the second.

Byles, Serjt. showed cause against a rule which had been obtained by Shee, Serjt.—It was the duty of the servant upon his returning from the city to take the horse to the stable; and, instead of doing so, he drove the horse elsewhere. He was therefore not engaged upon any business of his masters, and they are not responsible for his negligence: (Joel v. Morrison, 6 C. & P. 501; Sleath v. Wilson, 9 C. & P. 607; Lamb v. Polk, 9 C. & P. 629.)

Shee, Serjt. and Garth, in support of the rule.—The cart was under the care of the servant, and his business was not over until the cart was put up. The master is not relieved from liability by the servant going extra viam. The principle is that he is responsible to the public for employing a negligent servant (M'Manus v. Crickett, 1 East, 106.) Secondly, the judge had no power to allow the plea to be added, and the plea of not guilty admits the matter of inducement, that the defendants were possessed of the horse and cart (Faverner v. Little, 5 Bing. N. C. 286); and therefore the evidence as to this should not have been admitted.

By the COURT.—The evidence that the defendants were not possessed of the cart and horse at the time when the accident happened was properly admitted under the plea of not guilty. Whether the judge had power to allow the amendment may be a matter for further consideration; but it is not necessary to be decided now. With respect to the main point, the servant could not be considered as engaged in the performance of his master's business; and the defendants are not liable for his negligence.

Rule discharged.

DALLOWAY v. TAYLOR.

A writ of distringas was received by the sheriff, who sent a warrant to his officer by post. The warrant was lost, and the plaintiff delayed:

Held, that it was the duty of the sheriff to send the warrant, and, it being lost, he ought to pay the expenses incurred by the plaintiff.

In this case a rule had been obtained by Bayley calling on the plaintiff to show cause why a warrant should not be renewed. It appeared that a distringas issued, and was returnable on the 2nd Dec. last. On writing to the sheriff's officer, the plaintiff's attorney learnt that the warrant from the sheriff, which had been sent to him by post, had not come to hand, and had, in fact, been lost. The application for a renewal of the warrant was opposed, on the ground that the distringas being now taken away by the Common Law Procedure Act, the plaintiff would be delayed till May; and would get judgment sooner by beginning de novo under that Act; and moreover, the writ of summons having run out, proceedings on it could not be taken.

Bayley, for the sheriff of Essex.—The distringas issued before the Act came into operation, and unless it can be shown that the sheriff was to blame, he ought to be relieved.

JERVIS, C. J.—But you ask us in fact to issue a new distringas, and that we cannot do. The plaintiff is entitled to have the expenses to which he has been put repaid to him. The sheriff received the writ, and the duty was upon him to send the warrant. Let it be referred to the Master to ascertain what costs have been reasonably incurred by the plaintiff and lost, and This rule is discharged with costs.

Where the sheriff seizes goods under a writ of fi. fa. and before removal of the goods an interpleader order is obtained, for the purpose of ascertaining the ownership of the goods, the sheriff ought not to pay the rent due to the landlord.

Stat. 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, was intended to apply to cases only where the landlord has lost his chances of distraining upon goods by their removal; and the Interpleader Act does not affect this.

In this case Watson, Q.C. had obtained a rule calling upon the defendant to show cause why an order of Cresswell, J., that the sum of 25*l.* should be paid over by the plaintiffs to the defendant, should not be set aside.

The plaintiffs, as sheriffs, had seized under a fi. fa. certain goods which were claimed by the defendant as belonging to him. An interpleader order was granted to ascertain to whom the goods in question belonged. The goods were sold by the sheriffs, but remained upon the premises. The landlord claimed 25*l.* for rent: this the sheriffs paid to him. Upon the trial of the issue the verdict was for the claimant.

[illegible], Serjt. showed cause.—The sheriffs had no power to pay the 25*l.* to the landlord. Stat. 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, enacts that no goods or chattels whatsoever lying or being in or upon any messuage, &c. shall be liable to be taken by virtue of any execution on any pretence whatsoever, unless the party at whose suit the said execution is sued out shall, before the removal of such goods from off the said premises by virtue of such execution or extent, pay to the landlord of the said premises or his bailiff all such sum or sums of money as are or shall be due for rent." Here there has been really no execution; for, until the interpleader issue was tried, it was uncertain whether the sheriff should hold for the execution creditor or for the claimant, and that issue was found for the claimant. He has paid the rent with another's goods. [JERVIS, C.J.—In granting the rule we understood the goods were removed, and the question intended to be raised was whether, whatever goods were removed the sheriff could say he ought not to pay the rent to the landlord, because the goods were the goods, not of the tenant, but of somebody else; and we were referred to Forster v. Cookson, 1 Q. B. 419.] That case does not apply here, the goods not having been removed, and the landlord being able to distrain at any time: (Smalman v. Pollock, 6 M. & G.)

Watson, Q. C. in support of the rule.—The meaning of the statute is, that where the sheriff seizes what the landlord might have the right to distrain, he must pay the rent. The sheriff was under a positive order to sell. [JERVIS, C. J.—But there is nothing in the interpleader order to alter the rights of parties. You might have gone to the judge to alter the order.] The claim for rent comes after the order to sell. [WILLIAMS, J.—The sheriff did not sell under the execution, but under the judge's order.] But the order was given on the foundation of the execution.

JERVIS, C. J.—This rule must be discharged. Until after the interpleader issue was tried, it was uncertain whether there would be an execution or not. After the order for the interpleader, a claim for rent is made by the landlord. The sheriff takes upon himself to pay 25*l.* to the landlord, in disobedience to that order. The order of Cresswell, J. was merely to place the parties in the same state they were in before. I think his order was right. This matter cannot be affected by the Interpleader Act, which does not propose to deal with the claim of the landlord under the statute of Anne, and that statute was only intended to apply to cases where the landlord has lost his chances of distraining on the goods by their removal. Rule discharged with costs.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Friday, Jan 28.

The Court sat to-day in the Exchequer Chamber, hearing errors from the Court of Q. B.

Saturday, Jan. 29.

DUNNETT v. HOWARD.—Byles, Q.C. and Couch, showed cause against a rule obtained by Honeyman, calling upon the defendant to show cause why an award should not be set aside, on the ground that the award was bad, the arbitrator having awarded one entire sum as due to the said defendant in his own right, and as administrator of Geo. Howard, without specifying how much was due to him in his own right, and how much in his representative capacity. Bramwell, Q.C. and Honeyman, appeared to support the rule. JERVIS, C.J.—The submission refers all matters in difference between the plaintiff and defendant, either in the defendant's own right, or as administrator of Geo. Howard, and the arbitrator awards a lump sum. I should say the parties had consented to the award being made in this form, it being natural that one lump sum should be awarded. What the plaintiff complains of is, that the arbitrator has not given him the means of distinguishing what is awarded to the defendant in his own right, and what in his representative capacity. But if he says the whole sum there will be no difficulty.

Rule discharged with costs.

LIVERPOOL AND LONDON FIRE AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY v. PRICHARD.—M. Smith showed cause. Byles, contrà. Cur. adv. vult.

Monday, Jan 31.

MOFFATT v. DIXON.—The COURT intimated that they would postpone giving judgment in this case till next term.

LIVERPOOL INSURANCE, &c. v. ———. The COURT delivered judgment in this case. Rule discharged.

CLOTHIER v. GANDELL.—Lush moved for a rule to show cause why the Master should not be directed to review his taxation in this matter. The Master had allowed the defendant full costs of proving the first issue. As to the conclusion the Master came to in taxing the plaintiff's costs, it cannot be resisted. But he went wrong on the other items: he disallowed the costs of inspection and copies of documents by the defendant. Application had been made by the other side for vouchers and copies of accounts, which we gave them at their request. The Master thought there was no difference between the plaintiff's costs of proving his issues and those costs. The COURT, after consulting with the Master, said the Master was quite right, and the rule therefore must not go. Rule refused.

Ex parte HAWKE.—F. James, Q. C. obtained a rule calling on E. Goatley, one, &c to show cause why Hawke, his articled clerk, should not be discharged from his articles of clerkship, and why he should not be re-assigned to one Julius Lawrence. The discussion of this case lasted a considerable time, the affidavits on both sides were very long and recriminatory; and as no point of interest or substance was decided in the case, and as the publication of the facts can serve no useful purpose, we withhold them. Wordsworth supported the rule. Ultimately the COURT, by consent of parties, disposed of the rule without making it absolute in its full terms. It ordered the surrender and cancellation of the articles, which was done in court. It further intimated that after Hawke had served with Lawrence the applicant must apply to Goatley for a certificate of service; it would then be for the Law Institution to come and oppose his admission as an attorney, and open the merits of the entire case, if it should be thought he was not a fit person to be admitted. Upon that point the Court would not express an opinion. F. James then stated that a question arose as to costs. The affidavits on Hawke's side extended to ninety-eight folios, and it was now asked of the court to order the Master to read the affidavits, ascertain how much is relevant, and report to the court what ought to be done with regard to costs. JERVIS, C. J.—After referring to the Master, we think that the costs of those parts only which he shall say are relevant should be allowed. Rule accordingly.

HAKEMAN v. FREEMAN.—This cause was tried before Talfourd, J., at the sittings in London, for the present term. Verdict for plaintiff 30*l.* The declaration alleged that plaintiff and defendant bargained to buy and sell a large quantity of currants, to be delivered in reasonable time; breach, non-delivery. Hawkins now moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the verdict should not be set aside and a new trial had, on the ground that the learned judge had misdirected the jury as to the component of damages, and that the verdict was against the evidence. The sum of 30*l.* had been allowed by the jury as the special damage. The Court said they would speak to Talfourd, J., on the question, and would intimate through the Master whether there should be a rule nisi or not. Stands over.

MESSITER v. ROSS.—Quain showed cause against a rule nisi to set aside the judgment signed in this case, obtained by M. Smith. The case will be duly reported.

POWER v. THE AUSTRALIAN STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—Needham showed cause against a rule obtained by Lush why the trial of this cause should not be postponed till the sittings after Trinity Term, in order to enable defendants to produce material evidence. He contended that the rule had been moved solely for the purpose of delay, and of driving the plaintiff, who is a poor man, to a compromise. The COURT, without hearing the other side, said the rule must be absolute to postpone the trial. The defendants were entitled to that course in order to enable them to produce their witnesses.

Rule absolute.

Re THE ARBITRATION BETWEEN WILLIAM LAPPS AND EDWARD TODD.—Hugh Hill, Q. C. showed cause against a rule obtained herein by J. Addison. Addison was heard in support of the rule. The case will be duly reported.

Rule discharged with costs.

Re BECKETT in the cause of EVERETT v. WILLIAMS.—This was a motion to set aside an order of Talfourd, J. to revive judgment herein, on the ground that Beckett the attorney had appeared to the action without authority of the defendants. It was an action of ejectment, and there were four defendants. Watson, Q. C. showed cause against a rule in the above terms, obtained by Bramwell, Q. C. The first objection is, that they have taken the wrong party; they should have called on defendants to show cause, and not on Mr. Beckett. The court cannot call on Beckett to show whether he had authority or not: (Haddock v. Phillips, 13 M. & W. 702.) Bramwell, Q. C. in support of the rule. No reportable point arose.

Rule absolute, unless Ward the landlord will come and enter an appearance; the costs to be costs in the cause.

LEROUX v. BROWN.—Allen, Serjt. applied for leave to amend the rule herein; but as he was not furnished with affidavits, the COURT, acting on the general rule, refused to entertain the application. Leave refused.

DIXON v. MALCOLM.—Hyde showed cause against rule obtained herein by Baddeley for a rule to send out a commissioner abroad to examine witnesses. JERVIS, C. J.—It is a common right, and we cannot refuse it. Rule absolute.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by FREDERICK BAILEY and C. J. B. HERTSLET, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

Monday, Jan. 31.

CROUCH v. THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Pleading several matters—Common Law Procedure Act. It is necessary on obtaining leave to plead several matters that an affidavit should be made by the party or his attorney in accordance with the terms of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 81, to the effect that he advised and believes that he has just grounds to traverse the several matters proposed to be traversed by him, and that the several matters sought to be pleaded by way of confession and avoidance are respectively true in substance and in fact.

Bovill moved, on behalf of the defendants in this case, for leave to plead several matters without an affidavit. The 81st section of the New Common Law Procedure Act enacts, that the plaintiff in any action may, by leave of the court or a judge, plead in answer to the plea, or the subsequent pleading of the defendant, as many several matters as he shall think necessary to sustain his action; and the defendant in any action may, by leave of the court or a judge, plead in answer to the declaration or other subsequent pleading of the plaintiff as many several matters as he shall think necessary for his defence, upon an affidavit of the party making such application or his attorney, if required by the court or judge, to the effect that he is advised and believes that he has just grounds to traverse the several matters proposed to be traversed by him, and that the several matters sought to be pleaded as aforesaid by way of confession and avoidance are respectively true in substance and in fact; provided that the costs of any issue either of fact or law shall follow the finding or judgment upon such issue, and be adjudged to the successful party, whatever may be the result of the other issue or issues.

This was an action for the non-delivery, not forwarding by the next train, and refusing to carry, certain parcels stated in the declaration to have been delivered to the defendant at different times and at different places, some of them so long since as June and September, 1851. The defence was that these parcels were what is called "packed parcels;" but in pleading such a plea as would meet the supposed facts this difficulty arose, that, although they might suspect, yet they could scarcely swear, that these parcels were packed. The company were anxious without making an affidavit, and under the circumstances they ought to be at liberty to compel the plaintiff to prove his case in the first instance; they would then have the opportunity of proving their plea on cross-examination. [PARKE, B.—You mean that the only affidavit you can produce is that you desire to make the plaintiff produce a witness whose evidence on cross-examination will be material to your defence.] That we could do. The clerk at the station acts according

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Saturday, Jan. 29.

Hobson v. Neale.—This was a case sent to this court by the Court of Chancery prior to the 1st Nov. 1852, on which day the Chancery Practice and Course of Procedure Amendment Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 86) came into operation, the question being, whether certain property was liable to legacy duty. The court referred it back to the Court of Chancery to say whether certain decrees for the sale of certain real estate were made pursuant to the powers of sale contained in the will, or whether such decrees were made in the exercise of the jurisdiction of the court; as, in the one case, the legacy duty would be payable, and in the other it would not.

In the Stamp Duty on a Conveyance from Lord Mount Edgcumbe and Thomas Gill to the Plymouth Great Western Dock Company.—This was a case stated under the provisions of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97, for the purpose of ascertaining the opinion of the court on the amount of ad valorem stamp duty payable. The consideration was 10,000*l.* paid down, a rent-charge of 750*l.*, redeemable on payment of 15,000*l.*, and a rent-charge of 600*l.* redeemable on payment of 12,000*l.* It appeared that the payment of the latter sum could be enforced on giving a certain notice, but no such claims was inserted with respect to the other sum.

Judgment for the Inland Commissioners as to the 12,000l. only.

Smith v. Peat.—Phipson showed cause against a rule to plead several matters. Clarke contrà, was not called on.

Rule absolute.

Evans v. Mathew.—Crowder, Q.C. showed cause against a rule calling on the plaintiff to show cause why an attachment should not issue against him for not delivering up a bill of exchange for 110*l.* pursuant to the order of Martin, B.

Referred to the Master to report to a judge, who is to decide.

Holland v. Morley.—Aspland moved for a rule to rescind an order of Martin, B. for further particulars. Hayes, contrà.

Rule refused.

Nash v. Hedger.—Tried before Platt, B. in Middlesex, this term. Verdict for the plaintiff, damages, 100*l.* Wilkins, Serjt. moved for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence and the damages excessive. Rule refused.

Parsey v. Parry and another.—Watson, Q.C. moved in this case, tried before Platt, B. to set aside the verdict for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and that the damages were excessive. It was an action for an excessive distress, with a count in trover.

Rule nisi upon the model being restored in the same state it was, and upon terms referred to a judge at chambers.

Lee v. Cotterell.—James, Q.C. showed cause against the rule for a new trial herein.—Watson, Q.C. contrà.

BAIL COURT.

Reported by T. W. Saunders, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Friday, Jan. 28.

(Before Erle, J.)

Knight and others v. Gaunt.

Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 101.—Motion to set aside a notice to proceed.

Ball moved for a rule calling upon the defendant's attorney to show cause why the twenty days' notice to proceed to trial, given in this case under sect. 101 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, should not be set aside for irregularity, or why the time for proceeding to trial should not be extended, and why the said attorney should not pay the costs of this application.

It appeared that this action was commenced in the year 1845, and that the defendant pleaded in the month of January 1846; that shortly afterwards the defendant absconded from this country under a charge of forgery, and has never returned, which is the reason that no further steps have been since taken in the action.

By rule 176 of the New Common Law Rules, it is ordered that "in all causes in which there have been no proceedings for one year from the last proceedings had, the party, whether plaintiff or defendant, who desires to proceed shall give a calendar month's notice to the other party of his intention to proceed," &c.

Upon these facts it was contended that the notice in question was irregular, for that, as no proceedings had been had in the action for more than a year, the defendant's attorney should have given a calendar month's notice of his intention to take the present proceedings. It was also urged that, as all the preceding facts were known to the defendant's attorney, he should be called upon to pay the costs of this application. Rule nisi.

Ex parte Dr. Chadwick.

Summary conviction.

When a justice has jurisdiction to enter into a question, he has jurisdiction to decide upon it; and this Court will not in such a case interfere with his decision.

Field moved for a rule for a certiorari to remove into this court a conviction of Dr. Chadwick by the stipendiary magistrate of Manchester for an encroachment upon a public footpath, contrary to the provisions of a local statute.

It appeared that Dr. Chadwick is owner of a house, No. 20, Marsden-square, Manchester, and that, having made some alteration in a cellar-grate, he was, pursuant to the local Act, summoned before the stipendiary magistrate for an obstruction under the Act. At the hearing, Dr. Chadwick was convicted and fined 20*s.* The Act itself contains a clause providing that no order, &c., shall be removed by certiorari. It was now contended that the alleged obstruction was not within the meaning of the Act, and that the magistrate had no jurisdiction to convict.

Erle, J.—To support that proposition, it must be shown that the subject-matter was not within his jurisdiction. If the magistrate had a right to entertain the question, he had a right to decide upon it.

Field.—It is shown that the cellar-door never was on the footway, and therefore not within the terms of the Act.

Erle, J.—The prosecutor says this is a part of the footway; the defendant says it is not. I think the justice was bound to entertain that question, and that his decision upon it is not to be questioned in this way. The Legislature has constituted him the proper tribunal to consider such questions, and I cannot interfere with his decision. Rule refused.

Murder—Admitting to bail.

The prisoner, who with three others was charged before justices with the crime of murder, was committed to take his trial. Subsequently an inquest was held by the coroner, when additional evidence was produced, the effect of which was to exculpate the prisoner, and the jury returned a verdict of not guilty as to him.

Upon these facts this Court admitted the prisoner to bail.

In this case Scotland, on a previous day (20 L. T. Rep. 227) obtained a rule for a certiorari to remove into this court the depositions taken before the committing magistrates on a charge of murder against the defendant, and for an order that he may be admitted to bail in the country, the coroner's jury (whose investigation took place subsequently to that before the justices, and before whom additional evidence was adduced, which went to exculpate the prisoner) having returned a verdict of not guilty as regards him. The depositions having now been returned, and an affidavit being produced of the service of the rule upon the two committing magistrates, the prosecutor and the attorney for the prosecutor, who was also the clerk to the justices:

Scotland moved that the prisoner may be admitted to bail in the country.

Erle, J. ordered that he might be admitted to bail in his own recognisance for 400*l.* with four sureties in 100*l.* each, or six sureties to the amount of 400*l.* in all. Rule accordingly.

County Court—New trial with a jury, where the former one was before the judge alone.

A plaint was tried in the County Court before the judge alone, who gave judgment for the defendant. Subsequently a new trial was granted in general terms. Upon this the plaintiff gave notice of his intention of having a jury, and at the trial a jury appeared, when the judge refused to try the cause by such jury, as he had given no leave for a jury, and the case was accordingly struck out. Upon an application to this court for a mandamus to compel the judge to try the case by a jury:

Held, First, That if the amount of the debt was under 5l. (whereby the judge would have a discretion in granting a jury), it was for the party opposing the rule to show it, as the fact was within his knowledge.

Secondly, That under the 79th rule of the new County Court Rules, a party has an absolute right to a jury, notwithstanding a former trial without a jury.

Thirdly, That it was no answer to this application that no legal jury could be obtained.

In Michaelmas term (Nov. 29) Lush obtained a rule nisi for a mandamus commanding the judge of the County Court of Kent, holden at Margate, to try this cause by a jury.

It appeared from the affidavits that this cause had been tried before the judge himself, and without a jury, in July last, when the judge gave judgment for the defendant. Subsequently, the plaintiff applied for a new trial, which was granted. Upon this the plaintiff gave notice of his intention to try the cause by a jury, and on the day of trial a jury was accordingly in attendance. The judge however objected to try the cause before a jury, inasmuch as he had given no leave for one, and he directed the cause to be struck out, which was accordingly done. In the affidavits used upon showing cause it was stated that the judge assigned also as a reason for refusing to try by a jury, that there was no legal jury panel from which the jury could be selected.

By the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 72, it is enacted, "that the sheriff of every county, and the high bailiffs of Westminster and Southwark, shall cause to be delivered to the clerk of the court a list of persons qualified and liable to serve as jurors in the Courts of Assize and Nisi Prius in their county, city, and borough respectively, within fourteen days from the receipt of the jury-book from the clerk of the peace of the county or other officer, each list containing only the names of persons residing within the jurisdiction of the court; . . . and whenever a jury shall be required, the clerk of the court shall cause so many of the persons named in the list as shall be needed in the opinion of the judge to be summoned to attend the court at a time and place to be mentioned in the summons," &c.

Margate, it appeared, is within the district of the Cinque Ports, and is attached to Dover, and the sheriff of Kent makes no return of jurors from that district, which is exempt, and therefore the clerk of the Margate County Court had no list of jurors. On account of this defect in the Act it has been customary, when a jury has been required, to obtain the consent of the other side, in which case a jury has been summoned from the persons composing the last grand jury at Dover. In the present case such consent was given, and the jury were accordingly so summoned.

Chambers Q. C. and Simons now showed cause, and contended, first, that it did not appear upon the affidavits that the matter in dispute exceeded 5*l.*, which it must exceed in order to give a party an absolute right to a jury, it being in the discretion of the judge if it does not exceed that amount: (sect. 70, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95.) Secondly, that as the judge had not given any leave for the second trial to be before a jury, the party was not entitled to have one; the 89th section enacting that the judge shall have the power, "if he shall think fit, to order a new trial to be had upon such terms as he shall think reasonable," &c. Thirdly, that the judge was right in refusing to try with the jury who attended, such jury not being obtained in the manner pointed out by the Act, and therefore not a lawful one.

Lush, in support of the rule, argued against the first objection, that it sufficiently appeared that the amount sought to be recovered exceeded 5*l.* [Erle, J. You need not trouble yourself as to that, for, as it is a fact within the knowledge of the other side, they should have denied it if it were so. I take it therefore that there is no doubt that the sum exceeded 5*l.*] Secondly, that although by the old County Court rules a second trial, as in this case, could not be had before a jury, inasmuch as rule 20 required that "every notice of a demand of a jury . . . must be made in writing to the clerk of the court two clear days before the return of the summons," yet under the 79th rule of the new rules the demand of a jury need only be made "two clear days before the day of hearing." [Erle, J. You need not argue further upon that point; I am with you upon it.] Thirdly, that it is no answer to this application, that the party will not be able to get a jury, it not being for the judge to speculate upon whether or not, when the cause comes on for trial, a proper jury will be present.

Erle, J.—I think that the judge had no right, on the second trial, to refuse hearing the case before a jury. Upon such a trial I am of opinion that the party had a right to have a jury. Rule absolute.

Ex parte W. A. Smith.

Insolvency—New security for old debt.

An insolvent debtor was adjudged to be entitled to the benefit of the Act, but was to be detained in custody as to the debt of A. and B. until the expiration of twenty months. Whilst so in custody it was agreed between the insolvent and A. and B. that the latter should discharge the former out of custody upon his giving them a warrant of attorney for the payment of their debt three instalments. Upon this, the warrant of attorney was given, and the insolvent was liberated:

Held, that such warrant of attorney was void; and upon an application to this court for the purpose, it was set aside.

On a former day Lush obtained a rule, calling upon Messrs. Humphreys and Thirst to show cause why a warrant of attorney, given to them by William Andrew Smith to secure the payment of a sum of money, should not be set aside.

It appeared that on the 24th Sept. 1851 Smith (who was then in prison at the instance of Messrs. Humphreys and Thirst and other creditors) petitioned the Insolvent Debtors' Court for his discharge. On the 29th the vesting order was made; and on the 8th Nov. following his petition was heard and adjudicated upon; and the adjudication was that the insolvent should be discharged from custody forthwith as to certain debts; but as to four debts due to certain creditors he was to be discharged as to them when he had been in custody six months from the date of the vesting order; and as to a debt due to another creditor after he had been like manner in custody eleven months; and as to the debt of Messrs. Humphrey and Thirst after he had been in custody for twenty months, which last-mentioned period will expire in May next. The period of imprisonment with respect to all the debts, except that of Messrs. Humphreys and Thirst, expired in Aug. last, at which period, therefore, he was in custody at the suit of the two last-mentioned creditors alone. Subsequently it was agreed between the insolvent and Messrs. Humphrey and Thirst that they should give him his discharge upon his giving them a warrant of attorney for their debt for 80*l.*, payable by three instalments of 10*l.* each, payable respectively on the 30th Jan., 30th April, and 30th July in the present year, which warrant of attorney was accordingly given, and the insolvent was discharged out of custody.

By sect. 31 of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, it is enacted "that, after any person shall have become entitled to the benefit of this Act by any such adjudication as aforesaid, no writ of fieri facias or elegit shall issue on any judgment obtained against such prisoner for any debt or sum of money with respect to which such person shall have so become entitled, nor in any action upon any new contract or security for payment thereof, except upon the judgment entered up against such prisoner according to this Act," &c.

J. Browne now showed cause, and contended that under the circumstances the warrant of attorney was lawfully given, for that the restriction applies only to cases where the insolvent is, at the time he gives the security, entitled to the benefit of the Act, which in this case he was not, as his term of imprisonment had not expired; and that, according to the proper construction of the Act, these words have reference alone to the period when the insolvent is entitled to be discharged out of custody—a construction which is borne out by the language in sects. 78 and 85.—and not to any period prior thereto. He also argued that the cases upon the subject are those only where the security has been given to buy off an opposition, or after the insolvent has actually become entitled to the benefit of the Act: (Hall v. Dyson, 20 L. J. 224, Q. B.; Murray v. Rowse, 8 B. & C. 421.)

Lush, in support of the rule, contended that the distinction contended for on the other side had no foundation, for that the rule is general that where an insolvent is remanded at the suit of a particular creditor, and he buys off that creditor by giving him a security for his debt, that security is void, for the reason that before his adjudication he gives a warrant of attorney to the assignee, who has precedence for the sake of the creditors at large, and which would be liable to be defeated if the insolvent were to be allowed to give another security to a particular creditor. Ashley v. Killick, 5 M. & W. 509, was precisely in point. He also contended, that being entitled to the benefit of the Act means being relieved from being sued, and not being discharged out of custody. Ex parte Hart, 2 Dow. & L. 778, 14 L. J. 92, Q. B. is precisely in point, and cannot in principle be distinguished from this case.

Crompton, J.—The case of Ex parte Hart is distinctly in point, and shows that the court will interfere to set aside a warrant of attorney under such circumstances, where it is given after the adjudication has taken place. I quite agree with my brother Wightman in Hart's case, and I think, therefore, that this rule should be made absolute. Rule absolute.

ARNOTT v. MARSHALL AND ANOTHER.

Costs—Right to, by a plaintiff who remains in this country to be a witness.

The rule allowing the costs of residence in this country of a seafaring man, pending an action in which he is a material witness, is applicable to other classes of witnesses.

The plaintiff had engaged with the defendants, who were ship-brokers, for a berth in a vessel about to proceed to Australia, and paid his passage-money. However, through a mistake of the defendants' clerk, such payment was not credited, and a message was sent to the captain of the vessel, then off Deal, to that effect, and the plaintiff was turned out of the ship. The vessel then sailed without him, and he brought his action. Upon the trial a verdict was taken by consent for 40l. and costs. Upon the taxation of costs there was an item of 30l. for the maintenance of the plaintiff as a witness for fourteen weeks, being the period between the sailing and the day of trial. This item the Master disallowed, on the ground that such an allowance was confined to the case of a seafaring man. Upon a motion to review the taxation:

Held, that the Master was wrong in principle, and that if the plaintiff was bonâ fide detained as a witness, and it was reasonable under the circumstances to detain him, he was entitled to such costs.

This was a rule calling upon the defendants to show cause why the Master should not review his taxation of the costs in this case. The plaintiff, who was a general dealer in this country, had arranged with the defendants, who were ship-brokers, for a berth in a vessel proceeding to Australia, and had paid the whole fare for the voyage. Through a mistake of a clerk of the defendants it did not appear in their books that the plaintiff had paid his passage money, and a message to that effect was sent to the captain of the vessel, which was then off Deal, and the plaintiff was turned out of the ship; he then commenced an action against the defendants. The vessel in which the plaintiff had taken his passage sailed on the 7th Sept.; and the defendants had offered him a free passage in another vessel which sailed on the 14th Sept. This offer, however, was refused, and after some further negotiations between the parties the cause went to trial, when it was settled by the defendants agreeing to pay 40*l.* with the costs of the action. The declaration contained no averment of special damage. In the plaintiff's bill of costs there was an item of 30*l.* for the maintenance of the plaintiff as a witness for fourteen weeks, the period between the sailing of the vessel and the day of trial. The Master disallowed this item, and the present rule was then obtained.

Prentice showed cause.—There are three points:—First, whether the plaintiff, not being a seafaring man, is entitled to these expenses; secondly, whether they were not a part of the damages recovered in the action; and, thirdly, whether the plaintiff ought not to have been examined on interrogatories. The rule which allows expenses to witnesses who are kept in this country for the purposes of a trial only extends to those persons whose avocations are upon the sea. There would be much inconvenience and great expense occasioned by extending a rule which has hitherto applied only to seafaring men: (Howes v. Barber, 21 L. J. 254, Q.B.) It would apply to all witnesses, and not merely plaintiffs or defendants. Again, these expenses were clearly included in the amount of damages agreed to be paid by the defendants. Although no special damage was alleged in the declaration, yet the defendants had agreed to pay a large sum of money, which they considered sufficient to cover all expenses, except, perhaps, the actual costs of the proceedings. Lastly, where a person can be examined upon interrogatories, he is not justified in staying in this country and putting the parties to expense for the whole of the time up to the trial. If his character is impeached he may stay (Evans v. Watson, 4 Dowl. & L. 198); but the only question to be proved in this case was the contract, for which the defendant's own letters would have been quite sufficient.

Crompton, J.—Is not this a matter within the discretion of the Master? And if he has exercised that discretion I ought not to interfere.

Pulling, in support of the rule.—The cases show that the court will interfere. In Evans v. Watson, Coltman, J. said, "I think that the court ought to grant all reasonable expenses." So in Lemergan v. The Royal Exchange Assurance, 7 Bing. 725, the Court of Common Pleas did interfere, and allowed expenses. Sturdy v. Andrews, 4 Taunt. 697; Tremain v. Barrett, 6 Taunt. 88. [Crompton, J.—Unless the Master went wrong in some principle we should not interfere.] (He was then stopped by the court.)

Crompton, J.—I cannot see how these expenses could possibly be recovered as damages in the action. The plaintiff's case is that he was damaged up to the time that he could have obtained a passage in another vessel, and he could not therefore recover in an action for being delayed for the purpose of becoming a witness. The damage the plaintiff suffered was his being delayed four days, namely, from the 7th Sept. to the 11th, when the defendants offered him another passage. My difficulty is in seeing whether the keeping the plaintiff here was a real bonâ fide transaction. I think it had better go back to the Master, for him to see upon the new matters brought forward in the affidavits whether the witness was bonâ fide kept here for the purposes of the cause. In Howes v. Barber it was held that the successful party in a cause may be allowed his expenses in the same manner as any other witness. If the Master decided that the rule for allowing the expenses of a witness only applies to seafaring men, he was wrong, as the rule cannot be so limited; and this was the opinion of the full court when the rule nisi was moved. (a) If a person going to Australia is kept in this country for the purpose of an action, his expenses should be paid. But whether his actual presence could or could not, in the circumstances, be dispensed with, or whether he might not as well have been examined upon interrogatories, is a matter always to be taken into consideration. In cases of personal examination, parties might be justified in staying for the trial; but all these are questions for the Master to decide upon whether the party was necessarily detained. Let this go back to the Master to say whether the plaintiff was bonâ fide detained as a witness, and whether it was reasonable, under the circumstances, so to detain him.

Rule absolute accordingly.

Sherrell v. Casper.

Execution—Affidavit.

To obtain execution in less than fourteen days an application must be made to the judge, stating special circumstances, and supported by an affidavit.

This was an undefended action on a bill of exchange.

Hawkins, on behalf of the plaintiff, applied for immediate execution. The judges had laid down, as a general rule, that execution should be granted in fourteen days, and not less; but in the present case the defendant had filed a declaration of insolvency, which, it was submitted, was sufficient ground for earlier execution.

Crompton, J.—The general rule is, that execution will issue in fourteen days; and if there are in this case facts upon which it is proposed to except it from that rule, they must be laid before me upon affidavit. I shall upon that affidavit say whether a proper ground is laid for the exception.

Application subsequently granted.

Crossley v. Lord Talbot.

Habeas corpus—Penalty—31 Car. 2, c. 2—Contempt.

Contempt of the Court of Chancery is not a criminal charge within the meaning of the Act 31 Car. 2, c. 2, and, therefore, if a judge refuses a writ of habeas corpus to a person who is a prisoner for such contempt, he is not liable to the penalty under sect. 20 of that Act.

Debt for a penalty of 500*l.* for not granting a writ of habeas corpus to bring up the plaintiff, who was a prisoner in the Queen's prison, for a contempt of the Court of Chancery.

The plaintiff in person contended that contempt of the Court of Chancery was a criminal charge within the meaning of the statute. 31 Car. 2, c. 2, s. 3, enacts that a habeas corpus shall issue "if any person or persons shall be or stand committed or detained for any crime, unless for felony, or treason, &c." And sect. 10 provides that "it shall and may be lawful to and for any prisoner and prisoners as aforesaid to move and obtain his or their habeas corpus, as well out of the High Court of Chancery or Court of Exchequer, as out of the Courts of King's Bench or Common Pleas, or either of them. And if the said Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper, or any judge or judges, baron or barons, for the time being, of the degree of the coif, of any of the courts aforesaid, in the vacation time, upon view of the copy or copies of the warrant or warrants of commitment, or detainer

Berman v. Preston.

Concurrent jurisdiction.

This Court, in the exercise of its discretion, refused a motion to dissolve an injunction restraining an action at law, upon the plaintiff's in equity undertaking to give judgment to be dealt with as the Court should think fit.

If a suit is pending in respect of a matter in which a court of equity has concurrent jurisdiction with another court which, from its constitution and form, cannot give relief until a comparatively distant period, with respect to a subject which, in its nature, requires speedy remedy, the Court will not, in general, allow the defendant in equity to proceed at law in respect of the same matter.

This was an appeal motion to discharge an order made by the Vice-Chancellor Wood.

The plaintiffs and defendants were joint owners of the ship Phœbe. The latter had been appointed ship's-husbands and brokers under an agreement, by which it was among other things stipulated that if they were removed from their office by the plaintiffs they should receive from them the sum of 1,500*l.* by way of liquidated damages. The charge made by the plaintiffs against the defendants was, that they, owning certain shares of the vessel in question, of which the other shares belonged to the plaintiffs, and being the ship's-husbands, brokers, and agents, acted in fraud of their partners and principals, by making clandestinely, from the employment of the ship, a profit for the peculiar and exclusive benefit of the defendants themselves, beyond and independently of any advantage properly incident to the character of ship's-husbands, agents, or brokers, and appropriating accordingly that profit to their private purposes; and even assuming that that charge could not be fully established, the defendants were still open to the imputation and complaint of not having duly accounted to the plaintiffs, and of having improperly withheld from them, if not their fair share of the net earnings of the vessel received by the defendants in their fiduciary character, at least that information which an agent was bound to give to his principal.

The bill prayed for the removal of the defendants, as ship's-husbands, &c., and for an account; and by an additional motion, they asked for the delivery up of the machinery of the vessel. The plaintiffs had the actual possession of the vessel; but the machinery, which had been removed from her for the purpose of being repaired, was in the possession of the defendants.

The Lords Justices, before whom the motion came, were doubtful whether, if the Court of Admiralty would, at the instance of the plaintiffs, interfere to compel the defendants, either upon security to be given to them or otherwise, to deliver the machinery to the plaintiffs, they ought to interfere concerning it. Their Lordships, therefore, granted an injunction in the words of the first part of the original motion, and directed the residue of that and the whole of the additional motion to stand over without prejudice to any question, and gave the plaintiffs leave to take such proceedings in the Court of Admiralty with respect to the machinery, or otherwise, as they might be advised.

An application was made to the Court of Admiralty, but, for the reasons which are subsequently mentioned in this report, it refused to interfere.

On the matter being again brought before the Lords Justices, Lord Justice Knight Bruce, who, in order to avoid any chance of assuming jurisdiction properly belonging to the Court of Admiralty, had directed an application to be made to that court, said that the matter appeared to stand in one of two positions—either that by reason of the possession of the hull by the plaintiffs, that court could not interfere with respect to the machinery; or that, according to the constitution and forms of that court, relief could not be given until a comparatively distant day with respect to a subject which in its nature required speedy remedy. Whichever of those views might be (a) The 56 Geo. 3, c. 100 applies to such a case, but under it the writ is grantable only by the judges of the Superior Courts of Common Law.

COURT OF APPEAL.

the correct one, he was of opinion that this court had clear jurisdiction. This was not merely a new equity. It was an ancient head of the jurisdiction of this court that it will interpose to assist the jurisdiction of other courts. The manner in which it interfered with respect to executions under judgments at law, the manner, more closely analogous, in which it interfered with respect to suits in the Ecclesiastical Court, as to probate or administration, by appointing a receiver pendente lite, and in numerous other instances which it was unnecessary to multiply, this court had most usefully interposed. He was of opinion that, even if the Court of Admiralty had jurisdiction, that this was a case of that description. Independently of that, there was evidence before the court to show that there had been breach of duty, and abandonment of trust; namely, not merely withdrawing the machinery from the place where it had been deposited for the purpose of repairs, but withdrawing it before those repairs were completed, for the single purpose of obtaining an improper possession, to the unjust prejudice, and to the undue disadvantage of the partners of these defendants. Their conduct appeared to be without apology and without excuse, and it would indeed be to be lamented if there was no jurisdiction in this country capable of remedying such flagrant injustice.

The defendants having subsequently commenced actions against several of the plaintiffs, to recover the liquidated damages under the agreement, the plaintiffs moved for an injunction to restrain the proceedings at law. V. C. Wood granted the injunction, and this was a motion to dissolve it.

Rolt, J. V. Prior, and Burnie, in support of the motion, cited Jones v. Geddes, 1 Ph. 724; Hodgson v. Murray, 2 Sim. 515; S. C. 3 Sim. 283.

Follett and W. M. James appeared for the plaintiffs, but were not called on. They submitted to be bound by such order as the court should make. They offered to give an undertaking to allow judgments to be entered up in all the actions, the defendants undertaking to enter satisfaction should the court require it.

The Lord Chancellor, who delivered the judgment of the court, said that upon the undertaking which had been given there was no reason to disturb the judgment of the V. C. The bill involved the whole of the questions at issue between the parties, and among them those sought to be determined by the actions. It was always a question of discretion in this court when to stay legal proceedings. His Lordship, having referred to the case of Jones v. Geddes, said that the whole of the questions of law were involved in those which were considered to be clearly equitable. All those questions could be more satisfactorily dealt with in this court than by a jury. They had better be decided here than at law; the court had jurisdiction. The decision of the V. C. need not, after the undertaking which had been given, be disturbed. The undertaking to give judgment was to be considered as given without prejudice to any question. The Court refused to make any order as to costs.

Taxation of solicitor's bill—Right to tax after judgment in action for—6 & 7 Vict. c. 73.

An attorney and solicitor, having been employed by W. in conducting an action and a suit in equity, delivered his bills to him, and brought an action upon them. W. afterwards obtained an order to tax the bills from one of the judges of the court of common law in which the action was brought; but the judge subsequently ordered the summons to tax the bills to be dismissed, unless W. within a week withdrew all the pleas which he had put in to the action except the plea "never indebted:" this he did, and thus was entitled to tax the bills. W. afterwards withdrew his remaining plea, and the plaintiff signed judgment in the action of debt. W. then again applied to a judge at chambers for taxation of the bills, which was refused with costs, and he did not appeal to the full court:

Held, that the decision of the Master of the Rolls which ordered the taxation of the bills ought, in the absence of special circumstances, to be reversed, although in this case a judgment, and not a verdict or writ of inquiry according to 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, had been obtained.

A solicitor may make several charges for different attendances on the same day.

A mere overcharge, in the absence of fraud, does not amount to a special circumstance for the taxation of a bill:

Semble, per Lord Cranworth, that an application to tax a bill under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37, cannot be made to this court after judgment has been obtained upon it in an action in a court of common law.

And semble, per eundem, that after judgment in an action for costs, the special jurisdiction to direct taxation given by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 77 is gone.

COURT OF APPEAL.

This was an appeal by Mr. Barnard, an attorney and solicitor, from the decision of his Honour the Master of the Rolls, who had made an order for the taxation of certain bills which he had delivered to his client, a clergyman of the name of Wetherell; an application for that purpose having been refused by a judge of a common law court, subsequent to a judgment having been signed by Mr. Barnard against Mr. Wetherell, for the full amount of his bills, on the latter withdrawing all the pleas put in to the action. These facts are sufficiently stated in detail in their Lordships' judgment, as also the circumstances which were relied upon as special by the respondent.

Stuart and J. V. Prior, for the appeal, insisted, first, that proceedings for taxation having been taken before a common law judge, this court had no jurisdiction to take cognisance of the application—that the matter was res judicata; secondly, that there was an absence of all special circumstances; and, lastly, that after judgment the court had no jurisdiction to direct taxation. They cited Meredith v. Gittings, 19 L. T. Rep. 29; Megoe v. Megoe, 2 C. P. Coop. 213; In re Whicher, 13 Mee. & W. 548; In re Hair, 10 Ileav. 187.

Lovell, for the respondent, cited Re Gedye, 17 L. T. Rep. 149; 14 Beav. 56.

Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—In this case Mr. Barnard, a solicitor and attorney, being employed by Mr. Wetherell, a clergyman, in various matters including proceedings at law and in equity, (a state of things which gives the client a right to have the bills taxed either at law or in this court,) the bills were delivered previously to December last, and an action of debt was brought upon them. That action having been brought, the client (the defendant) obtained an order from one of the judges of the court of law in which the action was brought to tax the bills; but afterwards this order was made on the subject, the client having filed several pleas, I think four, and on the application by the attorney of the plaintiff to the judge of the court, the judge ordered the summons to tax the bills of costs to be dismissed with costs, unless within a week the defendant should consent to withdraw all pleas, except "never indebted;" and in that case all the bills were ordered to be taxed, with the costs of the application. We are informed, and understand, that he consented to that order, and that he so withdrew all his pleas but one—"never indebted." The consequence was that the client remained in the possession of the order to tax the bills from the court before which the action was brought, and which was the court of proper jurisdiction for the purpose. The client, instead of proceeding on that, thinks fit to withdraw his only remaining plea in the action whereupon this order was made."—On hearing the attorneys, agents, and counsel on both sides, and by consent, order that the defendant be at liberty to withdraw the plea herein mentioned;" whereupon the plea was withdrawn, the necessary consequence of which was that the plaintiff was enabled to sign judgment in the action of debt. The judgment was therefore completed, and, being completed, was final; and after judgment thus obtained, completed and final, the client again applies to a court of common law for taxation, which he might have had before, and from which he had receded. The application was refused, with costs, by the judge at chambers, from whom there is a right of appeal to the full court, which right of appeal was not exercised. Instead of taking that course, a special petition was presented to this court, which at least originally had equal jurisdiction with the court of law for that purpose. Now the first question raised in this case is one of great importance indeed, namely, the question whether, the jurisdiction having been equally in this court and the court of law, and the latter being first applied to, this court has any jurisdiction to deal with taxation. I think that question cannot be affected by the result of the proceedings at law, in which the learned judge seems to have been of opinion that there were no grounds for an order to tax—an opinion not founded, it is said, on the merits of the case. That, however, cannot affect the mode of dealing with the case here, as affecting the jurisdiction. I pass by that point, however, because I do not think it necessary to decide it here, merely saying, avoiding an expression of opinion on it beyond this, that it is, to repeat an expression already used, of great importance. Independently of the objection as to jurisdiction, and assuming that it does not bar an application, the next question is, whether the application is one which can be supported here without special circumstances. I am of opinion that it is an application which can only be supported by special circumstances. It is true the language of the Act of Parliament—the letter of the Act of Parliament—only mentions the case of a verdict and execution of a writ of inquiry, whereas this was a judgment obtained in an action in which there was no writ of inquiry, and in which there was no trial or verdict whatever. However, whatever the letter of the statute may be, I am of opinion it will not exceed the bounds of just interpretation to hold that, according to the spirit of the statute, the enactment includes this case, although there has been no verdict and no writ of inquiry or damages. There has been much more than that—this is necessarily included in the enactment according to a reasonable construction of it; and, therefore, without special circumstances there can be no taxation. In the present instance there is an absence of special circumstances, except the complaint of the charges in the bills with respect to the fees of counsel charged and not paid; that, if no explanation were offered, might be a very serious matter indeed. It might be a matter not ending in the question of taxation, but might lead to placing the professional position of the attorney in jeopardy. Here, however, there is an absence of dishonesty; it was understood between client and attorney (which I would not believe counsel understood), that counsel's fees should be charged in the bill without their having been paid, and that when the bill was paid, the fees were to be paid to counsel. There is also another irregularity as to charges in another bill which is complained of. It would have been better if the bill had represented the transaction as it really was. But in this case there appears to have been on the evidence an absence of bad intention—no want of good faith. I collect, therefore, the attorney not only meant to do nothing improper, but he also has not charged more than he was fully entitled to. The only other point is as to the alleged multiplication of the charges; but on looking through the bills, and judging from the history of this client, so far as is known from the evidence, and considering the nature of the business done for him, my opinion is, that although there are repeated charges for attendances in the same day professionally, the attorney did not charge too much; and if he had, I do not think that a mere overcharge can, in the absence of fraud, amount to a special circumstance to tax a bill after all that has been done. I differ from the court below on the taxation. If the petition had been originally brought before me, I should have dismissed it with costs.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—I have arrived at exactly the same result. The first point is of great importance. I think this case presents a great anomaly in our law, if, where a party proceeding in one of two tribunals adversely of co-ordinate jurisdiction is defeated, he is at liberty to apply to another. I know of nothing similar to that, because, on a mere suggestion that a party is proceeding at law and equity for the same matter, it is of course to stop one proceeding. It is true that there are cases which seem to show that a person may go from one court to another; but those are only in ex parte applications, as in the case of Re Gorham v. The Bishop of Exeter, where the bishop was refused a rule by the Q. B. (15 Q.B. 52) and C. P. (19 L.J. 200, C.P.), and it was granted by the Ex., when I had the honour of being a judge of that court, which was the first court which granted the rule nisi, but which was afterwards discharged on full argument: (5 Exch. 630.) So with regard to the well-known case of the Canadian prisoners taken at Liverpool, an application for a habeas corpus was refused by one court, and an application was made to another: (see Fry's report of the case of the Canadian prisoners.) However, the writ of habeas corpus differs from all other writs, as being in favour of the liberty of the subject, and there is no analogy between such a case and the present, which is a mere question of costs. So in cases under the Imprisonment for Debt Act. Though it is not necessary to decide the question, I confess I think I should have come to the same conclusion as my learned brother, on the want of jurisdiction alone. It makes no distinction in my mind, that the order of the judge at common law was wrong, if the way to set it right was to appeal to a full court. If the notion that such an order is wrong is to be a ground to go from one jurisdiction to another, it would substantially make courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction appeal courts the one from the other; it would follow that a person dissatisfied with the order of the Lord Chancellor might go to Mr. Justice Talfourd. I am disposed to think that this alone would be a sufficient objection to the order. I go beyond my learned brother in one thing,—I doubt whether the Act meant to leave jurisdiction at all after judgment. After judgment the question is res judicata. There may be a remedy upon a bill filed or otherwise, but not under the statute by which the bills are taxed. I doubt whether the statute meant to give jurisdiction after judgment. Assuming, however, that I am wrong in the opinion I have expressed, still there are no special circumstances. If special circumstances are allowed to be argued after a lapse of time, they must be circumstances which the party must show that he could not reasonably have availed himself of before. It is not of course to listen to matters which might have been brought forward before. Another objection is this—it is a well-known rule in courts of common law, that after you have brought an action, and there is an application to tax bills, the costs of taxation then become costs in the cause, and the court exercises the functions of a jury; in consequence, costs fall on the party to pay the bill. The rule here however is, that if, according to the order of taxation, more than one-sixth is struck off, the costs would fall on the other party; that is another reason against the applicant. The attempt is, in fact, to come from one court, in which, being successful, he would have to pay the costs, to another court by way of appeal, in which, if successful in taxing off one-sixth of the costs, he would throw the costs on the other party. In my opinion, the order at the Rolls must be reversed, and the petition to tax costs be dismissed, with costs.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—I wish to be understood that I do not differ from Lord Cranworth as to the construction to be put upon this statute; but I reserve to myself the faculty of deciding, when it shall be necessary to decide, that where judgment has been obtained upon a question of taxation of bills of costs, there the right to have them taxed under the statute is gone.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by J. MACAULAY, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

BUTTERFIELD v. HEATH.

Voluntary deed—Post-nuptial settlement—Purchaser for valuable consideration — Conveyance by married woman.

A married woman, entitled in fee, to certain property, together with her husband conveyed it to trustees in trust for her for life, then for her husband, then for their children as they should jointly appoint, and in default of appointment for all the children, and in default of such children to the husband in fee. Afterwards she and her husband mortgaged the same property to secure a sum of money. The mortgage contained a power of sale. She and her husband soon after conveyed the property to trustees to sell and distribute the proceeds amongst the creditors of the husband. All the deeds were duly acknowledged by the married woman. The trustees sold, and, the purchaser objecting to the title:

Held, on exceptions to the Master's report, that a good title was shown, that the first conveyance was voluntary and void as against the subsequent purchaser, and that it would be so even with notice on his part of the conveyance.

The claim in this case was filed to compel specific performance of a contract for the purchase of certain freehold property comprised in articles of agreement, bearing date the 14th Aug. 1850, and entered into between the three plaintiffs, the vendors, with the defendant, the purchaser. A decree having been made in the cause referring it to the Master to inquire whether a good title could be made, the Master made his report and thereby found that a good title could be made. To this finding the purchaser took exceptions, which now came on to be argued. The title of the plaintiffs, it appeared, was of the following description:—On the death of the father of Mrs. Deborah Phillips in 1823 (she being then married to Mr. Phillips) she became the owner in fee simple of the property contracted to be purchased, and in the month of Feb. 1839, she being then under coverture, an indenture dearing date the 7th of that month was executed by and between her husband, Mr. Phillips, and herself on the one part, and the three plaintiffs trustees for sale of the other part, whereby, after reciting that Mr. and Mrs. Phillips were mutually desirous of settling the property in the manner thereinafter mentioned, it was witnessed in pursuance of this desire, and in consideration of the marriage heretofore solemnised between them, they and each of them granted, bargained, sold, released, and confirmed all the property in question to the trustees in fee, in trust for the husband, Mr. Phillips, for life, remainder to Mrs. Phillips for life, and after the decease of the survivor for all the issue of the marriage in such manner as the husband and wife should jointly appoint, and in default of such appointment, to all the children of Mrs. Phillips as tenants in common in fee simple, with cross remainders between them, and in default of such children to the husband, Mr. Phillips, in fee. This deed was duly acknowledged by Mrs. Phillips under the statute on the same day on which it was executed. On the 24th May, 1848, Mr. and Mrs. Phillips mortgaged the same property for a sum of 2500*l.* in favour of Mr. Heath, with a power of sale; and on the 29th Dec. 1848, Mr. and Mrs. Phillips conveyed this property to the plaintiffs as trustees upon trust to sell and distribute the proceeds of such sale amongst the creditors of Mr. Phillips. All the deeds were duly acknowledged by the wife under the Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries. The plaintiffs accordingly, in execution of the trust reposed in them, entered into the contract in question in the cause to sell this property to the defendant, who objected to the title on the ground of the conveyance of Feb. 1839. The claim was accordingly filed, and a decree was made referring it to the Master in the usual way, to inquire whether a good title could be made. The Master reported that a good title could be made, and to this report the purchaser took exceptions which now came on to be heard.

Haddon, for the exceptions, insisted that a very slight consideration would support a marriage settlement; and in this case there was sufficient to constitute valuable consideration.

Roupell and Younge, contrà, insisted that the conveyance of Feb. 1839 was voluntary and void against a purchaser for valuable consideration, even though he had notice of the prior conveyance.

They cited Parker v. Carter, 4 Hare, 400; Goodright dem. Humphreys v. Moss, 2 W. Bl. 1019; Currie v. Nind, 1 Myl. & Cr. 17; Colwell v. Brewer, 18 Sim. 503; Hill v. Bishop of London, 2 Taunt. 98; Johnson v. Legard, Taml. & Turn. 281; Scott v. Bell, 2 Swanst. 70; 3 Sugd. V. & P. 2; Jones v. Powell, 1 Vern. 48; Holden v. Hearne, 1 Bligh, 444; Lavender v. Blackstone, 2 Lev.; Clark v. Nethaway, 2 Lev.; Doe dem. Otley v. Manning, 9 East, 59.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The first question is, whether the deed of Feb. 1839 is void as against subsequent purchasers for value. The authorities cited for the purpose of showing that a good title can be made, are the cases of Goodright dem. Humphrey v. Moss, 2 W. Bl. 1019, and Currie v. Nind, 1 Myl. & Cr. 17, and those cases appear to me to support the propositions for which they are cited. It is not nor can it be reasonably questioned that a voluntary conveyance is void against a purchaser for value, even though he had notice of the prior conveyance. But then it is contended that a married woman is not within the statute of the 27th of Elizabeth. This point is settled by the case in Blackstone, which, as Lord Cottenham observes, expressly decides that the circumstance that the settlement was made during the coverture does not prevent the statute from operating upon it. In truth, if it had been decided otherwise, it would have been to hold that although a married woman can, with the assistance of her husband, and by complying with the terms provided by the statute, make a good title to a purchaser for a valuable consideration of the land of which she is seised in fee simple, yet that she cannot make a voluntary conveyance of such land. A distinction, however, is endeavoured to be taken with considerable ingenuity between this case and that of Currie v. Nind, which latter case, unless it can be distinguished from the present, must be considered as determining the point in issue. It was urged that in the case of Currie v. Nind, the wife acted under a power and that by exercising it she gave up nothing, and that consequently it was there rightly held to be merely voluntary; for that unless she did some act to exercise the power, she could never gain anything: but that here, as the wife was the owner of the estate in fee simple, a different principle applies; for that if she did no act the property must, subject to the husband's right, remain hers. But I am of opinion that this distinction is not material for the present purpose. There is no doubt a very material distinction in law between the interest possessed by the donee of an absolute power of appointment over an estate, and the interest possessed by one seised in fee simple of an estate; and very important consequences may flow from the distinction. But so far as the validity of the settlement or the validity of the conveyance of the estate depends upon the consideration of such appointment or conveyance being valuable or voluntary, no such distinction exists. What would amount to a valuable consideration in one case would be so in the other. Nor could it be contended with reason that the consideration for the execution of a power which is simply voluntary, would have become valuable if the donee of the power had been seised in fee of the property conveyed. It was suggested indeed by Mr. Haddon that very slight considerations would support a post-nuptial settlement, and he referred to various cases for that purpose, such as Scott v. Bell, where the concurrence of the wife in destroying an existing settlement on her was held to be sufficient to support a subsequent settlement, which would otherwise have been voluntary, and other cases of that description; but there is an absence of all such consideration in the present case. Whether the destruction of the settlement of the 7th Feb. 1839 would have constituted a consideration sufficient to have supported a subsequent settlement on Mrs. Phillips, varying in its terms within the principle of Scott v. Bell, 2 Swanst. 70, I give no opinion; that case does not arise here; but I am of opinion that the settlement of the 7th Feb. 1839 was itself voluntary, and that as such it is void as against a purchaser for valuable consideration. It was further suggested that, considering that subsequent considerations would make good a previous voluntary settlement, a purchaser would not be compelled to take a title depending upon such a deed being void; but the contrary was decided in Buckle v. Mitchell, 18 Ves. 112. I do not understand that any question arises on the deed of conveyance to the plaintiff. I have not had a copy of it before me, but I understand it to be a conveyance to certain creditors of Mr. Phillips in trust to sell and divide the proceeds amongst his creditors, and that the trustees, themselves being creditors of Mr. Phillips, have executed the deed of trust. I am clearly of opinion therefore that as against the purchaser this deed of the 7th Feb. 1839 does not impair the title of the plaintiffs, and that the exceptions must be overruled.

Roupell.—We are entitled to the costs of the exceptions. The Master's report standing there is a good title.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I must give the costs of the exceptions in the usual way.

Roupell.—This comes on upon a claim, and if it was set down now for hearing we might take a decree.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—You may put it in the paper on any morning you please for that purpose. The decree will be quite a matter of course.

Practice—Suing in forma pauperis—Next friend.

A married woman allowed to sue in respect of her separate estate, without the intervention of a next friend.

Ferrall moved on behalf of a married woman in this case that she might be allowed to sue in formâ pauperis in respect of her separate estate, without the necessity of having a next friend appointed. The application was founded upon an affidavit, which stated that the woman was living separate from her husband, and that he was unable to support her, and that she had no property except that which she claimed in this suit. He cited Wellesley v. Wellesley, 16 Sim. 1.

The MASTER of the ROLLS granted the application on the authority of the case cited.

EATON v. LEWIS.

Practice—Production of documents.

A defendant admitted the possession of certain documents set forth in two schedules to his answer, for one of which he claimed privilege, but submitted to produce the other. Two of the letters however in this schedule when produced had two passages sealed up, which the defendant in an affidavit stated were irrelevant to the matters in issue, and had relation to private family matters only. On motion to commit for contempt, the Court, having inspected the concealed passages, asked the counsel for the defendant himself to examine them, and say whether he could resist production; and on his intimating that he could not, the Court refused to commit the defendant, but ordered production of the concealed passages: the defendant to pay the costs of the motion.

This was a motion to commit the defendant for contempt in disobeying an order for production of documents. The bill had been filed against a trustee by one of the cestuis que trust for the purpose of charging him with a breach of trust, and removing from his office. The defendant to the usual interrogatory as to books, papers, &c. admitted the possession of certain documents, which he set out in two schedules, for one of which he claimed privilege, but submitted to produce the other. The plaintiff obtained the usual order for the production accordingly of the unprivileged documents, and the defendant produced them; but among them were two letters, in each of which certain parts were sealed up, and the defendant refused to allow those parts to be inspected.

The plaintiff now moved to commit the defendant for contempt for disobeying the order for production; and in defence the defendant filed an affidavit, in which he stated that the parts of the letters sealed up related to some private family matters, and were irrelevant to the matters in issue in the suit.

R. Palmer and Greene, for the plaintiff.

Selwyn, on behalf of the defendant, contended that, inasmuch as the defendant had denied upon oath that the sealed-up passages were material, the plaintiff ought to be satisfied with that denial; and there was no reason why the defendant should not have protection now just as much as if he had claimed it by his answer.

The MASTER of the ROLLS was desirous, if the parties agreed to it, of unsealing the portions of the letters in question himself, and see whether they related to the matters in issue. This being agreed to, his Honour, after examining the parts of the letters, could not say that they might not bear upon the matters in question. The first part of the sealed-up matter in one, and the last in the other, were entirely relative to private family matters. He would propose that the defendant's counsel should examine the letters, and say whether he thought he could resist production.

Selwyn accordingly examined them, and said he was not prepared to say he could.

The MASTER of the ROLLS thereupon expressed his opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to production. He would not, however, order the defendant to be committed, but would merely order the whole of the letters to be produced to the plaintiff. The costs of the motion to be paid by the defendant.

ANON.

Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86—Course with respect to applications to vary minutes.

Bere applied to have the minutes of an order made in the cause varied; the variations were not opposed.

The MASTER of the ROLLS granted the application, but said, that under the new practice the application to vary minutes should be made in chambers, in cases in which the proposed variations were formal, or not opposed; but that, in cases in which the variations were opposed, the application must be made to the court by motion, as before.

Practice—Order nisi, or four-day order to commit—11th General Order of 11th April, 1842.

Horsey in this case applied for an attachment against a solicitor, for disobeying an order of the court requiring him to pay a sum of money within a week. The 11th General Order of the 11th April 1842 requires an indorsement on any order or decree that if the party on whom it is made disobeys it he is liable to an attachment, &c.; and therefore the old practice requiring an order nisi, or four-day order, was no longer the practice of the court; for, if so, the General Order in question would be useless.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said he could not alter the practice of the court.

Horsey then asked for the four-day order now, but

The MASTER of the ROLLS would not entertain the application unless upon notice of motion for that purpose, and the same must be personally served.

SENIOR v. PRICHARD.

Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

Injunction to restrain proceedings at law in default of answer still granted.

Palmer moved, upon affidavit verifying the facts stated in the bill, to restrain the defendant Prichard, the assignee of Messrs. Davis & Co., sharebrokers, who had been made bankrupts, from proceeding in an action to recover the balance alleged to be due from the plaintiff upon a series of sharebroking transactions between the plaintiff and Messrs. Davis in the years 1846–7.

The defendant had not answered the interrogatories filed by the plaintiff under the new practice.

Kinglake objected that; under the new act, the old practice of granting injunctions in default of answer was abolished, and referred to the 58th section, which enacts that the practice in cases of injunction to restrain proceedings at law shall be assimilated to the practice in cases of special injunction, as far as the nature of the case will admit.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said his strong opinion was that it was not intended by the new Act to deprive the plaintiff in such a case of his old right to an injunction in default of answer, though, in form, the common injunction was thereby abolished. He recollected the strong observations of the late V.C. Sir J. Parker, on this point, who was very anxious that this right should be preserved; but he stated that, as the point was a new one, he would communicate with the other judges, in order that the practice might be settled.

Feb. 10.—The MASTER of the ROLLS stated that he had seen two of the judges upon this question, and they concurred with him in the view which he had taken when the case was argued before him. He observed that the 58th section did not discharge the defendant in suits of this nature from the obligation to make full discovery in aid of plaintiff's defence in the action at law, and only assimilates the practice "so far as the nature of the case will admit." This section made it necessary that the application for the injunction should be supported by affidavit; but where a primâ facie case is made by the bill supported by affidavit, which is not met by any answer from the defendant, although he may have filed affidavits stating facts sufficient to displace the case made by the bill, yet, as it was quite possible that new facts might be brought out and fuller discovery made by the answer to the interrogatories, he was of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction until answer. Unless this course were taken it would practically put an end completely to the power of obtaining discovery in these suits. He would not say that a strict rule was laid down, from which the court in its discretion would not depart under any circumstances; but in this case he thought that an injunction must be granted until defendant put in his answer, or until the further order of the court.

Kinglake asked whether upon the defendant putting in his answer the injunction would drop?

The MASTER of the ROLLS said that the defendant must move to dissolve the injunction in the old mode, viz. "unless the plaintiff show cause," &c.

Re KINCAID'S TRUSTS.

Wife's equity to a settlement—Whole fund directed to be settled on the wife and children, against the claims of husband's assignees.

By indenture of settlement, dated the 8th day of Feb. 1839, a policy of assurance, effected with the Economic Life Assurance Society on the life of Sophia Kincaid, was assigned to trustees upon trust for the payment of certain debts, and subject thereto upon trust for Caroline Kincaid and Mary Anne Kincaid (two daughters of the settlor), as tenants in common. In the year 1844 Caroline Kincaid intermarried with Archibald Mouat, but no settlement was executed on that occasion. In Nov. 1851 her husband was declared bankrupt. Mrs. Kincaid died in Oct. 1851, and the trust fund, amounting to the sum of 307*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.*, was paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act. Two petitions were now presented for the payment out of the fund to Mrs. Mouat and Mary Anne Kincaid.

Eddis appeared upon the petition of Mary Anne Kincaid, upon which no question turned.

Walford, in support of the petition of Mrs. Mouat, applied to have a settlement of the whole of her moiety (which would not exceed 130*l.* after the payment of costs) upon her and her children. Her husband's assignees claimed the fund, it being under 200*l.*, in his right. The impression that the wife was not entitled to a settlement where the fund was under 200*l.* had its origin in consequence of an order made by Lord Erskine in 1806 (Beames Orders, 464), directing that if any unmarried woman to whom any sum under 200*l.* in principal money, or to the sum of 10*l.* in annual payment, were directed to be paid, married before she received the amount, the Accountant-General, upon receiving a proper affidavit by such woman and her husband, stating her marriage, and that no settlement, or agreement for a settlement, affecting or relating to such sum or such annual payment, should draw a draft for the amount, payable to her or to her husband (Foden v. Finney, 4 Russ. 428); but that opinion has now been altered by the decision in the case of Re Cutler (14 Beav. 220), in which case the Master of the Rolls observed it would be quite inconsistent to hold that if the fund be 202*l.* the wife would be entitled to have the whole fund settled, and yet that if it were 199*l.* the husband's assignees would take all. Then, as to what amount (if any) the assignees would be entitled, he submitted that it was in the discretion of the court as to whether it would settle the whole of the fund in question on the wife, or only a portion. According to the old practice of the court the fund was usually divided nearly equal between the wife and the assignee; but now the court, under circumstances where it thought proper, gave the whole fund: (Dunckley v. Dunckley, 16 Jur. 767.) Each case depends upon its own circumstances; and he submitted that there was sufficient in this case (the husband being bankrupt and the fund so very small) to entitle the petitioner to a settlement of the whole fund upon her and her children.

J. H. Palmer, for the assignees of the husband, contended that, as the fund was under 200*l.*, and the husband might obtain payment of it without the consent of the wife (Elworthy v. Wickstead, 1 Jac. & W. 69), the assignees were entitled. The only special circumstance in this case was the smallness of the fund. In any case the wife was only entitled to have half settled.

KINDERSLEY, V. C.—I will not trouble counsel to reply. I am of opinion that the wife is entitled to have a settlement of the whole fund. As to the question whether she is entitled to a settlement, the sum being under 200*l.*, the rule of equity, which entitles a married woman to a settlement out of a fund to which the husband is entitled jure maritî, is independent of the old form of order (which is one of practice), dispensing with examination of the wife in court in certain cases. The two rules do not stand upon the same ground. The rule which entitles the wife to a settlement is one independent of the question of amount. I do not see why a wife is not entitled as much to a portion out of a small amount as out of a large. The sum, though small, may be of great importance; but the rule which required generally that a wife should give her consent in court, and be examined separately, was instituted in order that the court might satisfy itself that she perfectly knew her rights and thought fit to waive them. The Court has thought, and no doubt that has been the feeling of the Profession, that where the sum is under 200*l.* it is not necessary to require the consent of the wife in court; but that does not exclude the wife from insisting on having a settlement out of the fund. I never heard that the rule would be different in a case of small amount from what it would be in one of large amount. I fully concur with the Master of the Rolls, that where the wife insists on a settlement, the fund being under 200*l.* is no reason why that right should not continue. No doubt there was for some time an impression that the two rules stood on the same ground; but the Master of the Rolls has disabused the Profession of that idea, and I have no hesitation in following that decision (founded as it is on good reason), though contrary to the general impression. I am of opinion that the amount of the sum does not affect the right; the common course (not the rule) is to say half to the wife and children and half to the assignee; but if there is any special circumstance, the rule is different,—an aliquot part may be given. Here there is the special circumstance that the husband is by misfortune unable to provide for the wife and children, and she has no other means of support than this fund, which will not amount to more than 130*l.* It would be a mockery to call it a settlement, if I were to give half to the assignees and settle the other half. I shall therefore direct that the whole fund shall be settled, by order, on Mrs. Mouat for life, and then for such of her children as shall attain twenty-one years or marry. The dividends to be paid to Mrs. Mouat for life, with liberty to apply on her death.

Practice—Supplemental order.

Forster applied under the 52nd section of the Equitable Jurisdiction Improvement Act for a supplemental order in an administration suit. There were three plaintiffs in the original suit. One of them, in May 1851, assigned his interest to one Brown. In October, 1851, the surviving trustee and executor of the testator's will died. Nothing had been done since October. He therefore asked on behalf of the assignee of one of the plaintiffs for the order to revive, and the usual supplemental decree under the 52nd section. He referred to a case decided by the Lords Justices, in which the order was made at the instance of a creditor; and another case before Vice-Chancellor Stuart, where the suit became defective by the marriage of a female plaintiff.

His HONOUR made the order.

Will—Construction—Separate use.

A bequest to a married woman for her sole use and benefit:

Held to be a bequest for her separate use.

Mary Ann Tayett, by her will dated the 9th June, 1852, bequeathed her residuary personal estate in the following terms: "After all my debts are paid and funeral expenses, I give to my sister Elizabeth Jane Barnes, for her sole use and benefit, all my moneys in the funds, household property, and all my effects, excepting the case of Ann Jupp; I give to her twenty-five pounds;" and the testatrix appointed James Forsyth and Alexander Russell executors of her will. The testatrix died on the 19th June, 1852. Mrs. Barnes filed a claim in the common form against the executors, and therein she was stated to be residuary legatee for her separate use.

Speed appeared for the plaintiff, and contended that the gift was to her separate use, and referred to Ex parte Ray, 1 Mad. 199. The husband did not dispute the plaintiff's claim to have the property to her separate use. [The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that this was a claim in the common form with no statement of the will, and he could not decide the question upon such imperfect materials.] The affidavits filed in support of the claim contained the words of the bequest.

Cottrell, for the executors.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said he perceived there was an averment in the claim that the plaintiff was entitled as residuary legatee to her separate use; and as the words of the bequest appeared upon the affidavit, he considered that the question might be disposed of without requiring an amendment of the claim. Upon the construction of the words of the will, his Honour thought that the bequest was to the plaintiff's separate use.

Practice—Taxation of costs—Solicitor's attendances.

Notice of motion to dismiss a bill was given by a defendant on the 24th April, 1851, but an order thereon was not made until the 27th May, 1852, when the bill was ordered to be dismissed with costs. During the intervening period another motion of the plaintiff's was pending, and during part of the period negotiations for a compromise were being carried on. Upon the taxation of costs the Taxing Master allowed the defendant's solicitor for attendances in court upon the motion to dismiss only upon such days as he could swear that he attended bonâ fide in expectation that the motion would come on. A petition to review this taxation was dismissed with costs.

This was a petition presented by William John Mills, one of the defendants, praying that it might be referred back to the Taxing Master to review his taxation of the petitioner's costs of this suit, under the following circumstances:—The bill was filed on the 15th March 1850 for the purpose of administering the estate of William Hollocombe deceased, and the petitioner was made a defendant, as the administrator of John Painter deceased, one of the executors of William Hollocombe. On the 22nd May 1850 the petitioner, at the request of the plaintiffs' solicitor, appeared by counsel, and consented to a motion for a receiver, but the order was not drawn up. The plaintiffs afterwards served a fresh notice for a receiver, and the petitioner appeared by counsel on such motion for the purpose of obtaining from the plaintiffs the costs of the former motion. On the 7th Nov. 1850, the second motion was brought on, when, after discussion, V. C. Knight Bruce held that the petitioner was entitled to be paid the costs of one of the motions; but, at the request of the plaintiffs' counsel, the matter was ordered to stand over for fourteen days, upon a representation that the suit would be compromised. The motion not having been brought on, the petitioner gave notice of motion for the 19th of April 1851 to dismiss the bill; but upon the plaintiffs' counsel representing that the arrangements for compromise were nearly completed, the motion was ordered to stand over until the second motion day in the then next term (5th June 1851), and that then the plaintiffs should either dismiss the bill or proceed with the cause, and that the motion for a receiver should be disposed of at the same time. The motions, however, were not brought on until the 29th of April 1852, when the V. C. Parker, at the instance of the plaintiffs' counsel, directed the same to stand over to the first day of the then next term (22nd May 1852). On the 27th of May the motion to dismiss was brought on by the petitioner's counsel, and an order made thereon, but the plaintiffs' counsel declined to bring on the motion for a receiver. The petitioner's costs of suit had been taxed at 57*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, exclusive of subpœna for costs. In such taxation the Taxing Master disallowed the whole of the petitioner's costs of the second motion for a receiver, and also refused to allow to the petitioner the usual fee for attending court upon the motion to dismiss upon more than ten of the fifty-three several motion days upon which the same might have been brought on during the time the same was pending, from the 24th of April 1851 to 27th May 1852, on the ground that the petitioner's solicitor (Mr. Steele) was unable to swear that he attended on such days in court bonâ fide in expectation that the motion would come on.

Daniel and Nalder appeared in support of the petition, and referred to the General Order of 1807, and Lucas v. Pearock, 8 Bea. 1.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR (without hearing Bacon and Terrell, who appeared for the respondents) said, that this was a complaint by a solicitor that his bill of costs had been taxed in such a way as to deprive him of his proper professional charges. No doubt it was of the highest importance that adequate remuneration should be awarded to professional men; but the rules were, or ought to be, so acted on as not to operate injuriously upon the suitors in the cause. The first complaint made by this petition was, that upon the motion for a receiver, this solicitor had been wholly deprived of his costs attending that motion. He had been allowed the costs of one motion for a receiver; and he had obtained those costs where his client was a defendant all but formal with regard to this motion, and who might properly have not objected, but allowed the order upon the motion to be drawn up upon an affidavit of service. However, he instructed counsel to appear upon the motion, and this could not be considered as an indiscreet thing to do. There being an irregularity in the service of the notice of this motion, the solicitors for the plaintiffs served a fresh notice of motion. The petitioner's solicitor knew that this notice of motion was for the same purpose as the former, and did not pretend that it was necessary for him to attend upon it; but he instructed counsel to appear, in order to ask for the costs of the other motion. The Vice-Chancellor then said that the petitioner ought to have his costs of one motion, but not of the other, and therefore upon that ground there was no foundation for the complaint made by the petition. But the petitioner complained that he was a loser, because the motion stood over for many days. But this gentleman, having obtained a taxation of costs, must know that that order included all costs properly costs in the cause; and it would be unreasonable if, upon such a taxation, the plaintiff were saddled with the costs of two notices of motion, when this defendant might have at once consented to the order. The next complaint was, that the motion to dismiss stood over fifty-three times, and the solicitor had been allowed for ten attendances only. It was a wholesome rule that, where notice of motion to dismiss with costs had been given, the costs of those days upon which the motion could have been made, but was not, should not be given. There was a scandal in the very mention of such a claim as the present. The Taxing Master did no more than his duty in a liberal way, when he allowed ten attendances; even those were a great tax upon the plaintiffs. But it was said that there was, during the pendency of this motion, an attempt to compromise; and if so, there was scarcely an excuse for the attendances even on the ten days, when the compromise was going on. His Honour therefore considered there was no reasonable ground for the complaint, and he deeply regretted to find that it was thought proper by any one to bring forward this claim. The Taxing Master had said, Make an affidavit that you attended on such days in court bonâ fide in expectation that the motion would come on; but if the compromise were going on, how could he make such an affidavit. He considered that the Taxing Master had made a wide and liberal allowance, and he should dismiss this petition with costs.

Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44.

Appointment of a representative to a deceased defendant for the purposes of the suit.

In this suit the infant plaintiff was entitled to the fund, the subject of the suit, in the event of his attaining the age of twenty-one; and one of the defendants, to whom a portion of the fund would belong in case the plaintiff did not attain twenty-one, had recently died. The cause was not at issue.

Welford, on behalf of the plaintiff, now moved ex parte for the appointment of a representative to the deceased defendant for the purposes of the suit. The 44th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86 provided that, "if in any suit or other proceeding before the court it should appear to the [illegible] who was interested in the [illegible] legal personal representative, it should be lawful for the court either to proceed [illegible] personal representative [illegible] or to appoint some person [illegible] estate for all the purposes of the suit or proceeding," &c.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that the impression was that this was not the case to deal with the matter. If the appointment were to be made now proposed, it ought to be by a motion [illegible] handed to the registrar. His Honour added that the question should be further considered by the learned counsel, and mentioned again if it was considered necessary.

KEYSE v. HAYDEN.

Vendor and purchaser—Specific performance—Title.

A purchaser bought an estate under conditions, one of which was that the purchaser should take such title as the vendor had:

Held, that this did not relieve the vendor from the duty of showing a bonâ fide title, and the best title he could produce from the materials within his power.

The claim in this case was filed for the specific performance of a contract for the purchase of a leasehold estate. The facts were that Mr. Brennan had contracted to sell the property to Mr. Keyse, the present plaintiff, and on that occasion one of the conditions of sale was that Mr. Brennan should give Mr. Keyse a good and marketable title. This conveyance was not completed; but Mr. Keyse advertised the estate for sale; and Mr. Hayden, the defendant, having offered to buy, a contract was executed, which, among other things, stipulated that the vendor should deliver an abstract of the title to the purchaser, who should make all requisitions of title and objections thereto within seven days from the delivery of the abstract; and then, after other terms of agreement, the contract proceeded, "and the purchaser shall take such title as the vendor has." Disputes arose between the parties, and at length the claim was filed, and on the 2nd Dec. 1851 Lord Justice Turner, then a Vice-Chancellor, decreed the specific performance of the agreement, but ordered the case to stand over until the objections to and requisitions of title should be made. The purchaser required the ordinary length of title to be shown; but the vendor relied upon the condition that the purchaser should take such title as he had, and therefore he refused compliance with the requisitions.

Bolt and Wright, for the plaintiff.

Russell and Schwyn, for the defendant.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—My predecessor has decided that this contract is to be performed, subject to inquiry as to title. The question now is, whether the defendant is to have an absolute title, or whether any and what effect is to be given to the words, that the purchaser shall take such title as the vendor has. It is contended by the defendant that the words are inconsistent with the rest of the contract, and also with the order to inquire into the title. I cannot see the inconsistency. It appears to me quite consistent for a vendor to say, "I have a bonâ fide title, and will do the best I can, but you must take what title I have;" and the condition also appears consistent with the order to inquire. He said bonâ fide title, because if, with such words in the contract, the vendor has no title at all, the court will not interfere. There may be some irremediable defect, or it may appear that the property is gone altogether. Shepherd v. Keatley, 1 C. M. & R. 117, shows that if the purchaser [illegible] aliunde show that the vendor's title is bad, the court will not enforce the contract, although by the condition of sale the vendor is not to be called on to produce that part of his title. Then it is said that Southey v. Butt, 2 M. & C. 207, shows that the court will not give effect to these stipulations. I think that case goes to no such extent. All Lord Cottenham there says is, if a vendor stipulates that the purchaser is to take such title as he, the vendor, has, he is bound to make such stipulation clear and intelligible to the purchaser; if therefore the stipulation is clear and intelligible, and the title, when produced, is not [illegible] title the vendor can make, the purchaser will [illegible] to accept it. I think the words "shall take such title as the vendor has," mean, shall take such title as the vendor can make out from the documents in his possession. But next the defendant says, I am not bound to take such title as the vendor has; I answer again; and the point which strikes me [illegible] tion is, that at the time when [illegible] his contract with the purchaser, [illegible] Brennan for the purchase of the property [illegible] and Brennan is bound to make him a good and marketable title; and if the [illegible] thing to recover his right [illegible] it may be said that [illegible] plaintiff can give him a [illegible] contract. But it does not follow that [illegible] make a good and [illegible] contracted, so to do; and then, if the plaintiff has first his bill against Brennan, knowing at the time of filing it that Brennan cannot give him such title, the bill would have been dismissed. That what is the evidence of waiver? Insists upon the advertisement of sale, which, though not conclusive, is strong evidence of the waiver. In Hughlan's Vendors and Purchasers (p. 348 of the late condensed edition), it is said that attempting to resell the estate is an important circumstance upon this question of waiver, but like other acts, it may be explained; an actual resale, indeed, so far as title is concerned, can seldom be deemed an acceptance of it, because, unless the first purchaser has bound the second to take the title as it stands, the former must intend to obtain a good title himself, in order to confer it on the latter. I think this case comes within the exception, and there is no reason to suppose that at the time of entering into this contract the plaintiff can get more from Brennan than he has offered to the defendant. I think, therefore, the defendant is not entitled to an absolute title.

Decree for specific performance.

General deed of assignment—Antecedent debt—Act of bankruptcy.

A. being pressed by a creditor, borrowed of B. 200l., upon an agreement that the money should be paid to the creditor, and that A. should execute to B. an assignment of all her effects by way of security for the loan. A. afterwards executed the assignment, which, upon default in payment, gave B. power to take all the effects of A. which were on the premises at the time of entry. A. sold the goods, and out of the proceeds paid B. 200l., and afterwards became bankrupt; but the deed was not executed with intent to delay creditors, nor was the payment made in contemplation of bankruptcy.

Held, that the deed was not necessarily in point of law an act of bankruptcy.

Assumpsit by plaintiffs as assignees of Elizabeth Yandall, a bankrupt, for money had and received, and on an account stated. Plea, non assumpsit, and issue thereon. The particulars claimed 207*l.* 10*s.* part of the proceeds of the sale of the bankrupt's effects, paid over to the defendant by or on behalf of the bankrupt on or about the 17th March 1852.

On the trial before Platt, B. at the last assizes for the city and county of Bristol, it appeared that the bankrupt, E. A. Yandall, who was a widow, in March 1851 kept an hotel, of which she was lessee, and was then indebted to a person named Lansdell, in 227*l.*, for securing which she had executed a bond and warrant of attorney, upon which Lansdell entered up judgment. In April 1851 Thomas Cruttwell, the defendant, who was Lansdell's attorney, agreed to pay 200*l.* to Lansdell, which Lansdell agreed to accept in liquidation of the whole 227*l.*, on the understanding that Mrs. Yandall should execute a bill of sale of her effects to the defendant, to secure the repayment to him of the 200*l.*

Accordingly, on the 12th June, 1851, she executed an indenture between herself, of the first part, and defendant, of the second; which recited that she was indebted to defendant in 200*l.* for moneys lent, and that, to secure the repayment thereof with interest by the instalments after mentioned, it had been agreed that she should execute and give to defendant "a bill of sale of all and singular the household furniture and personal effects of her the said E. A. Yandall, in, about, and belonging to the said hotel and premises, with and under such covenants, powers, and provisions as are hereinafter contained;" and it was witnessed "that, in pursuance of the said agreement, and in consideration of the 200*l.* so as aforesaid due and owing from the said E. A. Y. to the said Thomas Cruttwell, the said E. A. Y. doth hereby assign unto the said T. C., his executors, administrators, and assigns, all and singular the household furniture, fittings, decorations and effects, stock-in-trade, wines, liquors, stores, plate and plated articles, linen, glass, china, hardware, culinary and other utensils, implements, goods, and things, being of the nature of personal chattels, which are now in, about, or belonging to the said hotel and premises called, &c. and all the right, title, property, claim and demand whatsoever, at law and in equity, of the said E. A. Y. in and to the said chattels and premises hereby assigned, or intended so to be, and every of them and parcel thereof; to have, hold, take, receive, and enjoy the same unto the said T. C., his executors, administrators, and assigns, as his and their own property, chattels, and effects." Provise that in case of payment by E. A. Y. to defendant by instalments of 50*l.* each on 12th Dec. 1851, 12th June 1852, 12th Dec. 1852, and 12th June 1853, with interest at 5*l.* per cent. on the sum due for the time being, the presents were to be void. Covenant for payment of the money by the instalments, with interest. Covenant that if default should be made in the payment "it shall be lawful for the said Thomas Cruttwell, his executors, &c. peaceably and quietly to receive and take unto his and their possession, and thenceforth to hold and enjoy as well all and every the goods, chattels, and premises hereinbefore assigned, or intended so to be, as also all other goods, chattels, and effects of the said E. A. Y. which shall or may then, or at any time or times thereafter during the continuance of this security, be or be found in, upon, about, belonging or appertaining to the said hotel and premises, or any other premises which the said E. A. Y. may occupy for the purpose of her said business, or otherwise; and also to sell and dispose of the same goods, chattels, and effects respectively, every or any part or parts thereof, either by public auction or private contract," &c. and to receive the moneys arising from the sale, and retain in the first place the costs and charges, and in the next place so much of the 200*l.* and interest as should be due, and pay the surplus to E. A. Y. Proviso, that until default shall be made in payment of some or one of the said instalments of the said sum of 200*l.*, or in some payment of the interest thereof, at the times and in the manner hereinbefore appointed for payment thereof respectively, contrary to the form and effect of the proviso and covenant hereinbefore contained, it shall be lawful for the said E. A. Y., her executors, &c., "to hold, make use of, and possess the said goods, chattels, and premises hereby assigned, or intended so to be, without any manner of hindrance or disturbance of or by him the said T. C., his executors," &c., anything hereinbefore contained to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

Mrs. Yandall continued in possession of the hotel and all her effects until March, 1852, when she offered her effects for sale by public auction. The defendant gave notice to the auctioneer of his bill of sale, and of his claim under it. The effects were sold on 1st March, 1852, for 56*l.*, out of which she paid to defendant 20*l.* 10*s.*, principal and interest; and she applied the residue to payment of other debts and other purposes of her own. Shortly afterwards she became and was duly adjudicated bankrupt.

On these facts the counsel for the plaintiffs contended, that the deed of 12th June 1851 was an act of bankruptcy, and fraudulent, and that the defendant was not entitled to retain the 20*7l.* 10*s.* paid to him in pursuance of the deed. The jury, in answer to questions from the learned judge, found that the deed was not executed with an intent to defeat or delay creditors, and that the payment to the defendant was not made by Mrs. Yandall to the defendant in contemplation of bankruptcy. The learned judge then directed a verdict for the defendant.

Nov. 6.—Kinglake, Serjt. moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, citing Graham v. Chapman, 21 L. J. 173, C. P., as an authority for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

Lord Campbell, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the court.—We think that there ought not to be any rule granted in this case. The jury found that the deed relied upon as an act of bankruptcy was not fraudulent, nor executed in contemplation of bankruptcy. The verdict ought to stand, unless the judge was bound to rule at the trial that the execution of the deed was necessarily in point of law an act of bankruptcy. There having been an agreement before the money was advanced that the security should be given, and the money having been advanced under this agreement, the deed is to have the same effect with respect to creditors as if it had been executed in April 1851 instead of the month of June following. We think it cannot be impeached by the circumstance of the money being paid directly by the defendant to Lansdell, the creditor of Mrs. Yandall; for it was in truth an advance to her to enable her to satisfy a pressing demand; and the defendant was her agent in making the payment, in the same manner as if the money had remained some time in her actual possession. So far this is the common case of a bill of sale bond fide given to secure an advance made on the faith of the security to enable a trader to carry on his business; and it is well-established law that such a bill of sale is not an act of bankruptcy, although it would be an act of bankruptcy if the consideration were either wholly or partly an antecedent debt contracted without security. But reliance is chiefly placed by my brother Kinglake upon a clause in this deed which authorises the defendant to enter and sell after-acquired property; and he refers us to Graham v. Chapman, 21 L. J. N. S. 173, C. P. as an authority to prove that a deed with such a clause is necessarily an act of bankruptcy. On referring to the case, we do not find any such doctrine laid down in it. There the deed expressly recited that it was given not only for a further advance, but for an old unsecured debt; and Jervis, C. J. several times over points this out as the chief foundation of his judgment. He likewise remarks upon the power to take after-acquired property, which then might have prevented the trader from deriving any benefit whatever from the further advance: But that cannot apply to a case like the present, where the trader did derive the full benefit of the whole sum advanced by its being applied at the time to satisfy the demands of an importunate creditor. Therefore, without impeaching the authority of that case, we think that the rule applied for should be refused.

Rule refused.

Highways—Liability on township to repair—Local Act.

Under the 14 & 15 Vict. c. cxix, the council of a borough were appointed surveyors of all highways within the borough, with all the liabilities and powers of surveyors of highways, and were liable to indictment for refusing or neglecting to repair any such highway, and were empowered to make a highway-rate on the occupiers of all kinds of property liable to the highway-rate, within the township within such highway was situate.

Beswick is a township within the limits of the Act, and a road was made under previous local Acts passing through Beswick; but Beswick had never repaired or contributed to the repair of such road.

A rate was made by the council, for the repair of the road within Beswick, upon the occupiers of rateable property within the township of B.

Held, that the rate was properly made, and that the occupiers of rateable property within B. were liable to it.

An appeal against a highway-rate, made by the council of the borough of Manchester, under the Manchester General Improvement Act 1851, was respited by the Court of Quarter Sessions from time to time, and the following case stated by consent for the opinion of this court under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 11.

CASE.

The 6 Geo. 4 c. li. (local) for making and maintaining a road from Great Ancoats-street in the town of Manchester, to join a diversion of the Manchester and Salters Brook road in Audenshaw, in the parish of Ashton-under-Lyne, and two branches of road communicating therewith, authorises the making, amending, widening, &c., and keeping in repair a road from Great Ancoats-street, through Beswick, Bradford, and certain other townships therein mentioned, to Audenshaw, and two branches from such road as therein described, and also authorises the erection of toll-gates and the taking of tolls for (amongst other things) keeping the said roads in repair. And it was thereby declared that such Act should continue in force twenty-one years from the passing thereof, and from thence to the end of the next session of Parliament.

The trustees under the said Act made the main road of which the highway forms a part, for the repair of which in the township or extra-parochial place of Beswick the highway-rate in question is required, and the road has become, and has been since used, as the common thoroughfare from Manchester, through Beswick and Bradford, to its termination at Audenshaw; but the branches therefrom were never made.

By the 14 Vict. c. xli. (local), "To continue the Term of the Act 6 Geo. 4, c. li. so far as relates to the Turnpike Road between Manchester and Audenshaw, and to make better Provision for the Repair of the Road, and for other Purposes," after reciting that the road authorised by the 6 Geo. 4, c. li. had been made, but that neither of the said branches had been made, the 6 Geo. 4, c. li. is repealed, and it is enacted that the now reciting Act should be put in execution for more effectually improving, maintaining, and keeping in repair the road so made, but should not extend to either of the said two branches; and tolls are, by the now reciting Act, authorised to be taken to be applied as in the Act directed.

It is also enacted that the trustees should not repair any part of the public streets in Manchester which were then or at any time thereafter should be pitched and paved by the surveyors of the highways in Manchester, or which should be under the control of any commissioners or other body having, under any other Act, the management thereof. The Act is to continue in force for twenty-one years.

By the Manchester General Improvement Act, 1851 (Aug. 1, 1851), sect. 93, it shall not be lawful for the trustees of any turnpike-road to collect any tolls, or to expend any money in paving, repairing, or improving any of the streets or public places within the limits of that Act. And by sect. 94, the council, and none others, shall be the surveyors of all highways within the borough, and shall have all such powers and authorities, and be subject to all such liabilities, as surveyors of highways are invested with and subject to, by virtue of the laws for the time being in force relating to highways. And, by sect. 96, the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour, for refusing or neglecting to repair any public highway within the borough, and be liable to be indicted for such misdemeanour in the same manner as the inhabitants thereof, or of any township therein, would have been liable if that Act had not been passed. And by sect. 97, for the purpose of maintaining and repairing the highways within the borough, the council, when and as often as they shall think necessary, may make and levy a highway-rate on all the occupiers of all such kinds of property as, by the laws in force for the time being, might be assessed to any highway-rate within the township in which the highways to be maintained and repaired are situated, according to the full net value of the same respectively. The section then directs the mode in which the highway-rate may be made, levied, and recovered. And by sect. 100 parties aggrieved by any rate may appeal against the same to the quarter sessions.

By the same Act, sect. 15, if any street, or part of a street (not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large), which then was, or should at any time thereafter be, formed or set out within the borough, shall not be sufficiently sewered, drained, levelled, flagged, and paved, to the satisfaction of the council, the council may, in the manner therein mentioned, order the same to be completed as therein directed by the owners of the adjoining houses and ground. And by the 12th and subsequent sections, in case the owners should neglect to complete, the council may do so, and call upon the owners for the expense thereof.

And by section 27, when any street shall be sewered, drained, levelled, flagged, and paved, or otherwise completed pursuant to such order of the council, or to their satisfaction, the council shall certify the same by writing under the hand of the town clerk, and such street shall thereafter be a public highway, and repaired and repairable by the township or townships in which the same shall be situate, in such and the same manner as the highways therein were or might be repaired or repairable by law, and that every such certificate shall, within two months next after the making thereof, be transcribed and recorded amongst the proceedings of the council, and deposited with the clerk of the peace.

And by section 28, if any street then already made or thereafter to be made within the borough, had then already been under any powers in that behalf, or should at any time thereafter, together with the footways therein, be drained and paved, or put into good order to the satisfaction of the council, then and in such case, on the application of the persons being the owners of the lands lying alongside, or contiguous, or adjoining to such street, on both sides thereof, or being the owners of the greater portion in extent of such lands, by writing under their hands made to the council, the council may, by writing under the hand of the town clerk, certify and declare the same to be a public highway, and after such declaration the same shall be a public highway, and for ever afterwards repaired and repairable by the township or townships in which the same shall be situate, in such and the same manner as public streets and highways are repaired and repairable by law therein, and that within two months next after the signing of every such certificate and declaration, the same shall be transcribed and recorded amongst the proceedings of the council, and deposited with the clerk of the peace.

The limit of the last recited Act is the parliamentary borough of Manchester, which comprises the townships of Manchester, Chorlton-upon-Medlock, Ardwick, Hulme, Cheetham, and Beswick; the first five of which townships are (with many other townships) comprised within the parish of Manchester. Beswick, although surrounded by other townships, is extra-parochial.

On the 8th April, 1819, the 59 Geo. 3, "An Act for providing that the several Highways within the parish of Manchester shall be repaired by the Inhabitants of the respective Townships within which the same are situate," was passed, in which amongst other things it is enacted, that the inhabitants of the several townships within the said parish shall be liable to repair and amend all highways within such townships respectively, as fully and completely as the inhabitants of every parish by the laws of this realm are liable to repair the several highways within the same.

Beswick is not included in the enumeration of the townships of which the parish is by the said Act stated to consist. Beswick is little more than half a mile in length, and lies between Manchester and Bradford.

It is admitted that there is not any, and never has been any, highway in Beswick other than the turnpike-road hereinbefore mentioned; and that, before the rate now appealed against, no highway-rate had ever been made or assessed within Beswick, and that the inhabitants of Beswick have never repaired the road in question, nor have they in any manner contributed to any highway-rate; and that before "The Manchester General Improvement Act, 1851," no surveyor of highways had ever been appointed for or within Beswick.

No tolls have been taken within Beswick either before or since the 6 Geo. 4, c. li.; nor have any legal steps been taken by or on the part of the inhabitants to compel the trustees to put the road into repair, although the same was often out of repair.

The road is now much out of repair, and will require a large outlay to put it into proper condition. Except as may appear from the previous statement, there has never been any dedication to or adoption by the inhabitants of Beswick of the said road, nor has any statute duty ever been done or performed in respect thereof.

No proceedings whatever for having the said road paved, sewered, or completed at the expense of the owners of the adjoining houses and ground, under the powers referred to, in the Manchester General Improvement Act, have been taken by the council, who contend that the same road is a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large.

Upon the above facts and provisions of the said Act the appellants contend that they are not liable to be rated; but the said mayor, alderman, and burgesses contend that the appellants are liable to be rated; And if the court should be of that opinion, the rate is to be confirmed; but if of a contrary opinion, then the rate is to be quashed.

H. Hill (in support of the rate).—The part of the road in question which passes through Beswick is a highway liable to be repaired by the parish: (Reg. v. Lordsmere, 15 Q. B. 689.) Beswick is within the borough of Manchester, and, therefore, within the Manchester Improvement Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 119), although it is not within the parish of Manchester. The definition of the word "township" is given in the interpretation clause, and shows Beswick to be within the Act. Then, by sect. 93, the trustees are forbidden to collect tolls or expend money in repairing any street or public place within the limits of the Act; that embraces the part of the road in question. And by sect. 94 the council of the borough alone are to act as surveyors of all highways within the Act, and therefore of the road in question. And for the repair of the road, the council are, by sect. 97, to make a rate on the occupiers of all such kinds of property as by the laws in force for the time being might be assessed to any highway rate within the township (therefore within Beswick), within which the highways are situate. The council are subject to indictment for refusing or neglecting to repair any highway within the borough, and therefore that part within Beswick. The rate, therefore, was properly made, and the words of the statute are clear.

Pashley, contrà.—The right might be valid, if Beswick had been liable to repair this highway before the local Act; but it was not. This distinguishes the case from Reg. v. Lordsmere, where a prescriptive liability was laid and proved. The local Act was not intended to impose a liability upon Beswick that was not previously imposed. This township is so small, and the traffic on this, one of the leading roads to Manchester, is so great, that the burden of repairing will be almost ruinous to the township. The local Act was intended merely to create a new machinery for repairing the highways within the borough; the clauses relied on are consistent with this. There must be clear words of intention to create a new liability if such were intended.

By the COURT.—This rate is clearly within the words of the local Act.

Rate confirmed.

REG. v. THE AMBERGATE, &c. RAILWAY COMPANY.

Railway—Mandamus to complete—Return—Non-subscription of capital—Enforcement of compulsory powers—Estoppel.

Mandamus to make and complete a portion of a railway. Return that the whole of the capital required by the company's Act had not been subscribed for, and that the company were unable to procure the subscription.

Plea, that the company were estopped from saying that the capital had not been subscribed according to the statute, because, on another part of the line, they had exercised their compulsory powers.

Held, upon demurrer to the plea—First, that the return was a good answer to the writ, because the statute 8 Vict. c. 18, s. 16, prohibited the defendants from exercising the compulsory powers until the capital had been subscribed.

Secondly, that the exercise of the compulsory powers on another part of the line was res inter alios acta, and therefore no estoppel.

Mandamus at the instance of the Grantham Canal Company to the defendants to make and complete a portion of their line of railway from Ambergate to Bulwell, in the county of Nottingham, as authorised by 9 & 10 Vict. c. clv. Return, inter alia, that the capital of one million required to be raised by that Act had not been subscribed for, and that the company had never been, and were not, able to procure the same to be subscribed according to the statute 8 Vict. c. 18, s. 16. 12th plea in answer to that part of the return—that the defendants ought not to be admitted to make that return, because the defendants had given notice to a landowner in another part of the line for the compulsory purchase of his lands for the purposes of the undertaking, and had entered into an arbitration with him under the Lands Clauses Act for the purpose of settling the amount of compensation to be paid by the defendants to him.

Demurrer thereto.

There was also a demurrer on technical grounds to other pleas; but the material question arose on the demurrer to the 12th plea.

Saturday, Nov. 20. (a)—Willes, in support of the demurrer.—First: The writ cannot be sustained; because the making of the line to its present extent entitles the canal company to be paid for its shares; and the canal company, therefore, has no interest in the completion of the line. (The Grantham Canal Company v. The Ambergate Railway Company, 21 L. J. 322, Q. B.) [Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—The statute creates a prima facie obligation to make the line, which any landowner may enforce. R. v. The York and North Midland Railway, 1 El. & B. 178; R. v. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, 1 El. & B. 228.] However ruinous may be the consequences? [Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—The ruinous consequences can only appear by the return. As to the validity of the writ, this is substantially the same as R. v. The York and North Midland Railway.] Secondly: The return is an answer. The stat. 8 Vict. c. 18, s. 16, enacts, that "where the undertaking is intended to be carried into effect by means of a capital to be subscribed by the promoters of the undertaking, the whole of the capital or estimated sum for defraying the expenses of the undertaking shall be subscribed under contract, binding the parties thereto, their heirs, executors, and administrators, for the payment of the several sums by them respectively subscribed, before it shall be lawful to put in force any of the powers of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, in relation to the compulsory taking of land for the purposes of the undertaking." That being so, the return, which alleges the non-subscription of the required capital, shows that the defendants cannot lawfully do the thing commanded by the writ. But the twelfth plea sets up a supposed estoppel, as if the illegal and void act of giving notice to other landowners prevented the defendants from averring the truth that the capital was not subscribed. Whatever may have been done in relation to the compulsory taking of land is altogether nugatory; and the owners may recover back possession. [ERLE, J.—In Doe dem. Payne v. The Bristol and Exeter Railway Company 6 M. & W. 840, it was said that this provision is in the nature of a defeasance. COLERIDGE, J.—The plea assumes the point in your favour if you are at liberty to take advantage of it.] What has taken place between the company and another landowner elsewhere cannot operate at all by way of estoppel in this proceeding. [Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—You say say it is res inter alios acta. ERLE, J.—This is not technically an estoppel; but it is put upon the doctrine of Pickard v. Sears, 6 Ad. & Ell. 469.

Sir F. Kelly, Solicitor-General (Knowles with him), contrà.—The company, having exercised their compulsory powers, cannot now say that it is illegal for them to do so. The plea shows that they have acted as if the capital had been subscribed; and it does not lie in their mouth to say that it has not. Besides, the subscription of the capital is a requirement introduced chiefly for the protection of the shareholders. [Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—But for the benefit of the landowners also.] In this case a great portion of the line has been made and opened for traffic. [Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—Is not the arbitration with another landowner res inter alios acta?] No; because the point is that land was compulsorily taken, and whose land is quite immaterial. [ERLE, J.—You say that, because the company have acted illegally in exercising their compulsory powers between Grantham and Bulwell, therefore they are bound to act illegally by exercising their compulsory powers between Bulwell and Ambergate.] No; they are prevented from asserting that they have acted illegally. It would be a fraud upon the landowners and the public to exercise the compulsory powers before the capital was subscribed; and the company might purposely avoid having the whole capital subscribed. The return here is insufficient, because it does not show what efforts were made to procure the subscription.

Willes, in reply.—To show the efforts made would be pleading evidence. The return sufficiently shows the act to be impossible. He referred to R. v. The London and North-Western Railway, 20 L. J. 399, Q. B.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Jan. 27.—Lord CAMPBELL, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the court.—Assuming the writ of mandamus in this case to be good on the face of it, we are of opinion that there is a sufficient answer to it in the return that the whole of the capital, or sum of one million,—the sum here specified,—has not been subscribed for, and that the company have never been able, and are not able, to procure the whole of the said capital or sum to be subscribed for, and that it has not all been subscribed for according to the statute in such case made and provided: with other allegations to the same effect. This mandamus, in substance, commands the company to exercise the compulsory powers conditionally conferred upon them to purchase land, and thus to make and complete that portion of the line of railway between Ambergate and Bulwell. They answered by their return that they are forbidden to exercise these powers by the 8 Vict. c. 18, s. 16, and show that, without any default on their parts, they have never been and are not in a situation lawfully to exercise these powers; if so, they are as little able to obey the writ as if by the effluxion of time their compulsory power had expired, in which case it has been determined that a mandamus to make and complete the railway ought not to be granted. That was held in Reg. v. The London and North-Western Railway

QUEEN'S BENCH.

Compton. The only answer to this part of the return is the 12th plea, which is pleaded by way of estoppel, that the defendants ought not to be admitted to make so much of the return, because the company have acted in another part of the line, in an instance set out, where an arbitration had taken place in the form prescribed by the statute. But this was res inter alios acta, and cannot operate as an estoppel between the prosecutors and the defendants. If the peremptory mandamus were to go it would order that to be done which is illegal. The landowners between Ambergate and Bulwell might clearly contest the right of the railway company to give the notices, or to take any compulsory proceedings for the purpose of obtaining the land necessary for making and completing the railway. It has been supposed that a landowner might question the title of the company under the 8 Vict. c. 18, s. 46, even after the company have got possession of the land; and there can be no doubt that, until the whole of the capital has been duly subscribed in the manner required, they might treat the notices of the company requiring the land as null. Under these circumstances we think there ought to be judgment on the demurrer to the 12th plea for the defendants. With respect to the demurrer to the 3rd, 11th, and 15th pleas pleaded to other parts of the return, we think there ought to be judgment for the prosecutors, as these pleas are under the 4 Anne, c. 16, and 1 Will. 4, c. 21, and as they may be considered pleas in confession and avoidance; but as the judgment already given is a bar to the prayer for a peremptory mandamus, we do not think it necessary to enter more at length into these pleas, and we give judgment upon them for the prosecutors.

Judgment for defendants as to 12th plea; for prosecutors as to residue.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF HOUGHTON.

Indictment for nonrepair of highway—Judgment upon former presentment—Estoppel.

Upon an indictment against a parish for the nonrepair of a highway, and "Not guilty" pleaded, a former judgment upon a presentment against the inhabitants of the same parish for nonrepair of the same road is conclusive evidence of the defendants' liability to repair, no fraud being imputed; and any evidence to show that the road is not situate in the parish indicted is inadmissible, even though it should be recited in a local Act of Parliament as a fact that the road was in another parish, and though the presentment may, upon the face of it, show some defect which would have been fatal on demurrer or in arrest of judgment, and the fine imposed upon the inhabitants was not proved to have been paid.

Indictment for nonrepair of a highway.

Plea.—Not guilty.

At the trial, which took place before Wightman, J. at Liverpool, during the last Summer Assizes, the prosecutors gave in evidence a former conviction of the defendants upon a presentment for the nonrepair of the same road in 1791, with the judgment thereon imposing a fine. No evidence was given that the fine had been paid, and the defendants offered evidence to prove that the road in question was not in their township. They also relied upon a recital in a local Act (59 Geo. 3, c. xxii.) stating as a fact that the road in question was situate in the parish of Denton. All this evidence was objected to on the part of the prosecution, but received by the learned judge, and a verdict was found for the defendants.

In the following term a rule nisi was obtained to enter the verdict for the Crown, on the ground that the judgment on the presentment was conclusive.

JUDGMENT.

Jan. 22.—Lord CAMPBELL, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the court.—In this case we are first to consider the general question, whether upon the trial of an indictment against the inhabitants of a parish or township for not repairing a highway, with the plea of not guilty, a prior judgment upon a presentment against the same defendants for not repairing the same highway to which they pleaded guilty, is conclusive evidence to prove that the highway is situated within the parish, and that the inhabitants are liable to repair it. Mr. Cowling very properly admitted that, as the prosecutor had no opportunity of putting the former judgment upon the record, it would not be less operative as an estoppel because not pleaded as such, if it would operate as an estoppel being pleaded, on the doctrine clearly established by the authority cited (Reg. v. Blakemore). In Rex v. St. Pancras,

QUEEN'S BENCH.

Peake N. P. Cases, 219, it was laid down by Lord Kenyon that, under substantially the same circumstances, a prior judgment is conclusive evidence. This doctrine has been stated as clear law by every text writer who has since written upon it, and has been since particularly recognised by the judges; but it has never been the foundation of any solemn decision, and Mr. Cowling was at full liberty to controvert it. He begins very properly by pointing out that a former judgment would not have operated as an estoppel in Rex v. St. Pancras, as the former judgment there was upon an indictment against the parish of Islington; but Lord Kenyon said it may be conclusive evidence against the parish of Islington on another indictment against the same parish for not repairing the same part of the same highway, and it would not be competent to the defendants to contend that that part of the road mentioned in the indictment was not in their parish. We do not find that this doctrine is contradicted by any of the authorities cited by Mr. Cowling. In the Duchess of Kingston's case, the judgment of the Ecclesiastical Court was held not to be conclusive to disprove the first marriage, because it was only in a suit of jactitation of marriage, and that, if final, it was fraudulently obtained. In Rex v. Whitney, as this question did not arise, it can hardly be considered affected by the allusion to it in the judgment of Lord Denman. Rex v. Earlisland only shows that a judgment on a former indictment against a parish may be impeached on the ground of fraud, if the defence to an indictment against the parish be collusively conducted by the inhabitants of a particular township by whom the road ought to have been repaired, and the liability of the whole parish to repair the roads ought not to be established. The case of Rex v. Denton, before my brother Cresswell, is entitled to no weight, for, though the evidence may be said to have been produced to rebut the effect of the former words, the point of estoppel was not taken. On principle, Mr. Cowling objects to a judgment following conviction being conclusive against the parish, although the judgment would not have been evidence for the parish had there been an acquittal. This, however, does not proceed on the point of mutuality which ought to exist with respect to an estoppel, but only because the verdict of not guilty might have proceeded on the ground that the road was not out of repair; whereas, there could not have been a verdict of guilty, without a finding that the defendants were bound to repair the road, as well as that it was out of repair. The liability to repair being in issue, and they being bound by the verdict, followed by the judgment, on a subsequent indictment against the same parish for not repairing the same highway, the same question of liability again coming into issue,—according to the general doctrine of estoppel, on the former judgment being given in evidence, no fraud being imputed (which I hope will always be attended to, because in the case of a particular presentment there is danger of fraud, and very slight evidence would weigh with me to show it was collusive and fraudulent, and of no avail; but here no fraud is imputed, and that is one of the conditions of the proposition which is laid down)—no fraud being imputed, the defendants ought not to be allowed to give any evidence for the purpose of disproving the liability. Mr. Cowling has called upon us to respect the consciences of jurymen, who may thus be required to find a verdict contrary to what they know to be the fact; yet the oath taken by the jurymen is to "find a true verdict according to the evidence." Now the former judgment is allowed to be evidence, and, according to the doctrine of estoppel, no other evidence can be laid before them; so that their finding, according to the judgment, is a true verdict in exact conformity to the oath they have taken. In Reg. v. Blakemore, though the doctrine was not in question, at least four of the judges expressed their entire assent to it; and the only doubt that existed was whether the former judgment could operate as an estoppel without being put upon the record. With respect to the general doctrine, therefore, we are all against Mr. Cowling. But then he objects that in this case there should be no estoppel, because the presentment was bad upon the face of it in not stating how the inhabitants of Houghton were bound to repair the highway. We think, however, that, though the presentment might have been held bad for this defect on demurrer or in arrest of judgment, the defendants, having acquiesced in it, cannot now make the objection. The presentment aptly describes the road, and states it to be in the township of Houghton, and avers that the inhabitants of this township were bound to repair it; and these are the facts which are now again to be established. Mr. Cowling next objects that there was no evidence of the fine imposed being paid, as there was in Reg. v. Blakemore. Execution upon a judgment cannot be necessary to give effect to it as an estoppel if it were duly pronounced; and the non-payment of the fine might have been some evidence of collusion, but where no fraud is imputed it is wholly immaterial. Lastly Mr. Cowling relies on the two Acts of Parliament. Now this road is described as being in the township of Denton; but this is a mere recital in the first Act of Parliament, which is repealed by the second. At most therefore it can only be considered as evidence that the road is in Denton, which, against the estoppel, cannot be admitted. Had there been anything amounting to an enactment that the road should be considered in Denton, this would be considered enough to prevent the estoppel; but a mere recital in an Act of Parliament, either of fact or law, is not conclusive, and we are at liberty to consider the fact or the law different from the statement in the recital. These objections being overruled, it follows that the judgment on the presentment was conclusive evidence against the defendant, and that the rule must be absolute to enter the verdict for the crown. Rule absolute.

SHARMAN v. SANDERS AND OTHERS.

Truck Act—1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 37—What is an "artificer." An "artificer" within the meaning of the Truck Act, is a person who contracts for the use of his own personal services.

Where, therefore, a man was employed at iron works in unloading and burning ironstone at so much per ton, to be paid monthly; and he hired men to work under him at weekly wages, he not being bound by his contract to give his personal services:

Held that, although he did part of the work himself, he was not an artificer within the meaning of the Truck Act, and consequently could not recover back from his employers the amount of wages which had been paid in goods, either to himself or the men under him.

Assumpsit for work and labour as an artificer, workman, and labourer, in and about the manufacturing of iron, and the carting, tipping, and unloading iron and ironstone.

Pleas—1. Payment of 10*l.* into court. 2. As to the residue non assumpserunt. 3. Payment. 4. Payment in goods. 5. Set-off of goods bargained and sold, and sold and delivered, money paid, money lent, and on an account stated.

Replication—1. Taking 10*l.* out of court. 2. Issue joined. 3. Traverse. 4. That before and at the time of doing the work in the declaration mentioned plaintiff was an artificer, workman, labourer, and person engaged and employed in the performance of certain work in and about the getting of ironstone, &c. within the meaning of the stat. 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 37; and that the money in the declaration was wages contracted to be paid to plaintiff as such artificer, &c. for such work; and that the goods in the 4th plea mentioned were delivered by defendants to plaintiff by way of payment for the wages so earned, &c. contrary to the form of the statute, &c. 5. After stating as above that the plaintiff was an artificer, &c. and the action brought for wages—that the sum of money so sought to be set-off is claimed by the defendants in respect of goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered by defendants, being such employers as aforesaid to the plaintiff, being such artificer as aforesaid, whilst the plaintiff was in their employ, at a shop kept by the defendants, contrary to the statute, &c.

Rejoinder—1. Issue joined upon replication to 3rd plea. 2. As to replication to 4th plea that plaintiff was not such artificer, &c. as alleged; and that the said work was not done by plaintiff as such artificer; and that defendants were not such employers; and that the money in the declaration was not wages, &c. modo et formâ. 3. As to the replication to 5th plea, de injuriâ.

At the trial, which took place before Talfourd, J. in Middlesex, during the sittings after last Trinity Term, it was proved that the plaintiff, a labouring man, was employed from June 1850 to June 1851 by the defendants, at the Stanton-by-Dale Ironworks, in Derbyshire, in carting, tipping, and burning ironstone. By the contract with the plaintiff he was to be paid 1½*d.* per ton, and to employ men under him. He hired the men who worked under him at 2*s.* per day, to be paid weekly; but the defendants settled with the plaintiff himself once a month. The number of men hired by the plaintiff varied according to the quantity of work; but it was generally about nine or ten. The plaintiff stated that he was to work as a labourer with the other men, and was liable to be dismissed at a month's notice. On the part of the defendants it was sworn that the personal service of the plaintiff formed no part of the contract, and that if the work was properly done they had no right to make any complaint of the plaintiff, though he was continually absent. In point of fact, it appeared that the plaintiff did sometimes work with the other men, but that he was irregular in his attendance. It was admitted that the plaintiff had been fully paid, either in money or in goods; but the plaintiff sought to recover so much as had been paid to him or to the men under him in goods, on the ground that such payment was rendered illegal and void by the Truck Act (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 37). It appeared that the defendants kept upon their works a shop for the sale of goods, adjoining to which, and under the same roof, is the cashier's office. The plaintiff was supplied with a sort of cheque-book, containing printed orders addressed to the cashier, and requiring him to pay the amount of money named therein. These cheques or tickets, were signed by the plaintiff, and delivered to any of the workmen who wanted an advance, and were by them taken to the cashier to be cashed; but it was proved that the men were expected to lay out a large portion of the money received from the cashier in the adjoining shop; and if they failed to do so, their names were entered in what was called a black book, and the cashier would afterwards refuse to cash their tickets until they had been into the shop and ordered of the shopman goods to the necessary amount, which in that case was usually indorsed by the shopman in pencil on the back of the ticket as a kind of authority to the cashier to pay the money. The learned counsel for the defendants at the trial confined his evidence to the question whether the plaintiff was an artificer; and upon that question the learned judge directed the jury, upon the authority of Riley v. Warden, 2 Exch. 59, that the plaintiff was not an artificer within the meaning of the Truck Act, unless it was an ingredient in his contract that his personal services should be given; that if he might fulfil his contract and yet be personally absent altogether, he was not entitled to the protection of that Act. The jury found that the plaintiff was not an artificer; adding that they deeply regretted that the wholesome provisions of the Truck Act could be so easily evaded.

In the following term a rule nisi for a new trial was obtained on the ground of misdirection.

Bates, Serjt. (Willmore, Q.C. and Wilks with him) showed cause. There was no misdirection in this case of which the plaintiff can complain; for the summing up was, if anything, too favourable for the plaintiff. The question put by the learned judge was whether it was an ingredient in the contract that the plaintiff's personal service should be given; and according to Riley v. Warden, 2 Exch. 59, confirmed by Floyd v. Weaver, 21 L. J. 151, Q. B., that was the proper question to leave. There may be a doubt whether the learned judge ought not to have confined it to mere manual labour; but he gave the plaintiff the advantage of supposing that personal superintendence would be sufficient. Riley v. Warden is supported by an examination of the statute 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 37, (a)

(a) The following are the material sections:—1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 37, An Act to prohibit the Payment, in certain Trades, of Wages in Goods, or otherwise than in the current Coin of the Realm.—1. Whereas it is necessary to prohibit the payment, in certain trades, of wages in goods, or otherwise than in the current coin of the realm: be it enacted, &c. that in all contracts hereafter to be made, for the hiring of any artificer in any of the trades hereinafter enumerated, or for the performance by any artificer of any labour in any of the said trades, the wages shall be made payable in the current coin of the realm, and not otherwise; and that if in any such contract the whole or any part shall be made payable otherwise than in the current coin, such contract shall be and is hereby declared illegal, null and void.—2. That if in any contract hereafter to be made between any artificer, in any of the trades hereinafter enumerated, and his employer, any provision shall be made, directly or indirectly, respecting the place where, or the manner in which, or the person or persons with whom any part of the wages due or to become due to any such artificer shall be laid out or expended, such contract shall be, and is hereby declared, illegal, null and void.—3. That the entire amount of the wages earned by or payable to any artificer in any of the trades hereinafter enumerated, in respect of any labour by him done in any such trade, shall be actually paid to such artificer in the current coin of this realm, and not otherwise; and every payment made to any such artificer by his employer of or in respect of any such wages, by delivering to him of goods or otherwise than in the current coin aforesaid (except as hereinafter mentioned), shall be and is hereby declared illegal, null and void.—4. That every artificer, &c. shall be entitled to recover from his employer, &c. in the manner by law provided for the recovery of servants' wages, the whole, or so much of the wages earned by such artificer in such trade, as shall not have been actually paid to him by such his employer in the current coin, &c.—5. That in any action against the employer for the recovery of any sum of money, due as the wages of his labour, the defendant shall not be allowed to make any set-off, nor to claim any reduction by reason or in respect of any goods, wares, or merchandise had or received by the plaintiff, as and on account of his wages, or in reward for his labour, or by reason or in respect of any goods, wares, or merchandise sold.—6. That no employer shall have or be entitled to maintain any suit or action in any court of law or equity against any such artificer, for or in respect of any goods, wares, or merchandise, sold, delivered, or supplied to any such artificer, by any such employer whilst in his employment, as or on account of his wages or reward for his labour, or for or in respect of any goods, wares or merchandise, sold, delivered, or supplied to such artificer, at any shop or warehouse kept by or belonging to such employer, or in the profits of which such employer shall have any share or interest.—25. That in the meaning and for the purposes of this Act: All workmen, labourers, and other persons, in any manner engaged in the performance of any work, employment, or operation of what nature soever, in or about the several trades and occupations aforesaid, shall be deemed and be taken to be artificers. All masters, bailiffs, foremen, managers, clerks, and other persons engaged in the hiring, employment, or superintendence of the labour, shall be deemed employers. Any money or other thing had, or contracted to be paid, delivered, or given, as a recompence, reward, or remuneration for any labour, done or to be done, whether within a certain time, or to a certain amount, shall be deemed and taken to be wages of labour. Any agreement, understanding, device, contrivance, collusion, or arrangement whatsoever, on the subject of wages, whether written or oral, whether direct or indirect, to which the employer and artificer are parties, or are assenting, or by which they are mutually bound to each other, or whereby either of them shall have endeavoured to impose an obligation on the other of them, shall be a contract, which clearly contemplates the case of mere labourers, who are to receive wages for their own labour. Thus, sect. 8 speaks of the wages of any artificer, "in respect of the labour by him done;" sect. 4, of the wages earned by such artificer; and sect. 5, of the "wages of his labour." Nor does the interpretation clause interfere with this construction; because it draws a clear distinction between "artificers" and "employers," and so defines the two terms that the plaintiff would clearly fall under the latter class. Even if this were not so, the plaintiff cannot complain of his own illegal mode of paying his own men.

Macaulay, Q.C. and Bittleston, contrà.—Sect. 25 of the statute extends the term "artificer" to all persons "in any manner engaged in the performance of any work, employment, or operation of what nature soever in or about the several trades and occupations aforesaid;" and it is submitted that those words are large enough to include the plaintiff. It is a fallacy to say that the plaintiff was "an employer," and therefore could not be an "artificer." He might be both;—as between himself and the men whom he hired he would be an employer; but his relation to the defendants would not the less on that account be that of artificer. If it be not so, the Truck Act is virtually a dead letter; because, by letting out the work to one man, as was done here, the easiest contrivance for evading the statute is provided. In the case of Riley v. Warden, there are some observations of the judges which show that the effect of the interpretation clause was not fully considered by them; and it is moreover distinguishable from the present in this—that the plaintiff's contract there was not for mere labour. The contract there was to make a certain portion of a railway, involving the supply of all the necessary materials and implements for that purpose. Here it was a contract to do certain labour upon the defendant's premises, to be paid for according to the quantity done. Upon the whole it is submitted that, as the plaintiff in fact worked himself, and as there was nothing in his contract to prevent his so working, he was an artificer within the meaning of the statute; and that the learned judge was wrong in telling the jury that in order to render him an artificer it must be an ingredient in his contract that he should give his personal service.

JERVIS, C. J.—Although it may be possible to point out some distinctions between this case and that of Riley v. Warden, I think they are in principle the same, and that, according to that case, the ruling of the learned judge was quite correct.

MAULE, J.—I am of the same opinion; and I quite concur in the judgment in Riley v. Warden. The intention of the statute was to protect a class of persons who were deemed incapable of protecting themselves; because, by the general law, people are at liberty to contract as they please; but there are certain classes who seem to be regarded as perpetually in statu pupillari, and who can only bind themselves by contracts of a particular kind—such as seamen, whose contracts for wages are subject to special laws. Now, with reference to the Truck Act, it seems to me that the normal instance of an artificer under that Act is a person hired to labour with his hands; and that a person who merely contracts to procure labour to be done, either by himself or others, is not within the intention of the statute. A person entering into such a contract is a speculator, who necessarily calculates the price of labour at the time, and is very different from the mere workman, who is paid for his own labour. Nor does the letter of the Act include such a person; because sect. 25, upon which reliance is placed, provides, that it shall be a person "in any manner engaged in the performance of the work;" and I think the performance of the work must mean the doing of the work, not the procuring it to be done; and the fact of his doing something does not, in my opinion, bring him within the words "engaged in the performance of the work." He must be bound by his contract to do the work in order to come within the statute. Therefore, both the letter and spirit of the Act appear to me to be consonant with the decision in Riley v. Warden; and I cannot distinguish that in principle from the present case.

TAYLOR v. LOST AND OTHERS.

Sewers rate—New commission—Fresh presentment of a jury.

In 1818 a level was taken and a survey made of certain lands liable to be rated to the sewers rate on a certain public drain called the "Boy Grift," and a precept was directed to the sheriff to summon a jury. The jury appeared and the court was adjourned to May 1819, when a presentment was duly made by them that the "Boy Grift" was ruinous, and certain lands ought to bear the charges of repairing it. No appeal was made against this presentment, or against the assessment made under it. In June 1828 a special law of sewers was made and registered, continuing the said presentment. In the year 1837 a new commission of sewers was issued, and at the first court under it it was ordered that all laws, rules, constitutions, and orders of former Courts of Sewers enacted, ordered, and decreed, but such as had been repealed, altered, &c. should be continued and stand in full force. In 1845 the dykereeve had applied to the commissioners to authorise him to collect rate in respect of this "Boy Grift," which the commissioners had done without any special presentment, and further rates were made in the years 1847 and 1848:

Held, that the presentment of 1819 still remained operative, and that the rates made by virtue of it in 1845, 1847, and 1848, were valid.

This was an action of trespass de bonis asportatis. The defendants pleaded not guilty, and a justification by the authority of a certain commission of sewers of our Lady the Queen before, and at the said time when, &c. being in full force according to the tenor, purport, and effect of a certain Act of Parliament made in that behalf in the twenty-third year of the reign of his late Majesty King Henry the Eighth. To the plea of justification the plaintiff replied de injuriâ, and on this replication, as well as on the plea of not guilty, issue was joined. The cause came on to be tried before the Right Honourable Sir John Jervis, Knight, at the Summer Assizes in and for the county of Lincoln, on the 19th July 1850, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff for 11*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.* damages and costs of suit, but subject to the opinion of the court on the following

CASE.

The plaintiff is the owner and occupier of certain lands lying in the parish of Bilsby, in the county of Lincoln.

The defendants, before and at the time of the making and assessing of the rates, and of the issuing and executing of the warrant hereinafter mentioned, were and still are commissioners of sewers for the said county, acting for the district in which the said parish is situate under a commission issued and dated the 25th Nov. in the year of our Lord 1840. The said parish is interested by a certain public drain called the "Boy Grift." The defendant Rowell then was and thence hitherto hath been, and still is also, the owner and occupier of lands situate in the said parish, and liable to be rated and assessed to the rates made in respect of the said "Boy Grift" drain. The lands of which the defendant Rowell so was and is such owner and occupier are of the clear yearly value of 40*l.* and upwards.

The plaintiff has sustained damages to the amount of 11*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.* in respect of the trespasses complained of in the declaration. Those trespasses were committed by the command of all the defendants, and under and by virtue of the following warrant, under their respective hands and seals, issued and executed by them, bearing date the 28rd Feb. 1849:—

"To Robert Portington, bailiff of the wapentake of Coleswerth, in the county of Lincoln, and the dykereeve of the parish of Bilsby, in the said county, and to each of them, greeting. Whereas complaint hath been made on oath unto us, her Majesty's commissioners of the sewers for the said county of Lincoln, whereof three of them are of the quorum, that John Taylor, of Bilsby aforesaid, who is duly rated and assessed at the sum of 8*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.* being three proportion rates on lands lying in Bilsby aforesaid in the occupation of the said John Taylor, for and towards the works of sewers, hath refused to pay the same; and whereas the said John Taylor hath been duly summoned to show cause why he refuses to pay the same, and having appeared to the said summons, but not shown any sufficient cause why he refuses to pay the same: These are therefore to authorise you, or one of you, to levy the said sum of 8*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.* upon the goods and chattels of the said John Taylor by distress and sale thereof, and pay the overplus (if any) to the said John Taylor, the charges of distraining, keeping, and selling the same being first deducted. Hereof fail not upon your peril.—Given under our hands and seals at Alford the 28rd day of February 1849."

The said three alleged rates in the said warrant mentioned were rates made for the years of our Lord 1846, 1847, and 1848 respectively, on the said lands of the plaintiff, situate in Bilsby aforesaid, and within the level drained by the said drain under the circumstances hereinafter mentioned.

On the 3rd April, A.D. 1846, the commissioners of sewers for the district in which the said lands are situate held an annual meeting.

At this meeting the dykereeve for the time being of the parish of Bilsby was present and attended in his capacity of dykereeve, and then and in that capacity demanded and required that such commissioners should authorise him, the said dykereeve, to make and assess according to a certain survey by level hereinafter mentioned, a rate for the year 1846, for and in respect of the hereinbefore-mentioned public drain called the "Boy Grift."

The said commissioners, as aforesaid, on their said meeting, thereupon then directed the said dykereeve to make and assess such rates hereinafter mentioned, without any presentment of a jury other than as hereinafter mentioned.

The said dykereeve thereupon afterwards, on the said 3rd April, A.D. 1846, in pursuance of the aforesaid authority, made and assessed a certain rate for and in respect of the said Boy Grift drain, upon, among other persons, the plaintiff, in respect of the occupation of his lands within the said level.

The total assessment for the year 1846 in respect of the said Boy Grift drain was made upon 1581 acres and 1 rood of land. The amount of the proportional rate so rated and assessed upon the plaintiff for the year 1846 in the said rate was 4l. 19s. 7½d., being at the rate of 6d. an acre for 79 acres and 1 rood of land.

In the year 1847 a rate of 2s. 6d. per acre was made by the dykereeve by the authority of the commissioners then assembled, precisely in the same form and manner as the above rate of the 3rd April, 1846, also without any presentment of a jury other than is hereinafter mentioned, which said rate of 1847 is also one of the said rates mentioned in the said warrant, and forms part of the said sum of 8l. 19s. 7d.

The total assessment for the year 1847 in respect of the said Boy Grift drain was made upon 1536 acres and 1 rood of land. The amount of the proportional rate so rated and assessed upon the plaintiff for the year 1847 in the said rate was 6l. 15s. 6d., being at the rate of 2s. 6d. per acre for 53 acres 3 roods and 29 perches of land.

In the year 1848 another rate of 4d. per acre was made by the dykereeve, by the authority of the commissioners then assembled, precisely in the same form and manner as the above rate of the 3rd April, A.D. 1846, also without any presentment of a jury other than as hereinafter mentioned, which said rate of 1848 is one of the rates mentioned in the said warrant, and forms part of the said sum of 8l. 19s. 7d. The total assessment for the year 1848 in respect of the said Boy Grift drain was made upon 1505 acres of land. The amount of the proportional rate so rated and assessed upon the plaintiff for the year 1848, in the said rate for that year, was 17s., being at the rate of 4d. per acre for 53 acres 3 roods and 20 perches of land. From the year 1840 until the year 1846 inclusive, the plaintiff was assessed upon 79 acres 1 rood of land in respect of the said Boy Grift drain since the year 1840; and during the three years for and in respect of which the above-mentioned three rates for the year 1846, 1847, and 1848, and in the said warrant mentioned, were made and assessed, the lands occupied by the plaintiff were and continued the same in situation and quantity, the quantity and extent being considerably less than 79 acres and 1 rood.

The three rates referred to on the said warrant are the rates for the year 1846, 1847, and 1848, and the said sum of 8l. 19s. 7d. mentioned in the said warrant is to be taken as the total amount of the said rates for the years 1846, 1847, and 1848, and the variance between the said sum and the actual total amount is for the purpose of this case to be considered as immaterial. No jury was summoned or empannelled for or at the making of any or either of the aforesaid three rates for 1846, 1847, or 1848, but those rates were all made without any presentment of any jury other than as hereinafter mentioned.

In the year 1818, upon the petition of several proprietors and occupiers in Bilsby of lands drained by the Boy Grift, a level was taken, and survey made, of the land in Bilsby liable to be rated to the Boy Grift drain; and at a court of sewers for the said district, holden on the 22nd Sept. in the year of our Lord 1818, the said court did order that a precept should be directed to the sheriff of the said county, requiring him to summon a sufficient number of good and lawful men of the county of Lincoln, in nowise concerned in the said drainage by Bilsby Boy Grift gout and outfall, or either of them, or any of the lands draining through the same by whom the truth might be best known, to be and appear at the then next court of sewers to be holden at Mablethorpe, in the said county, on Thursday, the 15th Oct. then next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, then and there to be empannelled, sworn, and charged to inquire and present such things as should be then and there given them in charge. At a court of sewers for the said district, holden at Mablethorpe aforesaid, on the said 15th Oct. in the year of our Lord 1818, a jury appeared, and was empannelled by the said court. The said jury was summoned from the hundred of Colesworth, in the said county. The said last-mentioned court was adjourned to the 15th May, A.D. 1819. At a court of sewers holden by adjournment at Alford, on Saturday, the 15th May, in the year of our Lord 1819, the said last-mentioned jury again appeared. On the said 15th May 1819, a presentment was made by a jury of the hundred of Colesworth, in the county of Lincoln, whereby it was presented, in substance, that the Boy Grift gout and outfall was in a very ruinous and dangerous state, and insufficient for the drainage of the lands applied to be drained thereby; that certain works therein mentioned were absolutely necessary; and the jury did thereby find the several quantities of land in the occupation of persons named in the schedule recited, benefited or avoided danger by such drainage, and ought therefore to bear the charges thereof; and that thereby and thereby it was the proportion and occupier in Bilsby of 21a. 3r. 36p. of land.

It further found in Bilsby 1274 a. 3 r. 3 p. liable to the rate, and assessed it rateably per acre payable by instalments. Afterwards, at a court holden on the 2nd June, 1819, a rate, calculated in the proportions in the said schedule named, was made and ordered to be affixed on the doors of the churches of the parishes affected thereby. No appeal was made against the said last-mentioned rate or assessment; and at a special court of sewers holden on the 27th June, 1828, a special law of sewers was signed and sealed, and ordered to be registered on the rolls of the said court, containing the said presentment and proceedings touching the said works, which said law was accordingly registered; and from that time to the year 1837, each of the rates made was founded on the presentment of a jury in the proportions settled by the survey and levels so made in the year 1819, and comprised in the said law of sewers.

No level has been taken or survey made since the year 1819; no presentment of any jury has been made nor any jury empannelled since the year 1837; but at a court held at Alford on the 16th April, 1841, being the first court holden after the issuing of the last commission, the following order was made: "Ordered that all laws, acts, deeds, constitutions, and ordinances of sewers heretofore made, enacted, ordained, and decreed by the court of sewers held in and for the said County of Lincoln, and which have not been repealed, altered, or superseded, be confirmed and stand in full force." All rates made subsequent to 1837 were made in the same manner as those for the years 1846, 1847, and 1848 above mentioned.

It is agreed between the parties that either party shall, subject to objections, if any, appearing on the face of the hereinafter-mentioned documents, be at liberty to refer to the pleadings, action, and also the warrant and the said rates for the respective years 1846, 1847, and 1848, hereinbefore mentioned, and also to the said presentment and verdict of the 15th May, in the year of our Lord 1819, and to the said law of sewers of the 27th June, 1828.

The question for the opinion of the court is whether, under the above circumstances, the defendants were legally justified in taking the goods of the plaintiff, and whether they are liable to an action of trespass de bonis asportatis for so doing.

If the defendants were not legally justified in taking the goods of the plaintiff, and are liable to an action of trespass de bonis asportatis for so doing, the verdict is to stand, otherwise the verdict is to be entered for the defendants.

Willes (with him Cockle) for the plaintiff.—The question in this case is whether an assessment can be made by commissioners of sewers without a presentment. No presentment has here taken place since the year 1819, and there is nothing to connect that presentment with this rate: (Callis on Sewers 107, orig. ed.) In Rex v. Somerset (Commissioners of Sewers) 9 East 105, 3 Smith 109; it was held, that a decree made by commissioners under a former commission, which had expired by lapse of ten years, directing a sea-wall to be refounded which had been destroyed by a violent tempest and inundation, and the sum necessary for its construction to be advanced by those who were before bound to sustain it, ratione tenura (and who did advance the money accordingly), and that a rate should be made on the level for their disbursement, could not be enforced by commissioners under a new commission, as to so much of it as remained unexecuted, though good to the extent to which it had been executed; and therefore in that case the court refused a mandamus to the new commissioners to direct a rate to be levied on the level for the reimbursement directed by the decree. And in Wingate v. Waite, 6 M. & W. 739, a parish, which consisted of two districts, had immemorially been assessed to the repairs of a sea-bank (which was necessary for the protection of lands from the sea in both districts), by one assessment collected by one dykereeve. The commissioners of sewers, without any presentment of a jury, appointed two dykereeves, one for each district, and made a rate on one district exclusively for the repair of the sea bank. And it was held that the rate was void for want of a presentment; and that the commissioners were without jurisdiction, and were liable in trespass for the taking of the plaintiff's cattle under a distress warrant issued by them for arrears. A presentment is not necessary for the application of funds, but it is for an assessment; and in this case the presentment of 1819 was confined to new works. The commission can only act upon a presentment made within its own time. The introduction to the 13th section of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 22, recites that before the passing of that Act doubts had arisen whether a presentment of a jury is not necessary on each and every occasion to repair defences and works within the jurisdiction of the commissioners of sewers, and then goes on to enact that a presentment of a jury shall not be necessary upon each occasion to repair; but that section was not intended to apply to another and subsequent commission; and in the present case, for the purpose of this assessment, there has been no presentment at all. He also referred to sect. 17. [PLATT, B.—This is not assessing the persons—it is assessing the lands, and the presentment to one commission may be sufficient for the purposes of their successors.] In the case of St. Catherine's Docks Company v. Higgs, 12 Q. B. 643, there was a special verdict; and it is there shown the constant changes that were taking place and the necessity of fresh presentments from time to time. A presentment is not a matter of superfluity, but essential to the valid exercise of the power of the commissioners. What is the nature of a commission of sewers? By the 23 Hen. 8, c. 5, the persons named in the commission are to exercise certain duties; and the doubt expressed in the 13th section of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 22, is, whether there should not be a fresh presentment—there is no question that, there should be a presentment for each separate commission. The irregularity here complained of runs through the whole proceeding. How could this presentment of 1819 be traversed? It would be preferable that there should be no presentment rather than a presentment not pointed to the particular works in question. [MARTIN, B.—Does it appear that this assessment was to do anything directed by the presentment? There is nothing to connect the assessment with the presentment. The presentment of 1819 is speculative and prospective. There is no statement of any actual benefit from the works made.] The commission must act on a presentment made in its own time. The commissioners of 1846 profess to assess for the whole level; "these and all other needful works." There is nothing in the presentment of 1819 to show the authority on which it goes, or whether or not the jury was summoned from the hundred over which the commissioners had jurisdiction, in which case it would be bad. It would appear that this jury was summoned from the hundred of Colesworth: (Burkett v. Crosier, 3 C. & P. 66; Woolryeh on Sewers, 131, 132; 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 11, were also cited.)

Mellor, contrà.—When a presentment has once been made, no new presentment is necessary by the same commission. Non constat that any good arising to a person in 1810 should also do so in 1815, yet it might be within the same commission. What is the object of a presentment? The works themselves need not be presented; first, it is necessary to show that from some cause the drainage is insufficient, and then the jury must find what lands will receive benefit or avoid danger by view or otherwise. The finding of the jury in this case is within the terms of the judgment in Stafford v. Hunston, 2 Bro. Ping. 691; Callis, 108–10. The jury is to ascertain who will benefit; the commissioners may decide on the character of the works and the nature of the repairs. The survey of 1818 comprises the land of the plaintiff, and, at a subsequent court of sewers, was ordered to be made a law of sewers, and this law is indented and enrolled as required by the Act of Parliament; and an order was made confirming the same, and that law is to the effect that the lands mentioned in the presentment are liable to the rate in certain proportions.

Cockle was heard in reply. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

POLLOCK, C. B.—In this case we are of opinion that the judgment of the court must be for the defendants. The question was as to the validity of certain rates made in 1846, 1847, and 1848 on the plaintiff's lands. The dykereeve in 1846 having applied to the commissioners to authorise him to make a rate, according to a survey by level in respect of the Boy Grift (a drain intersecting the parish of Bilsby), the commissioners authorised him to do so without any special presentment of a jury previously being made on that occasion. And the same thing happened in 1847 and 1848. It was for these rates that the distress warrant of the commissioners was issued, and the plaintiff's goods seized. There is no doubt that according to the law which governs in these cases, a previous presentment is necessary to justify such a rate. It is unnecessary to cite authorities to show this. But the question here is, whether there has not been a sufficient previous presentment by a jury. The case states that in the year 1818, on the petition of the occupiers in Bilsby of lands drained by the Boy Grift, a level was taken and a survey made of the lands in Bilsby liable to be rated to the Boy Grift; and on Sept. 22, 1818, the court of sewers directed a precept to the sheriff requesting him to summon jurors de corpore comitatûs of Lincoln to appear and inquire; and that on the day of appearance, the sheriff having under this precept summoned a jury out of the hundred of Colesworth, the jurors appeared, and the court was adjourned to May 15, 1819, when a presentment was duly made by that jury that the Boy Grift was ruinous; and they also found certain lands in the occupation of various persons (included in a schedule), received benefit or avoided danger by the drainage through the Boy Grift, and ought, therefore, to bear the charges of repairing it. The plaintiff's lands were included in this schedule and presentment. No appeal was made against this presentment, or the assessment made under it; and on the 27th June, 1828, a special law of sewers was made and registered in the rolls of the court containing the said presentment, touching the said works, under which special law of sewers all rates up to the year 1837 have been since from time to time made without objection. In the year 1837, however, a new commission of sewers was issued; and at the first court under it it was ordered that all laws, acts, deeds, constitutions, and orders of sewers theretofore made, enacted, ordained and decreed by courts of sewers held for the county of Lincoln, and which had not been repealed, altered, or superseded, should be confirmed and stand in full force. At the time of the argument it was conceded that it was not necessary to have any fresh presentment during the continuance of the commission under which the presentment was first made, that being clearly provided for by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 13; but it was said that this could not apply to another and subsequent commission, the Act being limited expressly by the words "during the continuance of such commission." There might have been some difficulty if the case turned on the proper construction to be put on this clause. But here the law of sewers made on 27th June, 1823, and confirmed by the act of the commissioners in the year 1837, makes it unnecessary to examine into that question. For after that act, against which no appeal has ever been made, we think that the presentment of the 15th May 1819 remains still operative, and that the rates made upon and by virtue of it in 1846-7-8 were therefore valid. Probably, upon a representation of a change in circumstances arising since such presentment, it would be competent for the commissioners to inquire into the facts by a new jury, and a fresh presentment, just as if no previous presentment had been made; and for this purpose it is probable that the 17th sect. of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 22, was framed. But here, in 1837, there was an existing ordinance or decree of sewers valid and continuing during their continuance, and this is confirmed by the new commission; and we think this virtually makes the ordinance or decree under the old, an ordinance or decree under the new commission also. Now it is clear that, according to the law of sewers (Callis, 281), the commissioners have power to constitute and ordain laws, ordinances, and decrees,—as Callis says, not only jus dicere but jus facere. These laws must, however, be for the safeguard, conservation, redress, and reformation of the matters committed to their charge, and necessary and behoveful, and chiefly (as Callis afterwards says) pro publico bono, non pro privato alicujus. Now we think this decree or ordinance, whichever it may be, fulfils all these requisites. It is made pro publico bono—it is necessary and behoveful that all decrees in force should remain in force, and that parties should not, by the issue of a new commission, be altered in their previous rights and liabilities. And it is clearly applicable to the conservation and reformation of the Hoy Grift, one of the matters committed to the new commissioners to preserve and repair. We think, therefore, that this resolution of the new commissioners was legal and valid, and that its effect really is to make the presentment of May 1819 a continuing and valid presentment, applicable to the rates in question, and that these rates were therefore valid. It was suggested, but not much argued, that the first presentment was bad, as the jury was summoned by the sheriff from the hundred of Colesworth. This is a mere mistake of fact. The precept to the sheriff was to summon de corpore comitatûs, and was therefore right even according to Burbett v. Crozier, Moody & Malk. 119. The sheriff in his discretion, as he well may, in obedience to this precept, summoned jurors who resided in a particular hundred. But, in law, they are jurors de corpore comitatûs still under these circumstances. He has had an unlimited discretion given him; but, like a wise man, has exercised it in the most convenient way.

Judgment for the defendants.

ANDERSON AND OTHERS v. THORNTON.

Policy of insurance—Wilful misrepresentation—Fraud—Recovery of premium.

This was an action upon a policy of insurance on goods from Baltimore to London. The sixth plea was that there was a wilful misrepresentation as to the time of the sailing of the vessel; and the seventh, that of having on board other goods, packages of lard, uninsured, known to the plaintiffs. The cause was tried before the Lord Chief Baron at the Guildhall, London, when the defendant obtained a verdict on the sixth and seventh pleas; and

Sir F. Kelly, on behalf of the plaintiffs, now moved to set that verdict aside, on the ground of its being against the evidence and for misdirection. He referred to Williamson v. Allison, 2 East, 449; 2 Duar on Insurance, 689; Arnold on Insurance; 5 Car. & P. 86 and 885. He contended also that at all events the premiums were recoverable, and must be returned: (Fyse v. Parkinson, 4 Taunt. 640; Penson v. Lee, 2 B. & P.; and Dalzell v. Mair, 1 Campb. 532.) The facts sufficiently appear in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Wednesday, Jan. 26.—POLLOCK, C. B.—This was an action on a policy of insurance for the amount of premium on a voyage from Baltimore to London, in which a rule was moved for by Sir Fitzroy Kelly. The grounds of the application were two-fold; first, that on the principal question in the cause there was a miscarriage upon the subject of the policy—that part of the claim; secondly, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of the premium. The Court has taken time to consider, very much in consequence of what was said by Sir Fitzroy Kelly, when the rule was moved for, that the point which was very much pressed in argument when the application was made, had been presented to the judge at the trial, and notwithstanding that, and notwithstanding the jury made some inquiry about the amount of the premium, the jury were told that the amount of the premium was unimportant, was immaterial; it being contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the amount of the premium was very material, for the purpose of corroborating the testimony on behalf of the plaintiff in respect to the question that arose, of whether there had been or not the communication, the want of which was complained of — namely, first, whether the ship had sailed on a particular day or not; and, secondly, whether the plaintiff was himself an insurer to the like amount with that which he was insuring with the defendant. The shorthand writer's notes were referred to, for the purpose of enabling the court to ascertain whether this view had been presented to the jury by the learned counsel in his reply at the trial. I had taken a very full note of the address of the then Solicitor-General—a very full note—expressly with the view of not omitting, in directing the jury, any portion of that which might be urged by the Solicitor-General as the ground of his application to the jury for their verdict. When the rule was moved for, Sir Fitzroy Kelly—who ceased to be Solicitor-General in the meantime—certainly I will not say he directly stated that he had used that argument; I must say I certainly understood him so, and I believe it was so understood in court at the time. I pointed out that upon my note; there was no such point, nor did it appear that any such argument was used. And, before the court took time to consider, I read through the whole of the shorthand writer's notes; and, in the course of a very able, certainly not a very short address, but the length of which no one can complain of in a matter of so much importance, I was unable to find one solitary syllable that has the slightest reference to the view that was presented to the court as the ground on which a new trial ought to be granted. My learned brothers have since taken time to consider, chiefly with a view to read over the shorthand writer's notes to see if there was a ground for a motion for a new trial on the point presented to the court. My learned brothers concur with me in the opinion that no such matter was ever urged to the jury at all. There is no such argument to be found in the whole compass of the learned Solicitor-General's speech; and therefore on that principal point, (as to that, a sort of personal appeal was made to me; I believe the learned counsel said he was quite sure that I should be satisfied that a new trial ought to be granted), it appears to me that that entirely fails, and on that ground there ought to be no rule. The motion was made upon several grounds; first it was said that the verdict was against evidence. At the trial, I very much considered the evidence that had been offered on the one side and on the other. I have since during the motion, and subsequent to that period, looked over the evidence with considerable care; and I find on the part of the defendant that there is his own testimony, there is the testimony of the clerk, there is the testimony of the nephew; and they all concur and support each other, and they are supported by the documents that are in writing produced at the trial to the jury, especially one of the papers on which was to be found a statement distinctly stating, "sailed on the 12th." (That was the ship.) That must mean, if not explained otherwise, that she sailed from the port mentioned in the policy on the 12th, and it certainly turns out that that was not true. With respect to the communication of the letter, the evidence of the witness produced on the part of the plaintiff (and there was no other witness)—that evidence is not exceedingly clear and distinct; for one of his expressions is, that on a particular time, when it certainly was his duty to have shown the letter, he did not; and no doubt he positively states that he did show the letter, and as positively on the other side, by all the other witnesses on one occasion, and one of them on another occasion, it is as distinctly denied. Mr. Thornton said—and certainly there was no denial of it—that it was his invariable habit when a letter was produced to him, as a matter upon which the insurance was to be based, invariably to put his initials upon it; and I do not find any particular reason for supposing that that might not be strictly true. It was said that he was certainly mistaken in one respect; and I think he was, with respect to a visit or his being present on a particular period; a contemporaneous note written by the insurance broker, to which it is impossible, I think, not to give full credit, and in consequence of that, to believe Mr. Thornton was at the place at a period, when according to his evidence he was not; but that very note contains no communication beyond the having seen Mr. Thornton. It certainly does not communicate that the letter had been shown to him, which it was, according to the testimony of the witness, the special object of that meeting that that should take place. Looking over the whole of the evidence, I must say that I am perfectly satisfied with the verdict that the jury found. With reference to the other ground mentioned when the rule was moved for, I must say that it appears to me that a new trial ought not to be granted upon this ground; for this is the ground upon which at last it stands, that when the jury came in, an observation was made to them by the presiding judge, which was not an observation in point of law, but an observation in point of fact, and who did not notice a certain view of the case that had been presented to the attention of the jury and in the mind of the judge during the progress of the cause. My opinion is, if that were true, if that were correct, and a new trial was granted upon that ground, it would be difficult to say on what occasion a new trial might not be granted; but it turns out, when the shorthand-writer's note is looked at, that no such point was made in the course of the learned Solicitor-General's (as he then was) address, and that, if the judge presiding at the trial had made any such observation as it was said that he ought to have made, he would have anticipated that which for the first time was presented to the attention of any one when the rule came to be moved for. With respect to the amount of premium, this is to be observed: the ordinary premium was 25*s.*; the premium proposed at last to Mr. Thornton was, I think, 40*s.* or 50*s.*; 40*s.* I think was offered, and he declined to take it; and I think the next day it was done at 50*s.* at the suggestion that they would give him 50*s.* if he would take the whole, which he did. The contract was not between the ordinary premium of 25*s.* and the increased premium, but between one premium and the other, each of them being considerably more than the ordinary premium. And when it was put (and which, if it could be put with truth, would, in my opinion, be a very strong point), that Mr. Thornton must have supposed that the vessel sailed from the Capes on the 12th—because, unless the vessel sailed on the 12th from the Capes, she was already a ship in some danger; and if she had sailed from Baltimore on the 3rd, and it had not been known that she sailed from the Capes on the 12th, there would have been no difficulty about it—that is not correct. The plaintiff, who gave his evidence most fairly, distinctly stated that when he effected this policy he had already been anxious about the vessel for one week. Now the ordinary time of sailing from Baltimore to the Capes does not amount to a period of one week. Whether the communication was made or not, inasmuch as the distance between Baltimore and the Capes is not more than a week, if the plaintiff,—who knew that the vessel sailed from the Capes on the 12th—if he knew that, and had been already one entire week in a state of anxiety, there is no foundation for the argument that Mr. Thornton must have known that the vessel was in no danger at all, if he had supposed that the vessel had sailed on the 12th from Baltimore instead of from the Capes. The argument is this: Mr. Thornton says in his defence, "I supposed that she sailed from Baltimore on the 12th, and you concealed from me that she sailed on the 3rd or the 5th." "Now," says Sir Fitzroy Kelly, "if you suppose that she sailed from Baltimore on the 12th, there could have been no alarm at all, not the slightest reason for an increased premium." I say the fact is not so. Mr. Anderson, the plaintiff, distinctly stated that he had been already a week in a state of anxiety, and a week being much more than the average voyage,—the average was said to be from twenty-four hours to five days, that was the average,—a whole week (which I need not say is more than five days), the owner of the vessel had been himself in a state of anxiety, who knew she had sailed from the Capes on the 12th. If she had sailed from Baltimore on the 12th, Mr. Thornton, who, it appears, was as well acquainted with that voyage as Mr. Anderson himself, might well have supposed it was important whether she sailed on the 12th or on the 3rd; inasmuch as, whether she sailed from one place or the other, she was in a condition of being—if not called a missing ship—of having already gone beyond the average period of the voyage. But all these questions were presented to the jury; and I must say that I endeavoured to give the fullest effect, as it appeared to me ought to be given, to the conflicting evidence which appeared on the one side and on the other; and I certainly am not surprised that the jury ultimately found their verdict in favour of the defendants, because when a very young man, who had not been many months in the business of an insurance broker, and who gave a very confused account, in my judgment, of what took place, and when he was not too harshly cross-examined, but merely asked whether he would pledge himself to a particular statement, which was the statement of Mr. Thornton, refused to say that he would take on himself to say that it was not the truth, and went the length of saying that for anything he could swear or distinctly remember it might be so,—he believed it was not,—but it might be. I am not surprised that the jury found that to be truth which two or three persons on the other hand swore distinctly was the truth, upon a conflict of evidence. Therefore, it appears to me that there ought not to be any new trial. I am perfectly satisfied with the verdict, and I think if there was to be any number of new trials the result ought to be the same. I am not aware that there was any other point that it is necessary for me to mention, except the question of the return of the premium. Now that matter stands thus: After the jury had retired, then, for the first time, the return of the premium was claimed at the suggestion of the defendant's counsel. I then asked Mr. Thornton whether the premium had ever been paid; he said no—that he had refused to receive it; and from the moment that question was put, and was so answered, I heard no more of the point that was then for the first time made. Had I been requested I would have saved the point. I was not asked to put any fresh point to the jury, and I was not again asked to tell them that they might find a verdict for the amount of the premium, and no further notice was taken of it. On the whole therefore, on this part of the case, we are of opinion the proper mode of dealing with this point is this—not to deprive the plaintiffs of the right to recover the premium, but, as I have no doubt the other side will consent—that the count for money had and received should either be struck out of the declaration, or the jury discharged from giving a verdict on it. The plaintiff may recover by another action the premium, if he be entitled to it under the circumstances, and then we believe justice will be done between the parties. The plaintiff will recover the premium, and the defendant will have an opportunity of paying it if he ought to pay it; and whatever (if any) question of law should arise on the subject can be determined. There is no doubt it has been long decidedly understood among mercantile men, that the underwriter signs the receipt, by which he is prevented from denying that he has received the premium; and there is no doubt that there is a case before Lord Eldon which decided that if that claim were made it ought to be attended to; and on the present occasion evidence being given, as I said, I certainly considered the point was done with and waived. The court, however, will take care that no injustice shall be done. This rule will be refused, the defendant consenting. [Watson.—As counsel for the defendant I consent to that.] Very well: you understand that the count for money had and received should be struck out of the declaration. [Watson.—Yes, my Lord.]

PARKE, B.—I concur with my Lord Chief Baron in the observations he has made, and I have very few to add to them. With respect to the verdict being against evidence, my Lord has pronounced his opinion that the verdict was satisfactory to him; and in looking through my Lord's notes, and also referring to some other notes with which I have been furnished, there can be no doubt it was a question entirely for the jury; and the jury might, with propriety, find either one way or the other: the question being this, whether they gave credit to Mr. Powell, the witness for the plaintiff, or Mr. Thornton, the defendant himself. I think, therefore, there is no ground to disturb this verdict because it is a verdict contrary to evidence; but the only reason that induced me to ask for a little time to consider, was that I thought an observation was made by Sir Fitzroy Kelly, which I thought was well deserving of attention, and possibly some observation my Lord made in answer to the interruption of the jury, which might have withdrawn a question from the consideration of the jury. The matter was this: Sir Fitzroy Kelly, in the argument the other day, here, insisted that the amount of the premium was one criterion by which the jury might judge whether Mr. Powell told the truth, or Mr. Thornton told the truth—for that it was a large premium, a premium on a missing ship; and Mr. Thornton would have been likely to ask that premium if he had been told the vessel sailed from the Cape on the 12th instant, but not if he had been told the vessel sailed from Baltimore on the 12th. In one point of view the ship was a missing ship, and the other not,—at least, less a missing ship. That was an observation well deserving consideration; and if I thought the jurymen had asked the question, whether they might look to the amount of the premium in order to enable them to judge whether Mr. Thornton or Mr. Powell told the truth, and the Chief Baron had told the jury they had nothing to do with that question at all, I was inclined to think, and still am, that there would have been good ground for a motion for a new trial, because the observation is well entitled to weight: but I wished to look through all the documents with which we have been furnished; and from the beginning to the end of the elaborate reply of Sir Fitzroy Kelly there is not one word mentioned of that argument. And the mode in which the shorthand writer describes the interruption to have been made by the juryman is extremely obscure, whether the juryman meant any such thing in the form in which he put the question as to the amount of the premium. My Lord Chief Baron returned an answer which is perfectly correct, that they had nothing to do with the amount of the premium. Therefore it appears to me that this point was not made on the trial as a criterion to enable the jury to determine who told the truth, Mr. Powell or the defendant. Therefore I think it would be extremely wrong to grant a new trial on a supposed failure of justice from a defect in the observations on the material facts and the law by the Lord Chief Baron. That is the only ground on which I was induced to ask for further time to consider. With regard to the other points made by Sir Fitzroy Kelly as to the motion for a new trial, I think none of them are well founded. He placed great reliance on the form of the pleas, the fifth and sixth—that in both of them, from the form of the plea, it is necessary, in order to sustain them, to prove the plaintiff had been guilty of a fraudulent misrepresentation, for the terms of the pleas are both of them said to be a fraudulent misrepresentation; and Sir Fitzroy Kelly urged very strongly it was a great hardship on the plaintiff being obliged to combat such pleas, and to go into evidence at considerable length by examining witnesses abroad in order to disprove the matter of fraud, where, as it turned out at the trial, there was no imputation of fraud on the plaintiff, but the pleas were supported on the ground that they were material communications, which, in an insurance case, whether they are fraudulently made a concealment or not, is wholly immaterial, except in reference to the return of the premium. Now, looking at the form of the pleas, it is perfectly clear, it is unnecessary in order to support the plea to prove the fraud, because you may strike out of the plea all the allegations of fraud, and leave a perfectly good plea on the ground of concealment or misrepresentation not fraudulent. It has been acted upon in some cases, and more particularly in two cases which lately occurred in the C. P., of Southall v. Riggs, and Forman v. Wright, in 20 L. J. 145. It appears to be perfectly well known and established, if you can strike out the allegations and leave what is material in the plea, the defendant can prove the plea, and it is perfectly good, and you may prove the material parts. With respect to the costs which Sir F. Kelly states the plaintiff has been put to in order to repel the charge of fraud, I apprehend that would be a question for the Master, who would not allow all the expenses as to the fraud, as the plea is supported on different grounds. But that would not be a ground for a new trial, because my Lord was perfectly right in saying these pleas would be supported by the simple fact of concealment. With regard to the fact that my Lord had not left the materiality of the representation to the jury clearly, it was idle for him to do so, because the fact speaks for itself; the representations were material, and they are admitted to be so by the counsel on both sides. Then, with respect to the return of the premium, there is no doubt, in my mind, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the premium, because, inasmuch as there was no fraud in the representation, if it had been a fraudulent misrepresentation without fraud, he would not have been entitled to recover; but it is only a mere misrepresentation without fraud; the insurance never bound the defendant, and consequently the plaintiff is entitled to the return of the premium. The old law, as old as the time of Lord Mansfield, is, that the defendant is estopped, by signing the policy, from saying he has not received the premium. The whole matter is settled, as we know, in point of practice; it is settled between the broker and the underwriter. It seems to me, inasmuch as this was never mentioned until the jury had gone out to consider the verdict, that the justice of the case will be amply satisfied by allowing the plaintiff an opportunity to recover that premium hereafter, which, according to my notion, he would certainly do in another action for money had and received; and probably that will be rendered unnecessary by the defendant paying the amount of the premium. I am not aware there is any other circumstance in the case that requires any other observations from me. On the whole, I am perfectly satisfied the rule ought to be refused.

COUNTY COURT APPEAL.

Monday, Jan. 17.

AVARDS AND WIFE, App. v. RHODES, Resp.

County Court—Jurisdiction—Plaintiff crediting a set-off to reduce balance below 50l.—Abandonment at the trial of excess above 50l.

A plaintiff claimed as due to him a sum exceeding 50l. but reduced it below that amount by giving defendant credit for a set-off, and sued in the County Court for the balance. The defendant had never agreed to the set-off, or allowed it as part payment, or to the balance of any account reducing the plaintiff's claim below 50l. The County Court judge thought at the trial he had no jurisdiction. The plaintiff then agreed to abandon the excess above 50l. to give jurisdiction; but the learned County Court judge thought it was too late then to do so, and the plaintiff was nonsuited.

Held, that the County Court judge had no jurisdiction under the circumstances, and, having no jurisdiction at the commencement of the suit, the plaintiff could not at the trial abandon the excess to give jurisdiction.

This was an appeal from the County Court of Kent, holden at Tunbridge Wells, and arose from an action brought in that County Court to recover compensation for services rendered by Mahala Avards, the wife of Thomas Avards, to the defendant.

The particulars of the plaintiff's demand, which were annexed to the summons issued in this cause, were as follows:—

In the County Court of Kent, at Tunbridge Wells.

An objection was taken on the part of the defendant that the amount of the plaintiff's claim exceeded the sum of 50*l.*, and that, therefore, the court had no jurisdiction to try the cause. In answer to this objection, it was suggested that the defendant had given notice of the set-off stated in the particulars of demand in a former action, which had been brought in the same court by the said Mahala Avards alone against the said defendant, in which action the plaintiff was nonsuited, on the ground that she was a married woman; but there was no evidence tendered of an account stated, or of any settled and agreed balance between the parties. The judge decided that he had no jurisdiction to try the cause, the plaintiffs not being at liberty to introduce matter of set-off to bring their claim within the jurisdiction of the court. The plaintiffs then offered to abandon so much of the said sum of 57*l.* 4*s.* as exceeded the sum of 50*l.* so as to bring their claim within the jurisdiction of the said court; but the judge decided that this was not a case in which the plaintiffs were at liberty to abandon the excess at the trial, and nonsuited the plaintiffs. The questions for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer are: first, whether the plaintiffs could, by the admission of payments, and by introducing matter of set-off, bring the case within the jurisdiction of the court; secondly, whether the plaintiffs ought to have been allowed, at the trial of this cause, to abandon so much of the said sum of 57*l.* 4*s.* as exceeded the sum of 50*l.* so as to bring their claim within the jurisdiction of the said court.

Macnamara, for the appellants.—The County Court had jurisdiction, as the balance which it sought to recover was within 50*l.* The objection that it was reduced by set-off ought not to prevail, there being evidence that it was due on a settled account; therefore the County Court had jurisdiction. The judge should have inquired into the fact whether it was such a balance or a mere matter of set-off, in order to determine whether he possessed jurisdiction: (Kempton v. Willey, 1 L. M. & P. 280; S. C. 19 L. J. 269, C. P.) Secondly, if the items for which credit is given cannot be taken into account, so as to reduce the claim within 50*l.*, there was an abandonment of the excess, and by such abandonment the demand was reduced to an amount of which the County Court might take cognisance within the meaning of the 63rd section of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, and the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 1, extending the provisions of the former Act to all debts, damages, and demands which may be sued for in the said courts, or any of them, not exceeding the sum of 50*l.* The abandonment was made at the hearing; and that, it would seem from the case of Isaac v. Wyld, 7 Ex. 168, is a proper time to make it. (Vines v. Arnold, 8 C. B. 632; Woodhams v. Newman, 7 C. B. 654; and Bremskill v. Powell, 19 L. J. 362, Ex. were also cited.)

Bovill, contrà.—This was a claim for an amount exceeding 50*l.*, and the County Court has no jurisdiction. There no evidence of there being any settled balance or agreed amount; and the only items for which credit is given in the particulars of demand which, if allowed, could reduce it below 50*l.*, are items which are in operation for that purpose, and which do not in effect reduce it at all, being counter claims. The party summoned in a claim like this is not bound to go to the court. In Isaac v. Wyld it was necessary that the defendant should obey the summons, because there there was an apparent jurisdiction; here there is not. It would be productive of great inconvenience to hold that in such a case a defendant must go to the court; it might fix a man with costs who was not bound to attend. It is clearly a ground for prohibition if the plaint be for more than 50*l.*: (Berwick v. Capper, 7 C. B. 669.) Instead of applying for a prohibition, he may if he choose appear at the hearing, and object to the judge's jurisdiction, as was done in this case; and the judge did right in saying he had no jurisdiction.

Macnamara, in reply.—Isaac v. Wyld was subsequent to Berwick v. Capper, and decides that the mere amount mentioned in the plaint does not oust the jurisdiction of the County Court.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

POLLOCK, C. B.—The questions submitted by the learned judge of the County Court are—whether the plaintiffs could, by the admission of payments, and on introducing matter of set-off, bring the case within the jurisdiction of the court; secondly, whether the plaintiffs ought to have been allowed at the trial of this cause to abandon an excess of a sum of 17*l.* 4*s.* so as to reduce the sum of 50*l.*, so as to bring the cause within the jurisdiction of the court. We are of opinion that the learned judge was right on both points. The jurisdiction of the County Court, by the 58th section of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, extends to "all pleas of personal actions, where the debt or damage claimed is not more than 20*l.*, whether on balance of account or otherwise." The term "balance of account" means after payment of part,—after the allowance of set-off as an item in account in the agreement of the parties, which is equivalent to payment of part, and not when the plaintiff claims more than 20*l.* after a simple set-off. This was so held in Woodhams v. Newman, 7 C. B. 854; 6 Dowl. & L. 189; and Bendick v. Capper, 7 C. B. 869; and in the latter case, where the plaintiff sued for 20*l.* only, as the balance of an account originally of 175*l.*, but reduced by a supposed set-off, the C. P. granted a prohibition. Since that time the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 1, has extended the jurisdiction to 50*l.*, subject to the same limitations. In the case now under consideration the plaintiffs claimed more than 90*l.* Their demand was for 57*l.* 4*s.*, subject to a reduction by payment of 4*l.*, which diminished it to 53*l.* 4*s.*, and against which they proposed to allow, what on the face of the particulars was no doubt a mere set-off, 15*l.* 0*s.* 4*d.* But this set-off had never been allowed before action by the defendant, so as to constitute a part payment; nor did the defendant offer to admit it on the trial. At least nothing of that sort is stated in the case, consequently it was really a demand for 53*l.* 4*s.*, and a demand on the face of the summons, which the plaintiffs would have to prove; and this is a demand which the County Court had no jurisdiction to try. It was, however, contended that the case of Kimpton v. Willey, 19 L. J. 202, C. P.; 1 L. M. & P. 280, laid down a different doctrine from that in which the above cited cases proceeded, and decided that a person might sue for more than 50*l.*, and reduce his claim afterwards by allowing a set-off, or abandoning the excess beyond 50*l.* From the report in both the Law J. and L. M. & P., as to the opinions of Wilde, C. J., and my brothers Williams and Talfourd, it would appear that the ground for which the rule for a prohibition was discharged was, that the affidavits were not sufficient to show that there was an excess of jurisdiction. My brother Maule is reported to have added that, with respect to claims above 20*l.*, there was only an implied prohibition from giving judgment for more than that amount, arising from the enabling clauses of the 58th and 68rd sects. But this is probably incorrectly reported; it seems to us at variance with the decision in Bendick v. Capper, and the words of the Act (sect. 58), that all pleas of personal actions where the debt or damage claimed is not more than 20*l.* may be holden in the County Court. It cannot be that the judge may investigate claims to any amount, provided his judgment does not exceed the limit of 50*l.* But, no doubt, where the plaintiff claims a balance of 50*l.* only, it may happen that the judge may have to investigate demands to a much larger amount; and if there be any part payment or set-off agreed to, it may be required that the plaintiff shall prove a sum which will out-top that payment or set-off, and which may much exceed 50*l.*; but that is made necessary by the introduction into the Act of the terms "balance of accounts," that is, over and above all payments; and is a very different case to a claim of a greater sum, with an offer of a set-off of one, reducing the amount to or below 50*l.* We think therefore that, according to the decision in these cases, the demand originally exceeding 50*l.*, being only reduced below it by offering to allow a set-off never agreed to as a part payment, was one over which the court had no jurisdiction. The offer to abandon the excess at the trial appears to us to make no difference, as the claim from the first was one over which the County Court had no jurisdiction. In that respect the case differs from Isaac v. Wyld, 7 Exch. 103, where the sum on the face of the summons and particulars did not exceed 50*l.*, but was taken out of the jurisdiction by the proof that it was a portion of a debt originally exceeding 50*l.*; and then the plaintiff was permitted to abandon the excess beyond 50*l.*

Judgment affirmed.

TAYLOR v. PULLEN.

Promissory note—Post-dating—Bankruptcy.

The defendant signed a blank stamp in July 1846; in May 1851 he obtained his certificate from the Court of Bankruptcy; and in Oct. 1852 the stamp was filled up and indorsed to a third person:

Held a good note, on which an action might be brought by a bona fide indorsee for a good consideration.

This was a case which was tried before Martin, B. at the sittings in Hilary Term, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff.

Hodgson now moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the verdict should not be entered for the defendant on the 4th plea or a new trial had on the ground of misdirection.

The action was on a promissory note for the sum of 24*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* dated 20th Oct. 1852, payable at one month after date, made by defendant to H. C. Robinson, and indorsed by Robinson to the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded, thirdly, his bankruptcy and certificate.

It appeared that in July 1846 the defendant was under arrest at the suit of one Officer, and was at that time negotiating for his liberation, when he received intelligence of the dangerous illness of one of his children, and he then gave to Pierpoint, the clerk of Robinson, who was the attorney of the execution-creditor, 5*l.* and a blank stamp for a promissory note, with his name to it. On the 12th May 1851 the defendant obtained a third-class certificate from the Bankruptcy Court; and on the 20th Oct. 1852, the stamp was filled up at one month's date, being made payable at a place where the defendant resided in 1846; and the first intimation that it was still in existence that the defendant received was the writ in this action.

Aude v. Dickson, 20 L. J.; Mulhall v. Neville; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 172, were cited.

Cur. adv. vult.

POLLOCK, C.B.—In this case, which was moved yesterday by Mr. Hodson, we are of opinion that there ought to be no rule. The rule was moved for on the ground that it ought to have been the direction given to the jury that it was unreasonable that the blank paper should be filled up after so long an interval; and, secondly, that the plea of bankruptcy was an answer to the action, inasmuch as this paper had been executed by the bankrupt before his bankruptcy, and therefore he ought to be protected by the certificate. We are of opinion there really is no foundation on either of these grounds for a new trial. The matter was left to the jury. It was entirely a question for them what was reasonable under the circumstances, and they found in favour of the plaintiff; and correctly enough, especially and rather because the plaintiff was undoubtedly an innocent indorsee, who had no notion whatever that there was any fraud, or any irregularity that could be imputed to the document. With respect to the bankruptcy we are of opinion, looking to the clauses referred to by Mr. Hodson, that there is no foundation for a rule either on that point, inasmuch as this was a cause of action arising after the bankruptcy; and although—if there had been any collusion between the parties, or any attempt to violate the spirit of the bankrupt laws, by getting them to do an act with a view to create a debt that should be barred by the certificate—although, in that case, there might be some argument used to induce the court to come to a different conclusion, even in such a case my impression, at present, is that we should not be administering law, but making law. There is in this case no foundation for such an argument at all. There is no evidence of any collusion; and it does not appear that there was any attempt to make up this instrument for the purpose of avoiding the effect of the bankrupt laws or any other law. In the usual course of business a debt had accrued; the creditor wished to be paid, and the debtor said, here are five pounds, and here is a piece of paper which you may use when necessary—for, in substance, that was what passed; and then the person who is the creditor who received the paper kept it for a considerable time by him—whether the object might not be to make use of it when the debtor had the means of paying or not—he kept it for a considerable time, and when the debtor got into difficulties, and was discharged by the Bankruptcy Court, he filled it up and paid it away for a good consideration to a person who was an innocent indorsee for value. Under these circumstances we think certainly there should be no new trial.

Re THE TRUSTEES OF THE BAWLBY AND WORKSOP TURNPIKE-ROADS.

Turnpike-roads—Mortgage of Tolls—Administration—Mandamus.

The trustees of a turnpike-road in the province of York mortgaged the tolls, the mortgage deed containing no covenant for repayment. The mortgagee died within the province of Canterbury, the deed being in his house at the time, and administration was taken out in Canterbury. Twelve months' interest being in arrear, an application was made by the administrators to this court for a mandamus to the trustees, to compel them to pay such arrear:

Held, First, that the administration should have been taken out in the province of York.

Secondly, that a mandamus would not lie in such a case.

This was a rule calling upon the trustees of the Bawlby and Worksop turnpike-roads to show cause why a mandamus should not issue, commanding them to pay to the administrators of Mr. John Thomas Dawson the sum of 20*l.* being the amount of one year's interest upon a mortgage of the tolls of such roads.

The trustees were constituted under a local Act, and they had power to mortgage the tolls of the road, which they accordingly did. The deed contained no covenant for repayment. The mortgagee died within the province of Canterbury, and at the time of his death the mortgage deed was in the house in which he so died. Administration to his estate and effects was granted to the Archbishop of Canterbury, out of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. The road itself was wholly within the province of York.

Cowling showed cause against the rule, and contended first, that the administration should have been taken out in the Prerogative Court of York, and not of Canterbury; secondly, that a mandamus would not lie in such a case.

Pearce in support of the rule. Cur. adv. vult.

His LORDSHIP to-day delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

This was a rule for a mandamus to compel the trustees to pay the representatives of a mortgagee the interest upon his mortgage. Upon the argument before me, at the end of the last term, it was agreed that two points should be left for my consideration. The first was, whether the administration was properly taken out in the province of Canterbury, or whether the administration should have been taken out in the province of York, in which province the roads were situate; and secondly, whether a mandamus in such a case would lie. The deed of assignment of the tolls to the original mortgagee, contained no covenant for repayment, but was a mere conveyance. This gave a chattel interest in the tolls to the mortgagee which would pass to the administrator. This seems to fall within the same rule as is stated in Comyn's Digest, B. 4. I think therefore the administration should have been taken out where the roads were situate, in York, and not in Canterbury. It must be taken that such a security gives no legal right to the mortgagee to demand either principal or interest: (Pardoe v. Price, 16 M. & W. 451.) I feel bound by that authority to hold that the applicant has no legal right, but that his remedy is in equity. We held that no mandamus would lie when it was merely an equitable right (1 El. & Bl. 92): it was said by Lord Campbell that the remedy was in equity, and that therefore a mandamus would not lie. Taking the general rule to be so, as stated in Reg. v. the Marquis of Stafford, 3 T. R. 646, and finding no particular circumstance to take this case out of the general rule, my opinion is against the applicant, and the rule must be discharged, upon the terms agreed upon between the parties.

Rule discharged.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS COURT.

Re H. E. FAIRDELL.

Creditor omitted from schedule—New detainer before the period of discharge specified in the adjudication expired—Fresh debts contracted during the period of imprisonment.—Rehearing—New petition.

An insolvent was remanded for two years by the County Court, and had a detainer lodged against him while imprisoned in the county gaol by a creditor who had been omitted from the schedule. The insolvent's wife had also during the same period contracted fresh debts. He then procured his removal to the Queen's prison, when the period arrived for his discharge, pursuant to the adjudication in the County Court.

Quære, how is he to proceed to get rid of the detainer lodged by the creditor omitted from the schedule, and to protect himself in respect of the new debts contracted?

Held, that as the insolvent had removed himself, thereby throwing difficulties in the way of a rehearing by order of the judge of the County Court, he might file a petition in the Insolvent Debtors' Court, and include in the new schedule both the old debt and those subsequently contracted by his wife during his imprisonment.

Semble, the County Courts have power to direct a rehearing.—Per Mr. Commissioner Law.

Nichols applied for leave to file a petition under somewhat peculiar circumstances. It appeared that the insolvent, who had been a lieutenant in the army, had been imprisoned since Nov. 1849. He was formerly in Reading Gaol, and while there he was heard at the County Court at Reading and declared to be entitled to the benefit of the Act after he should have been imprisoned two years at the suit of a certain creditor. Subsequently he removed himself to the Queen's prison, and in May last would have been discharged; but a creditor who had lodged a detainer while he was in Reading gaol, had not been inserted in the schedule added to which his wife had, since his imprisonment, contracted some debts. Under these circumstances the insolvent was anxious to file a new petition, and to include the omitted debt and the new debts incurred by his wife without his knowledge. The affidavit also stated that there had been a sentence of divorce lately pronounced by the Consistory Court in a suit instituted by him against his wife. He was aware the Court had held that where a debt was omitted from a schedule there should be a rehearing; but the man, in this case, had removed himself from the country, and knew if he had a rehearing to insert the old name, he could not get rid of the new debts.

Mr. Commissioner Law said, that they differed as in this case the petitioner, on rehearing, as the insolvent had removed himself from the jurisdiction of the County Court, before which he was heard. He was of opinion that the County Court could direct a rehearing, although he was not aware whether it had ever been done, neither was he aware whether the other commissioners of the court had given their opinion as to whether the County Court could direct a rehearing. He, however, doubted whether the County Court could exercise the power of ordering a rehearing in this case; he should, therefore, grant leave to file another petition. Motion granted.

Re The Monmouthshire and Glamorganshire Banking Company, ex parte Cape's Executors.

Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Acts, 1848 and 1849 —Contributory—Contract—Period of commencement of liability considered.

A purchaser of shares in a joint-stock company takes them subject to all existing as well as future liabilities, unless a very strong case to the contrary appears upon the deed of settlement.

By the deed of settlement of a joint-stock banking company, every person being a purchaser in respect of any shares in its capital, and every person being an executor or administrator of any deceased proprietor, was, as to all duties, obligations, claims, and demands upon or against him in respect of shares so to be purchased by him, or which should become vested in him as such executor or administrator to be considered a proprietor in the company from the time of the shares being so purchased, or being so vested in him, and when and, by any means whatsoever, any shares in the capital of the company were duly and effectually transferred to a new proprietor, then and in such case, and not before, the responsibilities of the previous owner, as a proprietor in the company in respect of such shares, were to cease and determine, and such previous owner was to be exonerated and discharged from all subsequent claims, demands, and obligations in respect of the same shares, and from all future observance and performance of the covenants, conditions, stipulations, and agreements of the partnership deed. A reserved surplus fund was created, for the purpose, amongst other things, of meeting any unforeseen emergencies, losses, or extraordinary demands on the company; and every transfer was to carry with it the profits and share of capital, and reserved surplus fund, in respect of the transferred shares. The company was directed to be wound up under the Winding-up Act, when it was discovered that losses had been incurred, and that there were outstanding liabilities.

Held, that under the terms of the deed a transferee of shares was, in respect of the transferred shares, subject to all the liabilities of the company, as well those incurred before as those after the date of the transfer.

A motion by the executor of a deceased shareholder to discharge or vary the order of the Master, who, under the order for winding-up the company, had placed his name on the list of contributories, and had made a call upon him in respect of the shares held by his testator, on the ground that some of the debts and liabilities in respect of which the call had been made were incurred before the transfer of the shares to his testator, was on appeal, affirming the decision of the Court below, refused.

This was an appeal to discharge two orders of the Master of the Rolls, the one directing the name of John Ebenezer Davies, as the executor of John Cape, to be retained on the list of contributories of the above-named company for 105 shares, without any limit as to his responsibility; the other authorising a call of 60*l.* per share. In both instances the Master of the Rolls had affirmed the decision of the Master.

The facts were in effect these:—Mr. Cape was the transferee of 105 shares, in respect of which his executor had been made a contributory. Some of the debts which had been proved against the company under the Winding-up Act had been incurred previous to the dates of the different transfers to Mr. Cape; and the objection raised by the appeal was, that the liability of Mr. Cape only extended to debts and liabilities of the company which had been incurred subsequent to the transfers of the several shares.

The following are, in effect the clauses in the company's deed upon which the question rested:—

The 52nd clause declared that so much of the profits of the company as should be made for the period ending the 31st Dec 1836, as the directors in their discretion might deem expedient, should be retained and form part of a fund to be called "the Reserved Surplus Fund," and in each succeeding year, the net profits, after setting apart a certain proportion for maintaining the said surplus fund, should be divided among the proprietors in proportion to their respective shares; that the surplus fund for the time being should be carried to a separate account in the books of the company; and was declared to be as well a reserved fund of capital, to meet any unforeseen emergencies, losses, or extraordinary demands upon the company, as also a reserved fund of profits, for the purpose of supplying any deficiency which from unforeseen circumstances might arise in the profits of any year, and of preventing a fluctuation in the amount of the dividends of successive years; and that such surplus fund should, on the dissolution of the company, belong to and be divided among the persons then entitled to the capital, in the same shares as they should be entitled to such capital.

The 54th—That the executor or administrator of any deceased proprietor should not as such be a proprietor in respect of such shares as should be vested in him, in either of such capacities; but any such executor or administrator should either be at liberty to dispose of such shares, or at his option to become a proprietor upon giving certain notice; and upon complying with the provisions therein contained, he should be admitted a proprietor in the company in respect of such shares, and have the same transferred accordingly, and should be personally charged with the duties and liabilities incident to the ownership of the same; that no dividend, which should have become due on the same shares since his title should have accrued, should be receivable or commandable by him, but, till some person should have become a proprietor in respect of the same shares, should remain in suspense; and every transfer should carry with it the profits and share of capital, and reserved surplus fund, in respect of the shares transferred, so as to close all the right and interest of the party or parties making such transfer in respect of such sold share or shares.

The 57th—That every person who, being a purchaser of any shares in the capital of the company, should take a transfer or assignment of such shares, and should not previously to such purchase have executed or otherwise acceded to these presents, and every person who, being the executor or administrator of any deceased proprietor, should become a proprietor of the company in respect of the shares vested in him in such capacity, and should not at the time that the said shares vested in him in such capacity by the means aforesaid, be a recognised proprietor in the company in respect of any other shares in the capital, should, as to all duties, obligations, claims, and demands upon or against him in respect of such shares, be considered a proprietor in the company, from the time of the shares being so purchased by, or being so vested in him as aforesaid; but as to all profits, rights, privileges, benefits, and advantages to arise from the said shares, no such person should be considered a proprietor in respect of the same until he should have executed or otherwise acceded to these presents.

The 60th—That whenever, by any means whatsoever, any shares in the capital of the company should become actually forfeited, or should be duly and effectually transferred to a new proprietor, then and in such case, and not before, the responsibilities of the previous owner, as a proprietor in the company in respect of such shares, should cease and determine, and such previous owner should be exonerated and discharged from all subsequent claims, demands, and obligations in respect of the same shares, and from all future observance and performance of the covenants, conditions, stipulations, and agreements of these presents in respect of the same shares.

The transfer deed which was in use in the said company on the occasion of the transfer of shares in the company was as follows:—"This indenture, made the day of , between (the assignor of the shares hereinafter mentioned) of the first part, (managing director of the Monmouthshire and Glamorganshire Banking Company) of the second part, (the assignee of the same shares) of the third part, and and (trustees on behalf of the company of proprietors of the said banking company) of the fourth part, witnesseth that the said assignor, in consideration of the sum of £ to him paid by the said assignee, doth, with the consent and approbation of the general board of directors of the said company, testified by the execution of these presents by the said managing director, hereby grant, assign, and transfer unto the said assignee all those shares of him, the assignor, in the capital stock of the said Monmouthshire and Glamorganshire Banking Company now standing in the name of the said assignor in the books of the said company, and all dividends, benefit, and advantage accruing from or incident to the same shares, to hold the same unto the said assignee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, subject to the covenants and stipulations contained in the deed of settlement of the company, bearing date the 1st Aug. 1836; and the said assignor doth, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, covenant with the said assignee that, subject as aforesaid, the said assignee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, shall henceforth hold and enjoy the hereby transferred shares to his lordship here stated deeds and profits thereof, [illegible] containing the from the said assignor, or any other person.) It is clear and the said assignee and all other who may die under him, shall, on the request [illegible] of a covenant said assignee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, execute to him or them any [illegible] further able assurances of the same shares [illegible] it assignee doth, for himself, his heirs, [illegible] administrators, covenant with the [illegible] parties hereto, that the said assignee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, will observe and perform all covenants, articles, and stipulations contained in the said deed of settlement on the part of the proprietors of shares in the said company to be performed, as fully as if the said assignee had been party to and executed the same, and will, whenever thereto required by the [illegible] general board of directors for the time being of the said company, execute the said deed of settlement or any supplemental deed, to be prepared under the authority thereof, and any counterpart or duplicate of the same respectively. In witness whereof," &c.

The Master of the Rolls considered the question as resting on the construction of the contract between the parties. The 57th clause meant, that the purchaser of shares should be considered a proprietor as to all duties, obligations, claims, and demands in respect of the shares purchased from the time of his purchase; but as to all profits or benefits or advantages in respect of such shares, that he should not be considered a proprietor until he should have either executed the deed or have assented to it in some way or other. The proper construction of the clause was to construe it as specifying the time at which the purchaser's liability commenced, and when his right to the profits commenced, but not as specifying what the liability of such purchaser was. The clause left such liability untouched; and, without doing violence to the language, it could not be construed as specifying that the purchaser was not to be liable to debts and liabilities in respect of the purchased shares except from the time of transfer. By the 54th clause a purchaser was to have all the benefit of the reserved surplus fund in respect of his purchased shares. That was a fund which was liable to the debts and liabilities of the company previous to such transfer, and the transferor was entitled to be exonerated by this fund from such liabilities; and by the transfer he was to lose all interest in it. By the 60th section the responsibilities of the transferor were to cease and determine from the time of the transfer; and it was the intention that the exoneration should be as complete as by law it could be made. His Honour therefore thought that, as between the partners themselves, the transferor was completely exonerated from the date of the transfer, although as to creditors he would not be exonerated until three years after the transfer. By the deed of transfer, the purchaser had covenanted that he would observe all the covenants, &c. contained in the settlement deed on the part of proprietors of shares in the company to be performed, as fully as if he had been party to and had executed the same deed; and looking at the terms of the covenant in the deed of transfer, and at the terms of the different clauses of the partnership deed, and considering that the purchaser had the full benefit of the reserved surplus fund, he refused the motion. From that decision the executor appealed.

Roundell Palmer and W. D. Lewis, for the appellant, contended that the company was an ordinary partnership, and in the absence of any special contract must be bound by the ordinary rule of law relating to partnerships, which was that a new partnership was created every time a new partner came in; and, therefore, no shareholder could be liable for any of the debts contracted before he became a member of the company; and there was nothing in the deed of settlement which altered that rule. They referred to the above-mentioned clauses, and argued that no such alteration was made; and that the 60th section only released the outgoing proprietor from future, but did not exonerate him from past, liabilities. Wherever a shareholder had been held liable for debts or losses contracted before he joined the company, there had been an express stipulation in the deed of settlement that he should be so held liable. No such exemption was to be found in the present case. The words "subsequent" and "future" in the 60th clause clearly implied that the intent and meaning of the partnership deed was that the previous owner should not be discharged from previous liabilities. They cited Shaw v Fisher, 2 De G. & S. 11, Wynne v. Price, 3 De G. & S. 310; Humble v Langston, 7 M. & W. 527; Harthorn's case, 1 Mac. & Gor. 49; Sanderson's case, 3 De G. & S. 66, Holmes's case, 19 L. T. Rep. 260; Croston's case, 19 L. T. Rep. 57; on appeal, 209; Dodgson's case, 3 De G. & S. 85.

Bethell and W. M. James, for the official manager, contended that the partnership was not an ordinary one, being, in fact, formed under the provisions of the Banking Act (7 Geo. 4, c. 46), by the 13th section of which the legal liabilities of partners were altered. The 52nd clause of the deed of settlement vested the surplus fund of the company in the new shareholders, which was a fund expressly applicable for the payment of the debts of the company, and it could not be maintained that an incoming shareholder was to have

That statute, however, does not ...exclude from consideration the provisions of this ...scription-deed. Now, if nothing appeared on the face of that deed whereby the liabilities of purchasers and vendors were defined and concluded, I should certainly decide that purchasers of shares must take those shares subject to the state of the concern just as it might happen to stand at the time of the purchase. In this bank the capital consisted of 500,000*l.* divided into 25,000 shares of 20*l.* each. If the contention is right, any single purchaser of any one of these shares would have a right to have an account taken at the time of his purchase, to ascertain whether any future call could be made upon him; to see whether a future call would be made for past or future liabilities. And this might go on for ever; for it could have no reference as to time so long as the concern was being carried on. It would require a strong case to make the court say that a man buying such shares as these did not buy them subject to all liabilities. A man goes into the stock-exchange and purchases them through his broker at the price of the day, and that price is valued according to the state of the concern. The state of solvent reputation of the company fixes the value of the shares. A man buys twenty shares, he has a right to say, in a capital of 500,000*l.*; suppose there was a loss of 400,000*l.* at the time ascertained, and written off, he could not complain. The price he gave for them would have been proportionately less than they would have been had they gained that sum; does it not therefore follow that if the liability to a loss of 400,000*l.* existed, and had to be provided for, he must necessarily furnish his quota. In this case a reserve fund is provided for, and it is not disputed that a purchaser would have a right to a portion of that fund. There must be one simple general rule—a party buying a share in the company must take his share in the rights and liabilities of the company just as he finds them. Unless, therefore, there are clauses in the deed creating a new contract and liability, a purchaser must be considered liable for his share in the debts and liabilities of the company. Now the clauses of the deed appear to lead to the conclusion which I have just expressed. The 60th, which is the principal clause bearing upon the question, is open to no doubt. That clears "a proprietor" from liabilities so long as he was "a proprietor;" and it was whilst "a proprietor" that this responsibility was incurred. Now "subsequent" claims might arise on a previous responsibility, or a subsequent contract; but by that clause all responsibility is removed from the outgoing shareholder in respect of his shares so transferred. It is then provided that no man is to come into this partnership unless he has executed the deed. He comes in then as from the beginning, bound by the covenants in the deed; he executes a deed which embraces the original deed, and from the moment of his execution he becomes bound from the very commencement of the partnership. If this court were to hold a doctrine contrary to what has been decided by the court below, there would be an impossibility of dealing with shares of this nature, and it would make shares in all joint-stock companies almost unsaleable. Such is not the law. The cases do not touch this point. Croxton's case depended upon peculiar words, and was so free from doubt that I did not hear counsel but on the opening side. I have the concurrence of the Lords Justices in disposing of this case, and they agree with me in thinking that the appeal must be dismissed with costs. I think the form of the transfer is in favour of the view which the court has taken.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

IN RE MIDLAND UNION, BURTON-UPON-TRENT, DERBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH, AND LEICESTER RAILWAY COMPANY, ex parte PEARSON'S EXECUTORS.

Winding-up Acts—Provisional committeeman—Member of provisional committee—Contributory—Winding-up order.

A member of the committee of management, who was also a member of the provisional committee of a railway company which was being wound up, had concurred in contracting certain debts on behalf of the company, and had paid 100l. as his share in respect of those liabilities. After his death other claims were made upon the company for debts, for the payment of which also he had (with others) given orders; held, affirming the decision of the Master, but reversing that of the Vice-Chancellor, that his executors were rightly placed on the list of contributories.

This was an application by way of appeal from an order of Stuart, V. C.

This company had abandoned its project, and its affairs were directed to be wound up under the Act.

The Master had placed the names of the executors of the late Sir William Hyde Pearson on the list of contributories; their testator having, as a member of the committee of management and one of the provisional directors of the company, concurred with others in contracting certain debts at the time the scheme was abandoned. There were outstanding debts, to the amount of 5000*l.* and upwards, which it had been agreed should be discharged, by the directors paying the sum of 160*l.* each. Sir William Pearson paid his quota—after his death other claims were made against the company, for the payment of which a call had been authorised. A list of contributories was settled by the Master, which included the names of the executors of Sir William Pearson. Stuart, V. C., on appeal from the order of the Master, directed their names to be struck off: (vide 20 L. T. Rep. 123.)

This was an appeal from that decision.

The case was originally heard before the Lords Justices, but stood over for the reason which is alluded to in the Lord Chancellor's judgment.

Daniel and Selwyn, who appeared for the executors, cited The Great Western Extension Atmospheric Railway Company, Ex parte Wrysht, 19 L. T. Rep. 342, on the question of liability. They contended that unless a debt was proved to exist to the payment of which Sir William Pearson would have been personally liable, the names of the executors ought to be struck off the list of contributories. On the payment of the 160*l.* he was released from all claims as between himself and the company.

Roxburgh for the official manager.

The Lord CHANCELLOR.—The question before the Lords Justices was upon an application to discharge an order of Stuart, V. C., by which he had ordered the names of Sir William Pearson's executors to be removed from the list of contributories. The ground on which the V. C. acted was, that a certain transaction, which took place in July 1846, had released Sir William Pearson in his lifetime from all liabilities, whatsoever those liabilities had been. In that view of the case the Lords Justices did not concur, and consequently the names of the executors would have to be replaced according to what had been done by the Master. In the course of the argument a doubt was suggested, whether there was evidence that there had been any original liability on the part of Sir William Pearson at all, and in respect of that debt on which the parties had theretofore relied; the court seemed to think, and probably I may say did think, there was no debt at all. I allude to the debt of Mr. Vignoles. But then it was said, although that had been relied upon, there were plenty of other debts in respect of which it was clear Sir William Pearson would have been liable; and among others, the official manager, by his counsel, placed his hand on a debt due to a Mr. Bailey, the advertising agent: as to that debt, it was said there could be no doubt of Sir William Pearson having been liable jointly with others. That debt amounted to 1000*l.*, and Sir William Pearson had actively concurred in giving the orders under which it was contracted, not perhaps in every item, but in a large portion. What the Lords Justices said was this: We do not inquire now whether the debt, in respect of which Sir William Pearson was liable to the company, and his executors are now liable, is a larger or a smaller debt—if he was liable, and if his executors are now liable to anything, that is a sufficient justification for placing his name on the list of contributories. At the moment Mr. Daniel was unable to explain; the transaction and, as it was thought that the matter of this new debt had taken the parties by surprise, the Lords Justices allowed these parties an opportunity of bringing it before the court after they should have had an opportunity of more fully investigating it. They have now done so; and I am of opinion that these are debts of the company in respect of which Sir William Pearson was, and of which his executors are now, liable. The orders under which this and the like companies are directed to be wound up are, as I often had occasion to observe when Vice-Chancellor, and which I mentioned while I was one of the Lords Justices, in nine cases out of ten loosely and inaccurately worded. They purport to be orders to wind up the affairs of the company, by which everybody will understand that which was intended to be constituted a company; but in truth that which is wound up are the affairs of the association which embodied itself for the purpose of forming the company, an object which was not accomplished in this, as in many other cases. That being so, was Sir William Pearson a member of the company—a member of the association which endeavoured to form this company? In other words, was he a member of the managing committee? That is not disputed. Then having been such a member, the only question is, whether this—which is certainly a debt as to him, for he gave

...in fact, the moment of which the com... was jointly ... the ... there can ... committee, called the ... it they took on ... company. They ... the meetings Sir ... concurred ... A ... probably was ... not ... saw what ... dealing ... in the minds of the court, ... acting as a body, that he concurred in the proceedings ... meetings, as well those at which he was ... present as those at which he was not. The debt, therefore, incurred by Sir William Pearson and the others in ordering the advertisements, was a debt of the whole body of the managing committee—the body whose affairs are now ordered to be wound up. It appears to me, therefore, that Sir William Pearson's executors are rightly placed on the list of contributories.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—Perhaps the order for winding up in this case might not to have been made; I know not. Perhaps it ought to be discharged; neither that do I know. Perhaps the ground on which the V. C. proceeded ought not to have been removed; but it has been removed, and I am of opinion, with great deference to him, rightly removed. The order for winding up, however, standing, and not being questioned, and the ground upon which his Honour the V. C. proceeded being, in fact, removed, I cannot doubt that Sir William Pearson's executors must remain where they are.

Lord Justice TURNER.—This matter, which is, in truth, entitled in the case of the Midland Union Railway Company, is in substance no more than the winding up of a body which is associated for the purpose of endeavouring to form a company. Of that body I must say Sir William Pearson was one, and must be considered to have authorised all the acts of that body. The simply remaining question is, is or is not this a debt due from that body. It may be true, as was stated, that for some parts of that debt, when contested, Sir William Pearson might not be liable; but it is equally clear that, in the present state of the evidence, it would be unsafe to assume he was not liable for other parts of the debt. His name, therefore, must remain on the list.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Dec. 7 and 17.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES, assisted by MAULE, J.)

Re JOB BROADHURST, ex parte JOB BROADHURST.

Petitioning creditor's debt.

A. being about to enter into partnership with B. and C. stipulated that D. should enter into a covenant, which he accordingly did, whereby he covenanted with A. that the debts due to the partnership would realise a certain sum, and if they did not, he would, on the demand of A., pay the deficiency to B., C., and A.; and he also covenanted that the debts owing by B. and C. did not exceed a certain sum; and if they should, he would, on the demand of A., pay to B., C., and A., or to the person or persons to whom the same might be due, the sum which the debts had aforesaid might exceed such last-mentioned sum. B. made a demand for a sum under both branches of the covenant, and took proceedings against D., under which he was duly adjudicated bankrupt, and the adjudication affirmed:

Held, that the covenant was not to pay a specific or liquidated sum, but only by the damages, and that the default did not therefore constitute a sufficient petitioning creditor's debt.

This was a petition of the bankrupt, Job Broadhurst, to annul the adjudication in bankruptcy against him, on the ground that there was not a sufficient petitioning creditor's debt to support it. It appeared that in March 1852 Josiah Perry and William Knight Broadhurst, who carried on business in partnership as earthenware manufacturers at Fenton, in the county of Stafford, entered into negotiations with Mr. Walker for the purpose of taking him into partnership. By an account and valuation made by an appraiser, by which it appeared that the gross amount of the partnership debts due and owing by Messrs. Perry and Broadhurst amounted to the sum of 1109*l.* 12*s.* 2½*d.*, and of debts owing to them the sum of 981*l.* 16*s.* 3½*d.*, and the balance in their favour on such account and valuation amounted to the sum of 127*l.* 16*s.* 0½*d.* On the examination between [illegible] and the accounts by Edward [illegible] it appeared that there were some debts owing to the firm that had not been included in such account, and Walker gave a guarantee that the debts stated in the account to be due to them would realise the amount there set forth, and an indemnity against any debts owing by the said firm exceeding the amount mentioned in the said account; and accordingly the appellant was, at the request of Josiah Perry and W. K. Broadhurst, induced to enter into the covenant in the articles of partnership hereinafter set forth. [illegible] dated the 6th [illegible] Josiah Perry of the first part, [illegible] hurst of the second part, [illegible] third part, [illegible] fourth part, [illegible] that it was part of the [illegible] which the said Edward Walker agreed [illegible] with the said Josiah Perry and W. K. Broadhurst that Job Broadhurst [illegible] W. K. Broadhurst) should [illegible] that the said Edward Walker that the debts owing to the said late firm of Perry and Broadhurst, included in the valuation made of the effects thereof on the admission of the said Edward Walker into the partnership, and accounted at their full value, would realise so much money to the said Josiah Perry, W. K. Broadhurst, and Edward Walker, and that the debts owing by the said firm of Perry and Broadhurst would not exceed the amount charged to the account thereof in the said valuation, and that he would pay the deficiency in the former case and the excess in the latter,—the said Job Broadhurst did thereby, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, covenant with the said Edward Walker, his executors and administrators, that the debts then owing to the said Josiah Perry and W. K. Broadhurst would realise to the said Josiah Perry, and W. K. Broadhurst, and E. Walker, in the whole the sum of 99*l.* 16*s.* 8½*d.*, being the amount or sum at which the same had been valued on the admission of the said E. Walker into the said copartnership concern as aforesaid; and that if the same did not realise the said sum, the said Job Broadhurst, and his heirs, executors, and administrators, should and would, on the demand of the said Edward Walker, his executors and administrators, pay the deficiency thereof to the said Josiah Perry, W. K. Broadhurst, and Edward Walker; and also that the debts owing by the said Josiah Perry and W. K. Broadhurst did not exceed the sum of 1199*l.* 12*s.* 2½*d.*, at which sum they had been taken in the account on the occasion aforesaid; and that if they should exceed the said sum, the said Job Broadhurst, his heirs, executors, and administrators, should and would, on the demand of the said E. Walker, his executors or administrators, out of his or their own private funds, pay to the said Josiah Perry, W. K. Broadhurst, and E. Walker, or to the person or persons to whom the same might be due, the sum which the said debts last aforesaid might exceed the said sum last aforesaid.

On the 26th May and the 17th June 1852, Edward Walker served two notices on the appellant demanding certain sums under the covenant under the partnership, and on the 26th of the same month of June he served the following notice on the appellant: "I the undersigned E. Walker of Uttoxeter, in the said county of Stafford, but now residing in Fenton, in the parish of Stoke-upon-Trent, and carrying on the trade or business of an earthenware manufacturer, at a place there usually called or known by the name of the Park Works, do hereby demand from you the sum of 1062*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.* now due from and payable by you to me on the accounts after mentioned, upon or by virtue of and secured by a covenant entered into by you with me, and contained in a certain indenture or articles of copartnership, dated the 6th March, 1852, between Josiah Perry of the first part, William Knight Broadhurst of the second part, myself of the third part, and you the above-named Job Broadhurst of the fourth part, which said sum hereby demanded is made up as follows (videlicet):

"The sum of 36*l.* 5*s.* 8½*d.* being debts and moneys comprised in and forming part of the sum of 99*l.* 16*s.* 8½*d.* in the said indenture or articles alleged or stated to be at the date thereof due and owing to the said J. Perry and W. K. Broadhurst as copartners, and which said sum of 36*l.* 5*s.* 8½*d.* has not nor has any part thereof been realised; the particulars of this sum are set forth in the first schedule hereto annexed	36	5	8½
"The sum of 1026*l.* 11*s.* 2½*d.* being the excess of debts now ascertained to have been due and owing on the said 6th March, 1852, from or by the said Josiah Perry and W. K. Broadhurst as copartners as aforesaid, over and above the sum of 1199*l.* 12*s.* 2½*d.* in the same indenture or articles mentioned: the particulars of this sum are set forth in the second schedule hereto annexed	1026	11	2½

"And I hereby give you notice that I shall attend at my counting-house at the Park Works in Fenton aforesaid, on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday the 28th and 29th June [illegible] between the hours of ten and twelve of the clock in the forenoon, and between the hours of one and four of the clock in the afternoon of each of the same days, for the purpose of receiving the said sum hereby by me demanded, and that unless the same is paid to me at or before the time lastly hereby for that purpose appointed, I shall commence legal proceedings against you for recovery thereof without further notice or delay. Dated 20th June, 1852."

On the 30th June 1852, a petition of adjudication in bankruptcy was filed against the said Josiah Perry and W. K. Broadhurst, under which they were on the 29th July 1852 adjudged bankrupts. The appellant not having complied with the demands of the said E. Walker, he, on the 5th Oct. 1852, filed a petition in bankruptcy against the appellant. On the 16th Oct. 1852, the said E. Walker deposed upon oath before Mr. Commissioner Balguy (sitting for Mr. Commissioner Daniell) that the appellant was justly and truly indebted to him in the sum of 441*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.* under the indenture of the 6th March 1852, inasmuch as the debts due and owing by the said Josiah Perry and W. K. Broadhurst at the time at which they were taken as aforesaid amounted to a greater sum than the aforesaid sum of 1,195*l.* 12*s.* 2½*d.*, to wit, the sum of 1,637*l.*, being more than the sum of 1,195*l.* 12*s.* 2½*d.* by the aforesaid sum of 441*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.* and that the appellant did not pay the said sum to the said E. Walker, or to the said J. Perry and W. K. Broadhurst, although the same was demanded of him by the said E. Walker, and that he had received no security or satisfaction whatsoever for the said sum of 441*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.* or any part thereof, save and except the said indenture of the 6th March.

On the 16th Oct. Mr. Commissioner Balguy adjudged the appellant bankrupt; and, upon his applying to Mr. Commissioner Daniel to annul the adjudication, on the ground of there not being a sufficient petitioning creditor's debt, the same was confirmed. The case was argued before their Lordships on a former occasion, when,—their Lordships having asked counsel for the appellant whether, in the event of their Lordships not coming to the same conclusion, they would prefer to have the case argued before a common law judge as well as themselves, or whether they would prefer to bring an action,—counsel thereupon elected that the appeal should be heard before their Lordships and a common-law judge. The appeal now came on, and, according to the practice now adopted under similar circumstances, one counsel only was to be heard on each side.

Holt (with whom was Roxburgh) contended that Mr. Walker's claim against the appellant, Mr. Job Broadhurst, was not a debt upon which an adjudication of bankruptcy could be supported; that it was a claim for unliquidated damages, the amount of which might depend upon a variety of circumstances, and which could not be ascertained without the assistance of a jury; that the covenant contained in the partnership deed was merely a covenant to indemnify, not against the payment of a sum certain, but of uncertain sums, dependent upon the amount of debts due to the old firm, which might eventually be realised, and on the amount of debts due from the old firm, which might be ultimately chargeable to or recoverable from them,—both of which were necessarily contingent, and therefore not constituting debts on which proof might be made. Moreover, the notice to pay to Walker alone was not proper, as the covenant was to pay to Perry, Broadhurst, and Walker, or to the person or persons to whom the same might be due. Again, in such a covenant, nominal damages only would be recovered at law. (Paterson v. Person, 8 T. R. 570, Green v. Bucknell, 8 Ad. & Ell. 701, Taylor v. Young, 3 B. & Ald. 521; and Loosemore v. Radford, 9 Mee. & W. 657), were cited.

Quain (of the common law bar), in support of the decision of the commissioner, contended, that there was no uncertainty as to the sum for which the respondent claimed to prove, that it might be ascertained without the aid of a jury. It was no objection that the covenant to pay to Perry, Broadhurst, and Walker, was entered into with Walker alone, as it made no difference in a court of law that a covenant was made with a bare trustee. This covenant, moreover, was to pay the deficiency in one case, and the excess in the other, and not to indemnify. The Statute of Limitations would have run from the time of demand by Walker. With regard to the alleged uncertainty of the demand, it might be said that every debt was uncertain; for instance, a debt for goods sold and delivered might be cut down on account of the quality of the goods being bad. So a solicitor's bill might be cut down below 50*l.* yet it could not be argued that on that account such debt might not be proved as a petitioning creditor's debt. If the debt was sufficiently certain in the first instance, it did not render the fiat invalid that it was afterwards reduced below 50*l.* even if it went before a jury. At all events, there had been, as we contend, a breach of the covenant on the part of Job Broadhurst, rendering the debt certain, and in fact reducing it to this, that it was the same as if the covenant had been to pay the sum claimed. Ingledew v. Cripps, 2 Lord Raym. 814; Barber v. Brother, 6 Q. B. 868; Ex parte Moffatt, 2 Mont. Deac. & D. 770; Ex parte Tindal, 1 Mont. & M. 462; Lethbridge v. Myston, 2 Barn. & Adolph. 775; Ex parte Hudden, 4 Deac. 106; 3 C. Mont. & Ch. 346, 656; Young v. Taylor, 8 Taunt. 315, were cited and commented on.

Holt, in reply.

MAULE, J.—My Lords Justices having requested me to give judgment in this case, I now proceed to do so. This demand is not one which will sustain a petitioning creditor's debt. (His Lordship here stated the facts, and the deed of partnership containing the covenant on which the bankrupt relied.) It is clear from the recitals that the covenant was only for the benefit of Walker. [illegible] covenant with Walker on the one part, and Broadhurst; they had no interest in Walker alone was the party threatened. That being so, it seems to me impossible to turn it into a covenant to pay a liquidated sum, or any sum, to Walker, the covenant could not be performed by doing [illegible] object being to put the firm in the position [illegible] they would be if the debts, active and passive, were the amount stated in the covenant, and there was the specific sum engaged to be paid to Walker; it could not be treated at law as a specific sum of money to be received; the right to receive would be discretionary only with the damage sustained, and this could not be so made the subject of computation as to be a fit ground for a petitioning creditor's debt. I do not mean to say that a covenant to pay to A. for the benefit of A., B., and C. may not make a good petitioning creditor's debt. In the present case that might not be a sufficient damage to constitute the debt; or, suppose that damage to the amount of 200*l.* was shown, still it does not follow that the money could have been recovered, as anything to be recovered must be in the shape of damage, and such damage is not of a character to amount to a petitioning creditor's debt. The question, therefore, of the sufficiency of the debt ought to be answered in the negative.

The Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—My learned brother and myself are deeply indebted, as well as the bar, to the learned judge on my right hand for his valuable assistance on this occasion. One of us two has, from the first, entertained the same view of the case as that which has been just expressed. The other has entertained a doubt; but, considering the nature of the question and the authorities now brought to bear on it, he deems it his judicial duty to withdraw his doubt, and not to give effect to it, as it amounted to a doubt and not to a dissent.

The adjudication was therefore annulled; and, Mr. Holt having on behalf of J. Broadhurst undertaken not to bring an action, E. Walker was ordered to pay the costs before the commission, there being no costs of the appeal.

SUBCOMBE v. PHENIGER, and Re KING'S COLLEGE HOSPITAL ACT, 1851.

Parol agreement before marriage—Statute of frauds—Part performance of agreement.

A., previous to the marriage of his daughter with B., agreed verbally to give certain leasehold premises to A. and his daughter. The marriage took place, and A. gave the deeds relating to the premises to B., and delivered up possession to him, whereupon B. laid out considerable sums thereon for repairs and otherwise:

Held, that the parol agreement was taken out of the Statute of Frauds by acts of part performance.

This was an appeal by the administrator of the intestate in the cause, William Aylwin, from the decision of Sir John Stuart, V. C. ordering that the sum of 269*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.* in the bank on the credit "Ex parte the President and Governors of King's College Hospital in the matter of the King's College Hospital Act, 1851," should be paid to Mr. George Chartres. That sum was the price of certain leasehold premises in Carey-street, taken by the president and governor of King's College Hospital under their Act, and which Mr. George Chartres, whose right to the property was controverted by the administrator of the intestate, claimed under the following circumstances.

It appeared that the intestate, William Aylwin, was possessed of leaseholds in Carey-street, Lincoln's-inn-Fields, for the term of twenty-one years. In the month of October, 1843, Mr. George Chartres became acquainted with his present wife, Amelia Ann Chartres (then Amelia Ann Aylwin, the daughter of the intestate), and made an offer of marriage, which was accepted by her father. On the 2nd Jan. 1844, and before his marriage, Mr. William Aylwin, at an interview he had with Mr. George Chartres in the house of a Mr. Hayter, in the course of conversation informed him that he was entitled to the said leasehold premises, and that it was his intention to give the same to him and his said daughter on his marriage with her. On the 12th March 1844 the marriage took place, and soon afterwards Mr. W. Aylwin, in performance of his said agreement, gave up possession of the leasehold premises to Mr. Chartres, and directed the tenants thereof to pay their future rents to him, and in consequence thereof Mr. Chartres went with his wife to reside at the premises in Carey-street, and expended out of his own moneys thereon considerable sums in the repairs thereof, and received from the tenants the rents of those parts of the premises which he did not occupy himself, and he thenceforth let the said premises, and treated the same as his own property, and continued in the undisturbed possession and the receipt of the rents and profits thereof until the time when the premises were required for the purposes of the hospital.

It was also proved that whilst Mr. Chartres resided on the premises Mr. W. Aylwin gave him the undu-

Attorney—Commitment in bankruptcy for refusing to answer—Privileged communications.

An attorney is not justified in refusing to disclose matters communicated to him by a client on the ground of privilege, if not relating to a suit or business which he is conducting for the client as attorney, even though he has promised secrecy to the client.

Where an attorney refused to answer whether the bankrupt told him the name of the port from, or the vessel in, which he intended to sail from this country, or whether he intended to leave the country, it was Held, that the Court of Bankruptcy might commit him for such contempt in refusing to answer; and that he was not prohibited from answering either by professional privilege or a promise of secrecy to the client.

Bompas moved for a habeas corpus to the keeper of the Queen's Bench Prison to bring up H. J. T. Hawley, an attorney of this court, with a view to his discharge from custody. The prisoner had been committed by Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 260, for refusing to answer certain questions put to him as a witness on the hearing of a petition for adjudicating one Grant a bankrupt. Hawley had acted as the bankrupt's attorney in some matters previous to the 21st Dec. and on that day the bankrupt called on him, when Hawley persuaded the bankrupt not to disclose where he was going. The questions which Hawley declined to answer in the Court of Bankruptcy were—

1. Did the bankrupt tell you the name of the port whence he intended to sail?
2. Do you believe he has left this country?
3. Did the bankrupt tell you on the 21st Dec. the name of the vessel by which he intended to sail?

The case of Cranenburgh v. Gaskell, 1 Myl. & K. 98, was referred to.

Lord Cottenham, C. J.—No ground whatever is shown for this application, until the commissioner only acted in the discharge of his duty in committing Mr. Hawley for refusing to answer the questions put to him. An attorney's privilege to refuse to answer such questions must be in respect of his professional employment as attorney. Mr. Hawley had been previously employed by the bankrupt as his attorney; but what was he to say for his business as attorney, in respect of which alone he was entitled to the protection? Queen's Prison [illegible]

Habeas Corpus Act, 31 Car. 2, c. 2, s. 3 [illegible] commission of rebellion [illegible] Court of Chancery is not a criminal matter within the Habeas Corpus Act, 31 Car. 2, c. 2, so as to entitle the party committed to the benefit of the provisions contained in that act for discharging persons committed for such matters in the Queen's prisons.

Hawley v. Cobbett & Slowman, 4 Ex. 767.

Debt upon 31 Car. 2, c. 2, s. 10, for a penalty alleged to have been incurred by the defendants, as Lord Chancellor, in refusing a habeas corpus to the plaintiff, who was in the custody of the keeper of the Queen's prison, under a commission of rebellion, for a contempt of the Court of Chancery.

At the trial before Crompton, J., in London, during the sittings in this term, the defendant had a verdict under the direction of the learned judge, on the ground that the plaintiff was not a prisoner in custody upon a criminal charge within the 31 Car. 2, c. 2, s. 3.

By the 31 Car. 2, c. 2, s. 3 (the Habeas Corpus Act), any person committed or detained in prison "for any crime," unless for felony or treason, plainly expressed in the warrant of commitment, may appeal and complain to the Lord Chancellor, &c. And the said Lord Chancellor, &c., upon view of the copy of the warrant of commitment, &c., are hereby authorised and required, &c., to award and grant a habeas corpus, &c.

Sect. 10 provides that it shall and may be lawful to and for any prisoner as aforesaid to move and obtain his and their habeas corpus, as well out of the High Court of Chancery as, &c. And if the said Lord Chancellor, &c. shall deny any writ of habeas corpus by this Act required to be granted, &c. they shall severally forfeit to the prisoner or party grieved the sum of 500*l.*, to be recovered in manner aforesaid.

Cobbett (in person) now moved for a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. The test whether a commission of rebellion is in the nature of a criminal proceeding is whether a person could be arrested under it on a Sunday, and it is submitted that he could. Contempts are criminal in their very nature, and attachments were formerly considered purely criminal (Cecil's case, 12 Mod. 348; Ex parte Whitchurch, 1 Atk. 55); but latterly attachments have been considered of a mixed character, partly criminal, and partly civil: (Rex v. Myers, 1 T. R. 265.) The following cases were also referred to:—Cobbett v. Slowman, 4 Ex. 747; Lewis v. Morland, 2 B. & Ald. 56; 3 Bl. Com. 136.

Lord Campbell, C. J.—I am of opinion that there is no ground for granting this rule. The 31 Car. 2, c. 2, s. 3, is confined to the case of persons in custody on some supposed criminal matter; and the question here is whether the plaintiff was in custody on a charge of a criminal nature. In the view I take of the Act he was not. A commitment under a commission of rebellion may be a criminal proceeding for some purposes, and may authorise the taking the party into custody on the Lord's day; but the question is whether it is a criminal proceeding within the 31 Car. 2, c. 2, s. 3. I think that Act only applies where a party is in custody on a charge of a criminal nature, in which a trial is afterwards to take place, and not where he is in custody under a process of the court like this. That was decided in Cobbett v. Slowman, and I entirely approve of that decision. The Act must be considered to apply to crimes where a trial is afterwards to take place, and a commitment for contempt is not of that nature, as for that reason was admitted in Hobhouse's case, 3 B. & Ald. 420. No authority to the contrary has been cited, and those referred to turn on a different matter, being writs of habeas corpus grantable at common law.

Coleridge, J.—I am clearly of opinion that this commitment was not for some supposed criminal matter within the meaning of the 31 Car. 2, c. 2, s. 3. The mischief to be remedied by that Act is pointed out in the preamble; and sect. 8, by its language, points more clearly to the same object. Section 8, on which this action is founded, is more limited and pointed in its language—"for any crime." Now, applying these expressions to the language of the writ of rebellion, they don't square with it. The charge is not treason or felony, or one in which the party can be admitted to bail. I think, therefore, Cobbett v. Slowman was rightly decided.

Reg. v. the Inhabitants of Stowmarket.

Poor—Irremovability—Marriage during residence—9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, s. 1.

A pauper resided for more than five years continuously in a parish, and then married, and she and her husband continued to reside in the same parish; but at the time of his death, the husband had resided only three years and a half in the parish, his place of settlement being in another parish.

Held, nevertheless, that the pauper was irremovable by reason of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, s. 1; the marriage not affecting her residence in any way.

Certiorari to the Suffolk Quarter Sessions. [illegible] quarter 1852, against an order of [illegible] removing Hannah Rosier and her four children from the parish of Ufford, in Suffolk, to the parish of Stowmarket. The Court of Quarter Sessions confirmed the order, subject to a case for the opinion of this Court.

Case.

Hodgson, [illegible] In any of the [illegible] or cheques [illegible] obtained, [illegible] 14 & 15 Vict. [illegible] the [illegible] on the [illegible] as to be [illegible] of asking for [illegible] larceny on the [illegible] 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 53, it is [illegible] an indictment for [illegible] afterwards prosecuted for larceny upon the same state: Rex v. Nosten, 6 C. & P. 195; Reg. v. Martin, 9 A. & E. 213. [illegible] and it was [illegible] 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100 would be relied upon. The 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 1, only applies to [illegible] in the name or description of [illegible] the owners of property, or the ownership of any property named or described in the instrument, and that the amendment must be made before verdict. Then sect. 8 enacts that it shall be sufficient in an indictment for false pretenses to allege that the defendant did the act with intent to defraud, without alleging the intent to be to defraud any particular person. That leaves the corpus delicti untouched; and it is material to state the ownership of the property, for that is the act which constitutes the offence; and the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 53, meant obtaining the goods of another person by false pretences (per Patteson, J. in Reg. v. Martin); and, for aught that appears on this indictment, the property obtained may have been the prisoner's own.

Metcalfe, contrà.—This objection cannot be taken now, it ought to have been taken on demurrer or on motion to quash the indictment: (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 2.) That section enacts that every objection to any indictment for any formal defect apparent on the face thereof, shall be taken by demurrer or motion to quash such indictment before the jury shall be sworn, and not afterwards. This a formal defect within that section. The gist of the offence is the fraud; it does not matter whose the property obtained may be [CROMPTON, J.—The formal defect intended in sect. 2 seems, from the latter part of the section, to be one which may be amended by the court.] In Reg. v. Fowler 8 Q. B. 292, Lord Denman, C.J. seems to have thought the ownership of the property no part of the offence charged.

Hodgson, in reply.—If Reg. v. Martin was well decided, the ownership of the property obtained is a part of the offence, for the omission to state to whom the property obtained in that case belonged, was held a fatal omission after verdict.

LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am very reluctantly obliged to yield to this objection. It is admitted that before the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, it was necessary to state, in indictments for obtaining goods by false pretences, in whom the property in the money or goods obtained was, and whatever our decision might have been had the point come before us for the first time, we are now bound by the cases cited. No injustice could possibly have been done in dispensing with such a mere [illegible] and we have therefore to see whether the law is altered by the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100. After looking at the various enactments of that statute, I think none of them meets this case. The first section applies only to variances: this is not a variance. Then comes sect. 8, on which it may be most plausibly argued that the averment is no longer necessary; but from that we can only fairly conclude that it is no longer necessary to specify who was defrauded, for that provides that it shall be sufficient to allege that the defendant did the act with the intent to defraud, without alleging the intent of the defendant to be to defraud any particular person, and it proceeds to say that on the trial it shall not be necessary to prove an intent on the part of the defendant to defraud any particular person; but it will still be sufficient to prove that the defendant did the act charged with an intent to defraud. That [illegible] does not meet this case. Then we come to sect. 25, which enacts that every objection to any [illegible] for any formal defect apparent on the face thereof shall be taken by demurrer or motion to quash such indictment before the jury are sworn. If that were a formal defect it could not be taken advantage of after writ of error; but how can we say that [illegible] must be proved to belong to [illegible] proved to belong to [illegible] there would be a variance [illegible] amended under sect. 1, but [illegible] prisoner could not [illegible] such an allegation [illegible] we may say that the omission [illegible] perty is a [illegible] for remaining in it was [illegible] c. 100 passed [illegible]

COLERIDGE, J. [illegible] the recent statute [illegible] longer necessary to [illegible] party of which the [illegible] said that in consequence of sect. 8 it is no longer necessary to make any such statement at all. By [illegible] subsequent to the 1st enacting [illegible] that construction of [illegible] will operate. The first section assumes that [illegible] is assuming there appears on the trial to be a variance between the statement in the indictment, and the evidence in proof thereof, in the name or description of any person alleged to be the owner of any property named therein; and enacts that such amendment shall only be made when it is not material to the merits of the case. Now, if it is unnecessary to make any statement of the ownership of property at all, there was no necessity for the 1st section empowering an amendment of a variance in such case. Looking, therefore, at the 1st and 8th sections together, I am of opinion that it is still necessary in an indictment for false pretenses to state the ownership of the property obtained by means thereof, and that the ownership must be proved as stated. The statement, therefore, cannot be a mere formal defect within sect. 25.

WIGHTMAN, J.—It is agreed that the whole question arises under the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, and that we are bound by the decisions that have been cited. I have entertained doubt whether since sect. 8 it is any longer necessary to make a statement of the ownership of the goods obtained in an indictment for false pretences, and even now I entertain some doubt whether that section does not virtually include this case; for it must appear in the course of the proceedings that the property obtained belonged to some person, else it would be difficult to support the allegation of the intent to defraud. However, after the decisions that have been come to, I feel bound to concur with the rest of the court.

CROMPTON, J.—I think that this omission is not cured by the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100. Before that Act it was necessary to state two things in such an indictment, first the property in the chattels obtained, and secondly, the intent to defraud some particular person. In all cases of larceny it has been held necessary to state the ownership of the property taken. And even if those decisions that have been referred to had not taken place, I should have had no difficulty in holding this statement to be a matter of substance. Section 8 appears to me to have been framed to cure any defect in the statement of the intent to defraud, but it does not touch the allegation of the ownership of the property. Sect. 25 applies only to formal defects, and sect. 1 shows that this was not a formal defect.

REG v CAMBERWELL.

Removal—Apprenticeship—Indenture—Deceased attesting witness.

Where the attesting witness to an instrument that has been destroyed is dead, it is unnecessary to give any evidence of his handwriting in order to let in secondary evidence of the contents of the instrument.

On appeal against an order of two justices, whereby Jane White was removed from the parish of Camberwell in Surrey to the parish of Nuneaton in Warwickshire, the sessions quashed the order, subject to the opinion of the court upon the following case:—

The ground of removal was the settlement of the pauper in Nuneaton, by the apprenticeship of her husband in Nuneaton. The evidence of the apprenticeship was as follows:—A witness was called to prove the apprenticeship deed, and its destruction by the pauper's husband; he also proved the execution of it by the parties, and that there was an attesting witness to it, but that he had heard that he was dead. It was objected that, assuming the death of the attesting witness to have been proved, secondary evidence of the contents of the deed was not admissible, as proof had not been given of the alleged attesting witness's handwriting. The sessions allowed the objection, and quashed the order of the justices.

If this court should be of opinion that secondary evidence of the contents of the deed was rightly rejected, the order of the sessions is to be confirmed; otherwise to be quashed.

Joyce, in support of the order of sessions.—The general rule is, that a subscribing witness must be called to prove the execution of a deed. And in Taylor on Evidence, 1198, it is said, "so inexorable is this rule that it applies even to a cancelled or a burnt deed:" (Gillies v. Smither, 2 Stark. 528.) [WIGHTMAN, J. referred to Keeling v. Ball, Peake's Evid. App. xxvii. where it was held, that in the case of a bond and an unknown attesting witness, another person might be called to prove its execution; either, if it appears who the attesting witness is.]

Bovill and Maxwell, contrà.—Here the deed was destroyed, and the attesting witness dead; and this case therefore differs both from Gillies v. Smither and Keeling v. Ball. It was unnecessary here to prove the handwriting of the witness who was dead; and the execution of the deed by the parties to it was proved, which was quite sufficient under the circumstances. In Adams v. Kerr, 1 B. & P. 360, 361, it was held, per J. Gould, "Where a witness is dead, the parties to prove the handwriting;" but there the instrument was destroyed. And where an instrument is in possession of a third person, who refuses to produce it, secondary evidence is admissible without calling the attesting witness. Proof of the execution of an instrument by calling the attesting witness is required, on the ground that the attesting witness is usually invoked by the parties; that which he is dead that reason ceases. (In Taylor on Evid. 1198, it is said that "It has been held in American cases, where the absence of the attesting witness was proved duly accounted for, the instrument may be read upon proof of the handwriting of the [illegible] was executed; but it seems to be still [illegible] country whether such proof will be sufficient without first showing an inability to [illegible] of the witnesses. (Valentine v. Piper, 22 [illegible] 12 Vin. Abr. A. pl. 30; Swire v. Bell, 5 T. R. 371.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I do not think that [illegible] we have come to will at all touch on any of those [illegible] in the argument. It seems to me that the [illegible] which raises the objection in the case furnishes that answer to it, for we must take it that the sessions were satisfied that the attesting witness was dead, and it was not necessary to go further. Both [illegible] evidence went further, and proved the handwriting of the parties to the deed executing it. The order of sessions must, therefore, be quashed.

ERLE, J.—I also think the order of sessions must be quashed, and upon the same ground. Our decision, in my opinion, goes the full length of deciding that in no case where an instrument is lost, and the subscribing witness is dead, is it necessary to give evidence of the handwriting of the party attesting it, and that where, as in this case, it was proved that the witness is dead, nothing further is necessary. When the attesting witness is unknown, proof of the handwriting cannot be necessary. As to the proof, it was rather a question of the sufficiency of proof, for the consideration of the court as a jury, than a question of admissibility for the court as judge. The tendency of modern decisions is to admit whatever may be evidence, and allow the jury to judge of its value; and it is against that principle to shut out evidence on the ground that, by possibility, some one may be found to speak to the handwriting of a deceased attesting witness to an instrument.

CROMPTON, J. concurred.

Order of sessions quashed.

WILTSHIRE v. COTTERELL.

Vendor and vendee—Conveyance—Fixtures.

Under a conveyance of land, a farm house and fixtures Held, First, that rick straddles, which consisted of stone pillars mortised to a brick foundation let into the earth, and stone caps mortared on the pillars, passed either as part of the land or as fixtures.

Secondly, that a threshing-machine fixed by bolts and screws to posts let into the ground, so that the machine could not be got out without disturbing some of the soil, also passed under the deed.

Thirdly, that a granary which rested upon a wooden foundation, supported by straddles, and capable of being lifted by sufficient power from the straddles without disturbing them, was a mere chattel; and that, even if under the circumstances of the case it would pass as a chattel, the word "fixtures" being large enough to include moveable chattels,—still the removal of it during an outstanding term could not be made the subject of a count for injury to the plaintiff's reversionary interest, or a count in trover, the possession being in the tenant.

Case for injury to the plaintiff's reversionary interest in certain premises, whereof one May was tenant, by removal of a granary, threshing-machine, and rick-straddles; with a count in trover.

Pleas—1. Not guilty; 2. A denial of May's tenancy, 3 Not possessed.

At the trial, which took place before Williams, J. at the last assizes for Oxfordshire, a verdict was found for the plaintiff, and the damages assessed separately for the granary, 25*l.*; for the rick-straddles, 5*l.*, and for the threshing-machine, 5*l.* In the following term a rule nisi was obtained to enter the verdict for the defendant, or to reduce the damages. The material facts are stated in the judgment of the court.

Thursday, Jan. 13.(a)—Phipson showed cause.—The plaintiff ought to be prevented from saying that these things did not pass by the deed; because, when the defendant went on the farm, no exception of any of these things was made: (Pickard v. Sears, 6 A. & E. 469.) [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Can the deed be affected by any previous negotiation between the parties?] The conduct of the parties may be looked at, upon the question of parcel or no parcel. At all events, the worth of the deed are large enough to pass the granary as well as the threshing-machine and the rick-straddles. The last two are fixtures in the strictest sense, or part of the freehold (Leach v. Thomas, 7 Car. & P. 327); and the granary, even though a chattel, might pass under the word "fixtures," that being the evident intention of the parties. (Amos on Fixtures, 243; Hellen v. Hunter, 1 Cr. M. & R. 227; Mackintosh v. Trotter, 3 M. & W. 186; Elton v. Brady, 5 M. & W. 178.) A fixture is so far from being an irremovable thing, that Parke, B. describes it as a right to remove. [CROMPTON, J.—The right to remove is the interest which the tenant has in the fixture.] It may be admitted here that a tenant putting up his granary would have a right to remove it during the term; but this is a case between vendor and vendee; and the defendant having sold the farm with all fixtures, the granary (which is indicated by a red mark on the plan) passed by the conveyance to the plaintiff. (He referred also to R. v. Otley, 1 B. & Ad. 161; Wansbrough v. Maton, 4 A. & E. 884.) (a)

Keating and Hodgson, contrà.—The reversioner cannot maintain trover; and as to the other count, there is no injury to the reversion. [COLERIDGE, J. referred to Gordon v. Harper, 7 T. But even if they did pass, the action is not maintainable. These were things removable as between landlord and tenant, and therefore the removal was no injury to the reversion, and, as they had been demised by the plaintiff, he could not maintain trover. JUDGMENT.

COLERIDGE, J. now delivered the judgment of the court.—This was an action for an injury to the reversionary estate of the plaintiff in premises occupied by a tenant of the name of J. May, by removing some straddles and threshing-machines and a granary. There was also a count in trover. The defendant pleaded, first, not guilty, secondly, to the first count, that the chattels were not in the occupation of the tenant, the reversion belonging to the plaintiff; and thirdly, to the count in trover, a denial of the possession. It appeared that the plaintiff had purchased the premises in question from the devisee, in trust for one Thomas Cotterel deceased, the father of the defendant, and the premises had been conveyed to the plaintiff by a deed, dated the 25th March, 1852, to which the defendant was a party as one of the devisees. The plaintiff demised the premises to May immediately after the conveyance, and the defendant had removed the straddles, threshing-machines, and granary from the premises after the demise to May. The defendant had been in the occupation of the farm at the time of the conveyance, and an attempt was made to set up the right to remove by him as out-going tenant, and some evidence of a custom to remove such articles was given. This claim on the defendant's part appeared, however, to be without foundation. The deed which the defendant had executed as a conveyancing party conveyed the land and all the fixtures; and it appeared that the erections had been put on the land by the defendant's father, who had subsequently become owner in fee, and under whom will the title had come to the defendant. The defendant therefore clearly could not set up any right to remove any of the articles as fixtures removable by an agricultural tenant. The land, and everything attached to the land, passed by the deed, and there was no tenant-right to remove any of the articles in question. The real question in the case, therefore, was whether all or any of the articles in question passed by the conveyance. This must be determined by reference to the words of the conveyance, and the nature of the respective articles. The words used in the conveyance are prima facie applicable to real property only. They convey "all the land, messuage, tenement, or farm-house, with the barns and other appurtenances thereto belonging, and all the several conveniences which are afterwards enumerated, all which farm lands, hereditaments, and premises are known by a description contained in a schedule to the deed annexed, and the site thereof shown in a plan on the deed, with the rights, members and appurtenances thereto belonging, and all fixtures, trees, ditches, fences," &c. The straddles were erections for the purpose of supporting ricks, and were stone pillars mortised to a foundation of brick and mortar let into the earth, with stone caps mortared on the pillars. And it is clear that such erections would pass under the conveyance either as part of the land or as fixtures. The threshing-machine was fixed by bolts and screws to posts which were let into the ground, and the machine could not be got out without disturbing some of the soil, and, being so attached to the land, would clearly pass under the conveyance. It was contended by Mr. Keating that the first count was inapplicable to the removal of these articles, as he said they could be removed without real injury to the inheritance, and therefore there was no injury to the reversionary estate; but as they were really attached to a part of the land, their removal was clearly an injury to the reversionary estate, as a removal of so much of the land. The question as to the granary involves more difficulty. It appeared to be laid on a wooden foundation, supported by straddles, and it lay upon them in the same manner that the bricks lay upon the foundation. The part above the stone caps was wood, with a tile roof. In removing this granary the caps of the straddles and the upright stones were taken away; but it appeared that it was not attached except by its weight to the straddles, as it was proved that by sufficient power it might have been lifted from the straddles without disturbing them. We think we are bound by the authorities to consider such an erection as a mere chattel, and neither as part of the land or as affixed to the freehold. In Culling v. Tufnell, Buller N. P. 34, a barn erected on pattens or blocks of wood, not themselves fixed in or to the ground, was held to be removable. The custom of the country was relied on in that case as making such erections removable by an outgoing tenant, but Lord Ellenborough, in the great case of Elwes v. Maw, 3 East, 38, in referring to Culling v. Tufnell, speaks of it as having been clearly removable without any custom, because it was not a fixture at all, it not being fixed in or to the ground. In Wansbrough v. Maton, 4 A. & E. 884, it was decided that a barn resting by its mere weight on a brick foundation was not a fixture but was a mere chattel, for which trover might be brought. Patteson, J. referred in that case to Rex v. Otley, 1 B. & Ad. 161, where it was held that a windmill resting by mere weight upon a foundation of brick was not a part of the freehold so as to contribute to the value of the tenement. In Rex v. The Inhabitants of Londonthorpe, 6 E. R. 377, it was held that a windmill not attached to the ground but constructed on cross trees, laid upon brick pillars, but not attached or affixed thereto, was a mere chattel. On these authorities we think that the granary in question must be treated as a mere chattel and not as a part of the land, nor as so fixed to the freehold that its severance would give a cause of action for injury to the reversionary estate in the land the subject of the first count. It has been suggested, however, that it might pass as a chattel under the word "fixture" in the conveyance, and it is said that a red mark in the plan, showing the site of the granary, tends to prove that it was intended so to pass. The word "fixture," though properly applicable to something annexed to the freehold, is sometimes used in a larger sense. See Sheen v. Rickie, 5 M. & W. 182, where it is said by Parke, B. "It does not necessarily follow that the word 'fixtures' must import things affixed to the freehold, nor has the word necessarily acquired that legal sense. It is a very modern word, and is generally understood to comprehend any article which a tenant has a power of removing." It may be doubtful whether the word "fixture," as used in this conveyance, immediately followed by the words "trees, ditches, and fences," and without there being any other words in the conveyance denoting any intention of passing chattels, can be construed as sufficient to pass the granary as a mere chattel. The plan is said in the deed to show the site of the premises, and the site of the granary was stated in the argument to be marked in red ink, and no doubt the permanent erection and the straddles on which the granary rested would pass, but it is not so clear that a mere chattel, resting on such a site, would pass. Considering, however, that this article was put up so long ago by a party who became owner of the freehold that it seems to have been always demised with the freehold, and remembering that the word "fixture" is capable of the larger meaning pointed out in the case we have referred to from the 5 M. & W. and considering that the red mark seems to include the granary, we should have been disposed to hold that it might have passed as a chattel if we had found that either count could be supported on that supposition. The first count for injury to the reversionary estate in the land is clearly not applicable to the abstraction of a chattel, and the count in trover seems inapplicable according to the case of Gordon v. Harper, as the possession of the chattel for the term was in May at the time of the removal. We think, therefore, that the verdict should be reduced by the value of the granary, which was separately assessed by the jury at 2*l*. The rule will be absolute for reducing the verdict from 35*l*. to 10*l*.

Considering, however, that this article was put up so long ago by a party who became owner of the freehold that it seems to have been always demised with the freehold, and remembering that the word "fixture" is capable of the larger meaning pointed out in the case we have referred to from the 5 M. & W. and considering that the red mark seems to include the granary, we should have been disposed to hold that it might have passed as a chattel if we had found that either count could be supported on that supposition. The first count for injury to the reversionary estate in the land is clearly not applicable to the abstraction of a chattel, and the count in trover seems inapplicable according to the case of Gordon v. Harper, as the possession of the chattel for the term was in May at the time of the removal. We think, therefore, that the verdict should be reduced by the value of the granary, which was separately assessed by the jury at 2*l*. The rule will be absolute for reducing the verdict from 35*l*. to 10*l*.*

Rule absolute.

COURT OF COMMON BENCH.

Reported by DANIEL THOMAS EVANS and R. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, Esqrs. Barristers at-Law.

COUNTY COURT APPEAL.

Monday, Jan. 24.

GIBSON, App., GIBSON, Resp.

County Court—Construction of will—Mortgage—Arrears of interest—Question of title and jurisdiction—Insurance of mortgaged property, liability of general estate for.

Testator by his will bequeathed as follows:—"I, my son William I give all my interest and claim on household property in Percy-street, &c., belonging to the successors of the late J. H., on which I have a mortgage of 1500l.; also all my claims on the shops and houses situated, &c., occupied by, &c.; likewise all moneys that I may have advanced for him at any time, to him, his heirs, and assigns for ever." At the time of the testator's death there were certain arrears of interest outstanding on the mortgage of 1500l., which were claimed from the [illegible] by the defendant as executor. The plaintiff [illegible] a sum for insurance of the mortgaged premises, due to the testator's executors.

Held, on appeal, that the [illegible] of interest on the mortgage was at the [illegible] passed with the [illegible] to the son, and not to the defendant as executor.

Secondly, that the defendant as executor could not the plaintiff, was liable for the [illegible] of the testator.

This was an appeal from the County Court of Durham, held at [illegible]. The following is the case as stated by the learned judge for the opinion of this court:—

This is an action brought by the plaintiff to recover from the defendant the sum of 80*l.* for money had and received by the defendant for the use of the plaintiff. The claim of the plaintiff amounted originally to 89*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.*, but he abandoned the excess over 50*l.* in order to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the County Court. It appeared at the trial that one William Gibbon, deceased, the late father of the plaintiff and husband of the defendant, was, at the time of making his will, and also at the time of his death as hereinafter mentioned, in possession of certain freehold houses, situated in Percy-court, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, under a mortgage deed, dated in the year 1834, whereby one Joseph Hedley, since deceased, conveyed the said houses to plaintiff's father William Gibbon, deceased, in fee, for securing the sum of 1500*l.* lent by him to the said Joseph Hedley, deceased, with interest after the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum. The testator made his will on May 27, 1845, of which the following is a copy:—

"This is the last will and testament of William Gibbon, of the Windmill-hill, in the parish of Gateshead, miller. First, I give to my daughter, Margaret Coleman, 850*l.* secured by way of mortgage on household property situated at Bowden Pans, belonging to the late James Charlton's family. I also give to my said daughter Coleman 200*l.* of lawful money of this realm, to be paid to her or her heirs out of the proceeds of my effects as soon as convenient after my demise. To my son William Gibbon I give all my interest and claim on household property in Percy-street, Newcastle-on-Tyne, belonging to the successors of the late Joseph Hedley, gentleman, on which I have a mortgage of 1500*l.*; also all my claims on the shops and houses situated on the side of Newcastle, occupied by Wilson, Perry, and others, likewise all moneys that I may have advanced for him at any time, to him, his heirs and assignees for ever. To my daughter Mary Gibbon I give the sum of 2000*l.* of lawful money of the realm; also all my houses situated in Saville-court, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, to her and her heirs. I also do order that she shall have the privilege of living in the house which we at present occupy, as long as Miss Beeson remains in the house she occupies at present belonging to me in Saville-court, free from any charge for board and lodging. The residue of whatever property I may die possessed of I give in trust to my wife, Maria Gibbon, for the use of herself and son James Henry Gibbon, until he attains the age of twenty-two years: at the expiration of that time she shall give up all to him or his heirs, with the exception of 80*l.* a-year which he shall pay to her during her natural life, by quarterly instalments,—that is, four times in the year. Should my son James Henry die before, &c. without issue, then shall his mother enjoy the whole during her natural life, after her demise the property remaining shall go to my surviving children or their heirs nearest of kin. My widow shall pay my funeral expenses and all my just debts, without interfering with the legacies to my family. I do also order, that, within one month after my death, my son William Gibbon receive 200*l.* to be paid by my widow and trustees, for whom I appoint John Goldart, wine merchant, Newcastle, Mr. James Smith, Gateshead, Low Fell, and Mr. John Coleman, chymist, Gateshead. My widow shall be principal treasurer, that is to say, shall receive and pay all, subject to the inspection of my trustees: should anything occur that may be considered an improvement to the property, my widow, with the consent of two of my trustees, shall be at liberty to make any alterations as aforesaid, if by sale, the money to be invested in some public security for the benefit of the family. This I declare to be my last will and testament, revoking and making void all former wills made by me. Signed, sealed, and declared this 27th May, 1845, and I do hereby subscribe my name to [illegible] of the following witnesses whose names are hereto written, and in the presence of each other. [illegible] Gibbon witnesses, Luke Blackinston, [illegible] Thomas Clark."

This will was [illegible] on the 8th Feb. 1847, by the defendant [illegible], the sole executrix according to the tenor of the said will, to whom administration was granted, she having been duly sworn under 4000*l.* Testator died possessed of [illegible]. At the time of testator's death there was [illegible] as such mortgagee in possession, the sum of 89*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, of which the sum of 39*l.* 10*s.* 1*d.* was for interest which had become due in his lifetime, and the sum of 21*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.* was then owing and owing by the testator to the defendant, on the said mortgage in possession, for the benefit of the mortgaged property. The personal estate of the testator not specifically bequeathed was more than sufficient to liquidate his debts, and the defendant, as executrix, paid sundry other debts due by the testator for work and labour done to the said property, and the other debts of the testator. The plaintiff, William Gibbon, entered into possession of the said property as tenant-at-will immediately on the testator's death, or into receipt of the rents thereof, and he received for his own use the said sum of 38*l.* 10*s.* 1*d.* which had accrued due in the testator's lifetime as aforesaid. The defendant, as executrix, being in possession of the mortgage deed and the other deeds relating to the mortgaged property, refused to give them up to the plaintiff unless and until she was paid the sum of 38*l.* 10*s.* 1*d.* for arrears of interest, and the sum of 21*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.* paid and incurred for repairing the mortgaged property, making together the sum of 59*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.*; and after some negotiation between the parties and their solicitors, the plaintiff, in order to obtain possession of the deed, and protesting against the right of the defendant to such payment, and in consequence of the defendant's refusal to give up the deed, paid to the defendant the said sum of 59*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* and thereupon received his deed.

The following is a copy of the account, showing the items claimed by the defendant, and paid by the plaintiff:

This action was brought to recover back the sum of 50*l.*, being the unabandoned part of the payment so made by plaintiff to the defendant.

On behalf of the defendant, it was contended at the trial in the County Court,—First, that the bequest made by the testator of his interest in the mortgaged property to the plaintiff, was a specific bequest of 1500*l.* and no more, and that in point of law the bequest of a debt or sum of money due upon a particular security passed only the capital, and not any arrears of interest owing at the testator's death. Secondly, that, as to the arrears of interest, there had been no assent of the defendant, as executrix, to such arrears being a bequest or legacy, and that consequently the plaintiff's remedy, if any, was in equity and not in law. Thirdly, that as to the money paid or incurred for repairs, the amount was a debt due to the testator, and was secured by the mortgage, and that consequently the defendant, as executrix, was entitled to hold and retain the deed until she, as executrix, was repaid the money so paid and incurred for the repairs of the mortgaged property.

The learned judge was of opinion that the arrears of interest did not pass under the bequest contained in the will, and moreover that, without the assent of the defendant as executrix, the County Court had no jurisdiction over this part of the plaintiff's demand; and that, as to the money paid for repairs, the defendant as executrix was entitled to retain the deed until the money so paid was reimbursed to her as such executrix. He therefore directed judgment to be entered for the defendant or a nonsuit, at the election of the plaintiff. The plaintiff refused to be nonsuited, and judgment was entered for the defendant.

The plaintiff appeals against this judgment.

The question for the opinion of the C.P. is, whether the judgment of the County Court judge is correct or not.

Milward for the plaintiff.—The main question in this case arises on the construction of the will of the testator, William Gibbon; if that be disposed of, the other points will follow. [MAULE, J.—Did not the point on the will raise a question of title?] Nothing of the kind arose at the trial. [CRESSWELL, J.—But you raise it now; you say your client is entitled to the land, and not to the mere 1500*l.* raised on the mortgage.] The testator had no estate in the land. [MAULE, J.—He was seised in fee of the land.] He had, no doubt, an equitable estate in fee, but he had no legal estate in the land. The main question discussed at the trial was that which is raised here—whether the arrears of interest passed under the bequest in the will as well as the land. It is submitted that they did, and that is plaintiff's first point. The 55th sect. of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95 extends to the Co. C. jurisdiction "to the recovery of any legacy under a will." The other side will oppose to this the words of sect. 58 in the same statute, which says the Co. C. "shall not have cognizance of any action in which the validity of any devise, bequest, or limitation under any will or settlement may be disputed;" but here, in fact, the devise is not disputed, therefore title to land does not come into question. If, however, any point as to the jurisdiction of the Co. C. there arise here it cannot now be taken, as it was not raised in the court below. The only questions raised before the Co. C. judge are stated in the case (ubi supra), and the case is silent as to this question being mooted. As to the question whether or not the language used by the testator passed the arrears of interest we must look to the Wills Act, which says that the will shall speak as of the moment before the testator's death; by this the plaintiff will take those arrears. (Cox v. Scott, 19 L. J. 63, Ch.) Very strong words indeed are necessary to show that the testator intended to shut out the operation of the Wills Act. Then with regard to this point, there is a case which will be relied on by the other side, Roberts v. Cuffin, 2 Ath. 112. On that case the Co. C. judge acted. But the terms of the bequest are so different that that case has no bearing on the present case. Here the bequest is of "all my interest and claim on household property situated," &c.; whereas in that case the bequest is one of a specific sum. Hawley v. Cutts, 2 Freem. Ch. Rep. 28; Harcourt v. Meryan, 2 Keen, 274. This last case is a strong authority in favour of the point here contended for. Hunt v. Tipley, 11 Jur. 904. Those are the only cases which bear on the first point. The Co. C. judge held that the language of the bequest did not pass the arrears of interest; and in that, it is submitted, he was wrong. The second question is whether the amount due to tradesmen for repairs of the mortgaged property, done before the death of the testator, were chargeable on the plaintiff, or on the defendant as executrix of the testator. They were debts incurred by the testator in his lifetime, and he was as much bound to pay them as to pay his grocer's bill. Besides this, the mortgagee has his remedy from the mortgagor for improvements done to the property, and any reasonable sum laid out in such manner could be recovered as for work done, though not as for money paid. [JERVIS, C.J.—If the testator had paid these debts before his death, the devisee would have a right to recover from the mortgagor.] Yes, that is so. The remaining question is as to the necessity of assent from the executrix, in order to give jurisdiction. This point is by no means clearly stated in the case, and must be given in its own terms (ubi supra). The Co. C. judge seems to have overlooked the 65th section of the original Act, already cited, and to have forgotten that he sat as an equity as well as a common law judge. [JERVIS, C.J.—He seems to have thought that plaintiff's right to the legacy did not arise before him, except through the assent of the executrix.] She has consented to the bequest of the whole legacy of 1500*l.*, and where a party assents to the bequest of the principal, the latter carries the incidents along with it. On these three grounds, the plaintiff, it is submitted, is entitled to the judgment of the court.

Udall, for the defendant.—The decision of the Co. C. judge was right. The court is here asked to set aside a judgment given for the defendant, and to enter it for the plaintiff, and therefore to do this, the case must show that there were sufficient materials before the court below to enable it to give judgment for the plaintiff. This case does not show enough for this, and, from what appears on it, even if it were sent down again, the judgment must be the same. Before the plaintiff can succeed, he must satisfy the court that he was entitled to the title-deeds as well as the arrears of interest, and that the money he paid to get the deed was paid under duress; without doing this, he cannot have judgment. The question in reality resolves itself into this:—Who was entitled to the mortgage-deeds? At the testator's death, the estate, if not devised, goes to the heir-at-law, and the contract to the executor. What is the onerous duty which devolves upon the executor? The mortgage deed being the security for the debt, it goes to the executor and not to the heir. It is so laid down in Bac. Abr. tit. "Exec." H. C.; 2 Williams' Executors, 506. The title-deeds were delivered up upon a good consideration. [MAULE, J.—You say that the 1500*l.* being a debt, went to the executrix; and that the title-deeds, being incident to that debt, passed also with it; and that the arrears of interest went to the executrix.] Yes, in effect that is so. Then comes the question of assent. [MAULE, J.—I think the conduct of the defendant amounted to an assent.] Then it must be an assent to something on behalf of the whole. It is clear the defendant never assented, because she never parted with the title-deeds. [Milward.—I am not in a condition, as the case stands, to ask judgment for the plaintiff, but only for a new trial.] We contest the right of the plaintiff to the title-deeds. The defendant if she pleased was justified in keeping them, whatever sum the plaintiff might have offered for them. They were as much her property as the plaintiff's, and nothing has since been done to deprive her of that right. She was also entitled to the interest. Spode v. Smith, 6 Rep. 811. That case shows that the assent of the executrix is a valid consideration for the money she received. The case cited from Atkyns (supra) also shows that arrears of interest did not pass under this will. Shelmerdine v. Dean, 15 Jur. 802; Gulliver v. Cousins, 1 C. B. 788. Then comes a question, is this a bequest or a devise? It seems to be a devise of land; if that be so, what right had plaintiff to sue in the Co. C. in this case? Title to land arises here. There being no jurisdiction in the court below, the defendant, even if she had consented, could not by such assent give jurisdiction. The validity of the devise also came into question; judgment therefore should be for the defendant.

JERVIS, C.J.—It appears to me that in this matter the appellant is entitled to all that he asks for—a new trial, but not to full judgment on the case. There are here undoubtedly several points which were not raised at the trial; it is enough, however, to answer the objections there taken. The first point was, whether the arrears of interest did or did not pass under the bequest contained in the will. The learned judge held that they did not so pass. With respect to this point, it is sufficient to say that the bequest was a specific bequest, as the judge determined; but the judge was wrong in holding that the arrears of interest did not pass under the will at the testator's death. According to my view, the judge was wrong in the construction he put upon the will. It is similar to the case of a claim on a bond, under a will containing like terms, where the interest passes. Then as to the next point, that there was no assent on the part of the defendant, and that a question of title was raised, I think the judge was right, and that he had no jurisdiction. It is an action for money had and received, and without the assent of the executrix the plaintiff was not entitled to proceed in the Co. C., and the judge had not jurisdiction. But it was only as to the sum of 38*l.* 10*s.* 1*d.*, which formed one portion of the claim, that that question was raised before the judge. As to the last point, that the defendant was entitled to be reimbursed the money expended in repairs of the mortgaged property, I think the learned judge was wrong. The testator incurred the debt during his lifetime, and his executrix was therefore liable. The judge having been wrong in his judgment as to a portion of the case before him, we think the appellant is entitled to a new trial.

MAULE, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion as to the question whether the arrears passed by the bequest in the will. The appellant's claim comprehends the interest. If the testator had merely bequeathed, say a sum of 200*l.* that would have been all that passed; but in a case, where the testator gives, as in this will, "all my interest and claim on household property situated, &c. belonging, &c. on which I have a mortgage of 1500*l.*," it must be held that arrears of interest pass with the principal. As to the question of assent by the defendant, the negotiations between the parties seem to have led to a sort of quasi assent. They seem to have agreed to try whether the plaintiff was entitled to the deeds without paying the money—a very convenient and proper mode of deciding the real question. But that point is not material, as the court is clear upon the other questions. I think the defendant is entitled to receive the money outlaid in repairs. The judge ruled otherwise; and as there has been a miscarriage here, the plaintiff is entitled to all he asks for, namely, a new trial.

CRESSWELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. As to the arrears of interest, I think the judge was wrong in deciding that they did not pass to the plaintiff under the will. As to the judgment on the second point, I do not exactly know what it means, whether it goes to part or to the whole legacy. But in either case I think the plaintiff entitled to what he asks for now, as the defendant could have no right to detain the title-deeds for a debt due from the testator.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am also of the same opinion. There were two points in dispute, on both of which I think the plaintiff was in the right and the defendant in the wrong. The testator bequeathed to the plaintiff all that was due on the mortgage, and that included interest in arrear. As to the second point, namely, the liability of the plaintiff to pay for repairs to the mortgaged property, I think he was not, and that those expenses ought to fall upon the general estate. Much confusion has prevailed in the argument as to what took place at the trial with regard to the assent of the defendant. That question is material; but I cannot gather from the case what the judge, as to this point, meant to decide at the trial. It is to be regretted that the plaintiff cannot have final judgment at once; but there are difficulties in the case which prevent it. He is, however, entitled to a new trial, and must have judgment to that effect.

New trial granted.

(As to whether costs should follow, JERVIS, C. J. intimated that the court would consult the other judges on the point.)

WATSON v. WARD.

Landlord and tenant—Distress—New demise.

Defendant agreed to let to the plaintiff certain tenements from a time mentioned at a specified rent, payable half-yearly; it was subsequently found that possession of one of those tenements could not be obtained by the defendant to give to the plaintiff. Before the first half-year's rent became due, the plaintiff and defendant met, when it was agreed that plaintiff having received possession of all he had taken, except the one tenement of which the possession could not be obtained, plaintiff should pay the rent of the whole, less the rent of that tenement, to the defendant.

Held, that the new agreement come to between plaintiff and defendant operated as a demise, and that defendant had the right to distrain, as there was an agreement by defendant to permit the plaintiff to continue to occupy for a certain rent, payable on a certain day, and on the plaintiff to occupy, which constituted a demise and release of the original bargain.

The plaintiff was defendant's tenant, and a distress having been levied for half a year's rent, this action was brought for an excessive distress; there was also a count in trover. The action was tried before Lord Campbell, at York, and a verdict returned for the plaintiff, subject to a point reserved; and a rule was subsequently obtained to set aside that verdict, and to enter it for the defendant.

Watson, Q. C. and Raw showed cause.

Hill, Q. C. Joyce, and Pearce, in support of it.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

POLLOCK, C. B.—This was a motion for a new trial in a case tried before Lord Campbell at York, when the verdict passed for the plaintiff, subject to a point reserved, on which a rule nisi was granted. The action was brought with one count in trover, and another for an excessive distress. The question arose upon the count in trover alone, and it was whether one of the defendants, who was the plaintiff's landlord, had a right to distrain for half a year's rent, payable on the 14th Nov. 1851. The facts were these:—The defendants advertised a public-house and some cottages and five acres of grass to let, all of which one Whalley occupied as tenant from year to year, under a tenancy expiring on the 13th May, 1851, the cottages being occupied by an under-tenant. These tenements had been previously occupied by one Clayton. Whalley gave notice to quit on that day to all the under-tenants except a Mrs. Richardson. On the 15th May the defendant agreed with the plaintiff to demise to him all the premises occupied by Clayton, including, of course, Mrs. Richardson's cottage, from that day at a yearly rent of 145*l.* payable on the 14th of November and the 14th of May, until the six months' notice to quit, expiring at any time of the year, might be given. Mrs. Richardson, whether rightly or wrongly, chose to continue her possession of this cottage let to her at 5*l.* a year, and possession could not be given to the plaintiff pursuant to the defendant's agreement to let, and the endeavours to get her out by the plaintiff were ineffectual. The plaintiff, however, entered and enjoyed all the rest of this property; and in October, 1851, before the first half-year's rent became due, the plaintiff and defendant met together. The plaintiff complained that he could not get Mrs. Richardson out, and desired the defendant to bring an ejectment against Whalley, the prior tenant; but the defendant declined, alleging that he had given possession of all he had let to the plaintiff. To settle this dispute, the defendant and the plaintiff agreed that the defendant should receive from Mrs. Richardson the rent of two half-years, and deduct therefrom the 5*l.* that was to be paid for the whole, and the plaintiff should pay 70*l.* to the defendant on the 14th Nov. 1851, and the 14th May, 1852. On this state of facts, an objection was taken on the part of the plaintiff to the defendant's right to distrain, on the authority of Neale v. Mackenzie, 1 M. & W. 747; the rent of 145*l.* reserved for the whole, and the demise to Mrs. Richardson of the cottage, being either void because the defendant had no title to demise it, or if he had, the defendant had not given possession. The whole rent had, therefore, not become due, and he never had consideration, and the rent of the residue not having been fixed at a certain sum, there was no right of distress, and Lord Campbell appears to be of that opinion. He thought that what occurred in October 1851 was not a new demise of the tenements, but only an arrangement how the rent under the old agreement should be paid; Mrs. Richardson's cottage being still considered part of the demised premises. On the other hand, the defendant contended that it operated as a new demise at a fixed payment of rent, which, under the old agreement, was uncertain as to the day for payment, and gave a right to distrain for it. Lord Campbell reserved this point; and, after much consideration, we think that the latter view is the correct one, and that what passed did operate as a demise, and that the defendant had a right to distrain for 70*l.* on the 14th Nov. It is quite clear that, if no new agreement had been come to, then the case of Neale v. Mackenzie would have applied, and the defendant could not be entitled to distrain, because the plaintiff, not having had all that he bargained for, for which he was to pay a rent of 145*l.*, was not bound to pay it, and the law would not apportion the rent and make him liable to pay rent proportionate to the part occupied, as it does in the case of eviction by title paramount. But, here the parties come to a fresh agreement, and the question is what is the legal effect of that agreement? It appears there was a dispute between the plaintiff and the defendant as to what the actual bargain was. The defendant insisted that Mrs. Richardson's cottage was not included in it; the plaintiff on the contrary that it was ultimately agreed that it was. But if the agreement was that, the effect of it was that the plaintiff has not had what he bargained for, and so was not bound to pay 145*l.* a year, but only for so much of the residue as he enjoyed to 1851. It was then agreed that he should pay for that part 145*l.* a-year, 70*l.* payable on the 14th May 1851, and 70*l.* payable on the 14th Nov. 1851; and this amounts to a demise for that period for a certain rent, as no particular words are necessary to constitute a demise. Here is an agreement to permit one to continue to occupy on the one hand for a certain rent payable on a certain day, and on the other to occupy, and this constitutes a demise and release of the original bargain. The original agreement did not operate as an actual lease, for the tenancy had not been bargained for. There are several cases analogous to this of occupation under an agreement for lease, but where there was no power to distrain until a certain rent was paid or settlement in account the right to distress by the landlord has been held contingent. Cox v. Bent, 5 Bing. 186; Knight v. Bennett, 3 Bing. 361; and Regnart v. Porter, 7 Bing. 451. where Tindal, C. J. says: "It may be conceded if a party entered under an agreement for a lease pays or proposes to pay a rent certain, or settles it in account, a new agreement may be presumed, under which the landlord may have a right to distrain." Here a new agreement was actually made. We are therefore of opinion that the rule ought to be made absolute to enter the verdict for the defendant.

Rule absolute.

WATSON v. MIDDLETON.

Bankrupt Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 224.—Prospective operation of—Arrangements by deed between debtor and creditor.

The 224th section of the Bankrupt Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, passed 1*st Aug.* 1849, came into operation after 11*th October following, and which provides that every deed or memorandum of arrangement now or hereafter entered into between any debtor and his creditors, and executed by six-sevenths in number and value of the creditors whose debts amount to* 10*l. and upwards, shall be binding on all the creditors, is not retrospective in its operation.*

Cowling appeared for the plaintiff in support of a demurrer to the defendant's plea, which stated in effect that a deed of arrangement had been entered into by more than six-sevenths in number and value of the defendant's creditors whose debts amounted to 10*l.* and upwards; that such deed was binding on all the creditors pursuant to the Bankrupt Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 224, and a bar therefore to the claim of the plaintiff. The deed in question was executed in April 1847; the Act of Parliament referred to passed 1st Aug. 1849, and by the 4th section was directed to come into operation from the 11th Oct. 1849. The question was whether the 224th section of the Act was retrospective in its effect, so as to bring the deed referred to within the 224th enactment of the Bankrupt Act before mentioned. Marsh v. Higgins, 1 L. M. & P. 253, was referred to, and the other provisions of the same Act, to show the whole were intended to be prospective only.

Manisty, contrà, in support of the defendant's plea, contended that, according to the words of the 224th section and the proper and ordinary grammatical construction of them, the clause must have a retrospective effect. Cur. adv. vult.

POLLOCK, C. B. delivered judgment.—This case was argued before us yesterday upon a demurrer. The declaration was by the plaintiff as a public officer on a money count; the plea was a plea of arrangement, which was, under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 224, pleaded as a bar to the action on the ground that the deed of arrangement, which was executed in 1847, two years before the passing of the Act in question, was made an answer to the claim by the retrospective effect of the 224th section. The words of the section are these, "that every deed or memorandum of arrangement now or hereafter entered into between any such trader and his creditors, and signed by or on behalf of six-sevenths in number and value of those creditors whose debts amount to 10*l.* and upwards, touching such trader's liabilities and his release therefrom, and the distribution, inspection, conduct and management, and mode of winding-up of his estate, or all or any of such matters, or any matters having reference thereto, shall (subject to the conditions hereinafter mentioned) be as effectual and obligatory in all respects upon all the creditors who shall not have signed the deed or memorandum of arrangement as if they had duly signed the same." It was contended by Mr. Manisty, on behalf of the defendant, that this clause was completely retrospective in its operation, so as to take up any deed that had theretofore been executed, entered upon, signed, executed, and completed, although the property had been completely divided among a certain class of creditors, and those who had not signed had no possibility of having any portion or share of the effects; and he contended this upon the ground that this was the grammatical construction of the Act, and that we were bound to give effect to it according to that grammatical construction. The rule of construction to which Mr. Manisty referred has been frequently the subject of notice in this court. I am not sure that the grammatical meaning of a sentence will very frequently be much more difficult than the legal meaning. I am far from being of opinion that what you lay down a rule that the grammatical construction shall prevail, you lay down by any means a more certain rule than when you say that the legal meaning shall prevail. The grammatical and philological doubts,—indeed, all that belongs to the history of language, is about as obscure, in my judgment, and leads to about as many doubts and disputations, as any question of law whatever; and I am not sure, therefore, that the rule, much as it has been commended, is on all occasions a sure and certain guide; but certainly I think it must be conceded that where there is no doubt about the grammatical construction—where it is quite plain and manifest that the language used by the Legislature admits of no duplicity of construction whatever,—there, unless there be some strong and obvious reason to the contrary, the grammatical construction ought to prevail. But the rule that has been adverted to has always this clause or condition as a part of it, that however plain may be the apparent grammatical construction or meaning of it, if it be perfectly clear from the contents of the same document (and the rule, I believe, applies not merely to an Act of Parliament, but to a deed, to a will, or to any subject that comes before the court for construction and elucidation),—if the same instrument contains within itself clear and unanswerable arguments, that satisfy those who are called upon to give a meaning to the document, that the apparent grammatical construction cannot be the true construction (the rule, I say, contains that condition), that then, that which is upon the whole the judgment of an intelligent person, as to the real and true meaning of the entire matter, shall prevail in spite of the grammatical construction of a particular part of it. Now, there is no doubt that the word "now" certainly imports "the present time," and some reference to the present time; and, assuming the word "now" to be used in its ordinary sense, it would refer, according to the old regulations of Parliament, and the old rules of common law, to the first day of the sittings; but, according to the recent statute, it would refer to the 1st Aug. 1849; and if we were to take that construction, and adopt it, the consequence would be, not merely that a deed executed in the year 1847,—at which time, or about which time, and since which time, this question of giving to creditors the power, by a large number, of releasing their debtors in spite of the resistance and opposition of a certain small and inconsiderable number who oppose it, no doubt prevailed,—but, if the argument is to prevail, this would just as much apply to a deed executed among creditors five, ten, twenty, or forty years ago; and although it may not be right to look at extraneous matters for the purpose of construing a deed, yet one must look at this, that when you refer to the history of legislation upon the subject of bankruptcy, when you take this construction of the word "now" as giving effect to these arrangements for a great many years past, it is really difficult to believe, except under the strongest compulsion of language, that the Legislature could have meant to enact a clause apparently so inconsistent with its general course of decision, and of determination in and out of Parliament ever since law has been a study in this country. Mr. Manisty was quite right, therefore, in his observations. There was nothing disrespectful to the court in his intimating, as he very plainly did, that we were endeavouring to see whether there were not some means of getting rid of the apparent effect of the word "now." In other words, we were so struck with what appeared to us to be the injustice and absurdity of the view presented to us by Mr. Manisty, that we were looking through the whole compass of the clauses in the Act of Parliament, to see whether we were compelled to adopt that which appears to us to be repugnant to reason and justice, and to the course of legislation on almost all other occasions; and I believe that I am expressing an opinion that I entertain in common with the rest of the court, that we are not compelled to read the word "now" in the sense (for that it would be) of "heretofore;" for that really is the conclusion. If we are to adopt Mr. Manisty's meaning, we must read "now" exactly as if the Legislature had used the word "heretofore." It is a very strong reason for not coming to a conclusion that the Legislature intended the word "now" in that sense, that, as I think my brother Alderson observed in the course of the argument yesterday, if this was what was intended, it was so plain and obvious certain expressions could have been used that should leave no possible doubt on the mind of any one who was desirous of ascertaining what the Legislature in its wisdom intended. There are no expressions that distinctly and clearly indicate the intention of giving effect to every deed that had theretofore been entered into and concluded by the parties who were parties to it, so as to bind a number of other persons who were not parties to it; and in the absence of these expressions, so obvious, which might have been so easily used, undoubtedly grave doubt may be entertained whether this could have been the meaning; and it may be observed that one is not bound to adopt that which appears to be repugnant to the general usage of Parliament, because an expression has been used which, if it do mean this, certainly means it by the smallest quantity of expression that can be used to convey it. We, however, are of opinion that the Legislature contemplated by the word "now" nothing more than this, that whereas there may already have been certain negotiations or arrangements commenced and entered into already, and before the passing of this Act, those that are in a condition shall (although they may have been so far entered into as that in equity they would be considered as complete engagements, binding perhaps upon the parties to them), still come within the compass and purview of this Act; and that the Legislature, if this matter were in reality seriously considered, and the subject distinctly brought under the notice of those who are to decide upon these matters in Parliament,—that the Legislature meant nothing more than this: all arrangements of this description that shall hereafter be entered into and completed shall operate as the statute provides, and all those that already have been entered into, they shall also come within the scope and operation of the Act, provided they are in such a condition that the three months' notice may be given which the Act provides as one of the conditions necessary for the purpose of effectually doing justice between those who have been the moving parties in the arrangement, and those who have opposed it in order that all may get the common benefit which is ever intended in an arrangement under a bankruptcy, and that then they will have an opportunity in common with others of seeing that their interests are attended to, and they may share in the distribution, inspection, conduct, and management, and the mode of winding-up the estate. We have considered the subject with the deliberation which is due to a matter, certainly of some importance; and pressed as we were yesterday by the argument of Mr. Manisty, we have certainly taken pains to ascertain,—at least, according to our view of the subject, we have made no mistake in ascribing to the word "now" the limited effect which I have adverted to, and no other effect—no effect beyond that, and certainly not to give effect to those arrangements of this description which have been already not merely entered upon, but signed, completed, and in every respect effected; the property having been completely disposed of, so as to make it an impossibility for any one now to derive the least benefit under deeds of that sort. This being the conclusion to which I have already come, I believe I am expressing not only my own opinion, but the opinion of the rest of the court. That being the case, the present deed, which not only was entered into but completed long before the passing of this Act of Parliament, does not come within the scope and object of the section of the statute; the deed therefore is no bar—the plea is a bad one—the demurrer must be allowed, and the plaintiff is entitled to our judgment.

ALDERSON, B.—It would be a monstrous thing to say the Legislature compelled the remaining creditor, when a deed of arrangement had been signed by six-sevenths, to be bound by the deed, when those remaining creditors could not by possibility have the protection which the Act of Bankruptcy for the first time gives to them, as a consideration why they should be bound. That is so monstrous a proposition, that one cannot, by the mere operation of the word "now," give such an effect to the Act. I quite agree that the modified construction of the word "now," making it apply to an inchoate and not perfect arrangement—inchoate at the time of going forward, at the time the Act passed, would, to give the full effect to the word "now", make the Act reasonable and just.

POLLOCK, C.B.—I may add, in the case adverted to of Marsh v. Higgins, 1 L. M. & P. (this part of it), in page 263, my brother Talfourd, in giving his judgment, expressed the very same opinion with respect to this clause of the Act of Parliament, that it is an Act not quoad hoc retrospective, notwithstanding the use of the word "now."

PARKE, B.—And there must be three months' notice after the Act of Parliament where a party is cognisant of his rights.

ALDERSON, B.—That condition is binding, that he must have three months' notice to do those things which are for the protection of his interests under the Act of Parliament. Judgment for the plaintiff.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS COURT.

Reported by DAVID CATO MACRAE, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Monday, Feb. 14.

Re GEORGE JOY.

Surplus—Dividend—Interest.

The Insolvent Debtors' Act, properly so called, allows interest on debts only under special circumstances, and in the discretion of the court; but the judgment entered up after adjudication carries interest, like any other judgment, from the time of its being entered up.

The question raised in this case, and the argument of counsel (Cooke) is so clearly stated in the judgment of the court, that it is unnecessary to do more than note the authorities cited by the learned counsel:—6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 132; Ex parte Morris, 1 Ves. Jun. 132; Ex parte Goring, 1 Ves. 169; Ex parte Mills, 2 Ves. 295; Re Sir Stephen Evans, 3 Brown's C. THE COURT having taken time for consideration, to-day delivered its judgment.

Mr. Commissioner LAW said.—This most distressing case is at last approaching its termination. The unfortunate gentleman who is the subject of the insolvency has died at the advanced age of ninety-one, almost at the same moment when his protracted Chancery suit came to an end in the House of Lords. He was taken in execution in June 1841. His inability to discharge his debts at that time arose from the resistance made to the large claim which is now at last enforced. The detaining creditor promptly filed a petition; but unfortunately Mr. Joy did not proceed to seek his discharge from custody. No one would have opposed it. On the contrary, it must have been an object to all that the assertion of his claims, which he had by want of funds become unable effectively to prosecute, should be renewed, or have the chance of being renewed, under the auspices of this court. The creditors took no steps for promoting this object; and the benefit that is now arrived at is owing to the enterprise and good sense of the provisional assignee, who was not content to be brought in as a nominal party to the suit, nor to submit to terms which would have given little to the creditors, and nothing to the insolvent; but went actively forward, with help from no one, to accomplish what was due to the interests of both. Unhappily the old man delayed the filing of his schedule for more than nineteen months. At one time he was led astray by bad advice, and taught to believe that he would be benefited by appealing to the Court of Bankruptcy. Nothing could be more fallacious; and the encouragement given to him in this expectation served only to protract his imprisonment. When, at last, after a delay more injurious to himself than his creditors, he sought his discharge from custody in this court, he was promptly liberated. The provisional assignee, confident in the result, had before that time embarked in those proceedings, which have now, through his most commendable perseverance, brought into this court a sum more than sufficient to pay all debts with interest. The representatives of Mr. Joy raise the question, whether it is competent to allow interest; and the subject is brought to my notice on a motion made by Mr. Cooke for certain creditors, in which he has contended that it ought to be allowed on those debts which in their nature legally would carry interest. His argument is this: that, prior to 1825, while the Bankruptcy Statutes were silent on such subject, the practice was established under the authority of the great seal; that, in case of a surplus, interest should be given on debts bearing interest, and the residue only be handed over to the bankrupt. On this ground he has contended that a similar practice should be adopted here; and, as his clients are parties whose debts were such as to bear interest, he duly urges it on their behalf. I am not satisfied that the practice should be adopted only because it prevailed in bankruptcy; and, in truth, I do not desire, if I may avoid it, to give the advantage which is sought to one sort of debt rather than another. I must do my best to follow the laws which regulate this court and its jurisdiction. If I might venture upon regulating such a subject without that control, I should be well pleased to reject the usual distinction in favour of bills of exchange and special contracts, saying that, on the event of a public insolvency, every ascertained balance definitely becomes on account stated, one as much as another; that the compulsory suspension of individual effort to obtain payment is a hardship shared by all claimants; so that all are with equal fairness entitled to benefit from an eventual capacity in the estate to pay interest in addition to principal. When I am urged to follow the practice of another court, I must observe, first, that there is by no means a perfect analogy between the position of creditors in bankruptcy and creditors in insolvency; the common law judgment which stands for the latter alone exemplifies their difference. Secondly, that the bankruptcy practice is pressed on my notice as it prevailed when the Bankruptcy Statutes were silent on interest. But I do not find that at any time the Insolvent Acts have been silent on interest, though the provisions on that subject have been very different at different periods. Prior to the year 1820, the insolvent law dealt with the subject of interest in the following manner:—There was statutable provision for the exercise of that very power which was exercised in bankruptcy without statute. In 53 Geo. 3, c. 102, there is a clause by which a discretion is permitted to the court to allow interest on debts bearing interest in the case of a party whose debts are fully paid, and who is clear of new debts, and who has besides ample estate for his future subsistence. There is also another clause giving similar discretion against the assets of a deceased insolvent which shall remain after payment of all debts subsequent as well as prior to the insolvency. Besides these provisions concerning interest in the event of a surplus, there is a clause which empowers the court in certain cases to allow interest on all debts; namely, in cases where the court may specially interpose to restrain the sale of property, or to raise a fund by mortgage; proceedings which are attended with a delay of payment operating upon all creditors. As to the debts which are to have this advantage, the words of the clause (53 Geo. 3, c. 102, s. 12) are, "upon such terms and conditions with respect to the allowance of interest on debts not bearing interest, or other circumstances, as to the said court shall seem just." No one, I think, will contend that debts not bearing interest were here intended to have advantage over those which do bear it: and the necessary interpretation is, that the clause applies to all debts whatever. Thus till the year 1826 the Insolvent Acts provided that, in case of a surplus, interest might be allowed on debts carrying interest; and that, under peculiar specified circumstances, interest might be allowed on all debts. In the Acts since that time the former provisions have been omitted, while the latter has been retained just as it was forty years ago; and the only instance at this moment in which the Insolvent Act, properly so called, mentions interest, is the case of restraining sales or other special management, according to that which is the 48th section of the present Act: and in this case, as I have said, all creditors whatever are equally capable of receiving interest on their debts. If all the Acts from the first had been wholly silent upon interest, I should still lean to the construction that none was to be allowed. But I am fortified in this, when, on looking back, I find that there has not been that silence. The repeal, as it may be called, of the earlier provisions in favour of certain debts over others, and the fact that the one surviving provision does not favour certain debts over others, tend to justify the principle of equality. And this principle I think to be sound in itself, when applied to the case of public insolvency. Though the law recognises a distinction on this subject of interest, while the debtor is without restraint and without privilege, I cannot perceive that such distinction ought to be revived, when the law of insolvency has established a totally new state of rights and liabilities between him and his creditors as a mass. Indeed, the new security which the law provides, namely the judgment, appears to be intended for the equal benefit of those, from all of whom their individual powers were finally and similarly taken away by the insolvency. But now there arises another question. The debts, in the absence of enactment to the contrary, cease to carry interest on the event of insolvency; and thus cannot receive it where there is a discharge from custody without adjudication. But, when there has been adjudication, and judgment entered up, this question arises, whether interest shall not run upon the judgment? By the Act of 1838, every judgment debt shall carry interest from the time of entering up the judgment. Judgment is to be entered up in one of the superior courts, in pursuance of the warrant of attorney which an insolvent executes at the time of adjudication. Is not the carrying of interest an incident of this, as of all other common law judgments? I recognise no ground for deeming it to be an exception. The subject once arose before, in one of the other courts here; and I was asked to assist in the discussion of it. Much observation was made upon that occasion, upon the circumstance of the present insolvent law making part of an Act which contains other things. I will, therefore, first notice this circumstance. The Act 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, is, by its title first, An Act for abolishing Arrest; secondly, An Act for extending Remedies against Property; thirdly, An Act for amending the Insolvent Law. The first ten clauses relate to the first subject; the clauses 11 to 22 relate to the second subject; and from the 23rd to the 123rd we have an Insolvent Act. It would have been much better that this had been quite a distinct statute. But I know by what accident it was not so. Till a day or two before the bill was printed, with a view to its introduction, there was no intention to make a new Insolvent Act at all; but only to continue the Act of 7 Geo. 4, with one or two amendments; and these were to be introduced in this bill, which concerned arrest and some other things. This was the instruction to him who prepared the bill; and it was quite at the last moment that his task was enlarged on the subject of insolvency, and this was done for the purpose of admitting the improvement, which had previously been rejected, of enabling the creditor to petition. This improvement suggested the substitution of vesting order for assignment; and, verbal alterations becoming necessary in very many clauses of the subsisting Act, the whole needed to be re-enacted. If this explanation were wanting, one still could not read the statute without seeing that the last 101 clauses constitute essentially a distinct Act, as much as the 91 clauses which express the code of the year 1826. Accordingly I do not intend to view the provisions by which every judgment debt is to carry interest, as making part of a code of insolvent law, although it occurs in the same Act with the insolvent law; but I will treat it as if it stood in a perfectly separate statute. In the 17th section of the Act in question, which belongs to the second subject of it, namely, "to enlarge the remedies against property," we have these words: "And be it enacted, that every judgment debt shall carry interest at the rate of four pounds per centum per annum from the time of entering up the judgment, or from the time of the commencement of this Act, in cases of judgments then entered up, and not carrying interest, until the same shall be satisfied; and such interest may be levied under a writ of execution on such judgment." This gives a new attribute to every judgment debt. There is no exception; and, while I do not insist that the attribute attaches the more to insolvency judgments, because this provision is found in the same statute with the insolvent law, I cannot allow that it attaches the less on this account. The case which on a former occasion brought this subject forward was a case of subsequently-acquired property; the discharge having taken place in the year 1827: and one reason was dwelt upon by my late colleague, Mr. Commissioner Harris, which was fairly deserving of attention, but which cannot be applied in the present case. The judgment had been entered up in 1829; and he pointed out that the new Act of 1838 (sect. 23) required all things concerning past cases of insolvency to be done henceforth as they would have been done under the laws then in force. As the case of Mr. Joy has arisen altogether since the Act of 1838, I need not now examine the force of that argument. The other arguments, which I heard on that occasion, rested wholly on the silence of the Insolvent Act. It was urged that the Act which constantly speaks of debts would also have spoken of interest, if it had been intended that the interest in question should be allowed. Many illustrations were offered from various clauses, which seemed to me utterly untenable. It was urged that this insolvency judgment did not appear in a certain enumeration of things, found in the 18th section, which follows that which gives interest on judgments. It could not make part of that list. That section is for giving to certain decrees, orders, and rules, the effect of judgments. The instrument in question is itself a judgment. It was urged that the 87th section only requires judgments against an insolvent to be entered up for the amount of debts, not mentioning interest. What then? The very meaning of the enactment in sect. 17 is, that interest need not be mentioned; but may, in the words of the Act, "be levied under a writ of execution on the judgment." Then it was urged that this judgment is peculiar and sui generis. Its peculiarities are, that the warrant of attorney need not, like others, be filed in a Superior Court; that it need not be executed in presence of the defendant's attorney; that scire facias is not wanted to revive it; that this court is to direct the issuing of execution; and that such execution shall not be against the person, but only against property. These peculiarities seem to me to furnish, not an argument for excluding interest, but an argument for allowing it. The exclusion of interest would be an additional peculiarity, for it would be an exception to the general law, which gives interest on all judgment debts; and, as nothing appears in the Act to warrant that exception, we are not to presume that it was intended. Those who contend that interest does not attach to these judgments as to other judgments in Westminster-hall, because the insolvency clauses do not talk of interest, ought by like reasoning to exclude every other new attribute and faculty which by the same Act is brought within the scope of a judgment. Lands, moneys, negotiable securities, government stock, and shares in public companies, are brought within the grasp of a judgment by the same statute which gives to it the right of interest. These things are not repeated in the enactments of insolvency; are they therefore not applicable to the judgment entered up in the name of an assignee? I think they are; and, if they are, why are you to exclude the right to interest only because that is not repeated? Another argument was founded on sect. 93, by which it was urged the provisions of the Act in favour of creditors were to be for the actual amount of debt, "neither more nor less." This was put forth as conclusive against any addition of interest. Now, if you look for the meaning of that clause, it will be found to mean only that a mistake in the schedule, as of entering a debt at 40*l.* instead of 50*l.*, is not to damage the personal privilege of the debtor, nor the dividend of the creditor. This provision first appeared in the Act of 1826 as a piece of common sense, and has not the smallest bearing on the subject of interest. Finally, it was urged that the 92nd section, by speaking of "debts in respect of which adjudication was made," and not mentioning interest, excludes the allowance of interest; and, as the 17th section says plainly that every judgment debt shall carry interest, Mr. Harris found it necessary to contend that this 92nd section so clearly excluded interest, as to operate a repeal pro tanto of the judgment interest clause. This is but another way of saying that the non-expression of interest is equivalent to the prohibition of it, and this is the proposition which I deny throughout. It is not necessary for entitling such a judgment to carry interest that the word debt should, in the Insolvent Act, be accompanied by the word interest. The 92nd section deals with satisfaction of the judgment, and restitution of the surplus, and speaks of "debts in respect of which such adjudication was made." Here is the same idea which we find in the 90th section, as "debts with respect to which such person shall have become entitled to the benefit of the Act." So in the adjudication clauses themselves we read, "persons as to whose debts such discharge is adjudicated;" and again, "such prisoner shall be discharged and so entitled as to such debts." In none of these instances is interest alluded to. So also in the provision for creditors to vote according to the amount of their debts, and in the provisions for proof of debts, interest is never mentioned. If a new Insolvent Act were to be passed to-morrow, the word "debts" would stand as now in every place where it is required, without introducing the idea of "interest." But this silence does not prevent that interest should be carried by the judgment. It is not more necessary for authorising this result, that the law should specially provide for interest on this judgment, than that a special contract for interest need have been made for authorising interest on another judgment. The judgment now carries interest because it is a judgment. I concede, therefore, to the utmost, that the insolvent law itself has no terms which express this right to interest. Debts alone, that is to say, claims as they justly stand at the date of the vesting order, are spoken of throughout. Neither do I say that the insolvent law itself expresses the right to interest in the case of a surplus, though this is the result of what I do contend for, namely, that the judgment debt, as such, carries interest. This judgment is to be satisfied if ever there shall appear the means of satisfying it; and the point for consideration is, whether, since the law was passed giving interest, any judgment can be deemed satisfied until interest has been obtained. Satisfaction of the judgment is spoken of in the 88th section, where the court is empowered to commit the contumacious man who has acquired property, "until he shall convey, assign, and transfer to the assignees such property, or so much thereof, as the court shall direct, towards the satisfaction of the judgment." When judgment has been entered up, the creditors claim under it. Funds obtained under it are expressed to be "for the general benefit of the creditors entitled to claim under such judgment." This judgment is to stand until the court shall order satisfaction to be entered up; and the question is still this—what is satisfaction? The Act says, as it always did, without alluding to any case of interest, that the court shall make this order, when all debts have been discharged and satisfied. Still the question remains, what is satisfaction? I believe there are those who would say, that if an insolvent cares not to have satisfaction entered, interest on the judgment cannot be taken; that it is only claimable as the condition of entering up satisfaction on the judgment; and that, if the debtor waives this thing, the creditors cannot insist on the other. But the insolvent or, as in this case, his representatives, even if they should be indifferent to the entering up of satisfaction, are not indifferent to that which the 92nd section prescribes as the next thing for the court to do in a case like this: namely, to restore to them any property which may still remain in the hands of an assignee. This is the very thing which they are a[illegible]ying for under the 92nd section; and I find myself called upon by the statute, not to make this restoration, until I can find that all the debts to which the adjudication applies are duly satisfied; till I have first appropriated so much of the property as, in other words of the statute, "is sufficient to satisfy the judgment,"—till I have secured it to the creditors, who are (as also expressed in the statute) "entitled to claim under the judgment,"—in short, till I can relieve the assignee himself from the burthen of the trust. I cannot assent to the notion that "creditors entitled to claim under the judgment" imports the body of creditors when the judgment has been put in force through an execution, in contradistinction from the same list of persons at an earlier period, and under other circumstances. Though the Act in different places uses different terms to express the creditors and their debts, sometimes referring to the judgment, sometimes to the adjudication, sometimes to the benefit of the Act, I consider that the same thing is always meant; namely, creditors and debts duly recognised as affected by the insolvency of the debtor: being distinguished only from those to whom his insolvency does not apply. And, although the whole fund now in court has been realised by means of the title under the vesting order, and not by putting the judgment in force, I find myself equally bound to see that judgment satisfied, before I destroy that title. If a case never receives a final hearing and adjudication, there can be no judgment: and, then, if debts are paid in the amount at which they stood at the date of the vesting order, an insolvent is, in my opinion, entitled to a revesting order. But, where judgment has been entered up, that judgment must be satisfied before a surplus can be restored to him: and still the question is, what is satisfaction of the judgment? I have tried in vain to find that it can be satisfied without interest. I hold that it is not competent to this court to order satisfaction to be entered, and make a revesting order, till interest has been paid from the time of entering up the judgment. I will only add those general observations:—That the new law, which gives interest in every judgment, seems to accord in principle with that view of justice which would place all creditors under an insolvency on an equal footing. A judgment between A. and B. clenches the account. There is no longer a voluntariness of credit; the time has come after which interest, as a penalty for non-payment, is due with perfect fairness, whatever was the original transaction. So it is after an insolvency. And, now that a judgment debt carries interest, the relation of an insolvent to his creditors when this has been entered up is placed on a footing still more just and equitable than it was before. In the case before us, the justice of applying this principle is of the most marked kind. Twelve years ago the creditors of Mr. Joy were debarred from the payment that was due to them, not by the want of property on his part, but by the accident which kept from him the possession of it. His debtor sought to pay him without interest. A litigation for enforcing a just claim has at last exacted that interest, and it now comes forth as an accumulation upon his property. Nothing can be more obviously just than that, in this resulting competency of the estate, the creditors should have recompense for their long procrastination. The means of payment to which they looked on lending their money were not only substantial in appearance, but have proved to be substantial in fact. The lapse of time which aggravated their loss has also provided the remedy for it, by enlarging those means of payment, and it would be thoroughly unjust if the compensation should be denied to them. The equity here is too clear to need illustration; but if I should seek for illustration, I would find it in that very clause, now forty years old, which allows interest in cases where an insolvent "is entitled to an uncertain interest, or to property under such circumstances that the immediate sale might be prejudicial to him;" a clause, be it remembered, which may be acted upon as soon as a petition has been filed, and may operate if adjudication does not follow. An immediate conversion of Mr. Joy's rights into money, in 1841, might have been made, by a submission to the miserable terms to which his opponent in the Chancery suit sought to drive him. Such submission would have been analogous to a sudden and injurious sale. The circumstance for consideration here, namely, that such timid concession would have given short payment to creditors and nothing to the insolvent, was equivalent in merit to any "circumstance affecting property," which can be suggested as meeting the terms of that special clause. No case can be imagined within this clause in which "an expediency not to sell" can show itself more pressing and persuasive than was here the expediency of not abandoning a cause so full of eventual promise, for want of indemnity against present danger. Neither can any case be conceived in which the course pursued has more strictly fulfilled the duty, as that same clause expresses it, of "considering the future benefit of an insolvent after payment of his debts." If Mr. Joy's executors are dissatisfied, they may apply for a mandamus requiring me to order satisfaction to be entered up without interest, and the interest can, in the meantime, be retained, as the parties may agree.

Will—Alterations—Initials of testator and attesting witnesses opposite thereto—1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

A will was, in the month of October 1847, duly executed in the presence of two witnesses. Two years afterwards the testator, having in the meantime made some alterations in his will, sent for the attesting witnesses thereto, and pointed out to them the alterations in question, consisting of four interlined lines; he then in their joint presence placed his initials in the margin opposite thereto, and they thereupon at his request and in his presence placed their initials below his. After his death the interlined lines were found obliterated, but the other alterations appeared in the will.

Curtis moved the court to decree probate of the will, with the alterations proved to have been made before the first execution, and with the first interlineations. In support of this part of his motion he cited In the goods of Amiss, 2 Robert. 136, in which the word "signature" in the Wills Act had been held to be satisfied by a mark or initials; In the goods of Wingrove, 16 L. T. Rep. 347, in which an alteration was held to be well made where the names of the testator and witnesses appeared in the margin; and In the goods of Christian, 2 Robert. 110, where the will was signed by the witnesses with their full names in length, but in the codicil executed immediately afterwards, to supply an omission in the will, although it was subscribed by the same witnesses, their initials only appeared, and probate of the codicil was notwithstanding decreed.

Sir J. DODSON, upon the authority of The goods of Christian, decreed probate of the will, with the interlineation, and also with the alterations made before the first execution; but without the erasure of the interlineation and the other obliterations.

WILKINSON v. CUMMING.

Distribution of dividend—"Shares" in a joint-stock banking company—"Bonus," "interest," or "dividend"—Acquiescence.

An unincorporated banking company by its deed of settlement was authorised to increase its capital from 500,000l. to a sum not exceeding one million, by the issue of new shares. Shares of 25l. each (No. 1) were issued, and the capital was increased by the issue of 25l. shares (No. 2); the amount of which shares respectively was immediately paid up in full. The capital was again increased by the issue of 25l. shares (No. 3), which were distributed among the holders of shares Nos. 1 and 2, upon which only 2l. 10s. had been paid. The directors refused to make any further call, although by the company's deed it was provided that, with the consent of the directors, any proprietor might pay in advance any part of the money which should remain unpaid in respect of his shares, and which should not have been called for under the provisions, &c. The directors were to declare dividends, and "to apply them either as a bonus to be added to the respective shares, or as interest or dividend upon such shares, or upon the amount paid up in respect of such shares, or as part bonus and part interest, or dividend, or otherwise, as they might deem most expedient; and to divide such dividend or bonus into as many equal parts as there should be shares then held in the capital of the company." The directors had for ten years past divided the profits among the shareholders, according to the amount of capital paid up, and not according to the number of shares held in the company. A motion by a shareholder (No. 3) to restrain the directors from so dividing the dividends, was refused.

The directors of the above company were authorised to buy and sell shares for the benefit of the company. They purchased shares and offered them to the shareholders in proportion to the stock held by them respectively. A motion by a shareholder (No. 3) to restrain the directors from so dealing with them, was also refused.

This was an application, by way of appeal from a decision of Wood, V.C. to regulate the division of the dividends and profits of a joint-stock banking company, and the manner in which shares, which the directors had purchased for the benefit of the company, should be distributed among the shareholders.

The facts were shortly these:—In the year 1837 a joint-stock company or partnership called the Union Bank of Australia was formed for the purpose of carrying on the business of banking, as a bank of issue and deposit in the Australian colonies. The company was unincorporated, and was established by a deed of settlement, dated Oct. 26, 1837. The capital was to consist of 500,000l. divided into 20,000 shares of 25l. each, with power for the directors, with the consent of two-thirds in value of the proprietors, to increase the capital to any amount not exceeding 1,000,000l. by the issue of new shares of 25l. each therein. In the event of the capital being increased, the holders of the then existing shares were to have the option of taking all or any of the new shares before they were offered to the public. 2000 shares of 25l. each were first issued, and the sum of 500,000l. subscribed for. These were called shares of the first series. In 1839 the directors, with the necessary assent, increased the capital to 800,000l. by issuing 12,000 new shares of 25l. each, which were called shares of the second series: these were taken up by the then proprietors, who paid up the full amount of 25l. In 1840 the directors again increased the capital by issuing 8000 additional new shares of 25l. each, which were called shares of the third series; and were allotted to and accepted by the proprietors of the then existing shares, in the proportion of one new share in respect of every four shares, but so that no fractional part of a share was created.

The company carried on their business with great profit; and in each and every year, up to and including the year 1841, declared a dividend of 6l. per cent. upon the amount of the paid-up capital. In 1849 they declared a like dividend of 6l. per cent. and also a bonus of 2l. per centum; in 1850 a dividend of 6l. per cent. and a bonus of 3l. per cent.; in 1851 a dividend of 6l. per cent. and a bonus of 1l. per cent.; and in 1852 a dividend of 6l. per cent. and a bonus of 6l. per cent.

These several dividends and bonuses the directors paid to the several proprietors of shares in proportion to the amount of capital paid up in respect of each share held by them respectively. The directors so divided them in pursuance of the 33rd clause of the company's deed of settlement. That clause declared "that it should be lawful for the board of directors to declare a dividend or dividends from time to time out of the profits of the company, to be calculated on a statement to be laid before the proprietors on the annual general meeting; and that it should be optionable with the said board to apply such dividend either as a bonus to be added to the respective shares, or as interest or dividend upon such shares, or upon the amount paid up in respect of such shares, or as part bonus and part interest or dividend or otherwise as they might deem most expedient; and to divide such dividend or bonus into as many equal parts as there should be shares then held in the capital of the company. In the year 1842 the plaintiff purchased seventy-five of the shares of the third series, which were duly transferred to him in the books of the company, in the manner required by the deed of settlement, upon which shares one call only of 2l. 10s. had been paid.

The 54th clause of the deed of settlement declared "that any proprietor should from time to time, with the consent of the board of directors, be at liberty to pay in advance all or any part of the sums or sum of money which should from time to time be unpaid in respect of the share or shares held by him, and which should not have been called for under the provisions therein for that purpose contained, and should be allowed out of the funds of the company interest at such rate as should be agreed upon, not exceeding 5l. per cent. per annum, on such sum or sums of money which should be so paid or advanced, or so much thereof as should not from time to time be due in respect of any calls which should have been made on the proprietors as therein provided, to be computed from the respective times of advancing such sums or sum of money; but that such sum or sums of money so paid or advanced as aforesaid, or on any part thereof, might be recalled by the proprietor in respect of whose share or shares the same shall have been paid or paid off by the directors," on certain notice, &c.

By the deed of settlement the directors were authorised to buy and sell the company's shares for its benefit: and, in the years 1847 and 1848, when the shares were much depressed in value, the then directors bought for the benefit of the said company 4551 shares, upon which 25l. per share had been paid, and 824 shares, upon which only 2l. 10s. per share had been paid. Such several shares subsequently greatly increased in value, and the directors sold the greater part of them, and the amount of the capital paid up in respect of the shares which they did not sell was equal to the amount of the capital paid up on 2500 paid-up 25l. shares. The directors proposed that such unsold shares should be offered to the then proprietors in proportion to the stock held by them respectively at the respective prices of 42l. and 41. 4s. per share.

The plaintiff subsequently purchased 100 additional shares of the third series, and being advised that as a partner in the concern, he was liable with the shareholders of the first and second series to contribute to the losses of the company, not in proportion to the amount each shareholder had paid, but in proportion to the number of shares he held, and that he and the other shareholders of the third series were entitled to share equally in the profits of the company, with the proprietors of the other shares, according to the number they held respectively. The directors insisted that, upon the terms of their deed, they were not justified in dividing the profits in any other mode than that which they had adopted.

The plaintiff filed his bill on behalf of all other the shareholders of the third series against the directors, who were holders of shares of the first and second series, praying a declaration that the dividends and bonuses which might be thereafter declared in respect of the profits might be divided into as many equal parts as there were shares, and not in proportion to the amount of capital paid up in respect of each share; that the said several shares reserved for the proprietors might be allotted and apportioned amongst the plaintiff and the other proprietors of shares of the third series, and all the other proprietors of shares in the said company in the same manner; and that the defendants might be restrained by injunction from making or declaring any division of the profits of the said company, and from transferring or causing to be transferred the said several reserved shares in the said company, amongst the proprietors of shares in the said company, otherwise than in proportion to the number of shares held by such proprietors respectively.

Wood, V.C. refused the motion, and this was an appeal from his decision.

Bolt and Speed appeared for the plaintiff, and in answer to the court as to the acquiescence of the plaintiff in the manner which the directors had adopted, said that the plaintiff's attention was not called to the principle upon which the profits of the company were divided by the directors until the year 1852: he received the several dividends and bonuses which were declared in respect of the seventy-five shares which he purchased in the year 1842, up to and including the dividend and bonus declared in the year 1851, in ignorance of his rights. When the last dividend and bonus were declared, he had purchased and became the registered proprietor of 236 shares; and in consequence of his increased interest in the said company, he was induced to examine more carefully than he had previously done the principle upon which they had declared the several dividends and bonuses, and he then discovered for the first time the manner in which the profits of the said company had been divided by the said directors amongst the several proprietors of shares therein. They contended that such principle was erroneous, and contrary to the provisions contained in the deed of settlement, and much to the prejudice of the plaintiff and the other proprietors of the shares of the third series. The amount of capital paid upon each share was not the basis on which the division of profits ought to have taken place. The liability to losses was limited in proportion to the number of shares. The directors ought either to call up the unpaid portion of the shares of the third series, or charge the proprietors of such shares with interest at 5l. per cent. on such unpaid portion, and to give them an equal dividend and bonus with the other shareholders, less the amount of such interest.

The Solicitor-General, Russell, Selwyn, and Hobhouse appeared for the company, in support of the V.C.'s order.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The plaintiff in this case is seeking to obtain an injunction to prevent the defendants from dealing with the funds of this partnership in the mode in which they have been in the habit of dealing with them for the last ten years—I say ten years,—because that is the period only during which the plaintiff has been interested in the concern; but they have so dealt with them since its institution in 1837. Now if that were all, the plaintiff must make a very strong case to induce this court to interfere. It is asked to disturb that which all parties—and with a capital of a million there must be shareholders to a vast amount here and abroad—have supposed to be the correct and proper course, and which has been acted upon for so long a period of time. But I confess I do not rely entirely upon that. In spite of all that has taken place, if there had been, as there has been, this acquiescence of ten years, and if there had been more acts showing the perfect cognizance of the plaintiff in what has been done, if the plaintiff could have made a very strong case to satisfy us that all that which has been done, has been done in error—of course, it would have been still stronger if it had been done improperly, or with any corrupt motive—this court might have been considerably unwilling to permit that clear and manifest error to be persevered in. But not only am I not satisfied that the defendants are wrong in the construction they have put upon the deed, but the strong leaning of my mind is, that they are perfectly right: so that what we are asked to do is in effect not only to restrain the parties from acting in the mode in which they have so long acted, but to force them to act in that which, as at present advised, I believe is not in conformity with the terms of their deed. Now there is no doubt that in the absence of express contract parties entering into a partnership, although the one brings in a large capital, and the other only a small one, or nothing at all, if nothing is said, when the profits come to be divided, those profits will be divided equally. That is the general rule of partnership, in the absence of express contract: but here there is an express contract. The parties do stipulate as to the mode in which the profits are to be divided, and the question is upon the construction of the instrument whereby the mode is provided, in which those profits are to be divided amoug the different shareholders. Now they stipulate, as is the case in these and the like undertakings, for a rateable division of profits according to the amount of their shares: if one man has 100 shares he is to receive 50l. profit; if another has 200 he is to receive 100l. profit. That is the principle upon which the provision is introduced, and there can be no doubt as to what the parties must have meant to stipulate. I ascertain what they meant, only from what they have said. Now what is the language that they have used? That which relates to the making of the dividend is to be found in the 33rd section. Now up to that section there was no possibility of there being any difference in the amount of any one share from another; because up to that period the stipulation had been that the capital was to consist of 500,000*l.* in shares of 25*l.* each; all of which was to be immediately called up, so that every shareholder must necessarily be a shareholder in equal amount up to that point. In the other and subsequent clauses, power is given at some future period to increase the capital by adding new shares. If that had been done after all the shares of the former capital were paid up, there is no doubt that state of things might arise which has arisen, namely, that there would be one class, the whole of whose capital had been paid up; and, as to the other, only a part. Now, what is contended for is this, that that class of shareholders who have for the last ten years only been in advance 2*l.* 10*s.* in respect of the last increase of capital, the amount of a small call, are each of them entitled to receive an equal amount of dividend with those who have paid up the whole amount. If that is the stipulation, ita lex scripta est. Is there any construction we can put upon this deed that would lead to a result more in conformity with what must have been the intention of the parties, I think it is easy so to construe it; it was to be optional with the directors to apply the profits either as "bonus," or "interest," or "dividend," "upon such shares or upon the amount paid up in respect of such shares." What does that mean? Why, upon such shares of which the whole has been paid up; or upon the amount that has been paid up if only part. That construction does no violence to the language, and it harmonises with what is the universal course in such cases. Now it was said that the capital was to be divided into so many "equal parts and shares." I think that is merely an inaccuracy of expression arising from the fact that, up to a certain point in the deed, they must have been all equal parts, because there was only one distribution of capital, and there would therefore have been only one class of persons claiming a dividend. Whatever explanation may be given, it seems to be impossible to override the other words which declare that it shall be divided "upon such shares, or upon the amount paid up in respect of such shares." By so construing the deed, justice is done to all parties. It must be borne in mind what in the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, which regulates joint stock companies incorporated by Act of Parliament, is the mode of dealing with the dividends there; it is expressly said that the directors, &c. are to apportion "the same or so much thereof as they may consider applicable to the purpose of dividend among the shareholders, according to the shares held by them respectively, the amount paid thereon, and the periods during which the same may have been paid." That is not the precise language here introduced: but there seems enough to lead me judicially to say that such is what the parties must have contemplated. The directors are to pay this as "bonus, or dividend, or interest." What is the meaning of interest? Equal sums of interest presuppose an equal amount of capital: interest is something that, according to the universal understanding of mankind, always has to bear a given ratio to the capital in respect of which the interest accrues due. How can that, then, be the same with respect to a capital upon which 2*l.* 10*s.* is paid, and one upon which 25*l.* is paid? The very name seems to import that it must be something that is in proportion to the capital on which it is payable. There might be no inaccuracy of language in calling it a "dividend on the shares," the share being sometimes the share, upon which only 2*l.* 10*s.* has been paid, and sometimes the share upon which 25*l.* has been paid; but interest upon it seems to be a very absurd expression, if you speak of the same sum—the same amount of interest at the same rate not referring to the same amount of capital. I have given this opinion of my construction of the Act, because I think the parties are entitled to know the view I take of it. It is not necessary to come to any decision upon that for the reason I set out with saying,—because even if it were more doubtful than it appears to me to be, I should still have thought this motion ought to have been refused.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—I agree; reserving to myself, as I understand the Lord Chancellor has reserved to himself, the faculty of deciding at the hearing of this cause, according to a different view of the construction, if a different view shall then be satisfactorily presented.

Lord Justice TURNER.—If it were necessary now finally to determine this, I should rather have desired more fully to have examined the provisions of the deed; but in my opinion this is not necessary now. The directors, ever since the year 1839, when the first increase of the capital was made, have gone on acting in this course with the parties who have dealt with shares in this company, and who have held the shares in the company, and have been in possession of their income derived from their shares, according to the construction which has been acted upon, from 1841 at least, and probably from the year 1839. Now I must take the plaintiff to have been in possession of these facts, because, although he may not have carefully examined this deed, he had undoubtedly just the same power as he has at the present time, at any time from 1841, to have made the examination of this deed. His attention was called to this question on the first occasion of this bonus being declared. I do not think that this court, upon an interlocutory application, ought to interfere to disturb the rights of the parties who have been in possession of this income, unless indeed there be a perfectly clear case in favour of the plaintiff who applies to the court for this relief. It might be done in a perfectly clear case, where the court was fully satisfied that the plaintiff was right,—and that no other reasonable construction than that which the plaintiff has contended for could be put upon the deed, I do not in the least degree propose to question; but in the present case, so far from, as at present advised, agreeing with the construction that has been put upon this deed by the plaintiff, my strong impression is, that the construction that has been put upon it by the plaintiff is a wrong construction, and that the true construction of this deed, coupled with the increase of capital in the year 1841, is this,—that the new shareholders who were to come in upon the terms of the resolution of 1841 were to come in, inter se, upon the same terms as the original shareholders had come in upon the original deed of 1837. That seems to be a reasonable and fair construction of the deed; but I do not mean to bind myself by that construction. I think that is a point that must be decided at the hearing of the cause. All that I say on the present occasion is, that the right of the plaintiff is not so clear as to warrant the court in disturbing the enjoyment of the parties who have been in receipt of the interest ever since 1839.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Saturday, Jan. 29.

Ex parte HUME, re Lord HUNTINGTOWER.

A defendant to a bill which sought to set aside certain deeds, as fraudulent and void as against creditors under a bankruptcy, had been examined, and his examination filed in the Court of Bankruptcy. An application by him to refer to that examination, preparatory to his putting in his answer, was refused.

This was an application by way of appeal from a decision of Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque to refer to an examination under a bankruptcy before putting in an answer to a bill in Chancery.

The official and creditors' assignees under Lord Huntingtower's bankruptcy filed a bill against Mr. Hume, praying that a certain indenture, by which this bankrupt had assigned certain real and personal estate to Mr. Hume as a security for 8000*l.* might be set aside as fraudulent and void as against the creditors. Mr. Hume was required to set forth the minute particulars of these deeds, and to state the several circumstances under which they were executed, and enter minutely into certain matters of account which took place in the years 1841 and 1842.

It appeared that in the year 1849 Mr. Hume was examined before Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque touching the same transactions as were referred to in the bill, and again in 1850 and 1851. The examinations on each occasion were taken down in writing, and filed in the Court of Bankruptcy. Mr. Hume, at the same time, produced his books and papers relating to the same transactions, and gave all the explanation that he was able to do. As the matters were of so complicated a nature, and had occurred so long ago, in order to prepare a truthful answer to the bill in Chancery, an application was made to Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque for liberty to inspect and take a copy of his examinations. His Honour refused the request.

T. H. Terrell now made a similar application to the Court of Appeal. He thought it right to state that, on a similar application being made to Lord Eldon, his lordship decided that a party had no right to take a copy of his examination for the purpose, perhaps, of fabricating an answer to a bill in Chancery, for, if he had told the truth once, he could tell it again.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is a most extraordinary application. It must be refused.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—The only doubt I had was whether, under the new bankruptcy orders, we had jurisdiction. Application refused.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES.)

Wednesday, Nov. 17.

Re RUTTER.

Lunacy—Receipt of rents—Committee.

Where a lunatic's income consisted of rents payable weekly, the committee was allowed to receive them before perfecting his securities, he undertaking to perfect them within a given time.

COURT OF APPEAL.

E. W. Collins appeared in support of a petition, praying the confirmation of the Master's report, approving of a particular person as committee of the lunatic's estate, and for other purposes.

Rogers, for the person approved of as committee, stated that he could not perfect his securities before six weeks had elapsed; but that it would be desirable, as the property of the lunatic consisted of houses let out to weekly tenants, that he should be at once allowed to receive the rents, otherwise a considerable loss might accrue to the lunatic's estate.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—We think the report should be confirmed, and, the committee undertaking to perfect his securities within six weeks from the present time, let him be at liberty to receive the rents.

Dec. 17 and 22.

Ex parte BRADSHAW, re DENNISON'S TRUSTS.

Trustee Act, 1850—Right to transfer—Executrix—Married woman.

A testator bequeathed property to A. and B. equally, and appointed an executor and an executrix. The executrix married, and the property was laid out in stock in the name of the executor and executrix (the wife of C.) C. the husband, in 1839, went abroad and had, down to 1852, never been heard of, and it was not known whether he was alive or dead. A. attained twenty-one, and the executor and executrix petitioned, under the stat. 18 & 14 Vict. c. 60, for a declaration that C. was a trustee within the meaning of the Act, and a direction that the right to transfer was vested in the executor and executrix and an official of the bank, and that half of the fund might be transferred by them into the name of A. The Court declared C. to be a trustee, and that the right to transfer was vested in the husband alone.

This was the petition of William Bradshaw, John Hodgkin Pearl, and Elizabeth Jolly, the wife of Youngman Charles Jolly, whereby it appeared that William Dennison, deceased, by his will, dated 15th Feb. 1835, bequeathed to William Bradshaw (the petitioner) and John Bradshaw "all the property he was possessed of at the time of his death, subject to the payment of his debts, funeral expenses, and a few legacies, and appointed J. H. Pearl and Elizabeth Jolly, then Elizabeth Bradshaw (the petitioners), executor and executrix of his will. The testator died the same month, and the executor and executrix proved the will in April following. In 1836 Elizabeth Bradshaw married Mr. Y. C. Jolly. In 1838 the clear residue of the testator's estate was ascertained, and was invested in the purchase of 150*l.* Three-and-a-half per cent. Reduced Annuities in the names of the petitioners, Mr. J. H. Pearl and "Elizabeth Jolly, the wife of Youngman Charles Jolly," which was afterwards reduced to 137*l.* 10*s.* Three-and-a-quarter per cent. Reduced Annuities, and was at the time of the petition standing in those names in the bank books. The dividends had been applied for the maintenance of the two children. In Sept. 1839 Mr. Y. C. Jolly left his wife and sailed to the West Indies, and had never since been heard of by the executor and executrix, and it was not known whether he was alive or dead. The petitioner, William Bradshaw, on the 2nd Nov. 1852, attained the age of twenty-one years, the other child, John, being still an infant. The executor and executrix were unable to transfer one moiety of the stock to William Bradshaw, in consequence of the absence of Mr. Y. C. Jolly. The petition then prayed a declaration that Mr. Y. C. Jolly, was a trustee within the meaning of the Act, and a direction that the right to transfer the fund might be vested in Mr. Pearl and Mrs. Jolly, and the secretary, deputy-secretary, or accountant-general of the Bank of England, and that therefore they might forthwith transfer 68*l.* 15*s.*, one half thereof, into the name of the petitioner William Bradshaw.

Hetherington, for the petitioners, stated that the matter had been brought before Kindersley, V. C.; but his Honour considered that, as the case did not come in words within the 22nd section of the Trustee Act, 1850 (18 & 14 Vict. c. 60), it had better be mentioned to their Lordships. The case contemplated by the 22nd section was of the absence of a party entitled, whereas in the present case the husband was entitled by reason only of his wife being an executrix. The words of the section were: "When any person or persons shall be jointly entitled with any person out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, or who cannot be found, or concerning whom it shall be uncertain whether he be living or dead, to any stock or chose in action upon any trust, it shall be lawful for the said court to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, &c. either in such person or persons so jointly entitled as aforesaid, or in such last-mentioned person or persons together with any person or persons the said court may appoint;" so that the court would perceive that in its terms it did not include the case of a married executrix. The petition was wholly unopposed, and the sole object was to obtain the opinion of their Lordships on the point.

Their LORDSHIPS made inquiries as to the extent of the evidence, and it appearing that it was in some degree defective, they directed further affidavits to be produced; and, subject to this,

COURT OF APPEAL.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE said that both his learned brother and himself were of opinion that the further evidence could be more easily completed before the judge's clerk; that course had better be adopted. With regard to the propriety of making an order on this petition, they were both of opinion that, upon the evidence being completed—but with great deference to the opinion and doubts of the learned V. C.—the husband, Mr. Jolly, was "entitled" within the meaning of the Trustee Act, 1850, without overstraining the language of the 22nd section. Still, however, if after this statement of opinion the V. C. still preferred that their Lordships should make the order, or objected to make it himself, their Lordships would do so. The matter had better be again brought under Sir Richard Kindersley's attention.

Dec. 22.—The note made by the V. C.'s chief clerk was that the affidavit of, &c. had been produced, and sufficient evidence produced of Jolly being out of the jurisdiction.

On application being made the same day to Kindersley, V. C., his Honour made an order which, after stating the facts, and that, "it appearing that Y. C. Jolly, husband of the petitioner Elizabeth Jolly, was trustee within the meaning of the Trustee Act, 1850, and that he is out of the jurisdiction of this court, declare that he is a trustee of 137*l.* 10*s.* Three per cent. &c. standing in the names of J. H. Pearl and the said Elizabeth Jolly, in the books of the governor, &c. within the intent and meaning of the said Act of Parliament. And it appearing that the petitioner Wm. Bradshaw is entitled to one moiety, order that, pursuant to the said Act of Parliament, the right to transfer the said sum of 137*l.* 10*s.* Three per cent. &c., and the right to receive the interest and dividends thereof, do vest in the said J. H. Pearl alone." Then the order directed the transfer of one moiety.

Ex parte BAYLY, re WILLIAM LOUGHER, THOMAS LOUGHER, AND DAVID LOUGHER, Bankrupts.

3 & 4 Vict. c. 42—Distress—Arrears of rent—Bankrupt.

Prior to an act of bankruptcy by the tenant a landlord had levied a distress for rent, but previous to the sale under the distress the tenant was adjudicated a bankrupt:

Held, overruling the decision of the Commissioner, that the landlord was entitled to retain six years' arrears of rent out of the proceeds arising from the sale of the goods distrained.

This was an appeal from the decision of Mr. Commissioner Bere, on a special case submitted to him pursuant to the powers contained in 12th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, which was as follows:—

In the year 1836 George Bayly, Esq. late of Plymouth, entered into a verbal agreement with William and Thomas Lougher for leasing certain premises called the Barbican Foundry to them for a term of twenty-one years, at the rent of 70*l.* per annum. He instructed his attorney to prepare a lease. A lease was accordingly prepared, and dated the 10th Jan. 1837, by which the premises were purported to be demised to William and Thomas Lougher for the term of twenty-one years, from the 25th Dec. 1837, at a yearly rent of 70*l.* The lease, however, though engrossed, was never executed by either of the parties to it.

The Messrs. Lougher had transactions in business with Mr. John Bayly, and in the year 1837, under an assumption that the lease from Mr. George Bayly had been duly executed by him, an arrangement was made for transferring the supposed interest of William and Thomas Lougher in the premises to Mr. John Bayly.

On the 2nd Oct. 1837, in consideration of 260*l.*, an assignment was executed by William and Thomas Lougher, of their interest in the premises, to Mr. John Bayly, together with certain fixtures, fittings, and effects, pertaining to the property; and Mr. John Bayly, by an indenture dated the 15th Dec. 1837, demised the premises to William Lougher, Thomas Lougher, and David Lougher, for the term of twenty-one years from the 24th Dec. thence next ensuing, at the rent of 99*l.* 19*s.* 10*d.* per annum, payable quarterly. This lease was executed by Mr. Bayly, and by William, David, and Thomas Lougher.

The Messrs. Lougher continued from time to time, with more or less regularity, to pay to Mr. George Bayly, upon his requiring the same, the rent of 70*l.* per annum, reserved to him as aforesaid.

On the 8th Aug. 1851, there was owing to Mr. George Bayly, on account of the rent of 70*l.* per annum, the sum of 105*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.*; for this sum he, Mr. George Bayly, distrained (he having previously employed Messrs. Pridham as his solicitors from time to time to require payment of the rent.) A part of the amount was paid, and the distress was withdrawn. On the 20th Nov. 1851 Mr. George Bayly died, leaving Mr. John Bayly his heir-at-law.

On the 24th Dec. 1851 Mr. John Bayly signed two warrants of distress. Under the one for the rent claimed under his lease to Messrs. Lougher, chattels of the value of 599*l.* were distrained. Under the other, for rent claimed to be due to Mr. John Bayly, as the heir-at-law of Mr. George Bayly, or his representatives, property of the value of 84*l.* was taken. Mr. John Bayly continued in possession by his bailiffs; but, at the request of the Messrs. Lougher, delayed to sell under the expectation of an arrangement being made as to the rent; but on the 22nd Jan., prior to a sale of the effects having been effected, Messrs. Lougher were adjudged bankrupts. Mr. John Bayly's possession was still continued, under an arrangement that the sale should be made by the assignees, and the proceeds, less the expenses, be invested in the joint names of Mr. Bayly and the assignees, to abide the result of the opinion of the Commissioner in Bankruptcy on a case stated.

Subsequently to the bankruptcy a sale of the property taken in distress was had, together with the fittings and fixtures included in the assignment of the 10th Oct. 1837, and the sum realised was paid into the banker's hands to abide the determination of the Commissioner. It was alleged by Mr. John Bayly that the Messrs. Lougher were indebted to him in a very large amount beyond the sum claimed by him for rent, after having, as he alleged, given credit in his account for the amount paid by them to Mr. George Bayly, on account of moneys reserved by the original but unexecuted lease. No account had been furnished by Mr. John Bayly to Messrs. Lougher or to their assignees, and they denied that any balance was due so as to justify such debts. The points reserved for the judgment of the Commissioner were—1st. For what amount of rent (if any) had Mr. John Bayly a right to distrain, either in his own right, or as the heir-at-law of Mr. George Bayly? 2nd. Were the Messrs. Lougher entitled to require that their payments to Mr. George Bayly be carried by Mr. John Bayly to the credit of the rent reserved by the latter? 3rd. Had the bankruptcy of Messrs. Lougher affected Mr. John Bayly's right as landlord; and if so, to what extent? There was indorsed on the special case the following judgment by the learned Commissioner:—"Pay J. Bayly one year's rent, and apply the rest of the money arising from the sale of the goods on which the distress was levied to the credit of the estate.—M. B. BERE. Oct. 14, 1852."

Swanston and Roxburgh, for the appeal, contended that the whole of the arrears ought to be retained by the landlord, or at all events he was entitled to retain six years' arrears.

Rolt, for the assignees, argued that even if the view taken by the Commissioner were wrong, six years' arrears of rent only ought to be recovered. The observations of Maule, J. in Humfrey v. Gery, 7 C. B. Rep. 580, and Sug. Real Prop. Stat. 133, 144 were commented on.

THEIR LORDSHIPS held that, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, it was clear that the landlord was entitled to distrain for six years' arrears of rent, but for no more; and he was therefore entitled to retain out of the proceeds of the sale rent to that amount.

Guardian ad litem—Jurisdiction to appoint—Lunatic not found such by inquisition.

An application by a plaintiff for the appointment of a guardian ad litem to a lunatic defendant not found such by inquisition, ought to be made in Chancery, and not in lunacy. An application, therefore, to the Lords Justices for such purpose was refused, as it ought to have been made to a Vice-Chancellor.

W. H. Terrell, by the leave of Kindersley, V. C. made an application to their Lordships, as exercising jurisdiction in lunacy, on behalf of the plaintiff, for the appointment of a guardian ad litem to a defendant of unsound mind, not found so by inquisition. He stated that in the case of the same defendant in another suit, a similar application had been made to Turner, V. C. who directed the matter to be mentioned to Lord Truro, who made the order. He also stated that Kindersley, V. C. had not given any opinion as to whether he had jurisdiction or not to make the order; but he thought that, as the L. C. had on the former occasion been applied to, an application to their Lordships, who had now jurisdiction in lunacy, should be made.

H. Fox Bristowe, for other parties.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—I think the V. C. has jurisdiction. The proper jurisdiction to make the order asked is in Chancery and not in Lunacy.

Cairns (amicus curiæ).—The 32nd of the Orders of 1845 applies to such a case where the application is made by a plaintiff.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—That order only extended the case to a plaintiff, showing that before that time such an application could be made by a defendant.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—We are willing to do anything which the V. C. may wish; but our objection here is, that if we make the order it might possibly be considered that we have any doubt of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, and therefore of the jurisdiction of the V. C. I have always understood the appointment of a guardian in such a case was cursus curiæ as to a defendant applying, and was, by the order Mr. Cairns has been so good as to refer us to, extended to an application of a plaintiff.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Ex parte BALL AND OTHERS, re BYROM.

Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, sect. 169—Whether colliers' drawers are within 169th section.

On the bankruptcy of occupiers of a colliery, it was Held, affirming the decision of the Commissioner, that the drawers in the mine, being employed by the colliers and not by the occupiers, could not prove under the 169th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, against the bankrupt's estate, for the wages due to them at the time of the bankruptcy.

This was an appeal by the petitioners, Ball, Eckersley, and Hurst, from the decision of Mr. Commissioner Skirrow, disallowing their claim to prove for wages alleged to be due to them from the bankrupts, who worked the coal mines in which they were employed. The question was, whether the petitioners, who acted in the capacity of "drawers," were the labourers or workmen of the bankrupts, within the terms of the 169th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, and as such entitled to claim payment of their wages to the extent of 40*s.* under the provisions of that section. It is as follows:—

"That when any bankrupt shall have been indebted at the time of the issuing of the fiat, or filing of the petition for adjudication of bankruptcy, to any labourer or workman of such bankrupt in respect of the wages or labour of such labourer or workman, it shall be lawful for the court, upon proof thereof, to order so much as shall be so due, not exceeding 40*s.* to be paid to such labourer or workman out of the estate of such bankrupt; and such labourer or workman shall be at liberty to prove for any sum exceeding such amount."

The petitioners stated, that at the time of the adjudication they were labourers and workmen employed and working for and by the bankrupts in getting coal from mines in their occupation, and worked by them for the purposes of their trade and business; and at the time of the adjudication there was owing to Ball 30*s.*, to Eckersley 81*s.*, and to Hurst 40*s.*; that at the same time there was owing to seventy-five other persons, labourers and workmen similarly employed, a sum of 150*l.* and upwards for wages, for the most part in small sums, varying from 30*s.* to 50*s.* each; that the claims of the petitioners and of the seventy-five other persons were duly proved under the bankruptcy, and the proofs of their claims were duly presented at a meeting of 24th Dec. 1852; that the assignees objected to the proofs, on the ground that the petitioners and the seventy-five were not employed by the bankrupts, but were employed by and were labourers and workmen of the colliers working at the mines in the occupation of the bankrupts, and that the colliers were the persons bound to pay the petitioners and the seventy-five; that Mr. Commissioner Skirrow decided in favour of the objection, and the claim of proofs was disallowed. The petition prayed that the decision of the Commissioner might be annulled, and that the proofs might be allowed.

Mr. Taylor, a partner of Mr. Brown, deposed, that he was in the habit of employing a large number of colliers; that the partners let off work to the colliers at the rate of so much per score of baskets, counting twenty-four to the score, and that the colliers employed the drawers; that the colliers paid the drawers, but he did not recollect entering the names of drawers in his books; the colliers had power to discharge the drawers; never recollected having paid a drawer engaged by a collier for work done for him; did not even know the terms of the engagement made by the colliers with the drawers; the partners employed the colliers, and the colliers employed the drawers; the colliers were our servants; if I saw a drawer destroying or injuring property of the firm, I should turn him off.

John Houghton, the underground manager of the colliery, deposed: all the men and lads working under ground were under my control; the men so employed are colliers and drawers; the amount paid for work done is paid to the colliers, and they pay to the drawers as they agree among themselves; I consider that both colliers and drawers are my servants; I can discharge either colliers or drawers when I think they behave improperly; I tell the colliers and the drawers what work they are to do; I sometimes hire drawers myself; I keep them at labourers' work until I know of a collier who wants one to do the drawing; when I hire a collier he usually has a drawer; when I hire a collier I always ask him who is his drawer; the work when colliers and drawers are employed together in all cases is paid for according to the amount actually done by both of them; the whole of the wages is paid to the collier; the collier divides with him as they have agreed; in all other respects except this division of payment the collier and drawer are the same to me; I treat them all alike as my servants, and they all behave to me as my servants; it would make no difference in this respect if, instead of paying the collier the whole sum earned, a part was paid to the collier and a part to the drawer; it makes no difference to the master how division is made; they are all alike his servants; I never interfere between the collier and drawer as to the wages; when a collier has not a drawer I sometimes find him a lad who has worked as a labourer for me; for the moment a drawer goes to the colliery I have nothing to do with paying his wages; a collier could discharge his drawer, but if I thought he was discharging him without just cause I would not allow him to do so; if he persisted I should discharge the collier himself; sometimes I have ordered a drawer to leave his collier and mend a road, but I have paid the collier for the drawer's time; when a collier comes and has not a drawer, sometimes I have refused to employ him, and sometimes I have engaged him and sent a drawer to him; I leave them to make their own arrangements; there are printed rules posted about the collieries to regulate the mode in which to work, the using of lamps, and other matters to be done, and all persons are to observe them; if a drawer broke these rules I should consider I had power to discharge him.

Rogers, for the appellants, contended that although the drawers were to a certain extent under the control of the colliers, they were the workmen and labourers of the occupiers of the mine, and therefore entitled in such capacity to prove for the full amount of the wages not exceeding forty shillings due to them.

J. V. Prior, in support of the judgment of the Commissioner.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—It is difficult to avoid wishing to decide in favour of the petitioners if it were possible to do so; but I have not been able to convince myself that the decision of the learned Commissioner is erroneous. I think there was not such a contract between the bankrupts and the drawers as, on the bankruptcy of the former, could bring the case of the latter within the section in question of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act. The opinion of Sir John Paterson, whom we have consulted on the legal point, and which, coming from such a man, is very weighty, is, that the drawers have no right of action against the bankrupts. My learned brother thinks with the Commissioner as to the law and equity of the case, and therefore the judgment would stand even if I dissented, which I do not. The petition must be dismissed.

Lord Justice TURNER.—This question depends entirely upon whether the bankrupts were indebted to the drawers. I think they were not. It appears from the evidence before us (which is the same as was before the Commissioner) that when the colliers were hired they brought the drawers with them, and that they were paid by the colliers out of their earnings, in accordance with an agreement entered into between the colliers and the manager of the mines, independently of the drawers. It appears also, that if the manager withdrew the drawers from the colliers he paid the colliers. The colliers could discharge the drawers; but neither the bankrupts nor the manager had that power, and they could only discharge the collier if he acted unjustly. Both the colliers and the drawers might be discharged by the manager for transgressing the rules of the mines. Under these circumstances, I am satisfied—with the able assistance which has before been referred to—that no action at law would be possible by the drawers against the bankrupts. It has been said that there is an equity on the part of the drawers to be paid out of the wages of the colliers; but, assuming that to be the case, it would not alter the position of the drawers, or enable them to stop the money of the colliers in the hands of the bankrupts. I agree, therefore, that the petition must be dismissed. As the Commissioner recommended that the point should be brought here, it seems right that the costs should be paid out of the estate.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—It is highly proper that the whole costs of both sides of this appeal should be paid out of the estate.

MELLERS v. THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE.

Lease of coal mines, construction of—Covenants—Demurrer.

The construction of a lease is a question which may be properly determined on demurrer, and as conveniently as in any other mode, and at any other stage of the cause.

A lease for a term of coal mines contained a covenant by the lessee to dig and excavate every year during the term two acres of one kind of coal and two acres of another kind, both comprised in the lease, or to pay for such respective quantities every year after the rates therein-mentioned, whether the same could be got or not; and if he could not sell the whole of the one kind of coal, he was to be at liberty to get so much of the other as would make up the yearly rent reserved at the rates specified; and if the coal should all be worked out before the expiration of the term, he might determine the lease by notice. It was not alleged that the coal was worked out at the end of the lease, but it was alleged that the lessee had paid too much; and he filed a bill to be recouped the amount so overpaid, and to set aside a mortgage he had given for the balance returned by himself (as stipulated by the lease) as due. A demurrer to the bill was allowed.

This case came on upon demurrer to the plaintiffs' bill for want of equity. The plaintiffs are the legal personal representatives of Mr. John Mellers, a lessee of coal mines belonging to the Duke of Devonshire and Lady Carnarvon; and the object of the bill was to recover a sum of money alleged to be overpaid to the Duke, and to set aside a mortgage given by Mr. Mellers to the Duke for the balance so alleged to be overpaid. It appeared that on Sept. 26, 1825, the lease in question was granted to Mr. Mellers for a term of twenty-one years, to commence from June 25 then last, at a certain rent, defendant depending upon the quantity of coal which might be got, but absolutely subject to a proviso for cesser of the lease, on giving notice in the circumstances therein mentioned. The lease contained a covenant in these words, "that he, the said John Miller, his executors, administrators, and assigns, would in each and every year during the said term thereby granted, dig and excavate, or cause to be dug and excavated within the said colliery thereby demised, not less than two acres of Blackwell hard coal, and two acres of Dunshill coal, or would pay for such respective quantities in each and every year after the rates aforesaid, whether the same could be got or not." The rates alluded to were 120*l.* an acre for the Blackwell or hard coal, and 60*l.* an acre for the Dunshill or soft coal. Another covenant was in these words, "that if the said John Mellers, his executors, administrators, and assigns, could not sell the whole of the Blackwell hard coal hereinbefore covenanted to be gotten, he or they shall be at liberty to get so much more of the Dunshill coal as would make up the said yearly rent of 860*l.*, after the rates of 120*l.* an acre for the hard coal, and 60*l.* an acre for the soft coal." There was also a provision that if the lessee should work out all the coal before the expiration of the term, he might determine the lease upon giving notice of his intention so to do. Under this state of things the lessee continued to work the coal mines down to the end of the lease, without giving any notice of cesser as provided. The bill was filed on 22nd June, 1852, after the expiration of the lease, and it alleged that Mr. Mellers had not got as much coal as he ought to have got, and that he paid a sum much beyond what he ought to have paid by way of rent. In 1827, by his own accounts, which he had undertaken to make out yearly, he returned himself as above balance, and having adjoining property, he gave security to the Duke for the balance then due and unpaid. The bill now alleged that this was a mistake, and the rent ought to be in proportion to the coal obtained, and sought to recover the sums alleged to be overpaid, and to set aside the mortgage. To this bill two demurrers were put in, one by the Duke, the other by Lady Carnarvon and her trustees.

R. Palmer and Currie, for the first demurrer.

Lloyd and Townsend, for the second demurrer.

Rompell and Busk, in support of the bill.

The case of Morris v. Smith, 3 Dougl. 279, and other cases were cited.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I am of opinion that these demurrers must be allowed. The question upon which I propose to determine these demurrers, is simply a question of the construction of the lease, without considering any other questions at all: and that question, it is manifest, may not only be properly determined on demurrer, but is as convenient a time and mode of determining it as any other; in fact, it is the right time for determining a question of that description. Now it is admitted on all sides, that the obligations which persons have entered into must be carried into effect; that they must be bound by the obligations which they have entered into. But then it is argued on behalf of the plaintiff, that in fact the real construction of the lease is, that it was a demise of a certain quantity of coal, and a payment only in respect of coal which should be gotten, and that the demise was made in a mistake of the amount of coal; and that therefore it is a case in which the court will relieve; and that the fact could not be discovered until after the determination of the lease. Now I do not concur in this view of the case. That the lease was granted in ignorance of the amount of coal which might be gotten under it is no doubt true; but that is the case in every instance of a mining lease. It is a sort of speculation in which the lessor and lessee are equally ignorant of the amount of coal which may be gotten under it, and provide for those circumstances. Now I am of opinion, therefore, that there is no question of mistake, but that you must look exactly at the terms of the lease that was granted. It is not, as I read the lease, a lease which only compels, or only induces, the plaintiff to covenant to pay for the amount of coal which he shall get, but expressly covenants that he shall pay for coal for a certain amount, whether he gets the coal or not; and the clause to which I refer for that purpose is this:—a covenant "that he the said John Mellers, &c. will in each and every year during the term hereby granted dig and excavate within the colliery hereby demised not less than two acres of Blackwell hard coal, and two acres of Dunshill coal, or will pay for such respective quantities in each and every year after the rates aforesaid, whether the same could be got or not." It is manifest that there is no covenant to compel them to work two acres of hard coal, or two acres of Dunshill coal; and that if an action had been brought for breach of the covenant because they had not worked two acres of Blackwell coal, or two acres of Dunshill coal, affirming it had been possible to do so, it would have been sufficiently answered by saying that the plaintiff had paid after the rates of that coal in the latter branch of the alternative of the covenant, whether he worked it or not; and he might, if he thought fit, avoid working it altogether. There is no covenant in this lease that he shall work the coal; but there is a covenant that he shall pay for that amount of coal whether he works it or not; and if that be so, it is not necessary to look any further in the lease to see whether he really has worked it, or could have worked it, or not: there is an express covenant that he shall pay for this whether he works the coal or not. But this is made clearer by another covenant, which seems to anticipate that it is possible that the amount of the Blackwell coal covenanted to be demised may not be possible to be gotten; for though the word is a singular one, the words of the covenant are these: "If the said John Mellers, &c. cannot sell the whole of the Blackwell hard coal hereinbefore covenanted to be gotten, he or they shall be at liberty to get so much more of the Dunshill coal as will make up the said yearly rent of 860*l.* after the rates of 120*l.* an acre for the hard coal and 60*l.* an acre for the soft coal as aforesaid." It is manifest that if he could not get the coal he could not sell it, and if he could not sell it this clause would not arise. I do not see, I admit, the advantage of giving him this express clause, to be at liberty to get so much more of the Dunshill coal; for, as I read the lease, he was already at liberty to get as much as he pleased of that coal, provided he paid for it at the rate of 60*l.* per acre. Then the next clause which continues makes the matter also perfectly clear; for it provides for the case, and the only case, in which the lease is to cease—which is, that in which the amount of coal intended to be demised should be exhausted before the expiration of the term. It is not asserted in the bill that the coal was exhausted before the expiration of the term; therefore the lease was to continue; and the covenant in the lease was, that the lessee was to pay at the rate of 360*l.* a year whether he got the coal or not. The result is that it appears to me perfectly clear and distinct that this is a case in which the lessee is bound by that covenant to pay that amount. Being bound to pay that amount, he does not allege that he has paid more than that amount of acres in the course of the year, and therefore no question can arise as to the amount to be repaid. This does not appear to me to be a case at all resembling the case of Morris v. Smith. The case of Morris v. Smith was a case of an actual covenant to work a mine for the purpose of giving the benefit to the lessor arising from the amount of the coal which might be gotten, whereby the lessee says,—"I will give you all the benefit, just as if I had had the benefit of the coal; but do not compel me to work the lease in a manner which is perfectly ruinous to me, because I have entered into a covenant for that purpose." But this is not a case of that description; this is not a case, as I have already stated, in which there is a positive covenant to work the coal; but, on the contrary, it is at the option of the lessee to work it or not, provided he pays. But here it is to be observed, that this is not a question whether, before the expiration of the lease, the lessee could, on the principle of Morris v. Smith, have come and said:—"The expense of working this mine is so great that I am willing to pay the total amount which might be got by the working according to this lease, but I require not to be compelled to work it." But he waits until after the expiration of the lease; he runs the chance of the amount of the coal which he may get during every year of the term; and then at the end of the term he says:—"This has turned out differently from what I expected, and therefore I ask now to be recouped." It might as well be said that the Duke of Devonshire, on the other hand, might have said:—"This mine has become more profitable than I expected, and the working has been much more easy than I expected, and therefore you must give me something which you would have given me, if I had known how easy the working would have been, and how profitable the result of it." It is obvious to me that both parties have precluded themselves from entertaining any question of that description: and that they entered into a covenant which provided how much was to be paid, and also took the chance whether the lease should be profitable or not. The result is, that the demurrer will be allowed in both cases in the usual way.

Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

Course with respect to applications for appointment of receiver and of a like nature.

The plaintiffs had presented a petition praying a reference to the Master to appoint a fit person to be appointed receiver in the cause.

Lloyd, for the petitioners, now asked for an order appointing a particular person receiver without reference, on affidavits of the fitness of the party proposed.

Rogers objected that the court would not make this order on this petition, which only prayed a reference, and at all events that the other parties should have an opportunity of proposing a party to receive.

V. C. KINDERSLEY'S COURT.

The Master of the Rolls observed that he should not make any order on any application of this or the like nature, but a reference to the Master, but that he should dispose of them himself either at chambers, or, if there was any contest between the parties, upon argument in court upon proper materials. The present petition might stand over, to enable the parties for whom Mr. Rogers appeared to propose any person as receiver, and to file affidavits in support.

Clarke applied to the court in this case, on behalf of the defendant, for leave to enter an appearance, with a view to move to discharge the order obtained in this case, as reported supra, p. 248. The order being irregular, an appearance could not be entered without waiving the irregularity; hence the application to the court. The case of Wellesley v. Wellesley was not an authority for the order.

The Master of the Rolls said the order made by him was quite irregular, and must have been made by him through inadvertence. The case of Wellesley v. Wellesley was no authority. He would not, however, add to the irregularity, by making another irregular order.

Feb. 22.—E. Clarke now applied to the court again, stating that he had looked into the cases, which were conflicting; but he proposed this course, viz. to move to discharge the irregular order, and the other side could then take the objection that no appearance had been entered, by the defendant, and the whole case might then be disposed of.

The Master of the Rolls did not, of course, advise that or any other course to be adopted; but he seemed to assent to the view taken by counsel.

Terrell, on the same day and soon after, applied to the court for leave to amend the bill in this same case; but

The Master of the Rolls refused the application, on the ground that it was intended to move to discharge the order for irregularity, and he would not give leave to amend the bill for the filing of which an irregular order had been obtained.

Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 55—Application under sect. 55, for an order for sale of real estate.

Roupell (T. C. Simpson with him) moved, under the 55th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, for an order for the sale of the real estate of the testatrix in the cause, in which the plaintiffs and other parties in the suit (some of whom were infants) were interested. The will of the testatrix (made under an absolute power of appointment contained in a settlement dated in 1832) had directed a sale of the property, in the events which had happened.

The suit was one for the administration of the estate of the testatrix; and, from the facts stated upon the application for the order, it appeared that there was a contest in the suit between the parties interested in the property and the trustees of the settlement with respect to their management of the estate, and also amongst themselves.

The Master of the Rolls refused the application, observing that the 55th section was intended to apply to cases where, for the protection of the property, or for any other cause, it was necessary to come to the court for an order for a sale; but not to enable any party in a contested suit, upon such an application, to obtain a decision of the questions in the cause before the hearing; and he should discourage any such attempt.

V. C. KINDERSLEY'S COURT.

Penniall v. Roy.

Injunction—Jurisdiction—Restraining proceedings in a Scotch court—Breach of an undertaking.

A creditor who, instead of proving his debt under a fiat in bankruptcy in England, proceeds in the Court of Session in Scotland to establish such debt, and to attach property belonging to the bankrupt, which it was admitted was vested in the assignees under the bankruptcy in England as assets for distribution amongst all the creditors coming in under the bankruptcy, will be restrained from prosecuting such action in the Court of Session in Scotland.

An undertaking given by counsel in court is to be as scrupulously observed as if the terms of the undertaking were embodied in an order of the court.

This was a motion for an injunction in the terms hereafter mentioned. On the first coming on of the motion the defendant's counsel asked for time to answer the affidavits until the following seal, and gave an undertaking that no step should be taken by the defendant in the mean time.

The facts of the case, both as relates to the undertaking and on the merits, are fully stated in the Vice-Chancellor's judgment.

Anderson and Kemplay, for the motion.

Bacon and Giffard opposed it.

The principal cases cited in argument were Pym v. Wilson, 2 Phill. 653; Halford v. Gallow, 13 Sim. 44; Kennelly v. Earl Cassilis, 2 Swan. 313; Bushby v. Munday, 5 Medd. 297; McLaren v. Stainton, 20 L. T. Rep. 150; Attwood v. Banks, 2 Beav. 192; Harrison v. Gurney, 2 Jac. & W. 563; Frewin v. Lewis, 4 Myl. & Cr. 249.

JUDGMENT.

The Vice-Chancellor.—There are two motions before me. One is to commit Mr. Roy for a breach of an undertaking, which was entered into by his counsel upon the occasion of the other motion being attempted to be brought on, and it being ordered to stand over upon the terms of the undertaking. The second motion is one asking for an injunction to restrain Mr. Roy from continuing certain proceedings which have been taken by him in the Court of Session in Scotland against the assignees. Now the facts of the case, so far as they are necessary to be considered with reference to these questions, are these: an action was brought in the Court of Session in Scotland, in the year 1846, by Mr. Roy, against a Mr. Campbell, contending that Mr. Campbell was his debtor to the amount of upwards of 3,000*l.* in respect of certain transactions with regard to a bill of exchange. The particulars of the claim of Mr. Roy it is not necessary to enter into; it is sufficient to say that he claimed this 3,000*l.* and upwards from Mr. Campbell. Mr. Campbell had previously carried on business in England, and had become bankrupt in England, and a commission of bankruptcy was pending against him when the action was brought; but being an uncertificated bankrupt, of course the bankruptcy did not prevent the right of a creditor to sue Mr. Campbell. That action went on for a considerable time; proceedings were had; and that action is still pending. In the course of that action the plaintiff, Mr. Roy, was desirous, if possible, of getting the assignees to be made parties to the action, and therefore gave them notice that they might, what is called, suit themselves,—that is, intervene in the action as if they were parties to it, make themselves quasi parties defendants to that action. They declined to accept that offer, and accordingly, in the early part of December 1852, Mr. Roy commenced a separate action against the assignees; and the prayer of the summons in the court in Scotland was in effect this:—it asks a declaration of the Court of Session that in the event of Mr. Roy establishing his claim in his action against Campbell, that he, Campbell, was a debtor to Roy in respect of the transactions connected with this bill of exchange, then that Mr. Roy was entitled to receive a dividend from the estate of the bankrupt Campbell, equal to the dividend or dividends drawn or which he drawn by the other creditors of Campbell; and that the plaintiffs, Kirkland and Pennell, the assignees of Campbell, should be decerned and ordained to make payment to Roy the defendant, pursuer, as he is called in Scotland, of the sum of 3000*l.* and interest thereon, or of such other sum as shall be equal to the amount of the dividend or dividends drawn by the other creditors on their respective claims, and that in the meantime the assignees should consign or deposit in bank, or otherwise secure in such manner as the court should ordain, the sum of 3000*l.*, or such other sum as should be sufficient to meet the dividend; and that the defendants, the assignees, should be decreed to make payment to the pursuer of the costs of that action. That action being brought in Dec. 1852, a summons was executed, as it is called, or served with the proper summons in the nature of a subpœna, to bring him before the court on Dec. 17; therefore this action is constituted as between Mr. Roy and the assignees of Mr. Campbell. On Jan. 14, 1853, this bill is filed by the assignees praying an injunction—and praying nothing else—to restrain Mr. Roy, his mandatories and agents, from prosecuting the action against them, the assignees, in the Court of Session, or against the real estate of Campbell, or the rents thereof; and from continuing, or permitting to continue or remain in force, the arrestments laid on as in the said bill mentioned; and from laying any further or other arrestments upon the rents hereafter to become due from the tenants of the estate of Lockuell in the said bill also mentioned, or suing out execution or any other diligence or process against the real or personal estate of Campbell, the bankrupt. The arrestments there referred to are arrestments which every pursuer in an action is entitled to take, not merely for the purpose of compelling appearance, but for the purpose of providing a fund to answer the demand of the plaintiff, if he should succeed in establishing it; and the arrestments have the effect of laying a sort of interdict upon the real and personal estate of the defender. Any real or personal property in Scotland within the jurisdiction of the court may be arrested and is arrested by virtue of the arrestments, so that the owner of the property, the defender, cannot touch his own property, unless indeed by certain proceedings he gives security to answer the demand; and those arrestments were issued in the present case, and, as it appears, the particular arrestments had issued under a special Act of Parliament which had recently passed, and which gave a particular efficacy, and put particular terms and conditions upon those arrestments not necessary to be now noticed. But the effect of the arrestments here put is this—that they prevent the assignees, until they give security to answer the pursuer's demand in the action, from uplifting—that is, from receiving or getting in any portion of the real or personal estate vested in the assignees, as assignees, within the jurisdiction of the courts in Scotland. Now—this bill being filed on Jan. 14, 1853, asking for this injunction—on Jan. 17, which was a Monday, notice of motion was served for an injunction in the terms of the prayer of the bill, which motion would have come on to be heard on the 20th Jan. in the ordinary course. That was a seal day. On that day the counsel for the plaintiffs in the suit in equity moved the motion; the counsel for the defendants stated that there had not been time to meet the case stated—and stated with perfect justice and reason. Here is Mr. Roy, who lives at Chester, who was not served until the 17th; he wrote immediately on the 18th to his solicitor in London, Mr. Milne, telling him that he really knew nothing about the matter, but that he had written off at once to Mr. Ross, the Writer to the Signet who acted as his agent and mandatory in Scotland, and urging Mr. Milne to get him time to meet the case. It was a clear case in which there ought to be time, provided the giving of time did not prejudice either party; and that was the view which the counsel on all sides took of it. Accordingly, when the motion was thus attempted to be moved, and when the suggestion was made that the defendant really had not had time to meet the case and ought to have time, that suggestion was yielded to on the terms of an undertaking, which was readily given in substance, though there seems to have been a little discussion whether it meant "to do nothing" in the Scotch sense, or to do nothing in the English sense, or whether the two senses were the same; but still it was settled that that undertaking should be given; and accordingly the undertaking which was given was this—that the motion was to stand over until the next seal, and nothing was to be done in the mean time. Of course, whatever had been done up to that time was not to be affected by this undertaking; but whatever had not been done was to remain undone, to remain in statu quo. And I am not only of course perfectly satisfied that the undertaking was given in good faith; but Mr. Roy himself (who seems, though not to have been present as I really thought he was from the accurate view which he had got of the nature of the undertaking,) was so completely informed by Mr. Milne, his solicitor, who was present, of what took place, that Mr. Roy immediately, most properly, on that same day wrote down to Mr. Ross, the Scotch agent, telling him what the undertaking was, urging him that the summons should not be called; pointed that out particularly to him as a thing that was not to be done,—the summons not to be called in the to be done,—the summons not to be called in the action in Scotland, which I shall advert to presently, and saying that things must come to a dead stand,—"Be very careful about this, nothing must be done." Nothing could be more right or proper than the view and conduct taken and adopted by Mr. Milne, the solicitor of Mr. Roy, or by Mr. Roy himself in that matter. Now it appears that according to the course of proceedings in Scotland, and having regard to the arrestments which had issued arresting the real and personal estate of the assignees in Scotland, unless a certain proceeding was taken in the Scotch Court of what is called "calling the action," or calling the summons, on the 27th Jan.—unless it was done on that day the arrestments would fall to the ground, by virtue of the Act of Parliament under which the arrestments on this particular case were issued. It is stated to me, and it appears to be the case, that the proceedings taken for the purpose of getting an action called are these: that if the action is to be called on the 27th Jan., a certain number of days before that call-day the Writer to the Signet—call him the solicitor for the plaintiff,—who wishes to have the action called, leaves with an officer of the court, a certain clerk—I understand there are five of them, five seats of these clerks—leaves with one of these clerks, selecting which he pleases, a notice, which is a direction to him to call the summons or action on the following call-day; that the usual interval of time before the call-day at which this notice to the clerk is usually given is to be two clear days—that is, from the Monday to the Thursday,—the Monday being the day on which the notice is usually left with the clerk, and the following Thursday being the call-day. But there is nothing of course to prevent a party, if he pleases, from leaving his notice with the clerk a week before, or perhaps any time before, except the danger that the clerk might forget it, if it were left too long before the call-day—there is nothing to prevent his leaving it at any time before the call-day, provided he leaves it in time, that is, two clear days, according to the practice of the court in that respect. I should also mention, that it appears that by the practice of the Court of Session, unless the action be called, on the one hand the arrestments will fall, and if the action be called on the call-day, and no appearance be entered, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment or decree. It is in the nature, I presume, of a decree by default—the defendant is considered as making default. Now, it appears in this case, that although Monday, 24th Jan.

would have been early enough to have left the notice with the clerk for the call on the 27th day, in fact the notice had been left on the 20th, that is, the day-week preceding the call-day, being itself a call-day. The notice was left on that call-day of the 20th, to be called on the call-day of the 27th—that is, it had been left with the clerk on the very day on which the undertaking was given here, and, of course, before notice of that undertaking could possibly have reached Mr. Ross in Scotland, for it reached Mr. Ross in Edinburgh—it might perhaps have reached him by telegraph earlier, but no complaint is made, or could be justly made, that it did not reach him until the 21st. On the 21st, then, Mr. Ross is informed, by the letter of Mr. Roy, of all that had taken place in this court; and he was informed particularly, that one of the things he must take especial care not to allow to be done, was the calling of the summons on the 27th, or on any other day. Mr. Roy knew perfectly well that the summons would be called unless he informed Mr. Ross that it must not be called. Now the view which Mr. Ross took of the matter was this: It is excessively lucky, he says, extremely lucky, that I had left the notice with the clerk yesterday, because now, by doing nothing, the summons will necessarily be called on the 27th; the clerk, of course, will perform his duty, which is, the notice having been left with him for the next call-day, he will make the call on that day; it is extremely fortunate, considering that I am put upon the terms of doing nothing, that I have done this act on the 20th. He accordingly writes to that effect, on the 22nd, to Mr. Roy, in London, saying, How very lucky it is, how very fortunate I had done this act the day before I had got the notice—there, it is done, and now we shall have the call go on, and although you are under an undertaking that nothing shall be done, something will be done by your doing nothing. That is the effect of it. Now, it appears to me, and it seems to be admitted, that if the not calling the action on the 27th would have been unattended with any inconvenience or mischief to the plaintiff in the action, it was quite right that this call should have been stopped—that the notice should have been instantly given to the clerk, "Although I gave you notice on the 20th to make a call on the 27th, please to withhold your hand, and do not make it. I withdraw the notice." In that respect the clerk acts entirely under the control and direction of the person giving the notice. If the person giving the notice chooses to withdraw it at any time before the call is made, he may withdraw it; and beyond all question, if there had been no mischief resulting from not making the call on the 27th, it would have been the bounden duty of Mr. Ross, and it was the bounden duty of Mr. Roy, acting by the agency of Mr. Ross, to have taken the step necessary to prevent the call being made on the 27th; and if I were to yield to the argument that the doing nothing was really obeying, I will not say the order of the court, but the undertaking, which is to be observed as religiously and as strictly as the order,—if I were to yield to the suggestion that, because the undertaking was that nothing should be done, the allowing this call to be made on the 27th, by virtue of the notice given on the previous call-day, was a compliance with that undertaking,—I should yield to a suggestion which would be nullifying the meaning, the real honest meaning of such an undertaking, or the meaning of such an injunction, if it had been put in the form of an injunction, and not an undertaking. Suppose it had been thus: that an attachment had been issued against a party unknown to the party, and had been lodged in the hands of the sheriff, to be executed unknown to the individual against whom it was issued, and a certain motion was pending in this court, and there was an undertaking that nothing should be done by the party who had issued the attachment,—in that case would it be no breach of that undertaking for the party to say: "I will let the sheriff go on and execute the attachment. Luckily, I lodged the attachment with him yesterday; and therefore, though I am under an undertaking that nothing shall be done—although I can by a single word of mine prevent any thing being done—still, I have been so lucky as to have lodged the attachment yesterday, the day before I gave the undertaking, or before the party got notice of it, and I will allow it to be executed"?—could the court ever allow itself to be baffled in such a way as that, by allowing a party to say: "Although I have done an act which directs a person acting under my directions to do a thing; although I have given an undertaking that nothing should be done; because I am quiescent, I am not guilty of a breach of the undertaking"? But then it is said, with great truth, that Mr. Ross was in an awkward predicament. That is true, no doubt; he might instantly have told the clerk not to let the call be made; but he felt this: "If the call is not made on the 27th, our arrestment will drop to the ground, and we shall be damnified." No doubt he was in a strait there—I can quite enter into his feeling on the subject; but then, what should he have done? He should have done that which he did, except that he should have done it a day earlier. He received the notice on the 21st; he should on the 21st have written up to Mr. Roy to say,—"Only see what the effect of this is; our arrestment will drop to the ground if this call is not made. You never thought of this when the undertaking was given; you should have been prepared for that. Instantly apply to the court to get the matter set right, or make an application to the parties to set this right." He should have written on the very day. I do not find much fault with him for not writing on the very day; but the next day he wrote, and he does tell Mr. Roy how lucky it was the notice had been given to the clerk, because otherwise, if it had not, the arrestments would drop by reason of the summons not being called. So that Mr. Roy is well informed on the 22nd or 23rd—he might have received a letter on the 21st or the 22nd—but at all events on the 23rd Mr. Roy is informed of the position of things; that he has given an undertaking which I say Mr. Roy ought to have felt, and Mr. Ross ought to have felt, would have been broken in substance in fair and honest meaning, by allowing the call to be made. He should immediately have communicated to the parties, or applied to this court to vary or modify the undertaking in such a way as to prevent that mischief, and I have no doubt that this court would have done it. If it had been asked that the motion might stand over on the 20th, to give Mr. Roy time to meet the application—if it had been suggested, There has been a notice left with the clerk of the Court of Session in Scotland this very day, under which notice he will proceed to call this action on the 27th; surely you do not mean that that is to be done,—I am quite sure the counsel would have said, "We do not mean it to be done, except for this: we are told that if it is not done mischief will ensue; that is, the arrestments will drop." The thing would have been taken into consideration by the court there, and the court would have taken such steps as would prevent the arrestments from dropping, or put the parties under some terms or other which would have preserved to each other all the benefit of the status quo. I am of opinion that Mr. Ross quite erred in his view of the matter, and that Mr. Roy was unfortunately misled by Mr. Ross's view. Now I am far from attributing to Mr. Roy an intention to violate the undertaking. He was misled in the matter by Mr. Ross's view; and I am not attributing to Mr. Roy any personal intention of being guilty of a contempt of the court, or of a violation of his counsel's undertaking at all. I am persuaded he was not; but he considered, according to the view which Mr. Ross had put into his head, that this was a right and fair view of the case. I think he was entirely wrong in the matter. I think he has been clearly guilty of a breach of the undertaking, and I should have expressed this opinion as soon as I had heard that motion, except that, inasmuch as a motion to commit is a motion merely made for the purpose of getting right done, and as I could not quite see my way as to what ought to be done until I had heard the motion for the injunction, I abstained from expressing the opinion I have now expressed until I had heard that motion. The question now comes, what ought to be done with respect to the breach of the undertaking, what ought to be done with reference to this call, and what ought to be done with reference to the arrestment. But then I must take that in conjunction with the question what ought to be done with reference to the injunction that is asked. Not having called for a reply is a sufficient intimation of my opinion that injunction ought to be granted, and therefore I proceed to state the grounds on which I consider the injunction ought to be granted. There is a case in which a trader carrying on business in England, in London, is in respect of that trade made a bankrupt in England. Under the proceedings in bankruptcy assignees and an official assignee in England are appointed, and all the property of the bankrupt, real and personal, is vested in those English assignees to be distributed under the direction of the Court of Bankruptcy among all the creditors who may think fit to come in and prove debts, assuming that they have debts which they can prove; and every person, be he whom he may, who was an actual creditor of the bankrupt at the time of the bankruptcy, may come in and establish and prove his debt under that bankruptcy, and, if he does so, will receive a dividend rateably with the other creditors out of all the assets of the bankrupt. Among other property which the bankrupt was entitled to, it appears that he was what we should call a remainderman, that he had an estate in remainder in a real estate in Scotland, called the "Lochnell Estate." His remainder fell into possession, or, to use the language of the Scotch courts, the succession opened to him, I think in May 1846, and that estate was also vested in the assignees; and it is not disputed on the part of Mr. Roy, or by his counsel. On the contrary, their whole argument, and the whole of their defence, and the whole of the proceedings in their action in Scotland, assume that the Lochnell estate and all the other property of the bankrupt is property, and duly vested in the assignees, for fair and equal division among all the other creditors. Mr. Roy says that he is a creditor of Mr. Campbell, the bankrupt; but his debt is a debt which he thinks requires some proceedings to be taken in Scotland against Mr. Campbell for the purpose of establishing it. If Mr. Campbell, the bankrupt, were resident in this country, doubtless the action would be brought against Mr. Campbell in this country, because he would be amenable only to the jurisdiction here; and I presume the reason why the action (I am speaking now of the action of 1846) was brought against Mr. Campbell in the Court of Session in Scotland was that Mr. Campbell is a Scotchman, resident in Scotland, and subject to the jurisdiction of that court, and therefore very properly brought there. Now I do not know whether, by the Scotch law, the establishment of a debt in an action against the bankrupt himself would be sufficient to establish that debt against assignees; I do not know how that is by the Scotch law. If it be so it seems strange; because it might be that there might be collision between the alleged creditor and the bankrupt, so that in an action against the bankrupt, the creditor would have no difficulty in establishing the debt against the bankrupt; and therefore I can hardly suppose that, as a mere matter of course, a judgment or decree in an action against Mr. Campbell would necessarily establish the debt against the assignees. But it was probably with that view that the plaintiff in the action, Mr. Roy, gave a notice or summons, whatever the nature of the proceedings be, to the assignees, calling on them to sist themselves in that action, in order that there might be a decree binding them in that action, that if the debt were established as a debt against Mr. Campbell, it might also be established as a debt against the assignees as assignees, or against the estate of Mr. Campbell in the hands of the assignees. That not being done, and the other action being brought in December last against the assignees, I do not know whether, as a mere matter of course, if the plaintiff could recover at all, or get any decree in the action against the assignees; it would follow as a matter of course that he could get a decree in the action against the bankrupt. I should rather infer that the plaintiff in those actions considers that it would, because what he prays by the summons and condescendence in the second action is this,—he asks the Court of Session to declare that if he succeeds in the action against Mr. Campbell, then, whatever is the amount which is determined in that action to be the amount of the debt due to him, he may be considered as a creditor entitled to a dividend on that amount as against the estate. It may be, for aught I know, that by the Scotch law,—although the mere action against Mr. Campbell alone would not entitle the parties to treat the assignees as bound by it,—that having given them the summons by which they might have sisted themselves, if they pleased, as defenders in that action; that may, for aught I know, according to the Scotch law, make the final decree in the action against Mr. Campbell binding against the assignees. But however it be, the effect of the action which is brought against the assignees is simply this, that it is a creditor of the bankrupt,—who, if he be a creditor, might if he pleased come in and establish his debt in the bankruptcy, and receive what he says is all that he ever wishes or attempts to receive, or thinks himself entitled to receive, a dividend rateably with other creditors out of the general assets, including the Lochnell estate. Such a creditor, I say, instead of taking that course, instead of coming in, goes to the Court of Session in Scotland, and asks that Court, when once he has determined to be a creditor, itself to take a part in the administration of the bankrupt's assets, by first declaring that he is entitled to stand as a creditor pari passu with the others, and by decreeing the assignees actually to make the payment to him by virtue of that decree of a dividend pari passu with the other creditors, who are to be paid under the proceedings in bankruptcy. Now, from the outset I have felt and have suggested whether, according to the law of Scotland, such an action was maintainable. Judicially I can know nothing about it. Perhaps I am bound judicially to assume that the law of Scotland is a law which, to a great extent,—to as great an extent as the law of England—proceeds according to the dictates of common sense and common reason. Perhaps I ought to assume so much; but I cannot assume that, according to the law of Scotland, this action would not be successful. I cannot assume in favour of Mr. Roy that the action would not be successful. Mr. Roy, in bringing the action, and praying as he does pray in the prayer of this summons and condescendence, must be taken at least to assume and assert that he will and may, that he has a right to succeed in the action, and to get the decree which he asks the Court of Session to give him. Now it has been felt by the learned counsel for Mr. Roy in this case that it did seem very monstrous when you come to work out the result of the success of that action; so monstrous would be the result, that the learned counsel is loth to press upon me this view of this action, that what is here prayed is to be treated merely as the verbiage of counsel and draftsman; but that we are not to consider this as an action asking the Court of Session to decree that the assignees shall make any payment at all. That is very singular, considering that they ask that the assignees should pay the costs of the action; but it is to be taken, they say, merely as an action asking that court to do what is almost a matter of course if there is a debt, and which any court would say ought to be done, that if there be a debt, it is to be at liberty so as to ascertain that that debt the bankruptcy. Now, whether such an action,—an action of simple declaration to the effect that is prayed by the summons in the Court of Session in the action against the mortgagee, that if a debt should be established as against Mr. Campbell in the action against him, the Court of Session would decree in this action that the mortgagee, that establishing his debt should be at liberty to go in and establish his debt under the bankruptcy, and get a dividend rateably with the other creditors,—whether such an action would lie, again I am obliged to say I do not know. I do not judicially know; I do not see what could be the possible use of it. If the Court of Session were to make a decree ten thousand times over that A. was entitled to go in and prove a debt under an English bankruptcy, the Court of Bankruptcy in England could take no notice of that. It has been said by the learned counsel for Mr. Roy very truly that if I were to make an order—if the Lord Chancellor were to make an order in the Court of Chancery in England, declaring the right to go in and prove, or to do anything which should appear to have any control over the proceedings in the Court of Bankruptcy, the Court of Bankruptcy could not be bound by it. Not only the commissioners would not be bound by it, whatever respect they might feel for the decree of the Lord Chancellor; but the assignees would not be bound by it, unless you had some terms to bind them; and even if you could bind them, you could not bind the creditors who had proved. And therefore I do not see, even supposing it to be assumed that an action of declaration in Scotland, such as here suggested is the view to be taken of this action—if such an action would lie, I do see the use of it. Cui bono? What would be the result of such a declaration? I quite see that if an action would lie by which the plaintiff could get a declaration of his right to be paid, and also the rest of what is asked by this summons in the Court of Session in Scotland, a decree that the assignees shall actually make the payment, and that the Lochnell estate shall, if necessary, be a caution or security, or means of working out the payment—I can quite understand that to be something effective. Now then, let us follow out the result of this action, supposing it succeeds. I suppose, in accordance with the prayer of this summons, the decree is made in the Court of Session, binding of course on the assignees—it is said not in the least binding on them personally, not affecting their personal liability, not at all affecting their own personal or real estate in Scotland, which it is not pretended this is meant to affect; but the decree against them ordering that they as assignees, and only in the character of assignees, shall, when a dividend is declared by the Court of Bankruptcy in England declaring a dividend of so much in the pound, say 5s., is to be paid to all the creditors who have proved debts under the bankruptcy—that they the assignees qua assignees, not out of their own assets, that is, of course it must mean out of their assets to be administered in bankruptcy, are to pay to Mr. Roy a similar dividend of 5s. in the pound, on the debt which he shall have established. Now what is the Court of Bankruptcy to do with that, supposing such a decree made? The assignees would say to the Court of Bankruptcy—"Here we find that we have got new assets to take, which will give just 5s. in the pound to all the creditors who have proved. If you go and make a dividend of 5s. in the pound, you will exhaust all that, and here the Court of Session in Scotland has made a decree binding upon us, which we are bound to obey, by which, if we do not pay 5s. in the pound to Mr. Roy, we shall be guilty of disobedience of the decree of that court. Surely we ought to have 5s. in the pound to make that payment out of the assets, for it is only meant against us out of the assets of the bankrupt." Surely the commissioners would say "Really, gentlemen, we know nothing about the Court of Session in Scotland; we are not bound by it—you should carry that to the House of Lords; it is intolerable, it is absurd, you cannot do it." Well, but then it is said, supposing you cannot touch the assets in England, you have got the Scotch assets, you have got the estate of Lochnell,—then the Court of Session has power over these assets. To be sure it has; but then it is admitted by the whole frame of the record in the Court of Session that there are assets which are to be administered in the bankruptcy, and it is out of this very Lochnell estate, combined with the other assets, that Mr. Roy by his argument here insists that he is entitled to be paid. But what he does by his proceeding in Scotland is this: the arrests the Scotch assets,—he says, "Do not let the assignees get the possession of their Scotch assets, do not let them have the means of applying those Scotch assets, to distribute them among all the creditors who are entitled to be paid under the commission; but whenever there is a distribution of English assets which will give 5s. in the pound, then give me 5s. in the pound out of the Scotch assets". Now how that is to be worked out if such a decree were made, I am at a loss, I confess, to understand. But let me take this additional view of it. If Mr. Roy may do this in Scotland, where there happens to be Scotch assets, suppose Mr. Campbell in the course of his dealing had had to do with an estate in Demerara—an English creditor not a Demerara creditor may go or send there, have proceedings instituted in the courts there by which he might say, "I quite recognise the propriety of the bankruptcy; I quite recognise the character of these assignees, as persons who under that English bankruptcy are bound to distribute the assets, including these Demerara estates, among all the creditors who are entitled to be paid a dividend on their debt; I admit all that, I admit this Demerara property is vested in those assignees; but I say that I have a right to call on the Demerara court just as much as Mr. Roy is doing in the Court of Session in Scotland, to call on the Demerara court to say the Demerara assets should be administered there, not by letting them go into the hands of the assignees to administer, though I quite admit that they belong to them—I quite admit that they are assets to be administered by the assignees in the bankruptcy; but hold them; give me a decree that whenever in the English Court of Bankruptcy a dividend is paid to the other creditors, I shall, out of these Demerara assets, unless I get it in some other way out of the English assets, by arresting these Demerara assets be paid my dividend." I will go a little further and suppose, what would be an extremely probable thing, that this trader also had dealings with regard to property, real or personal, in France; just the same process may be taken by a third creditor by sending to France. Now the suggestion of these things merely puts the matter in a very strong light with reference at least to what I may call the abstract moral justice of the case. I do not mean to say that I can act upon what is called abstract moral justice. I must act upon the rules and principles which prevail in the courts in equity—that is what I must act upon. But what I have suggested, and what I think is obvious on the whole case, puts the thing in this light: that here is a party who has admitted by the whole course of his proceedings in Scotland, and by the whole course of his argument in this court, that these English assignees under the English bankruptcy have properly vested in them all the property of the bankrupt, for the purpose of distribution, according to the principles of the English court of bankruptcy, among the creditors,—he is admitting all that; and then comes this question, Is it or is it not equitable that his founding his rights upon that very case should be be entitled to say, "I will not have my case dealt with by the particular court in bankruptcy, which will deal with it quite as fairly as I insist it ought to be dealt with; I ask for nothing in priority to any other creditor; but I insist it shall be dealt with in a court in another country, and not only dealt with by another court, so as to determine that there is a debt, but I insist upon it that that court shall determine in what way the assets shall be administered by the English assignees, for the purpose of paying me pro rata with the other creditors?" If there be no equity in this case, I confess I think it is time that an equity should be created. I admit that there is no case precisely on all-fours with this; but it appears to me that the principle of the cases is clearly applicable. First of all I reject entirely—I do not mean to say they are not perfectly good law; I only reject them because they have nothing to do with the present question—cases in which a certain creditor takes some proceedings in a foreign court, insisting on this: "This property does not belong to the assignees; I have a right of priority or superiority over the creditors generally." Then, if he has succeeded in getting some of the assets into his hands by proceedings in a foreign court, and the English courts consider that he had no right to retain those assets as against the assignees, that is, as against the general body of creditors represented by the assignees, the courts of England will allow the assignees to recover them from him in an action. It does not appear to me that these cases affect the question one way or the other; nor does it appear to me that the cases entirely govern this case, such as Graham v. Maxwell, and M'Laren v. Stainton, where this court, administering to an estate, says a creditor shall not sue after a decree for administration, either in the courts of law in this country or in any court of any other country. That stands upon a footing of its own. But those cases go to this: although they do not govern this case, they establish at least this principle, that where a party has not chosen to come in when he might have come in, and when he would by coming in get his rights duly acknowledged and effectuated according to the law of the country which was administering the estate, although he has not chosen to come in, still the court will not let him exercise the option of going elsewhere to try that right. It is true that there are cases in which the court granting the injunction is itself administering the equities, and administering justice among the different parties. In this case the court is not doing so. In that respect the case which is now before me is, I believe, a new case. I consider, therefore, that I am extending what I conceive to be a clear principle to a case to which it has not yet been extended. But it appears to me that there is equity enough in this, that the creditor here is admitting himself to be, and assuming himself to be, a creditor entitled to no other right whatever, as between him and the assignees, but a right to receive a dividend in the administration of the bankrupt's assets by those assignees, by virtue of the Court of Bankruptcy. He is admitting that throughout his whole proceeding and argument; and it appears to me that upon just the same principles, if he had come and proved his debt, got his debt allowed, or attempted to prove it and got it rejected, that there is just as much equity to restrain him now from proceeding as he is now proceeding, as there would be if he had come in and attempted to prove his debt, and that debt had been rejected, or even if that debt had been allowed. He might, if he had come in and proved his debt, have withdrawn his proof. Would this court allow him to withdraw his proof and say: "I prefer having a certain portion of the assets which are in Scotland, as far as I am individually concerned, not as far as the creditors generally are concerned—but as far as I am individually concerned, I should wish that a particular isolated portion of the assets should be distributed by another court for me only"? Now it appears to me that this court will not only restrain the proceedings of parties who ought to come into this court and have their rights administered, but that it will, on the grounds of equity, lend its assistance to the courts of competent and, as far as their jurisdiction extends and in respect of which it does extend, supreme jurisdiction, which have not of themselves the means of granting a similar injunction. Now if I thought that by restraining the action I were doing any sort of mischief to Mr. Roy—that is to say, if there were any impediment in the way of his establishing his debt as any other creditor would establish his debt—I should be bound of course to take care that those impediments were removed out of his way; or if they could not be removed, I certainly would not put him in a position in which he would be made subject to these impediments; and it was properly suggested to me, how do I judicially know that there may not be many impediments to his proving his debt in the bankruptcy? True, I do not know; but surely, if there be any such impediments, it is for Mr. Roy to show me that there are such. I know this, and this I am bound to know, that, as far as any impediments exist in the Court of Bankruptcy to a person who is really a creditor, and who was a creditor at the time the commission issued, he can and will be allowed to prove his debt, and get a dividend pari passu with the other creditors. Now no impediments have been here suggested. An intimation has been thrown out of something of an impediment with reference to the law of Scotland. I cannot conceive how the law of Scotland has anything to do with the matter of whether he can prove his debt under the commission. It is to be recollected that this is not even a Scotch debt; it is not a debt which may be a good debt in Scotland and not in England; this was a debt constituted in the case of an English transaction—an English bill of exchange, which it is said Mr. Campbell having in his possession, and having no right to treat otherwise than as a bill, to stand as security or accommodation, having no right to be treated as a creditor on the bill, discounted it, and used the money for his own purposes, and the persons with whom he discounted it being holders for value, without notice, recovered against the acceptors of the bill, whom Mr. Roy now represents. What is to prevent that being established as a debt in any court of this country, or of any other part of the world, and how does the existence or the nature of that debt prevent Mr. Roy, when that is once established to be a debt, from proving it in the Bankruptcy? Nay, before it is established as a debt, what is to prevent his going into the Court of Bankruptcy for the very purpose of getting it established. We know perfectly well that if he goes into the Court of Bankruptcy, and the question arises whether there be any debt, there are the means of having those questions determined, if not in the Court of Bankruptcy itself, by a court of competent jurisdiction, it may be by the Court of Session in Scotland even. Mr. Campbell, it is true, was resident in Scotland; but the assignees are not resident there—they are English assignees, resident in England, and could only be made amenable to the jurisdiction of the Scotch courts by reason that part of the bankrupt's assets happen to be in Scotland—this Lochnell estate—and by reason that the plaintiff using the arrestments may prevent the assignees from touching one farthing of the rents of that estate until they do appear, and not only until they appear, but until the action is decided; and if the plaintiff is successful in his action he will be entitled to have payment of whatever he may recover out of that estate. There is no difficulty in Mr. Roy coming in and proving his debt. I admit that that alone would not be a sufficient ground for saying, "If you have a right to go elsewhere you shall not go elsewhere." What I have to determine is whether, under existing circumstances, he has a right to go elsewhere; whether he has a right to go in the manner in which he is going by suing the assignees in Scotland. It appears to me that he is violating, not only a principle of abstract justice, but a principle of justice as administered by the Court of Equity; and, except that a court of law does not grant injunctions,—does not proceed by the same machinery,—the justice would be as much recognised in a court of law as it would be in a court of equity. The only remaining point is, it is said that Mr. Roy is only a trustee,—that it was the merest accident which made him the person in whose name these actions, the one against Campbell and the other against the assignees, are brought in the Court of Session, and that the persons who are really interested are the representatives of General M'Gregor—whose money paid the holders of the bill; and it is said that to-morrow the cestui qui trusts, that is, the executors of General M'Gregor, may compel me, Mr. Roy, whether I like it or not, to assign over to any other nominee of theirs my right in all this matter; and the moment they have got that done, they may get that nominee of theirs sisted in the action in my place; and then where are you? How will you be the better for having stopped me? That may be perfectly true, but that is no reason why Mr. Roy is to go on. He must do what he pleases in that respect, if it be not a going on with the action on his part. I must treat Mr. Roy here, because he has so treated himself throughout, as a person entitled to sue in Scotland, and entitled to come in and prove the debt, either in his own name or in the names of or for the benefit of the persons for whom he is trustee. There is no difficulty in his proving merely because he is trustee. If necessary that can be done by him, whether as trustee or actual owner he can, if he thinks fit, prove the debt without the slightest difficulty. He is the dominus litis. He is the only person whom I can restrain. The fact that my restraining him will not prevent the other persons from taking some other course from putting their assignees in a new state of difficulty, is no reason why I am to let Mr. Roy go and keep them in the existing state of difficulty. I think I am proceeding upon the principles which the courts have adopted in this respect also; but, irrespective of any other view of the case, the mere arrestment of the property which it appears, and I have no doubt it is the case, that the plaintiff has the right to issue, if it be only for the purpose of compelling appearance,—that very arrestment is an interference with the property which is admitted to be the property of the assignees, preventing the assignees from getting in and uplifting those assets, which the plaintiff in Scotland admits they ought to be at liberty to uplift for the purpose of distribution. Now it appears to me, for the reasons I have stated, that, though I am extending to a new case as I believe the principles established in the other cases, I am not establishing a new principle. It appears to me I am only carrying out those principles already established to a case that comes within the mischief of those cases, although I am not aware that the precise case has ever been made the subject of decision. Being of opinion that the injunction ought to be granted, and having also expressed my opinion that there has been a breach of the undertaking—in short, that the matter should be set right in that respect, I believe that the granting the injunction as prayed will work out all that is asked by either motion, or wanted for the purpose of either motion; of course it is not wanted that I should commit Mr. Roy, and I do not see the least reason for committing him if what is right is done. If right were refused to be done, of course I should commit; but, being of opinion that the injunction should issue, the injunction will have the effect of restraining any proceeding whatever in the action; and it appears to me that that is all that is necessary to be made as the order on both motions, except this, that as I think on the motion for committal Mr. Roy has been guilty of a breach of the undertaking, not from any wilful motive, but from a false view of the case, I think he must pay the costs of that motion.

Bacon.—Then as to the terms of the injunction, let us have no undertaking.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—What are the terms of the notice of motion?

Anderson.—The terms of the notice of motion are in the terms of the prayer of the bill, that the defendant may be restrained by the order and injunction of this honourable court from prosecuting or proceeding with the said action so as aforesaid commenced by him against the plaintiffs as such assignees as aforesaid and from taking any other proceedings in the said Court of Session in Scotland against the plaintiffs, as such assignees as aforesaid, against the real estate of the said Archibald Campbell, or the rents thereof, and from continuing or allowing to continue or remain in force the arrestments so laid on as aforesaid, and from laying any further or other arrestments upon the rents hereinafter to become due from the tenants of the estate of Lochnell, or suing out execution or any other diligence or process against the real or personal estate of the said Archibald Campbell in Scotland.

Order in the terms of the notice of motion.

SIMMONS v. BATES.

Practice—Order 32 of 1845—Guardian ad litem.

Daniel applied to the court for an order to appoint a guardian ad litem under the 32nd Order of 1845 to appear and answer the plaintiff's bill. The defendant was of unsound mind, but had not been found so by inquisition, but he had been some time in a lunatic asylum. He produced the affidavit of a gentleman who had known the defendant many years, and who swore to the state of his health, &c.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said he had made it a rule not to grant an application of this kind without having also the affidavit of a medical man—in addition to one made by a member of the family of the defendant, or some other person who had known the party for some time. So also the affidavit of a medical man alone was not sufficient.

V. C. TURNER'S COURT.

CHADWICK v. CHADWICK.

Discovery—Answer exposing a defendant to criminal proceedings—Exceptions—Protection in answering.

Where a bill made allegations of fraud in the defendant in obtaining the legal estate of certain estates, and the procurement of a Master's report by false evidence, and then interrogated on these matters, the defendant refused to discover the particulars, but admitted that the legal estate had been vested in him under an order of the Court of Chancery, but denied all fraud, and that the plaintiff had any beneficial title, and asserted his own. At the bar he insisted that the discovery of documents would, even upon the showing of the plaintiff himself, expose him to a prosecution for perjury; but the Court held the answer on both points to be insufficient.

This suit was instituted for the purpose of setting aside certain proceedings taken in the court. The facts were, that in 1714 a lease of property in Golden-square was made (subject to an existing term) by the owner of the fee simple to two persons, named Allington and Maddox, for the term of forty-nine years from Christmas 1798, at which time the existing term would expire. One of the lessees died, and then the survivor died, leaving executors, who, in 1791, demised the property to Sir Andrew Chadwick for forty-nine years less ten days from Christmas 1798, and at the same time the then owner of the fee simple conveyed the inheritance, subject to the term, to Mr. Horsey as a trustee for Sir Andrew Chadwick. Sir Andrew Chadwick died intestate as to his real estate, never having had issue or brother or sister. His nearest relations were on the maternal side, also named Chadwick, four of whom were uncles, the eldest of whom was James Chadwick, and the second Robert Chadwick. In Christmas, 1847, the forty-nine years' term expired, and claimants came forward for the beneficial interest in the reversion in fee, which was outstanding in Mr. Horsey or his heir-at-law. The plaintiff in the present suit claimed as heir-at-law of Robert Chadwick, and the defendant claimed as heir-at-law of James Chadwick, and the proceedings in this suit arose out of these circumstances. The defendant in 1840 presented a petition under Sir Edward Sugden's Acts, alleging that he was heir-at-law of James Chadwick, and that Horsey was then dead and his heir-at-law was unknown, and praying that a conveyance might be made to him vesting the fee simple in reversion in him, his heirs, and assigns. On this petition a reference was made to the Master, and evidence was adduced in the Master's office, on which a report was made in favour of the defendants, and, the report being confirmed, conveyance of the reversion was ordered and made accordingly.

The plaintiff filed his bill seeking to set aside the proceedings under this petition; and it alleged that the plaintiff was the heir-at-law of Robert Chadwick the second uncle, who (by reason of the death of James his elder brother, who was of unsound mind, and who died intestate and without issue,) was the heir-at-law of Sir Andrew Chadwick; that the report and order were obtained by fraud and misrepresentation; and it prayed that the defendant might be declared to be a trustee of the property of the plaintiff, and that he might be decreed to execute a conveyance of the legal fee to him. The charges in the bill were "that the defendant knew that the statements in the petition of 1840 were false; that the whole of the evidence adduced before the Master on behalf of the defendant in support of his alleged pedigree was untrue and fraudulently concocted, and not strictly and legally admissible, that the evidence adduced by the defendant (then the petitioner) of the death and marriage of James Chadwick related, as the defendant well knew, to some other person of the same name; and that so it would appear if the defendant would set forth the evidence adduced by him on these points before the Master." To the answer two exceptions were taken. The first was to the answer to part of the fourth interrogatory in the bill; "whether the said six messuages are not now in the occupation of various persons, and whom by name, and whether or not as tenants to the said defendant John Chadwick, and at what rents, and under what tenancies, and by what leases or agreements in writing or by parol, and made between what parties." To this the defendant by his answer had submitted that he was not bound and refused to set forth, these particulars, but admitted that the same messuages were in the occupation of various persons as tenants to himself.

The second exception was as to the answer to the 16th and 17th interrogatories, inquiring as to whether the defendant had not presented a petition and evidence as charged in the bill. The defendant refused to answer, and submitted that he was not bound to answer, save that he admitted that under an order of this court the interrogatories in Horsey had been conveyed to him and he might to protect himself by the statements in his answer, "that he claims to be, and is, heir-at-law of Sir Andrew Chadwick; that all the documents and evidence required about were prepared with a view to litigation that after adverse claims had been put forward" (but he did not say that the plaintiff had then put forward any claim); "that the documents &c. did not support or tend to support the plaintiff's pedigree or title, but that they did support the defendant's title;" and then denied the allegations of fraud.

Batten, for the exceptions, opened and supported the first.

Elmsley and Bird, for the defendants.—As the interrogatory points to relief to which the plaintiff can only be entitled after he has made out his own title, and is consequential on his succeeding in doing so, the defendant is not bound to answer. (Stainton v. Chadwick, 3 Mac. & Gor. 562.) The discovery moreover is immaterial, for the facts inquired after relate solely to the plaintiff's own title, and do not and cannot support him; but, on the contrary, it protects the defendant's own title, and he is not bound to make it: (Donegal v. Stewart, 3 Ves. 468; Phillips v. Carey, 4 Ves. 107; Jacobs v. Goodhues, 2 Cox, 272; Bolton v. The Corporation of Liverpool, 1 Myl. & K. 88.) The defendant has lawfully obtained possession, and did so under the former lease.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—It is not merely consequential relief which is sought. Here the defendant is receiving the rents. Supposing you die, how is the plaintiff to know to whom you have let the land, or for what rents, or whether they have been paid or not? There would in case of your death be no one who could give the information. Take the case of a suit against an administrator by one of the next of kin for an account. If the administrator denies the title of the next of kin, can he thereby excuse himself from giving an account? There is no doubt that the earlier cases, such as those which have been quoted, may be so quoted in favour of your view; but a vast number of decisions since have fully established this, that if the defendant answers at all he must answer fully, or avail himself of his being protected from answering (if he have a protection) in whole or in part, by plea. As to the case of Stainton v. Chadwick, I do not think it applies to the present case. The effect of the doctrine contended for by the defendant, if allowed, would be that in many instances the plaintiff, though he succeeded in establishing his right, might find himself without a remedy; as in the case which I put before of a bill against an administrator by one of the next of kin for an account and discovery and administration, the administrator puts in an answer denying the title, and declining to give an account. If that is to be sufficient, in the event of the administrator dying, though the next of kin ultimately makes out his pedigree, he is for ever unable to find out what the estate consists of to which he has established his claim. I do not think that Lord Truro intended some of the expressions in the report to be taken at their fullest extent; because he modifies them by the passages which he quotes from Lord Redesdale's treatise. The exception must be allowed.

Batten, for the second exception.—The object of the plaintiff is to have the fraud he says the defendant has committed made manifest, and he has a right to a discovery of all documents which will show the existence of the fraud: (Smith v. The Duke of Beaufort, 1 Phil. 209; The Attorney-General v. Thompson, 8 Hare, 110.)

Elmsley.—All this discovery is quite immaterial; and the end of the discovery, assuming the statements in the bill to be true, would be to expose the defendant to a prosecution for perjury or subornation of perjury. [The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—If the answer were in the affirmative, would it be immaterial to the plaintiff? His case is, that you presented a petition in 1847 which was fraudulent, and then he asks you the question, did you not present a petition? Suppose you answer in the affirmative, is not this one step towards establishing the fraud?] The only equitable relief suitors can obtain here in cases like this concerning land is, to put aside all legal estates which would prevent the real merits from being tried. As to the exemption on the score of exposing the defendant to criminal prosecution, he is entitled to resist every discovery which can furnish a link in a chain leading to that point. A prominent part of the case made by the bill is, that the defendant knew that the state of facts taken before the Master was false; the plaintiff charges that the whole of the evidence, the certificates of burial, &c. were untrue and fraudulently concocted. We are exempted from answering these interrogatories: (Paxton v. Douglas, 19 Ves. 225; Thorpe v. Macauley, 6 Madd. 226.)

Bird followed on the same side, insisting that the discovery would be immaterial to the plaintiff's case.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In Gresley v. Mousley, 1 Sim. 404, Sir Anthony Hart, at p. 410, thus explains what is said in Paxton v. Douglas:—"Some of the dicta in that case perplexed me extremely, for Lord Eldon goes the length of saying not only that a man should not make a discovery that would subject himself directly to a penalty or criminal prosecution, but that every question leading immediately to that conclusion would be equally objectionable. But every statement in the bill ought to be incidentally leading to the same conclusion ultimately as the prayer of the bill; it is either conclusive to the general result, or unimportant and irrelevant. But I take Lord Eldon to have meant, not that every fact which may lead to the effect of subjecting a defendant to a penalty is objectionable, but that, where the sole gist and object of a suit are to convict a man in a penalty, where there could be no other purpose than to have relief in a court of equity on the footing of a penalty, as a court of equity does not relieve on a penalty, it will not give any such incidental discovery." In the case now before the court it is argued for the defendant that a full answer to the interrogatory would be immaterial to the plaintiff's case. The test as to immateriality is this: suppose the answer to be in the dry affirmative; would that answer be of no service to the plaintiff? The first step of the plaintiff, in support of the allegations in his bill, is to prove that these proceedings took place: he cannot move a step without that. An admission that they did take place would be material, and save him expense and trouble. Then it is said that, if the facts were proved, all the plaintiff would do would be to remove the legal estate out of the way of a fair trial of the real right. But I do not agree that this is the only decree which the court will make. He rests his argument on this, that he is charged with fraud. I am by no means sure that if the case were made clear, the court would think it necessary to send an issue to be tried by a jury; and that all the court would think it necessary to do would be to restrain the defendant from availing himself of his legal estate in a trial at law. But if this were so—if the parties were sent to law,—after having established their rights one way or the other they would come back here for further relief; and then would it not be a material circumstance, in dealing with the facts of all the proceedings, to consider how the parties had conducted themselves with regard to the production of evidence, &c.? But then, it is said, the bill charges acts and dealings which amount to perjury or subornation of perjury on the part of the defendant, and the plaintiff is entitled to no discovery which will form a link in the chain attaching to the defendant the weight of a criminal prosecution. But on looking at the allegations of the bill I see nothing in them entitling the defendant to claim exemption from the discovery now sought, which would not equally entitle every defendant charged with fraud to say, "I am charged with fraud, and the discovery now asked would expose me to be indicted for fraud." I must therefore make the usual order, allowing the exception, with costs.

Will—Construction—Period of vesting—Remoteness.

A testator devised certain freehold and leasehold property to trustees, upon trust for his daughter B. for life, and after her decease to apply the rents to and for the use and benefit of B.'s son, R., and all and every other son and sons she might happen to leave, until he and they should attain the age of twenty-five years, and on his and their attaining that age, in trust for the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the said R., and all and every other son and sons as B. should happen to leave and to attain the age of twenty-five: but in case B. should leave no son or sons, and they should all happen to die without attaining twenty-five, then over:

Held, that the devise to R. and the other sons was well vested in them, although liable to be divested and go over in case of death under twenty-five.

A testator devised freehold and leasehold property to trustees, in trust for his daughter B. for life, and after her decease to apply the rents, or so much as necessary for the maintenance of B.'s son, R., and all and every other son and sons as she might happen to leave, until he or they attained twenty-five, and on his and their attaining that age, in trust for R. and such other son and sons, for life, as tenants in common, and after their decease, then in trust for the eldest son of R., and the eldest of all and every of the sons of R., and the heirs male of his and their body and bodies as should survive B.:

Held, that the effect of these words was to give an estate in tail male in remainder to the eldest son of R., and other estates in tail male in remainder to the eldest brother of R.

Robert Taylor, the testator in this cause, by his will dated April 6, 1796, after reciting that by his marriage settlement he had a power to dispose of lands in Crewkerne, appointed the same unto his daughter Mary Ann Taylor, her executors, administrators, and assigns, for all the residue of such term, estate and interest as he could give or dispose of thereby by virtue of the said settlement or otherwise. The testator then proceeded as follows:—"I give and devise unto William Draper Best, Esq., and Mr. Thomas Best, his brother, their heirs, executors, and administrators, all those my freehold and leasehold estates not hereinbefore mentioned, lying within the parish of Crewkerne, my dwelling-house included, upon this special trust, that they my said trustees, and the survivor of them, and the executors and administrators of such survivor, do and shall from time to time set and let my said estates for any term of years, not exceeding seven years, and receive and take the clear yearly rents and profits thereof, and pay the same into the hands of my said daughter, Mary Ann Taylor, and to no other, whether she may be married or sole, and whose receipt shall be a discharge for and during the term of their natural life, or permit my said daughter to receive the rents and profits thereof for and during the term of her natural life; and from and after the decease of my said daughter" [upon trusts for Mary Ann Taylor's children as therein mentioned.] "But in case my said daughter Mary Ann shall happen to die leaving no child or children, then I will that the said William Draper Best and Thomas Best, and the survivor of them, and the executors and administrators of such survivor, do and shall receive the rents and profits of my said estate, and pay or apply the same to and for the sole and only use of my said daughter Bridget, whose receipts alone shall be discharges for and during the term of her natural life; and from and after her decease, then in trust to receive the clear yearly rents and profits and pay and apply the same to and for the use and benefit of my daughter Bridget's son Robert, and all and every other son and sons as she shall happen to leave, until he and they shall attain his and their age and ages of twenty-five years; and, on his and their attaining that age, in trust for the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the said Robert and all and every other son and sons as my said daughter Bridget shall happen to leave and to attain the age of twenty-five years, for all such terms, estate, and interest, both freehold and leasehold, as I can give therein. But in case my said daughter Bridget shall leave no son or sons, and they shall all happen to die without attaining the age of twenty-five years, then in trust for all and every the daughter and daughters of my said daughter Bridget that shall attain the age of twenty-five years, her and their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns. But in case my said daughter Bridget shall leave no son or daughter at her decease living that shall attain the age of twenty-five years, then and in such case I give and devise my said freehold and leasehold estates lying in Crewkerne aforesaid unto my three nephews, Henry, William, and John Higgins, and to the survivor of them, his and their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, equally between them, as tenants in common, and to the heirs, executors, and administrators of such survivor, and to, for, and upon no other trust whatsoever. Also I give, devise, and bequeath all that my freehold estate lying within the parish of North Perrott, in the county of Somerset, with the several closes of land thereto belonging, and my leasehold estate in the parish of Misterton, unto the said William Draper Best and Thomas Best, their heirs, executors, and administrators, in trust that they, my said trustees, and the survivor of them, and the heirs, executors, and administrators of such survivor, do and shall from time to time set and let my said estates for any term not exceeding seven years, and receive the clear yearly rents and profits thereof, and pay the same into the hands of my said daughter Bridget, and to no other, whose receipts (notwithstanding her coverture) shall be discharges for and during the term of her natural life; and from and after her decease I will that my said trustees, and the survivor of them, and the heirs, executors, and administrators of such survivor, do and shall receive and pay and apply the rents and profits of my said estates, or so much thereof as shall be necessary to and for the support, education, and maintenance of my said daughter's son Robert, and all and every other son and sons as she may happen to leave, until he or they shall attain the age or ages of twenty-five years; and on his and their attaining that age, then in trust for the said Robert and such other son and sons, and their assigns, for and during the term of his and their natural lives, as tenants in common; and from and after their decease, then in trust for the oldest son of the said Robert, and the eldest of all and every of the sons of my said daughter Bridget, and the heirs male of his and their body and bodies lawfully to be begotten as shall survive her; and for want and in default of such issue, then in trust for all and every the daughter and daughters, and the heirs male of the body and bodies of such daughter and daughters, as my said daughter Bridget shall leave behind her at her decease; and for want and in default of such issue male or female, then in trust for my said daughter Mary Ann Taylor and her assigns for life, and after her decease to and for the issue male and female, and the heirs of the body and bodies of such male and female issue, of my said daughter Mary Ann, his, her, and their heirs and assigns for ever; and for want of such issue, then in trust for my said three nephews, Henry, William, and John Higgins, and the survivor of them, his and their heirs and assigns for ever, as tenants in common, and to and for no other trust whatsoever." . . . . The testator afterwards gave all the residue of his personal estate and effects, and all his messuages, lands, and tenements of which he was any ways possessed or entitled, in possession or reversion, terms of years or otherwise not hereinbefore disposed of, subject unto and chargeable with the payment of his debts, legacies, and funeral expenses unto his said daughter Mary Ann Taylor, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely for ever; and he appointed his said daughter Mary Ann Taylor sole executrix of his will. The testator died in Dec. 1801, leaving his daughters Mary Ann Taylor and Bridget, the wife of the Rev. Richard Abraham, his only children. Bridget Abraham survived her husband, and died intestate in March 1840, having had three children—Richard, Bridget, and Robert. Of these three children Richard and Bridget died in their mother's lifetime, the former an infant, the latter aged 28, unmarried and intestate. In Aug. 1843, Mary Ann Taylor died unmarried. Robert Abraham attained twenty-five in the lifetime of his mother, and died on the 28th Nov. 1843, leaving two daughters his only children.

The present suit was instituted by the persons interested under the will of Mary Ann Taylor, the residuary devisee and legatee of the testator; and the question raised was, whether the limitations subsequent to the life estates in the Crewkerne property, and also in the North Perrott and Misterton property, were not void for remoteness.

Wednesday, Dec. 1.—The Vice-Chancellor said that the argument in support of the proposition that all the limitations of the Crewkerne estate freehold and leasehold under the will of Robert Taylor, after the life estate to the testator's daughter Bridget, were void for remoteness, was supported by an appeal to various authorities. But notwithstanding the difficulty of reconciling some of the decisions, it must be considered as well established that an immediate gift of the whole rents and profits or enjoyment of the estate real or personal to one until he attained the age of twenty-five, and on his attaining that age, to him absolutely, conferred an immediate vested interest, and did not postpone the vesting until the age of twenty-five was attained. Even in the case of a mere legacy, which would upon the terms of the gift be contingent upon the legatee's attaining a certain age, it might become vested by the gift of the income or interest in the meantime; and this, to use the language of Lord Cottenham in Watson v. Hayes, "whether the gift of the income in the meantime be direct or in the form of maintenance, provided it be for the whole interest." No doubt there was difficulty in reconciling the decision in Batsford v. Kebbel, with this now well-established principle; but the doctrine in Bergeon's case, followed in many others, and acted upon in the House of Lords in Broomfield v. Crowder, carried the principle still further as to devises of real estate, where words clearly importing a contingency, and which, taken by themselves, would make the grant of the devisee attaining a particular age clearly a condition precedent, did not prevent the vesting, even where there was an intermediate gift of the rents for other purposes. In all these cases the court had struggled with the words to effect the intention. In the present case the intention of the testator, that Robert and all the other sons of his daughter should on her death take immediate beneficial interests in the whole rents and income, which on attaining the age of twenty-five were to become absolute and indefeasible, but which were defeasible in the case of death under twenty-five, appeared clear and beyond all doubt. If this were so, the suggestion made at the bar that the gift of the income until twenty-five must be considered void, as part of a general scheme to postpone the vesting till twenty-five, was merely fanciful and a contradiction to the words of the will, which, however inaccurate in many respects, left no doubt of an intention the very reverse of this suggestion. It had, however, been urged that the words which referred to the event of Robert and the other sons attaining twenty-five did not give the estate as an absolute estate to Robert or the other sons at all, but created a trust for the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of Robert and the other sons who might happen to attain that age. This view of the case treated the words "heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns," not as words of limitation or as enlarging the estate of Robert and the sons, but the gift to the heirs of a living person, and therefore wholly void. It was said that the previous gift of the rents and income till twenty-five was a mere chattel interest, and that therefore the rule in Shelley's case did not apply. If it were reasonably clear on the construction of the words of the will that the testator intended the devisees to take an absolute interest on attaining twenty-five, there needed no resort to the rule in Shelley's case, which was framed in order to effectuate, and not to defeat, an intention clearly expressed. Upon the language of this will, inaccurate as it was, as to the disposal of the estate on the sons attaining twenty-five, there appeared no reasonable doubt. To impute to this testator an intention that on attaining twenty-five the estate and interest of each of the sons, instead of being enlarged to an absolute interest, should entirely cease, was to impute an intention contrary to the whole scheme of the will, and to the obvious meaning of the testator in using the words, "heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns," of his sons. There appeared no other rational construction of these words than that which treated them as enlarging, and not destroying, the estate and interest of those sons who should live to attain the age of twenty-five. Upon the whole, therefore, his Honour was of opinion, as to the Crewkerne estate, that upon the true construction of this will, the gift in remainder to Robert and the other sons of the testator's daughter Bridget was well vested in them, although liable to be divested and go over in case of death under twenty-five; and as Robert was the only son, and lived to attain twenty-five, his estate and interest previously vested became then absolute and indefeasible, and the Crewkerne estate, both freehold and leasehold, passed by his will. This view of the case rendered it unnecessary to consider the argument urged on the authority of Leake v. Robinson and Porter v. Fox, to show that if the gift to the other sons were too remote, as not giving any vested interest till twenty-five, it must also fail as to Robert, who was associated with a class as to which the devise failed, because it might include some of the class as to whom it would be too remote. If it had been necessary to deal with that argument, his Honour felt that he should have some difficulty in following the decision in Porter v. Fox, which appeared to him not sustainable, on an accurate view of what was said by Sir William Grant, in Leake v. Robinson. That great judge carefully drew the distinction between a gift to an individual and a gift to a class; and in his observations which preceded his notice of the case of Gee v. Audley, as well as in the remarks in Routledge v. Dorrell, his Honour could not see enough to convince him that he would have held that a gift to an individual named and known to the testatrix should wholly fail, because there were words superadded by the testator including a class to take with him, as to which class the gift must wholly fail, because as to some it might be too remote. He did not wish to be understood as doing more than suggesting that, if the question should occur for decision, it should not be considered as concluded by authority. It was to be regretted that the appeal against the decision in Porter v. Fox was not prosecuted, so that the question might have been more satisfactorily settled. The Vice-Chancellor of England supported his judgment in that case, by referring to the peculiar expressions which he considered as showing that the gift to the individual was so mixed up with the gift to the class, that if separated from a member of the class, there was no gift to him as an individual at all. But here there was a clear gift to an individual, and a gift to a class of persons who were to take along with him, the individual and each member of the class to take as tenants in common, what remained to be known was, how, if the class were so described as that the gift to them could not take effect, the gift to the individual should therefore also fail; any more than if, instead of the gift being to an individual and to a class of persons to take along with him, the gift were to the individual and any other number of individuals to take with him as tenants in tail, as to which other individuals the gift might happen to fail, or be given in an ineffectual manner. If his Honour were right in holding that Robert took an immediate vested interest, and that the other sons of Bridget, if any, would have taken an immediate vested interest in the Crewkerne estate, the application of the same principle would guide the construction of the will as to the estates in North Perrott and Misterton. As to these the peculiarity was that the gift to Robert, on attaining twenty-five, was only of a life estate, and that the intermediate trust of the rents and profits until twenty-five was for support, maintenance, and education, and was not an absolute gift of the whole rents and profits, but of the whole or so much as should be necessary. But the principle of Hornston's case was that an intermediate interest carved out did not prevent the vesting, whether it were so carved out for the benefit of the devisee or any other purpose, and whether it exhausted the whole rents and profits or only a part. No doubt if it were a gift of personal estate merely, and the intermediate income were not given to the legatee, the words importing a condition precedent would prevent the vesting. But it was well settled that, as to the real estate, the purpose for which the intermediate rents and profits were given or carved out did not prevent the vesting; and it had been well decided by the authorities cited at the bar, ending with Tapscott v. Newcombe, that where there was a freehold and leasehold estate, and there was a vested estate in the freehold, the leasehold must be considered as vested also. It had, however, been argued that upon the construction of the words the estates given to the other unborn sons of Bridget, as well as Robert, were life estates only, with remainder to the sons of unborn sons in tail, and, therefore, too remote. There was considerable inaccuracy and obscurity in the language, but the more natural and obvious construction of the words seemed to his Honour to be that which gave an estate in tail male in remainder to the eldest son of Robert, and also an estate in tail male in remainder to the eldest brother of Robert, and not to the son of any brother of Robert. If so, the remainder over in fee to the testator's three nephews, Henry, William, and John Higgins, was a good remainder; and in the events which happened, of the failure of all the antecedent estates to it after the life estate of Robert, took effect.

LODGE v. PRICHARD.

Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 54.

Semble, that where, before the passing of the above Act, a reference had been made to the Master to take accounts, the Court will not direct that certain books of account shall be taken as primâ facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein contained.

W. M. James, on behalf of two of the defendants, moved that in taking the account of the dealings and transactions between Adam Lodge, the testator in the pleadings named, and the defendants, R. W. Prichard and W. R. Coulbourn, and in making the inquiries as to what the partnership property consisted of at the time of the death of the said testator, and what was the share and interest of the testator therein (which account and inquiries were directed by the decree made in this cause on 23rd July 1851), the several partnership books of account, in which the accounts of the said dealings and transactions had been kept (viz., the cash-book, waste-book, and ledger, used in keeping the partnership accounts between the said testator, A. Lodge, and the said defendants, R. W. Prichard and W. R. Coulbourn) might be taken as primâ facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein contained. He referred to the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 54.

Mr. Lodge, the plaintiff in person, opposed the motion, and contended that as the reference had been made before the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, came into operation, the court could not interfere. He cited Booth v. Tomlinson, 17 Jur. 29; and Morrell v. Tinkler, 9 Hare App. 50.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he did not think he ought to make the order which was asked. He understood that the plaintiff was willing to have the whole matter transferred from the Master's office to his Honour at chambers; and if that were done, it might be disposed of.

W. M. James said that, if that transfer were made, all that had been done in the Master's office hitherto would be lost.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Then this might come before him on further directions, and he might then consider it necessary to be taken at chambers, where he would have the power of dealing with it under the new practice. If the result of transferring the matter now was to be the loss of what had already been done, the question was whether that loss might not be increased before the cause came on upon further directions.

An order was afterwards made, with the consent of both parties, for transferring the matter to the V. C. at chambers.

WISE v. HAWKINS.

Practice—Production of documents.

Summons by plaintiff in a claim for production by defendants of documents, which, in an affidavit, the plaintiff's solicitor stated he believed to be in their possession. An affidavit by the defendants' solicitor shewed that they had some of the documents in their possession. The application was refused.

The plaintiff in this claim obtained a summons at chambers for the production by the defendants upon oath of certain classes of documents therein described. The application was supported by an affidavit of the plaintiff's solicitor that he believed that the society represented by the defendants had in their possession the various documents described. The defendant's solicitor, by an affidavit, admitted the possession of a great quantity of documents relating to the business of the society, but whether any of them related to one of the classes mentioned he could not say; but he stated that, in a letter to the plaintiff, he had expressed his willingness to produce "all reasonable documents." The summons was adjourned by the chief clerk to be heard in court.

Fooks, in support of the motion, cited The Rochdale Canal Company v. King, 15 Beav. 11.

Rogers, for the defendants.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR considered that the evidence was insufficient for the purpose of this application. The plaintiff should have filed an affidavit with interrogatories, which was a practice now sanctioned; or should have proceeded by bill, and obtained an answer making a case for the production; and ought not to rely only on his own affidavits and letters from the defendants on the subject of the documents, the production of which he sought.

HOWELL v. WILLIAMS.

Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86—Evidence—Answer of defendant used as an affidavit.

Hare, on behalf of all the defendants excepting one, moved that the evidence in this cause might be taken pursuant to the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, and that the answers of the defendants on whose behalf the motion was made might be read as affidavits, they submitting that the plaintiff should be at liberty to cross-examine them in the same manner as if they had made affidavits. It was also asked that publication might stand enlarged until the first day of Trinity Term. The application was made with the view of saving expense. Replication had been filed on the 3rd July last.

Tripp contended that the court had no jurisdiction to make the order, and referred to the 15th section of the Act.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that, although there was nothing in the Act in express terms enabling him to receive these answers as affidavits, yet the application was reasonable, and one which he considered that he had authority to grant, as it was within the power of the defendant to reswear his answer as an affidavit. He should therefore make the order as asked, the defendants submitting to any order the court might make as to their examination or otherwise previous to it at the hearing of the cause.

V. C. WOOD'S COURT.

WOLLASTON v. OSBORN.

Joint contract—Specific performance—Evidence of witnesses at the hearing—Chancery Practice Amendment Act.

A bill was filed by a purchaser for the specific performance of a contract, he alleged to have been jointly entered into by the owners and mortgagees of a house, but at the hearing a contract by the owners only was proved:

Held, that a joint contract being alleged, must be proved, or the claim be dismissed. The 39th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86 permits the examination at the hearing of a cause "of any witness or party to the cause," wherefore in the above case the plaintiff could not examine any other witnesses but those already examined, and having declined the offer of examining the witnesses orally who had been already examined, the claim was dismissed without costs, without prejudice to the filing another claim.

This was a claim filed by a purchaser for the specific performance of a contract. From the claim and affidavits, it appeared that the property in question, a house, belonged to three ladies, the Misses Broughton, and that they had mortgaged it to Mr. Osborn, Mr. Edward Duke, and another gentleman. The house was put up to sale by auction, and in the printed particulars the intended sale was stated to be "by order of the proprietress," and the particulars were signed with the name "Edward Duke, solicitor," who was in fact the solicitor for the owners. The plaintiff bid for the house and was declared the purchaser, and conformed to the conditions of sale. At the time also, according to the conditions, Mr. Edward Duke delivered to Mr. Wollaston, the plaintiff, the abstract of title; and on the title having been approved, and the draft conveyance prepared, Mr. Duke also approved of it on behalf of the vendors. A correspondence passed between Mr. Williston and Mr. Duke respecting the amount of interest due to the mortgagees, and a communication also had with Mr. Otway, the solicitor for those ladies, from which it appeared they disputed the amounts alleged to be owing by them for interest on the mortgage. This point remaining unsettled, the mortgagees, Mr. Osborn, Mr. Duke, and the other, refused to execute the conveyance, whereupon Mr. Williston filed his claim for specific performance against both the owners and the mortgagees. The claim alleged a joint contract by the six for the sale of the property; and in his affidavit he stated his belief that the sale was ordered as well by the owners as the mortgagees, and that Mr. Duke had so offered the property for sale, and that the whole of them concurred. The auctioneer had not been made a witness. Mr. Duke made an affidavit in opposition to the claim, in which he admitted his concurrence in the sale, but denied that (although he was in fact a mortgagee) his name appeared in the particulars of sale in that character.

Bolt and Shebbeare, for the plaintiff.—The contract is alleged and sufficiently proved to have been made by the whole of the six defendants. The evidence is reasonably and properly so to be understood. It was only when the question of the amount of interest due from the owners was disputed that the mortgagees showed unwillingness to be bound by the contract; but even if the evidence were not strictly plain against them, still the court would hold them to have concurred, they having stood by and permitted the sale to go on, and with the name of one of them stated in the particulars of sale. And it is to be remarked, that all the defendants but Mr. Duke abstain from any denial of concurrence in the sale.

Boyle, for the mortgagees.—It is plain that there is no evidence against Mr. Osborn and his co-mortgagees; and from the case of Lindsay v. Lynch, 2 Sch. & Lef. 1; and Denton v. Little, Id. ib. 11, note, it is incumbent on a plaintiff alleging a joint contract to prove it. Independently of this, the Statute of Frauds would be a bar to relief in this case.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The case of Maclean v. Dunn, 4 Bing. 722, shows that an agent may be appointed to sell without writing; and here the auctioneer might have been the agent, so that the statute would not apply. The other question is the important one.

Stevens, for the Messrs. Broughton, relied upon Hale v. Noyes, 3 B. C. C. 483; and The Mayor of London v. Levy, 8 Ves. 398; and submitted that the claim should be dismissed.

Bolt, in reply.—The Court will permit the plaintiff to examine witnesses viva voce under the Chancery Procedure Amendment Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, on the disputed point, under the 37th section, which permits this to be done at the hearing. In the case of Wilkinson v. Stringer, 22 L. J. 107, Ch., V. C. Turner laid it down that such a course would be permitted where, under the old practice, the court would have directed an issue. In the case now before the court such would have been the case under the old system, and therefore proper to be adopted under the amended course of proceedings. That a contract which is found not to be exactly that which the bill or claim alleges, does not induce the court to refuse all relief, is shown from the case of Chadwick v. Maden, 9 Hare, 188, before the same learned judge, who decreed specific performance against one where the prayer was against two. There the plaintiffs alleged that Maden and Lees were the purchasers; but it turned out that there was but one purchaser, and Maden and Lees each by his answer sought to throw the burthen on the other, Maden saying he bought as a trustee for Lees, and Lees asserting that he never made Maden his agent in the matter; but ultimately the V. C. made the decree against Maden, dismissing the bill as against Lees.

Jan. 31.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—This case comes before the court in a very unsatisfactory manner, and is not creditable to the defendants. I can have no doubt that the sale was originally intended to be bona fide by all parties, as well the owners as the mortgagees; but they now refuse to disclose who entered into the contract, and the court must deal with the case on the materials before it, unless further testimony can be had. The plaintiff alleges a joint contract, but upon the evidence no such contract is proved. As to the mortgagees, it rests on the plaintiff's affidavit as to his belief of their concurrence, which does not prove the fact, though it is sufficient to raise an issue, and will entitle him to have the witnesses examined in court. But, owing to the wording of the 39th section of the Act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, the court can only examine the witnesses who have been examined before, or who are parties to the claim; because that section says,—"Upon the hearing of any cause depending in the said court, whether commenced by bill or by claim, the court, if it will see fit so to do, may require the production and oral examination before itself of any witness or party in the cause." Such being the words of the section, the plaintiff will therefore be unable to examine the auctioneer, who is not a witness in the cause nor a party in the cause; and it may be that the examination of the witnesses, the plaintiff may still find himself in a difficulty from having alleged a joint contract. I cannot find any case in which a joint contract has been alleged and a separate contract enforced. Chadwick v. Maden, which has been cited as an authority, was decided on a different ground. There the claim alleged that one party entered into a contract as the agent of the other; and on the other hand the words of Lord Elton, in Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 316, are an authority the other way. If the plaintiff thinks he can prove a joint contract, I will give him an opportunity of examining the witnesses in court; or I will dismiss the claim without costs, and without prejudice to the filing another claim or a bill.

The claim was dismissed without costs, without prejudice to the plaintiff's right to file a new claim or to file a bill.

Setting down special case—Feme coverte—Sir George Turner's Act—13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, s. 13.

It is necessary to ask leave of the court to set down a special case, under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, where the defendant is a feme coverte.

H. Prendergast moved for leave to set down a special case for argument, under Sir George Turner's Act, the defendant being a married woman. He stated that it was, in his opinion, a proper case to be set down for argument, and that the statement of facts was verified by affidavit. It had been doubted whether the motion was to be made in court, or whether it was sufficient to hand the case in to the registrar, with counsel's certificate, and the affidavit.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The statute says, the "Court" shall be satisfied, which rather implies that the case should be mentioned to the court. As you appear in court, Mr. Prendergast, and say that it is a proper case to be set down for argument, and produce an affidavit verifying the statements in it, I think that is sufficient.

REG. v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE WORCESTER UNION.

Poor-rate—Workhouse—Local Act—Exemption from liability.

By a local Act for the relief of the poor several parishes were united, and directors of the poor of the said united parishes were to be elected; and power was given to the directors to purchase land and build thereon for the purposes of the Act, and it was provided that in all future rates such land or buildings should not be assessed at a higher value or improved rent than the same were at the time of purchase, nor should the buildings to be purchased or erected in pursuance of the Act ever be assessed to the window-tax, or any other tax that the same premises had not been charged with previous to the Act.

Directors were duly appointed under the Act, and in 1796 purchased land and built a workhouse thereon, which was used for the purpose of the united parishes until 1889.

By an order of the Poor Law Commissioners, Nov. 1836, the above union of parishes was dissolved, and another formed by the name of The Worcester Union, consisting of the several parishes united under the local Act, together with four other parishes; and, by another order, the Commissioners directed the guardians of the Worcester union to purchase the said workhouse and ground from the directors of the said united parishes under the local Act; and, by a third order, empowered the directors to sell the same to the said guardians.

The purchase was accordingly made in 1839, and the premises have ever since been used by the Worcester union solely as a workhouse under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, for the Worcester union.

Held, that the premises, being no longer used under the local Act, were liable to be rated at their improved rateable value, and that the exemption in the local Act ceased.

Appeal against a rate for the relief of the poor of the parish of St. Martin, which is situate partly within the county of the city of Worcester and partly within the county of Worcester, made July 8, 1852. By this rate the guardians of the Worcester Union are assessed in respect of their "union workhouse and land." The property so described comprised the union workhouse, outbuildings, gardens, yards, drying-ground, land, and other hereditaments, occupied by them for the purposes of such union, and is situate in that part of the said parish of St. Martin which is within the city of Worcester. The said property is assessed at a gross estimated rental of 150*l.* and a rateable value of 127*l.* 10*s.* The grounds of appeal against this assessment stated, in substance, that the appellants were overrated in respect of their said property, inasmuch as they were assessed according to the improved value of their said property instead of the value at which the same was rated at the time of the original purchase thereof in 1796.

In 1792 a local Act of Parliament was passed, intituled "An Act for the better Relief and Employment of the Poor of the several Parishes within the City of Worcester and of the Parishes of St. Martin and St. Clement, which are part within the City of Worcester and part within the County of Worcester, and for providing a Burial-Ground for the use of such Parishes." By this Act the several parishes of St. Nicholas, St. Swithin, St. Helens, All Saints, St. Andrew, and St. Alban (which were wholly within the city of Worcester and the liberties thereof), and the parishes of St. Martin and St. Clement (part of which two last-mentioned parishes respectively were within the said city of Worcester and the liberties thereof, and other parts of which respectively were in the county of Worcester), were united for certain purposes in the said Act mentioned, including, amongst other things, the relief of the poor of the said several parishes; and certain persons inhabiting in and rated to the said parishes so united were incorporated for ever by the name of "The Wardens of the Poor of the several Parishes within the City of Worcester, and of the Parishes united therewith," and were enabled to purchase lands, tenements, &c hereditaments, and also to convey, assign, release, transfer, and dispose of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments which they might thereafter purchase for the purposes of the Act, as there should be occasion.

In the Act were provisions for the election of twelve persons from the said wardens, who, together with the mayor of the said city for the time being, should be called "The Directors of the Poor of the several Parishes within the City of Worcester, and of the Parishes united therewith;" and a mode was provided for the election annually of four new directors, in the room of four of those previously elected, who were to retire in rotation in the mode specified in the Act; and the first twelve directors so to be chosen and elected, and all other directors to be chosen and appointed in pursuance of the Act, were thereby empowered to put in execution all the powers and authorities of the Act. The directors were, amongst other things, authorised and empowered to purchase such land or ground within the city of Worcester or the liberties thereof, or within any part of the parishes of St. Martin and St. Clement, as to them should appear necessary, and to erect and build thereon any house or houses and buildings whatsoever for the purposes of the Act, and also to purchase such other land within the said city and liberties of Worcester, or within any part of the parishes aforesaid, as they should think proper, and to convert the same into a burial-ground for the general use of all the parishes. And it was enacted that all such lands, when so purchased, should be conveyed to and vest in the directors, or such person as they should direct, in trust for the said corporation, for the purposes of the said Act.

In the Act is contained the following proviso: "Provided always and be it further enacted that, in all future rates, taxes, and levies to be made for any parishes or place wherein any lands, grounds, or buildings which shall be purchased for the purposes of this Act shall be situate, such lands, ground, or buildings shall not be assessed to any such rates, taxes, or levies at a higher value or improved rent than the same were at the time of such purchase; nor shall the buildings to be purchased or erected in pursuance of this Act ever be assessed to the window-tax, or any other tax that the same premises had not been rated or charged with previous to the time of passing this Act. And it was further enacted that, after such house and buildings were purchased or erected, the directors should have, and they were thereby vested with, the care, control, and management of the poor of the several parishes aforesaid, with power to apprehend and discover all poor persons in and belonging to the said several parishes, and to provide for their relief.

Under that Act certain directors were duly appointed, who, about 1793, duly purchased eighteen and a half acres of land in the part of the parish of St. Martin situate within the city of Worcester. This land was duly conveyed, by indenture, to the directors, their heirs, and assigns, in trust for the said corporation, for the purposes of the said Act. About 1794, the directors for the time being erected and built, upon a portion of the land so purchased, a workhouse and other buildings, with a yard and garden ground contiguous thereto. From the year 1794, up to the conveyance of these premises in 1839 as hereinafter mentioned, the said workhouse, buildings, yard and gardens, were always used and occupied as a house of industry or workhouse, for the purposes of the said Act, and for the relief, employment, and maintenance of the poor in or belonging to the said several parishes united by the said Act, and by those only. The same premises have, ever since the conveyance thereof in 1839, been used and occupied by the present appellants, as a workhouse, for the relief, employment, and maintenance, both of the poor of the said several parishes, and of the poor of the other parishes now united therewith as hereinafter mentioned. The directors appointed under the said local Act converted another portion of the said eighteen and a half acres so purchased by them into a burial-ground, for the general use of the eight parishes aforesaid; and such last-mentioned portion has always continued to be and still is used and occupied by the directors for the time being as such burial-ground. From the time of the passing of the said Act, up to the present time, directors have been and still are appointed annually, and such directors for the time being have always continued to use and occupy, manage and superintend the said burial-ground; and it is used not only for the purposes of the local Act, but also as a general cemetery, where any corpse may be interred upon payment of certain fees fixed by the directors, and the moneys arising therefrom are now annually audited and distributed under the provisions of the local Act.

The burial-ground, until the rate of July 8, 1852, was never assessed upon a higher value than its value at the time it was purchased; but by the said rate of July 8, 1852, it was assessed at its present improved value, according to the provisions of the "Act to regulate Parochial Assessments." The residue of the said 18½ acres so purchased by the directors aforesaid in 1793 has been sold by the directors from time to time previously to 1836 in different lots, and to private individuals; and the whole of the said lots have since such sales been assessed to the poor-rate at their full rateable value, under the "Act to regulate Parochial Assessments."

By an order of the Poor Law Commissioners for England and Wales duly issued in pursuance of the Poor Law Amendment Act, dated Nov. 22, 1836, reciting (amongst other things) that, by an instrument under the hands of a majority of not less than two-thirds of the said directors of the poor of the said parishes, the said directors consented and concurred in the dissolution of the said union as formed by the said local Act upon the following terms (amongst other things), viz.—That the right, title, and interest in and to the house of industry, land, and other premises be preserved to them inviolate; the said commissioners directed and declared that from and after Dec. 13, 1836, the said union of the several parishes aforesaid should, in so far as the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor is concerned, be dissolved: and that the twelve parishes and places in the 3rd schedule to the said order annexed mentioned should on Dec. 14, 1836, be and thenceforth should remain united for the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor by the name of The Worcester Union; and that the right, title, and interest of the said directors in and to the said house of industry, land, and other premises aforesaid should be preserved to them inviolate.

The twelve parishes mentioned in the third schedule to the order consisted of the eight parishes which had been united and incorporated by the local Act, together with four other parishes situate partly within the said city of Worcester, and partly within the county of Worcester: namely, St. Peter the Great, St. Michael, St. John in the Bedwardine, and the tything of Whistones.

By another order of the Poor Law Commissioners, dated Sept. 14, 1837, the commissioners ordered and directed that the guardians of the said Worcester union should purchase of the said directors the said house of industry, land, and premises aforesaid, at a sum not exceeding 4,850*l.*; and that the said premises should be conveyed to the guardians of the said union and their successors, and should be appropriated when so conveyed to such purposes relating to the relief of the poor of the said union, as the said guardians should direct.

By another order of the Poor Law Commissioners, and dated July 13, 1838, the commissioners ordered and empowered the persons who, at the time of the dissolution thereof, were the directors of the poor of the several parishes incorporated under the Local Act, to proceed to the sale of the before-mentioned house of industry, land, and premises, to the guardians of the poor of the said Worcester union: and the commissioners further ordered that the sum of 2500*l.*, part of the purchase-money, should be paid to certain persons therein named in discharge of certain mortgages therein mentioned, and that the residue of such purchase-money should be paid to the treasurer of the dissolved incorporation, and placed to an account to be entitled, "The dissolved incorporation of Worcester, in the matter of the sale of the property thereof;" and that the said purchase-monies should be applied to such purposes and in such manner as the said commissioners should direct.

By indenture dated Feb. 21, 1839, the last-mentioned [illegible] together with the said house of industry [illegible] buildings erected thereon, was in consideration [illegible] 4,850*l.* conveyed and assured by the direct[illegible] under the local Act to the guardians of the Worcester union, to hold to the said guardians, their successors and assigns, for the purposes of the said Worcester union. This indenture contains no reservation of any right, title, or interest of the said directors in or to the said house of industry, or the building or land thereby conveyed. Since the 21st Feb. 1839, the present appellants have considerably enlarged the buildings so purchased by them, and have thereby increased the value of the land and premises so conveyed to them.

QUEEN'S BENCH.

The said land and premises, since the 21st Feb. 1839, have always continued to be and now are used and occupied by the guardians of the said Worcester union, solely as a workhouse, for the purposes of the relief of the poor under the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, of the twelve parishes comprised in the said Worcester union; and the said land, together with the said buildings so erected thereon, partly before and partly since the said 21st of Feb. 1839, are the union workhouse, outbuildings, gardens, yards, drying-ground, land and hereditaments, in respect of the occupation of which the appellants are assessed in the rate appealed against.

The lands included in the aforesaid purchase by the said directors under the powers of the aforesaid local Act, before and at the time of such purchase, were used as pasture land, and until the 6th July 1837 were assessed to the relief of the poor, at the yearly rent or value of 19*l.* 5*s.*; and from and after the 6th July 1837 until the 8th June 1852, the said land and the buildings so as aforesaid erected thereon were assessed to the relief of the poor at the yearly rent or value of 74*l.* It is admitted by the appellants, that if they are properly rateable in respect of the said land, with the said workhouse, buildings, and premises erected thereon, according to the present improved value thereof, the sum at which they are assessed in respect thereof, in the rate appealed against, is a fair and reasonable estimate of the present net annual value of the said hereditaments, according to the meaning of the "Act to regulate Parochial Assessments." But they contend that, under the local Act, they are liable only to be assessed in respect of the said land, with the said workhouse, buildings, and premises erected thereon, at the same value at which they were assessed at the time they were purchased by the said directors as aforesaid in the year 1789. The respondents contend, that the 5a. 2r. 29p. in question originally purchased for the purposes of the local Act, having ceased to be used for the purposes of the local Act only, being no longer the property of the directors under the local Act, are no longer entitled to be rated at their reduced value.

If the court shall be of opinion that the appellants are liable to be rated in respect of the said land, with the said workhouse, buildings, and premises erected thereon, according to the improved value thereof at the time of levying the said rate, then the said rate is to be confirmed.

Selfe, for the respondents.—The question is whether land purchased under the local Act, and exempted from being rated at a higher value than it was at the time of purchase, so long as it is used for the purposes of the Act, can continue to claim such exemption after it has ceased to be used for such purposes. (The Court called upon the other side.)

Huddleston (Hodgson with him).—This land is not liable to be rated at a higher value than it was at the time of the purchase in 1793. The exemption in the local Act is express, and the Act has not been altered or repealed. [Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—You must contend that if buildings had been erected, and afterwards sold to and occupied by a wealthy nobleman, they would be exempt from the window tax.] The argument must go that length. (The following cases were then cited: Perchard v. Heywood, 8 T. R. 486; Williams v. Pritchard, 4 T. R. 4; Rex v. The London Gas Company, 8 B. & C. 54.) [Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—The object in creating the exemption, was the application of the land to the purposes of the Act.] It is not enacted that the exemption is to continue only so long as the land shall be so used: the exemption, therefore, still continues: (Chatfield v. Ruston, 3 B. & C. 863; Mitchell v. Fordham, 6 B. & C. 274; Rex v. St. Peter's the Great, Worcester, 5 B. & C. 473; Reg. v. St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, 19 L. J. 71, M. C.) The order of the Poor Law Commissioners had not the effect of dissolving the union; it exists for almost all the purposes of its original creation. It still has the management of the burial-ground: (The Guardians of Woodbridge Union v. The Guardians of Colneis, 13 Q. B. 269; 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 32; 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 69, s. 37.)

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—We have no doubt whatever that the exemption given by the local Act no longer exists. We must put a reasonable construction on that Act; and though some Acts have words which guardedly point that exemptions like these are to continue only for a particular time, yet we must suppose that such words are impliedly contained in this Act, and that the exemption was only to continue so long as the premises should be used for the purposes of the local Act.

COLERIDGE, J.—This exemption was clearly made with reference to the premises being used for the purposes of the Act, and such uses having ceased, the exemption ceases also.

The rest of the Court concurring:

Judgment for the respondents.

HAYLOCK v. SPARKE, Clerk.

Justice of the peace—Warrant—Jurisdiction—Notice of action—Construction of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44.

An information having been laid before a magistrate, charging A. B. with having written libellous matter on C. D. on the walls and pavements of E., the magistrate ordered A. B. to find sureties to keep the peace, and in default committed him to prison for three months, without adjudicating on the charge preferred against him. The Court of Q. B. having discharged A. B. on habeas corpus, after six days' imprisonment, on the ground that the warrant was invalid, he gave notice of action, and having subsequently quashed the warrant on motion, A. B. caused a writ to be issued in trespass on the same afternoon on which the warrant was so quashed:

Held, First, that the notice of action was not premature, and was well given before the warrant was quashed.

Secondly, that the warrant reciting the information was evidence that the magistrate, in granting the warrant, was acting within his jurisdiction, if by law he had jurisdiction to require sureties for good behaviour in a charge of libel against a private individual.

Thirdly, that in some cases of libel against a private individual, a magistrate has, for the safety of the public, jurisdiction to require sureties for good behaviour, and therefore the action was ill brought in trespass.

Fourthly, that evidence was not admissible at nisi prius to show, under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 9, that the plaintiff has actually written the libellous words.

Trespass, for assault and false imprisonment.

Plea, not guilty by statute.

At the trial before Pollock, C. B. at the last assizes for Cambridgeshire it was shown that the defendant was a magistrate of the Isle of Ely, and that this was an action brought to recover damages for an imprisonment of the plaintiff for six days in the house of correction for the city of Ely under the following circumstances:—The plaintiff lives in Ely, and it appears that during the early part of the present year, certain offensive and libellous inscriptions had been chalked on the walls and pavements of that city, tending to bring into ridicule a person of the name of Watt, who was the superintendent of the railway station at Ely. Suspicion having fallen on the plaintiff and his brother as the authors of these inscriptions, Mr. Watt, on the 30th April, caused an information to be laid before the defendant, charging the plaintiff with having written some of the offensive passages; and upon the hearing, the defendant called upon the plaintiff to find sureties to keep the peace, and for his future good behaviour. The plaintiff, however, refused to comply with the requisition of the magistrate, who thereupon committed him to prison in the house of correction of the city of Ely, for default of such sureties, in the following form:—

"To the constable of the parish of the Holy Trinity, in Ely, in the said Isle, and to the keeper of the house of correction at Ely, in the said Isle.

"Isle of Ely, } Whereas John Haylock, of the parish to wit. } of Saint Mary, in the said Isle, farmer, hath this day been brought before me, the Reverend John Henry Sparke, clerk, one of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said Isle, charged, on the oath of Thomas Palmer, a porter in the employ of the Eastern Counties Railway Company, residing in the said parish of the Holy Trinity, in Ely, with having, about one o'clock on the morning of yesterday, written on the pavements in a lane called Chapel-lane, in the said parish of Saint Mary, the following offensive words, reflecting on the character of Mr. Robert Johnstone Watt, station-master of the Ely railway station (that is to say), 'Donkey Watt, the Railway Jackass,' and it having been stated to me, on the oath of the said Thomas Palmer, that the continued writing for some time past of these offensive words was calculated to produce a breach of the peace, and the said Thomas Palmer having prayed that the said John Haylock might be required to find sufficient sureties to keep the peace towards her Majesty and all her liege subjects, I therefore, the said justice, have ordered and adjudged, and do order and adjudge, that the said John Haylock shall enter into his recognisance in the sum of 30*l.* and two sufficient sureties in the sum of 15*l.* each, to keep the peace towards her Majesty and all her liege subjects for the space of three calendar months now next ensuing. And inasmuch as the said John Haylock hath refused to enter into such recognisance and to find such sureties as aforesaid, I do hereby require and command you, the said constable, forthwith to convey the said John Haylock to the said house of correction, and to deliver him to the said keeper thereof there, together with this warrant. And I do require and command you, the said keeper, to receive the said John Haylock into your custody in the said house of correction, and him there safely to keep for the space of three calendar months, unless he in the meantime enter into such recognisance with such sureties as aforesaid, to keep the peace in the meantime and for the term aforesaid.—Herein fail not.

"Given under my hand and seal the 30th day of April, 1852.

"J. H. SPARKE."

The defendant applied for a writ of habeas corpus to the Q. B.; was discharged from imprisonment on the 6th May; and the warrant was eventually quashed by the same court at the sittings in banc after last Trinity Term. On the afternoon of the same day, the writ was issued, the notice of action required by the same statute having been given to the defendant immediately after the discharge of the plaintiff from custody on the 6th May. The plaintiff now sought and gave evidence of the amount of the costs of procuring his discharge, and those also of quashing the warrant, as well as damages for the illegal imprisonment.

It was then submitted, by Byles, Serjt. (with him Wells), for the defendant: First, That the magistrate had acted within his jurisdiction, because he may hold to bail and require sureties to keep the peace in cases of libel. Secondly, That though the magistrate might have ill exercised his jurisdiction, he had not exceeded it, within the meaning of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 2, because he might well have done what he did, if only he had done it correctly. Thirdly, That the warrant was good. Fourthly, That the action was premature, a month not having expired from a notice given after the warrant was quashed. On these grounds a nonsuit was prayed, inasmuch as the action was in trespass. It was also opened for the defendant that he would give evidence to show that the plaintiff was guilty of the offence for which he was committed, so as to bring the defendant within the protection of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 13.

After hearing O'Malley, Q.C. and Couch, in answer, the learned judge consulted Parke, B. who was sitting in the Crown Court, and then directed a nonsuit to be entered, with leave to the plaintiff to move to set aside the nonsuit, and enter a verdict for himself for such damages as the jury should contingently assess; with leave to the plaintiff to bring forward, on a rule for setting aside the nonsuit, the points now made for him which were all overruled, except that which rested on the prematurity of the action. The damages were accordingly assessed at 43*l*. In Michaelmas Term a rule nisi to set aside the nonsuit and enter a verdict for the plaintiff for 43*l*. was obtained, against which cause was shown by Wells (with him Byles, Serjt.)—First, There is no complete cause of action while anything remains to be done before the action may be brought. There is, therefore, no complete cause of action until the instrument of committal has been quashed. The difficulty that, under sect. 8 of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, there may in many cases be no possibility of bringing any action, if notice cannot be given before quashing, is got rid of by reading the word "act" in that section as if it meant "cause of action." He cited Smith v. De Burgh, 2 Camp. Secondly, The magistrate was acting within his general jurisdiction, and therefore trespass will not lie. The difficulty is this: the warrant recites the libellous act of the plaintiff, and that it had been stated to the magistrate on oath that the continued writing of the libellous words might lead to a breach of the peace, without any finding that it would do so, or that the plaintiff was connected with the person writing; and it is said that the plaintiff was committed to gaol for what somebody else stated. That was not so. The magistrates considered the plaintiff a libeller, and, exercising their general jurisdiction on a charge of libel, held him to bail, and committed him for want of sureties: (Dalton's Justice, 408; 5 Burn's Justice, 1212; Ratt v. Parkinson, 4 N. S. C. 67; R. v. Tregarthen, 5 B. & Ad. 678; Wells v. Bridge, 2 B. & Ad. 287.) Thirdly, The judge ought to have received evidence of the plaintiff's guilt.

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—If you propose to show that the plaintiff was guilty of libel, the evidence was properly refused. If you propose to show that he was guilty of contumaciously abstaining from giving bail, I don't think that an offence within the statute. For that, moreover, you must assume that he was able to find sureties.

O'Malley, Q. C., Couch, and Prentice, contrà.—First, as to the jurisdiction. There was no evidence of the facts necessary to give any jurisdiction except the warrant, which was quashed and not subsisting at the time of the trial, and therefore no evidence of any facts mentioned in it: (Leary v. Patrick, 15 Q. B. 280; Burton v. Brickwell; Stephens v. Clarke, 2 M. & R. 493; Bessey v. Wyndham, 6 Q. B. 166; White v. Morris, 21 L. J. 185, C. P.; Harrison v. Turner, 10 Q. B. 482.) If it were evidence, the matter is one in which the magistrate had not jurisdiction to require sureties of the peace: (R. v. Dunn, 12 A. & E. 599; Rudyard's case, 2 Ventris; Vin. Abr. "Good Behaviour," B.; Bac. Abr. "Surety for Good Behaviour;" 4 Bl. Com. 255; R. v. Shackbergh, 1 Wils. 29; 5 Burn, "Surety;" R. v. Wilkes, 2 Wils. 151.) As to the notice it was well given; quashing is a condition of the remedy, not a part of the cause of action.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—In this case we are of opinion that the notice of action was sufficient, although given before the warrant was quashed. Supposing this warrant to be in the nature of a conviction, so that the action could not have been maintained if the warrant had been in force, we think the notice of action was regularly given on the 18th May. The quashing of the warrant was no part of the cause of action; before the warrant was quashed all the requisites of the notice of action enumerated in the 8th section of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, might be and were complied with, and it was in force. If, in a case of a conviction, a magistrate receives such a notice before the conviction is quashed, he may, at his peril, rely upon the validity of the conviction, and obtain from tendering amends; but if he does so, and the conviction is quashed, an action may be commenced against him one calendar month after the service of the notice. Were not this so, the party injured might be barred of his remedy altogether; for, by the 8th section of the same statute, the action must be commenced within six calendar months next after the act complained of shall have been committed. During the argument it was contended that the six months' notice might be construed to run from the quashing of the conviction; but the commitment is "the act," not the quashing of the conviction on the application of the party injured. The quashing of the conviction is only a condition to the prosecution of the action, like the delivery of an attorney's bill, or receiving a notice of action; and there is nothing to determine in what order the condition shall be complied with. We have next to consider a much more difficult question—whether upon the evidence the defendant is to be taken to have done an act in a matter in which by law he was not justified, or in which he exceeded his jurisdiction. We are of opinion that the warrant obtained by the plaintiff was evidence for the defendant of the information on oath therein recited having been given. Without considering whether, since the case of White v. Morris, the case of Bessey v. Windham can be supported to its full extent, we think that, as the information was a fact within the defendant's knowledge, and the foundation of his act in granting the warrant of commitment, his recital of it must be considered part of the warrant, and admissible evidence for the defendant. In the same manner, the warrant being held admissible, and it appearing therefrom that sureties of the peace were required by reason of the charge of libel, it remains to be considered whether that is a matter in which the defendant, as a justice of the peace, has jurisdiction within the meaning of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44. We do not refer to the cases relating to articles of the peace exhibited by a complainant, as these are subject to regulations different from those which prevail in respect of sureties for good behaviour required by a justice for the safety of the public. The latter is in our opinion the jurisdiction which the defendant intended to exercise, although sureties of the peace are mentioned. The law upon this subject is founded on the stat. 34 Edw. 3, c. 1, by which justices of the peace were first appointed. This statute, entrusting these magistrates with a wide discretion, authorises them to take of all them that be not of good fame sufficient surety for good behaviour towards the King's people. In the 4th Inst. 181, Lord Coke, remarking on this clause, says (the offences against the peace having been provided for): "Now followeth an express authority, given to the justices for the prevention of such offences before they be done; viz. and to take of all them that be not of good fame (that is, that be defamed and justly suspected that they intend to break the peace where they shall be found), sufficient surety and mainprize of their good behaviour towards the king and all his people." In Lee's case, 12 Mod. 514, the question whether insulting language to the mayor of a borough was ground for disfranchising an alderman was decided in the negative; but it is there said the words of contempt, though void as contra bonos mores, although they be against the chief or his brethren, are good causes to punish him, and to commit till he has found sureties for good behaviour; but not on the statute. In Stampe v. Hyde, Rolle Rep. one question was whether calling another a name was a breach of recognisances of good behaviour: the court held that it was, and cases were cited there where a person, having been committed for not finding good sureties for good behaviour for calling an alderman a name, was discharged, such alone being not sufficient. It appears from this and other cases turning on simple words, that aggravated defamation was a ground for requiring sureties of good behaviour. In Hawk. P. C. b. 1, 21, the learned author says: "It seems the better opinion of this day that a man cannot be indicted for any scandalous or contemptuous words spoken of or to such officers not being in the actual execution of their office: for such an offence seems rather to proceed from ill-breeding than from a contempt of the government. However, I am inclined to think (says he), the magistrate has a discretionary power to take such sureties of all those of whom he shall have just grounds to expect to be dangerous, quarrelsome, or scandalous." In Com. Dig. "Forcible Entry," b. 25, it is said: "Sureties for good behaviour may be required of all not of good fame, if he does that which tends to a breach of the peace;" and libellors are specified of whom sureties may therefrom be required. For this he cites Dalton, ch. 124, where it is said: "Libellors may be bound to good behaviour as disturbers of the peace, whether they be the contrivers, the procurors, or the publishers of the libels; for such libelling and defamation, tendeth to the raising of quarrels." Against these authorities cases before Pratt, C. J. afterwards Lord Camden (Rex v. Shuckbury, 1 Wils. 29; Rex v. Wilkes, 2 Wils. 151) were cited. In the first it is doubted whether a surety should be required from a libellor, and in the second it is declared that it is not lawful; but in both cases the prisoners were brought into the K. B. on a warrant from the Secretary of State, the question being raised whether the Secretary of State was a conservator of the peace; and the observations may be confined to those warrants, without having reference to the power given to justices of the peace under the stat. 1 Edw. 3. I likewise observe that those were very heated times, and Lord Camden at that time certainly went to very great length; and if there be any shade on his fame, it is that in what he did he sacrificed a little for popularity in that year. In Butt v. Conant, 1 Brod. & Bing. 548, a warrant of commitment for want of bail to answer an indictment for libel was held valid, and the authority of Lord Camden as applicable to the justices of the peace was denied. On the whole it appears to us that a justice of the peace has jurisdiction to require sureties for good behaviour in some cases of libel against private individuals. If that be true, the defendant had jurisdiction in the matter out of which this cause of action arises, and that the proceedings were within the information, although there was, in our opinion, a great want of discretion in requiring sureties on such an application. It follows, an action of trespass would not lie; and the verdict for the plaintiff must remain. Therefore the rule will be discharged.

REG. v. BRIGGS.

Municipal corporation—Quo warranto—Misconduct of relator.

It is no ground for discharging a rule nisi for a quo warranto calling on defendant to show by what authority he exercises the office of town councillor of a municipal corporation, that it is alleged, in the affidavits on the part of the defendant, that the relator was guilty of bribery at the election in question for town councillors.

J. A. Russell showed cause against a rule nisi calling on the defendant to show by what authority he claimed to exercise the office of town councillor of the borough of Blackburn. It was admitted that the rule nisi for the quo warranto must be made absolute, unless the misconduct of the relator, as imputed by the affidavits on the defendant's part, disentitled the relator to the writ. The power of the court to interfere by writ of quo warranto is discretionary; and if the relator has been guilty of bribery at the very election at which the defendant was chosen, this court will discharge this rule nisi: (Rex v. Parry, 6 A. & E. 810; Rex v. Davies, 4 Burr. 2120, per Lord Mansfield, C. J.)

W. H. Watson, and Boden, contrà, were not called upon.

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—This court has a horror of bribery, but it cannot try that question in this proceeding; and as it is admitted that there is no other ground for showing cause against the rule, it must be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

SITTINGS AFTER TERM.

Friday, Feb. 4.

(Before COLERIDGE, WIGHTMAN, ERLE, and CROMPTON, JJ.)

MOUNTENEY v. COLLIER.

Landlord and tenant.

In an action for rent, the tenant, although he has not quitted possession of the premises, may show that his landlord's title has expired, by notice to quit given by the rightful claimant to the landlord, and notice to tenant not to pay further rent; and he may further show the right of the party claiming by the declarations of the deceased person through whom the landlord came into possession as personal representative.

This was an appeal against the decision of the judge of the Uttoxeter Co. C., Staffordshire.

The action was brought to recover a year's rent (32*l*. 10*s*.) of a messuage and land called the Shoulder of Mutton, due at Lady-day 1852. The defendant paid 14*l*. 2*s*. 5*d*. into court.

It appeared that the plaintiff let to the defendant the premises, consisting of a house and ground, land and outbuildings, shortly before Michaelmas-day 1850, at 32*l*. 10*s*. a year. The defendant paid half a year's rent when due at Lady-day 1851, and had continued in possession down to the present time, but had paid no further rent.

The plaintiff succeeded, as personal representative, one Cotton, his father-in-law, in the occupation of the premises. Cotton had rented other premises of one Ingram, for which he paid rent; and he paid also 1*s*. annually as for a sill of land, which was subsequently increased to 10*s*. per annum. This latter sum the plaintiff continued to pay to Ingram; but what that sill of land was, or where situate, there was no satisfactory evidence.

The plaintiff alleged that the 10*s*. were paid for an encroachment made by reason of an enlargement, about 1830, of the house called the Shoulder of Mutton, when a part of the said house and cellar were extended and built upon land belonging to the said Ingram.

Ingram, in right of the said payment, claimed the Shoulder of Mutton and the rest of the premises, and gave notice to the defendant not to pay any more rent to plaintiff; whereupon the defendant refused rent to the plaintiff.

Ingram, previously to Michaelmas 1850, served plaintiff with a notice to quit "all and every the cottage called the Shoulder of Mutton and cottage Raven's Nest, with buildings, lands, and appurtenances thereunto belonging," &c.

The plaintiff thereupon gave up possession of the cottage called Raven's Nest, but retained the Shoulder of Mutton, and let it, as aforesaid, to the defendant.

Evidence of the declarations of Cotton, as to what the payment of 10*s.* had been for, was tendered, but rejected by the judge.

The defendant also contended that Ingram's claim to the Shoulder of Mutton, and his own recognition of it, brought the title of the premises in question, and excluded the jurisdiction of the Co. C.; but the judge held that the defendant could not dispute the title of the plaintiff, by whom he had been let into possession of the premises. The judge also stated in the case that he gave judgment for the defendant on the ground that the rent, being entire and issuing from the whole of the premises, and the notice to quit having determined the plaintiff's tenancy in respect of the part for which the 10*s.* were paid, viz. the enlarged part of the Shoulder of Mutton, he could not apportion the rent in respect of the remainder.

Baddeley, for the appellant.—This was a mere question between landlord and tenant. The plaintiff let the premises to defendant; the claim is solely for a year's rent; and the defendant has paid 11*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* into court. This admits the tenancy. The notice to quit from Ingram ought not to have been received in evidence, because it amounts to nil habuit in tenementis, and it was not competent to the defendant to set up such a defence; "he could not controvert the continuance of the title of the person under whose demise he continued to hold:" (Balls v. Westwood, 2 Camp. 12.) There was no evidence here of commencing a fresh holding under any other person, or of any eviction of the defendant.

Gray, for the respondent.—This is a case in which the landlord's title had expired during the term. The plaintiff, as the personal representative of Cotton, took possession of the premises on Cotton's death: the declarations of Cotton therefore as to the payment of the 10*s.* were receivable. They would have shown that the payment was for the Shoulder of Mutton, and that Cotton held those premises under Ingram. Then Ingram's notice to quit determined the plaintiff's title to the Shoulder of Mutton. The defendant also had notice not to pay rent to the plaintiff. It was competent to defendant, therefore to show that the plaintiff's title had so expired, and that Ingram was the proper party to receive the rent. The case of Balls v. Westwood is not law. The modern cases are inconsistent with it; and it is now well settled that a tenant may show the expiration of his landlord's title: (England d. Syburn v. Slade, 4 T. R. 682; Grosvenor v. Woodhouse, 1 Bing. 38; Doe d. Jackson v. Ramsbottom, 3 M. & S. 516; Waddilove v. Barnett, 2 Bing. N. C. 538; Newport v. Hardy, 2 Dowl. & L. 921; Doe v. Seaton, 2 C. M. & R. 728; Com. Dig. "Estoppel," E. 8.)

Baddeley, in reply.—Cotton's declarations were not admissible. Ingram's title is no defence unless something was done under it, or the tenant was evicted. The defendant should have shown that his occupation was not by the sufferance of the plaintiff. There must be a substantial and bonâ fide claim of title to oust. The jurisdiction of the Co. C. and the proposed evidence here was not sufficient for that purpose: (Lilley v. Harvey, 11 L. T. Rep. 273.)

COLERIDGE, J.—It is conceded on the part of the respondent that the judgment cannot be sustained; and the point that has been mainly argued turns on this, whether a tenant may show that the title of his landlord has expired during the tenancy, though he has remained in possession till the end of his term. I think it is clear that, under certain circumstances, he may show that; and that he is at liberty to do so when the circumstances are such as, although not an actual eviction, yet are tantamount to it. It would be hard on a man who assents to the new title if he might not assent to a new arrangement with the party claiming, without going out. Another point in this case is, whether or not the declarations of Cotton are receivable in evidence, to show that in the first instance there was a holding under Ingram as to the premises called the Shoulder of Mutton and the other premises, and that some rent was paid for them by Cotton to Ingram. Upon Cotton's death the plaintiff comes into possession as his personal representative, and makes a contract with the defendant, and at the same time Ingram gives the plaintiff notice to quit the premises. The plaintiff thereupon goes out of a certain portion of them, and, according to the language of the judge, the notice to quit had determined the plaintiff's tenancy as to the premises, for which he paid the 10*s.* What, therefore, has been done between Ingram and the defendant is this: contemporary with or preceding the notice to quit, Ingram had gone to him and said, I forbid you any longer paying rent to the plaintiff, and thereupon the defendant refused to pay any rent to the plaintiff. The judge found that this determined the tenancy as to some part of the premises. The defendant then proposed to supply the gap by Cotton's declarations, that the rent was paid for the Shoulder of Mutton. Now declarations of a deceased tenant, as to the party under whom he held, have always been admissible in evidence, and I cannot see why they are not receivable to let in that part of the case as proposed here. Suppose a tenant in fee lets for a term, and the lessee underleases, and then the tenant in fee determines the term, may not the underlessee holding on show the termination of the mesne tenancy? That seems to me no more than showing that his landlord's title has expired. If, then, the declarations of Cotton ought to have been received in evidence, they might have gone to raise a question of title between Ingram and the plaintiff, when it would have been the duty of the judge to surcease and go no further into the matter. As a general rule, we think that a tenant may show that his landlord's title has expired, and that if the case then resolves itself into a question of title, the judge of the Co. C. has no further jurisdiction.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The more important question is, whether or no the title to these corporeal hereditaments come in question? Undoubtedly the precise circumstances do not appear very clearly; but there is enough stated to show that both parties really intended to make this a question of title, viz. whether the defendant was at liberty to set up that the title of his lessor had expired and vested in some one else? If this is so, no doubt the title would come in question. Several matters are agreed on which make this a question of title. It was contended by the plaintiff that the 10*s.* was paid for a part of the house only; and by Ingram, who claimed the whole house, that it was paid for the whole house. Cotton was not a mere stranger; but he occupied the premises, and paid 10*s.* a year to Ingram. There was no sufficient ground, therefore, for excluding the declarations of Cotton.

ERLE, J.—The question in dispute was, whether the tenant was at liberty, without giving up possession of the demised premises, to show that his landlord's title had expired. I think that such a defence was admissible. Since Balls v. Westwood there have been several decisions to the contrary of what was there laid down, and such decisions have reason on their side. If this were not so, a tenant would be liable to pay to his landlord and also to the party entitled to the premises, and it is not right to make a tenant pay twice. If that defence was admissible, it is for the judge to say whether the defence is raised bonâ fide; and if it is, the question of title at once arises. Cotton's declarations were admissible, and tended to show that the title was in Ingram; for the evidence was that he had paid rent for these very premises to Ingram, and the plaintiff is the representative as executor of Cotton. Then, if this was a question of title, the jurisdiction of the Co. C. is at an end.

CROMPTON, J.—I do not know whether it has yet been decided whether, when the tenancy has expired as to part, that is answer to an action for the rent pro tanto. But, without saying whether there should have been an eviction or not, I agree with the rest of the court that the question of title arises, and that would prevent the judge of the Co. C. from going on with the case. New trial ordered.

COURT OF COMMON BENCH.

COUNTY COURT APPEAL.

Monday, Jan. 24.

FULLER, App. CHEVELEY, Resp.

County Court—Contract by letter—Stamp—Nonsuit.

In the County Court the plaintiff tendered in evidence certain letters as proof of the contract sued upon, and the judge admitted them, though they were not stamped; and the question whether they amounted to a contract between the parties was left by the judge to the jury:

Held, on appeal, that this was a question of law for the judge, and not of fact for the jury, and the judgment, therefore, must be reversed.

Held, also, that if the letters amounted to a contract, they were inadmissible for want of a stamp.

Under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 14, the Court of Appeal has power to order a nonsuit to be entered, because in effect a nonsuit is a judgment for the plaintiff.

This was an appeal from the Co. C. of Essex, held at Chelmsford; and the case stated for the opinion of the C. B. was as follows:—

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, who is a draper's assistant, against the defendant, who is a draper, under the following particulars of demand:—"This action is brought to recover 50*l.* damages for breach of contract, by reason of the defendant not taking the plaintiff into partnership in the month of July, August, or September last. Dated this 15th Oct. 1852." The action was tried by a jury in the Co. C. of Essex at Chelmsford on 28th Oct. 1852, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, with 30*l.* damages. On behalf of the plaintiff a correspondence by letters between the plaintiff and defendant was put in evidence; and the following are those which were relied on by the plaintiff as forming the contract:

From the plaintiff to the defendant.

"Dear Sir,—Almost ever since you left Chelmsford my brother's health has been declining, and for the last nine months he has been but little in the business; he has now, I believe, quite made up his mind to leave it, and that as soon as possible, and unfortunately I think I never was more needed. Do you happen to know a first-class man that would suit my trade—one that I could place the utmost confidence in. If I met with such a man I should, after a short time, give him a share in the business; in fact, I do or shall almost immediately require some one to manage the house. It is a good opportunity for any young man that has no means of his own. I am very glad to hear you are so well and happily settled, and I hope and wish you may quickly make a fortune. We are not busy. The trade in the town generally has decreased; market-days are bad. If you can recommend any one, shall be obliged.—Yours, truly, C. CHEVELEY."

From plaintiff to defendant.

"Margate, June 16, 1852.

"Dear Sir,—I received yours in due time: in answer I beg to say, that I do not know of any one likely to suit you; young men of the class you want are not often to be met with.

"If you will make it answer my purpose, and like to re-engage me, please write by return of post.—Yours respectfully, W. FULLER."

From defendant to plaintiff.

"Chelmsford, July 15, 1852.

"Dear Sir,—I have been from home, or should have replied sooner. I never supposed your last was intended as rudeness; therefore will pass it over and reply to yours (of the 9th instant); and as you appear anxious to start as a partner, I make the following proposal to you:—To give you for the first two years one-third of the business; at the end of that time, if we go on pleasantly, to give you an equal share. You may consider one-third share worth to you from 150*l.* to 200*l.*,—all our other arrangements will be the same as my brother's,—rent of premises 60*l.*, capital employed 3000*l.*, allowance for young men and a servant 10*s.* a week per head, which includes coal, beer, and wear and tear; that is all. The furniture in the house to be yours, taken of course as you and my brother agree upon. The buying and paying accounts I reserve to myself, although I shall at any time be glad to get rid of it: the stock to be taken fairly between my brother and yourself.

"I find our [his brother's] agreement is drawn so, that we could at any time have separated by either party giving the other three months' notice; I think that is too short, and ought to be six months, or forfeit 50*l.* or 100*l.*; of course I do not anticipate such a thing, but I believe such clauses are always introduced. Now the next thing is the time. I certainly should wish it by the end of August, for of course we must take stock, and after that time we shall be buying autumn goods. I have written in haste to save the day mail, and also in the greatest noise from the election; but if this is satisfactory to you it will be better to have a copy of agreement drawn first.—Yours truly, C. CHEVELEY."

"Margate, 16th July, 1852.

"Dear Sir,—In reply to yours of this morning, I beg to state I am ready to accede to your proposal. With regard to time, if you could possibly defer my coming until the second week in September it would suit much best, as our season is at the height. Perhaps when you forward the agreement you would name the latest time.—I remain, yours obliged and respectfully, W. FULLER."

From defendant to plaintiff.

"Chelmsford, July 19, 1852.

"Dear Sir,—Mr. Veley is in London; but I will see him to-morrow, and get him to draw a copy and forward to you. The time is very important, and ought not to be later than August; for harvest will then be over, and there will be a little more doing: besides, I shall want to be buying a few autumn goods.—Yours truly, C. CHEVELEY."

From defendant to plaintiff.

"Chelmsford, July 21, 1852.

"Dear Sir,—If you have not named your leaving to Mrs. Goaling you had better not do so for a few days, or until you hear from me again, as a circumstance, quite unexpected and very important, has occurred, which may compel me to alter my circumstances.—Yours truly, C. CHEVELEY."

From plaintiff to defendant.

"Margate, 22nd July, 1852.

"Dear Sir,—I have made every arrangement to leave at the end of August; have engaged a young lady, also a young man; expect him on Saturday next. I thought it would be better to have him as soon as possible, to get used to the business before I left. Must say was very much surprised at the contents of your last.—Yours respectfully, "W. FULLER."

A letter of 23rd July, from defendant below to plaintiff, in which the defendant Fuller stated that circumstances had occurred which prevented him from carrying out the proposed arrangements with the plaintiff below, was put in at the trial, and closed the correspondence.

The questions for the opinion of the court are—

1st. Whether the letters forming the alleged agreement should have been admitted in evidence by the court without being first duly stamped.

2nd. Whether a determination of the said court, not to nonsuit the said plaintiff on the ground that the said letters so admitted in evidence formed no valid and binding agreement upon which the said action could be maintained, was wrong in point of law.

3rd. Whether the determination of the said court, to leave the decision of the question whether the said letters formed such an agreement as last mentioned to the jury, and whether the direction of the court to the jury thereon, was wrong in point of law.

Honeyman, for the appellant.—If there was any contract between the parties in this case, it is contained in the letters before the court. But there was in fact no contract; for the letters of the appellant did not amount to an acceptance of the offer of the plaintiff below, and the terms were not finally adjusted; and particularly this is so with reference to a material consideration, that is to say,—the period when the partnership was to commence: (Wontner v. Shurey, 17 L. J. 36, C. P.; Vollans v. Fletcher, 16 L. J. 173, Ex.; Routledge v. Grant, 4 Bing. 653.) Furthermore, the question as to whether there was a valid acceptance of the terms offered, so as to constitute a contract, was not one for the jury, but a question of law for the judge: (Neilson v. Harford, 8 M. & W. 806; Morrill v. Frith, 8 M. & W. 402; Phillips v. Affalo, 4 M. & G. 846.) Lastly, if the letters did amount to a contract, as they had no stamp, they were inadmissible, and the plaintiff below ought to have been nonsuited.

Channell, Serjt. for the respondent, was not called on.

JERVIS, C. J.—It seems to me that in this case the judge was wrong. It is a simple question of the construction to be put on written documents, and as such was for the decision of the judge, and not for that of the jury. However, as it has now come before us, we must reverse the judgment, for the plaintiff below is in this dilemma: either the letters stated in the case amount to a contract, or they do not; if they constitute a contract, they are inadmissible because they require a stamp; if they do not amount to a contract, then the plaintiff's case failed, and judgment should have gone for the present appellant. Unless we have power to enter a nonsuit, there must therefore be a new trial.

Honeyman, after referring to the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, read sect. 61, which enacts as follows:—"that the Court of Appeal may either order a new trial on such terms as it thinks fit, or may order judgment to be entered for either party, as the case may be, and may make such order with respect to the costs of the said appeal as such court may think proper, and such orders shall be final." The question that arises on this clause is, whether judgment of nonsuit can be said to be a judgment for "either party."

By the COURT.—We think that judgment of nonsuit is, in effect, a judgment for the defendant. A nonsuit will therefore be entered. Judgment accordingly.

HUTHERSETT v. WARD.

Bill of lading—Authority of captain.

Seventy-five quarters of wheat having been shipped, the plaintiffs made an advance thereon, and a bill of lading was signed. Seventy quarters more were then shipped, and a bill of lading made and pledged in the same manner to the plaintiffs. The captain had also been fraudulently induced to sign another bill of lading for the whole 145 quarters:

Held, that when a captain has once signed bills of lading for cargo on board his vessel his power is exhausted; and that therefore the plaintiffs were entitled to recover.

This was an action of trover for wheat, tried at Liverpool before Wightman, J., when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff.

It appeared that 229 quarters of wheat were put on board the ship Celerity, a bill of lading having been previously made out; afterwards seventy-five quarters were shipped by Pottorell; and he then applied to the plaintiffs for an advance on that shipment, and an advance was made and a bill of lading made out. Seventy quarters more were then shipped, and a bill of lading made and likewise pledged in the same way to the plaintiffs. This latter transaction took place about the 16th or 17th April; and on the 16th, before its completion, Hans, Marker and Co. were applied to for an advance on the 145 quarters, viz. the 75 and 70 (the 229 quarters having been previously pledged to them). Hans, Marker and Co. made out a bill of lading, and applied to the captain to sign it, who refused, on the ground that he should be signing for more than he had on board; but on the following day Pottorell imposed on the captain by pretending to destroy the bill of lading for 75 quarters, and so then induced him to sign a bill of lading for 145 instead of for the 70 quarters as he supposed. The question now was as to the 70 quarters only. A rule having been obtained for a new trial,

Unthank now showed cause, and argued that by the act of the captain, and the evidence showed that the plaintiffs had acquired a property in the goods. He cited Howard v. Tucker, 1 B. & Ad. 712; Hawes v. Watson, 5 B. & C. 540; Gillatt v. Hill, 2 Cr. & Mee. 551; Ex parte Thornton, 1 Myl. & Kee.

Jones, in support, contended that the fraud was sufficient to destroy the validity of the second bill of lading; and cited Bates v. Todd, 1 M. & Rob. 106; Caldicell v. Ball, 1 T. R. 205. Cur. adv. vult.

Wednesday, Jan. 26.—POLLOCK, C.B.—This was a motion for a rule for a new trial, and was argued before us this term. We are of opinion that the rule ought to be discharged. It appears to me, that when a captain has signed bills of lading for a cargo that is actually on board his vessel his power is exhausted; he has no right or power, by signing other bills of lading for goods that are not on board to charge his owner. On the present occasion, it appears that the action was brought in respect of bills of lading which had clearly a priority of claim; and we think the verdict was right, and that the rule for a new trial must be discharged. Rule discharged.

STEVENSON v. NEWNHAM.

Pleading— Effect of the word "maliciously" in a count—Bankruptcy—Fraudulent preference—Rights of preferee against a wrongdoer as between the preferee and the assignees—Retrospective effect of disaffirmance by the assignees of a fraudulent transfer, where a trader was adjudicated a bankrupt on his own petition, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 41.

A. purchases from the sheriff goods which had been seized under a writ of fi. fa. issued by himself against the goods of B. C. distrains upon those goods for rent due from B. On the same day B. filed a declaration of insolvency, and thereby committed an act of bankruptcy, upon which, three days afterwards, the 8*th Oct.* 1849, a fiat issued and assignees were appointed. The adjudication was made upon the bankrupt's own application under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 41. A. brings an action against C. At the trial evidence was given to show that A. obtained and procured the goods by way of fraudulent preference, and that B. caused the goods to be taken in execution with intent to defeat or delay his creditors, being at the time indebted to an amount sufficient to constitute a good petitioning creditor's debt; and that, after the commencement of the action, the assignees gave notice to A. that they meant to treat the execution and purchase of the goods as void; and also gave notice to C. not to pay the value of the goods distrained by him to A.:

Held, first, that an act which does not amount to a legal injury cannot be actionable because it is done with a bad intent, and that therefore the insertion in a count of the word "maliciously" does not make it good, if without such allegation it would be bad (a count similar to the first count in all respects, with the exception of the allegation of malice, was held to be bad by the Ex. Ch. in Tancred v. Leyland, 20 L. J. 316, Q. B.), and that, the first count being bad, and damages being assessed generally, there must be a venire de novo.

Secondly, that, where a trader, under statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 41 (the statute 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106 not having come into operation till the 11*th Oct.* 1849), filed a declaration of insolvency, and was adjudicated a bankrupt on his own application and not on the petition of a creditor, the act of bankruptcy on which the petition was to proceed was the declaration of insolvency, and that there could be no relation back further than to that act; and the assignees could not treat the alleged fraudulent preference or taking in execution as an act of bankruptcy; and although they might, if they chose to do so, treat the transaction as fraudulent, yet the fact of it being fraudulent did not make it absolutely void, but voidable only, at their option. That the property therefore in the goods passed to A., and that he was entitled to sue for all injuries done to them up to the time of the interference of the assignees, unless that subsequent interference had relation back to the original delivery, and made the transaction void ab initio.

Thirdly (Dissentiente Erle, J.), that the subsequent interference by the assignees did not take the property out of A. at the time of the distress, and that the issue on the plea of not guilty should have been found for him.

Quære, whether, if the adjudication had taken place on the petition of creditors, though the fiat had issued on the petition of the bankrupt, there would not have been a relation back to the time of the fraudulent preference?

Semble, that a fraudulent preference may be impeached as voidable by the assignees, though at the time there was no petitioning creditor's debt.

Semble, also, that under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 96, ss. 98, 101, where a trader files a declaration of insolvency, and is adjudicated a bankrupt on his own petition, there can be no relation back to any prior act of bankruptcy.

Quære, whether the assignees could not sue A. for the fraud, as a party defrauded can a party guilty of the deceit?

This was an action of trespass on the case. The declaration contained five counts. The first was against the defendants for maliciously distraining for more rent than was due; the second, for an excessive distress; the third, for selling before the expiration of five days; the fourth, for selling for less than the best price; the fifth was in trover. The defendants (plaintiffs in error) severed in their pleading. Stevenson pleaded not guilty by statute to the whole declaration. Wood, the other defendant, in addition to that plea, pleaded to the count in trover that the plaintiff was not possessed. The case was tried before Jervis, C.J. sitting at Westminster after Trinity Term 1851. The jury found for both defendants on the trover count, and on the four first counts for the plaintiff, giving 28*l.* 12*s.* as the entire damages on those counts. It appeared from the evidence given at the trial for the plaintiff, that on May 24, 1849, one Samuel Watkins Saunders was indebted to one Richard Matthew Marshall in the sum of 62*l.* 6*s.* and upwards, and to the plaintiff below in a sum of 60*l.* and upwards; and being so indebted to the plaintiff, gave to the plaintiff, to wit, on Feb. 8, 1849, a warrant of attorney for securing the payment of his debt; that an action was commenced by Marshall to recover his said debt of 62*l.* 6*s.*, and that judgment therein was signed, and a writ of fi. fa. thereupon, on May 29, 1849, issued to the sheriff of the county of Surrey, and was on the same day duly lodged with the sheriff, and that judgment was also duly signed on the said writ of attorney, and a writ of fi. fa. thereupon duly issued on May 25, 1849, founded on the said judgment, and was on the same day lodged with the said sheriff; and that on May 25, 1849, the sheriff seized the goods then in the possession of the said Samuel Watkins Saunders, and on the 21st day of June, by bill of sale, in consideration of 60*l.*, sold the said William Newnham, the plaintiff below, the said goods, which had been appraised at the said sum of 69*l.*; and that at the time of the execution of the said bill of sale, the said William Newnham paid to the said sheriff the sum due to the said Richard Matthew Marshall under the said writ of fi. fa. And that on the 5th Oct. following, the defendants (plaintiffs in error) distrained upon and seized the goods. The defendants gave evidence to prove that Saunders, being a trader, and subject to the bankrupt laws, and being indebted as such trader in a sum sufficient to constitute a petitioning creditor's debt, and to other persons in divers sums of money; the then plaintiff, Newnham, obtained and procured the goods from Saunders as and by way of a fraudulent preference, in contemplation of the bankruptcy of Saunders: and that Saunders procured the said goods to be taken in execution with the intent of defeating and delaying his creditors: and the counsel for the said defendants contended that the defendant would be entitled to the verdict of the jury, should they be of opinion that Newnham obtained and procured the goods by way of a fraudulent preference, or if Saunders had procured the goods to be taken in execution with intent to defeat or delay the creditors. There was also evidence that on the 5th Oct. 1849, Saunders filed a declaration of insolvency, and petitioned the Lord Chancellor, and that a fiat in bankruptcy was thereupon awarded against him on the 8th Oct. 1849, under which fiat he was duly adjudged and declared a bankrupt; and that afterwards, and after the commencement of this suit, to wit, on the 8th April, 1850, John George Graham and John Cottrell were duly appointed assignees; and on the 14th June 1851, as such assignees, served on Newnham a notice in writing that they elected to treat the warrant of attorney of the 16th Feb. 1849, as void as against them as assignees, as also the judgment and execution thereon, and that they should claim against Messrs. Stevenson and Wood, any goods which they had wrongfully or improperly taken under their distress, and the value of which goods were not included in the damages given by the jury in an action against them at the suit of the assignees tried on or about the 22nd Feb. 1851. And it was also proved that the assignees served the defendants with a notice to the like effect. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the primâ facie case of the plaintiff was not answered by the defendants, and that under the circumstances of the case, and on the facts proved, the defendants could not set up the title which the assignees of Saunders might have to the goods. The Lord Chief Justice, in summing up, directed the jury that the primâ facie case of the plaintiff was not answered by the defendants, and that under the circumstances of the case, and on the facts proved by the defendants, could not set up the title which the assignees of Saunders might have to the goods, whether they claimed the same upon the ground that Newnham obtained the said goods and messuage called the Shoulder of Mutton and cottage Raven's Nest, with buildings, lands, and appurtenances thereunto belonging," &c.

The plaintiff thereupon gave up possession of the cottage called Raven's Nest, but retained the Shoulder of Mutton, and let it, as aforesaid, to the defendant.

Evidence of the declarations of Cotton, as to what the payment of 10*s.* had been for, was tendered, but rejected by the judge.

The defendant also contended that Ingram's claim to the Shoulder of Mutton, and his own recognition of it, brought the title of the premises in question, and excluded the jurisdiction of the Co. C.; but the judge held that the defendant could not dispute the title of the plaintiff, by whom he had been let into possession of the premises. The judge also stated in the case that he gave judgment for the defendant on the ground that the rent, being entire and issuing from the whole of the premises, and the notice to quit having determined the plaintiff's tenancy in respect of the part for which the 10*s.* were paid, viz. the enlarged part of the Shoulder of Mutton, he could not apportion the rent in respect of the remainder.

Baddeley, for the appellant.—This was a mere question between landlord and tenant. The plaintiff let the premises to defendant; the claim is solely for a year's rent; and the defendant has paid 14*l.* 2*s.* 5*d.* into court. This admits the tenancy. The notice to quit from Ingram ought not to have been received in evidence, because it amounts to nil habuit in tenementis, and it was not competent to the defendant to set up such a defence; "he could not controvert the continuance of the title of the person under whose demise he continued to hold:" (Balls v. Westwood, 2 Camp. 12.) There was no evidence here of commencing a fresh holding under any other person, or of any eviction of the defendant.

Gray, for the respondent.—This is a case in which the landlord's title had expired during the term. The plaintiff, as the personal representative of Cotton, took possession of the premises on Cotton's death; the declarations of Cotton therefore as to the payment of the 10*s.* were receivable. They would have shown that the payment was for the Shoulder of Mutton, and that Cotton held those premises under Ingram. Then Ingram's notice to quit determined the plaintiff's title to the Shoulder of Mutton. The defendant also had notice not to pay rent to the plaintiff. It was competent to defendant, therefore to show that the plaintiff's title had so expired, and that Ingram was the proper party to receive the rent. The case of Rules v. Westwood is not law. The modern cases are inconsistent with it; and it is now well settled that a tenant may show the expiration of his landlord's title: (England d. Syburn v. Slade, 4 T. R. 682; Grosvenor v. Woodhouse, 1 Bing. 38; Doe d. Jackson v. Ramsbottom, 3 M. & S. 516; Waddilove v. Barnett, 2 Bing. N. C. 538; Newport v. Hardy, 2 Dowl. & L. 321; Doe v. Seaton, 2 C. M. & R. 728; Com. Dig. "Estoppel," E. 8.)

Baddeley, in reply.—Cotton's declarations were not admissible. Ingram's title is no defence unless something was done under it, or the tenant was evicted. The defendant should have shown that his occupation was not by the sufferance of the plaintiff. There must be a substantial and bonâ fide claim of title to oust. The jurisdiction of the Co. C. and the proposed evidence here was not sufficient for that purpose: (Lilley v. Harvey, 11 L. T. Rep. 273.)

COLERIDGE, J.—It is conceded on the part of the respondent that the judgment cannot be sustained; and the point that has been mainly argued turns on this, whether a tenant may show that the title of his landlord has expired during the tenancy, though he has remained in possession till the end of his term. I think it is clear that, under certain circumstances, he may show that; and that he is at liberty to do so when the circumstances are such as, although not an actual eviction, yet are tantamount to it. It would be hard on a man who assents to the new title if he might not assent to a new arrangement with the party claiming, without going out. Another point in this case is, whether or not the declarations of Cotton are receivable in evidence, to show that in the first instance there was a holding under Ingram as to the premises called the Shoulder of Mutton and the other premises, and that some rent was paid for them by Cotton to Ingram. Upon Cotton's death the plaintiff comes into possession as his personal representative, and makes a contract with the defendant, and at the same time Ingram gives the plaintiff notice to quit the premises. The plaintiff thereupon goes out of a certain portion of them, and, according to the language of the judge, the notice to quit had determined the plaintiff's tenancy as to the premises, for which he paid the 10*s.* What, therefore, has been done between Ingram and the defendant is this: contemporary with or preceding the notice to quit, Ingram had gone to him and said, I forbid you any longer paying rent to the plaintiff, and thereupon the defendant refused to pay any rent to the plaintiff. The judge found that this determined the tenancy as to some part of the premises. The defendant then proposed to supply the gap by Cotton's declarations, that the rent was paid for the Shoulder of Mutton. Now declarations of a deceased tenant, as to the party under whom he held, have always been admissible in evidence, and I cannot see why they are not receivable to let in that part of the case as proposed here. Suppose a tenant in fee lets for a term, and the lessee underlesses, and then the tenant in fee determines the term, may not the underlessee holding on show the termination of the mesne tenancy? That seems to me no more than showing that his landlord's title has expired. If, then, the declarations of Cotton ought to have been received in evidence, they might have gone to raise a question of title between Ingram and the plaintiff, when it would have been the duty of the judge to surcease and go no further into the matter. As a general rule, we think that a tenant may show that his landlord's title has expired, and that if the case then resolves itself into a question of title, the judge of the Co. C. has no further jurisdiction.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The more important question is, whether or no the title to these corporeal hereditaments come in question? Undoubtedly the precise circumstances do not appear very clearly; but there is enough stated to show that both parties really intended to make this a question of title, viz. whether the defendant was at liberty to set up that the title of his lessor had expired and vested in some one else? If this is so, no doubt the title would come in question. Several matters are agreed on which make this a question of title. It was contended by the plaintiff that the 10*s.* was paid for a part of the house only; and by Ingram, who claimed the whole house, that it was paid for the whole house. Cotton was not a mere stranger; but he occupied the premises, and paid 10*s.* a year to Ingram. There was no sufficient ground, therefore, for excluding the declarations of Cotton.

ERLE, J.—The question in dispute was, whether the tenant was at liberty, without giving up possession of the demised premises, to show that his landlord's title had expired. I think that such a defence was admissible. Since Balls v. Westwood there have been several decisions to the contrary of what was there laid down, and such decisions have reason on their side. If this were not so, a tenant would be liable to pay to his landlord and also to the party entitled to the premises, and it is not right to make a tenant pay twice. If that defence was admissible, it is for the judge to say whether the defence is raised bonâ fide; and if it is, the question of title at once arises. Cotton's declarations were admissible, and tended to show that the title was in Ingram; for the evidence was that he had paid rent for these very premises to Ingram, and the plaintiff is the representative as executor of Cotton. Then, if this was a question of title, the jurisdiction of the Co. C. is at an end.

CROMPTON, J.—I do not know whether it has yet been decided whether, when the tenancy has expired as to part, that is answer to an action for the rent pro tanto. But, without saying whether there should have been an eviction or not, I agree with the rest of the court that the question of title arises, and that would prevent the judge of the Co. C. from going on with the case. New trial ordered.

COUNTY COURT APPEAL.

Monday, Jan. 24.

FULLER, App. CHEVELEY, Resp.

County Court—Contract by letter—Stamp—Nonsuit.

In the County Court the plaintiff tendered in evidence certain letters as proof of the contract sued upon, and the judge admitted them, though they were not stamped; and the question whether they amounted to a contract between the parties was left by the judge to the jury:

Held, on appeal, that this was a question of law for the judge, and not of fact for the jury, and the judgment, therefore, must be reversed.

Held, also, that if the letters amounted to a contract, they were inadmissible for want of a stamp.

Under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 11, the Court of Appeal has power to order a nonsuit to be entered, because in effect a nonsuit is a judgment for the plaintiff.

This was an appeal from the Co. C. of Essex, held at Chelmsford; and the case stated for the opinion of the C. B. was as follows:—

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, who is a draper's assistant, against the defendant, who is a draper, under the following particulars of demand:—"This action is brought to recover 50*l.* damages for breach of contract, by reason of the defendant not taking the plaintiff into partnership in the month of July, August, or September last. Dated this 15th Oct. 1852." The action was tried by a jury in the Co. C. of Essex at Chelmsford on 28th Oct. 1852, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, with 30*l.* damages. On behalf of the plaintiff a correspondence by letters between the plaintiff and defendant was put in evidence; and the following are those which were relied on by the plaintiff as forming the contract:

From the plaintiff to the defendant.

"Dear Sir,—Almost ever since you left Chelmsford my brother's health has been declining, and for the last nine months he has been but little in the business; he has now, I believe, quite made up his mind to leave it, and that as soon as possible, and unfortunately I think I never was worse manned. Do you happen to know a first-class man that would suit my trade—one that I could place the utmost confidence in. If I met with such a man I should, after a short time, give him a share in the business; in fact, I do or shall almost immediately require some one to manage the house. It is a good opportunity for any young man that has no means of his own. I am very glad to hear you are so well and happily settled, and I hope and wish you may quickly make a fortune. We are not busy. The trade in the town generally has decreased; market-days are bad. If you can recommend any one, shall be obliged.—Yours, truly, C. CHEVELEY."

From plaintiff to defendant.

"Margate, June 16, 1852.

"Dear Sir,—I received yours in due time: in answer I beg to say, that I do not know of any one likely to suit you; young men of the class you want are not often to be met with.

"If you will make it answer my purpose, and like to re-engage me, please write by return of post.—Yours respectfully, W. FULLER."

From defendant to plaintiff.

"Chelmsford, July 15, 1852.

"Dear Sir,—I have been from home, or should have replied sooner. I never supposed your last was intended as rudeness; therefore will pass it over and reply to yours (of the 9th instant); and as you appear anxious to start as a partner, I make the following proposal to you:—To give you for the first two years one-third of the business; at the end of that time, if we go on pleasantly, to give you an equal share. You may consider one-third share worth to you from 150*l.* to 200*l.*—all our other arrangements will be the same as my brother's,—rent of premises 60*l.*, capital employed 3000*l.*, allowance for young men and a servant 10*s.* a week per head, which includes coal, beer, and wear and tear; that is all. The furniture in the house to be yours, taken of course as you and my brother agree upon. The buying and paying accounts I reserve to myself, although I shall at any time be glad to get rid of it: the stock to be taken fairly between my brother and yourself.

"I find our [his brother's] agreement is drawn so, that we could at any time have separated by either party giving the other three months' notice; I think that is too short, and ought to be six months, or forfeit 50*l.* or 100*l.*; of course I do not anticipate such a thing, but I believe such clauses are always introduced. Now the next thing is the time. I certainly should wish it by the end of August, for of course we must take stock, and after that time we shall be buying autumn goods. I have written in haste to save the day mail, and also in the greatest noise from the election; but if this is satisfactory to you it will be better to have a copy of agreement drawn first.—Yours truly, C. CHEVELEY."

"Margate, 16th July, 1852.

"Dear Sir,—In reply to yours of this morning, I beg to state I am ready to accede to your proposal. With regard to time, if you could possibly defer my coming until the second week in September it would suit much best, as our season is at the height. Perhaps when you forward the agreement you would name the latest time.—I remain, yours obliged and respectfully, W. FULLER."

From defendant to plaintiff.

"Chelmsford, July 19, 1852.

"Dear Sir,—Mr. Veley is in London; but I will see him to-morrow, and get him to draw a copy and forward to you. The time is very important, and ought not to be later than August; for harvest will then be over, and there will be a little more doing: besides, I shall want to be buying a few autumn goods.—Yours truly, C. CHEVELEY."

From defendant to plaintiff.

"Chelmsford, July 21, 1852.

"Dear Sir,—If you have not named your leaving to Mrs. Gosling you had better not do so for a few days, or until you hear from me again, as a circumstance, quite unexpected and very important, has occurred, which may compel me to alter my circumstances.—Yours truly, C. CHEVELEY."

From plaintiff to defendant.

"Margate, 22nd July, 1852.

"Dear Sir,—I have made every arrangement to leave at the end of August: have engaged a young lady, also a young man; expect him on Saturday next. I thought it would be better to have him as soon as possible, to get used to the business before I left. Must say was very much surprised at the contents of your last.—Yours respectfully,

"W. FULLER."

A letter of 23rd July, from defendant below to plaintiff, in which the defendant Fuller stated that circumstances had occurred which prevented him from carrying out the proposed arrangements with the plaintiff below, was put in at the trial, and closed the correspondence.

The questions for the opinion of the court are—

1st. Whether the letters bearing the alleged agreement should have been admitted in evidence by the court without being duly stamped.

2nd. Whether a determination of the said court, not to nonsuit the said plaintiff on the ground that the said letters so admitted in evidence formed no valid and binding agreement upon which the said action could be maintained, was wrong in point of law.

3rd. Whether the determination of the said court, to leave the decision of the question whether the said letters formed such an agreement as last mentioned to the jury, and whether the direction of the court to the jury thereon, was wrong in point of law.

Honeyman, for the appellant.—If there was any contract between the parties in this case, it is contained in the letters before the court. But there was in fact no contract; for the letters of the appellant did not amount to an acceptance of the offer of the plaintiff below, and the terms were not finally adjusted; and particularly this is so with reference to a material consideration, that is to say,—the period when the partnership was to commence: (Wontner v. Shortz, 17 L. J. 36, C. P.; Vollans v. Fletcher, 16 L. J. 178, Ex.; Routledge v. Grant, 4 Bing. 653.) Furthermore, the question as to whether there was a valid acceptance of the terms offered, so as to constitute a contract, was not one for the jury, but a question of law for the judge: (Neilson v. Harford, 8 M. & W. 806; Morrill v. Frith, 3 M. & W. 402; Phillips v. Allatt, 4 M. & G. 846.) Lastly, if the letters did amount to a contract, as they had no stamp, they were inadmissible, and the plaintiff below ought to have been nonsuited.

Channell, Serjt. for the respondent, was not called on.

JERVIS, C. J.—It seems to me that in this case the judge was wrong. It is a simple question of the construction to be put on written documents, and as such was for the decision of the judge, and not for that of the jury. However, as it has now come before us, we must reverse the judgment, for the plaintiff below is in this dilemma: either the letters stated in the case amount to a contract, or they do not; if they constitute a contract, they are inadmissible because they require a stamp; if they do not amount to a contract, then the plaintiff's case failed, and judgment should have gone for the present appellant. Unless we have power to enter a nonsuit, there must therefore be a new trial.

Honeyman, after referring to the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, read sect. 61, which enacts as follows:—"that the Court of Appeal may either order a new trial on such terms as it thinks fit, or may order judgment to be entered for either party, as the case may be, and may make such order with respect to the costs of the said appeal as such court may think proper, and such orders shall be final." The question that arises on this clause is, whether judgment of nonsuit can be said to be a judgment for "either party."

By the COURT.—We think that judgment of nonsuit is, in effect, a judgment for the defendant. A nonsuit will therefore be entered. Judgment accordingly.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by FREDERICK BAILEY and C. J. B. HERTSLET, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

Jan. 11 and 26.

HUBBERSTY v. WARD.

Bill of lading—Authority of captain.

Seventy-five quarters of wheat having been shipped, the plaintiffs made an advance thereon, and a bill of lading was signed. Seventy quarters more were then shipped, and a bill of lading made and pledged in the same manner to the plaintiffs. The captain had also been fraudulently induced to sign another bill of lading for the whole 145 quarters:

Held, that when a captain has once signed bills of lading for cargo on board his vessel his power is exhausted; and that therefore the plaintiffs were entitled to recover.

This was an action of trover for wheat, tried at Liverpool before Wightman, J., when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff.

It appeared that 229 quarters of wheat were put on board the ship Celerity, a bill of lading having been previously made out; afterwards seventy-five quarters were shipped by Potterell; and he then applied to the plaintiffs for an advance on that shipment, and an advance was made and a bill of lading made out. Seventy quarters more were then shipped, and a bill of lading made and likewise pledged in the same way to the plaintiffs. This latter transaction took place about the 16th or 17th April; and on the 16th, before its completion, Hans, Marker and Co. were applied to for an advance on the 145 quarters, viz. the 75 and 70 (the 229 quarters having been previously pledged to them). Hans, Marker and Co. made out a bill of lading, and applied to the captain to sign it, who refused, on the ground that he should be signing for more than he had on board; but on the following day Potterell imposed on the captain by pretending to destroy the bill of lading for 75 quarters, and he then induced him to sign a bill of lading for 145 instead of for the 70 quarters as he supposed. The question was then as to the 70 quarters only. A rule having been obtained for a new trial,

Unthank now showed cause.—The cases are all by the act of the captain; and the evidence showed that the plaintiffs had acquired a property in the goods. He cited Howard v. Tucker, 1 B. & Ad. 712; Hawes v. Watson, 5 B. & C. 540; Gillett v. Hill, 2 Cr. & Mee. 581; Ex parte Thornton, 1 Myl. & Kee.

Jones, in support, contended that the fraud was sufficient to destroy the validity of the second bill of lading; and cited Bates v. Todd, 1 M. & Rob. 106; Caldwell v. Ball, 1 T. R. 205. Cur. adv. vult.

Wednesday, Jan. 26.—POLLOCK, C.B.—This was a motion for a rule for a new trial, and was argued before us this term. We are of opinion that the rule ought to be discharged. It appears to me, that when a captain has signed bills of lading for a cargo that is actually on board his vessel his power is exhausted; he has no right or power, by signing other bills of lading for goods that are not on board to charge his owner. On the present occasion, it appears that the action was brought in respect of bills of lading which had clearly a priority of claim; and we think the verdict was right, and that the rule for a new trial must be discharged. Rule discharged.

Friday, Nov. 26.

(Before PARKE, PLATT, and MARTIN, BB., and COLERIDGE, WIGHTMAN, ERLE, and CROMPTON, JJ.)

STEVENSON v. NEWNHAM.

Pleading—Effect of the word "maliciously" in a count—Bankruptcy—Fraudulent preference—Rights of preferee against a wrongdoer as between the preferee and the assignees—Retrospective effect of disaffirmance by the assignees of a fraudulent transfer, where a trader was adjudicated a bankrupt on his own petition, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 41.

A. purchases from the sheriff goods which had been seized under a writ of fi. fa. issued by himself against the goods of B. C. distrains upon those goods for rent due from B. On the same day B. filed a declaration of insolvency, and thereby committed an act of bankruptcy, upon which, three days afterwards, the 8th Oct. 1849, a fiat issued and assignees were appointed. The adjudication was made upon the bankrupt's own application under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 41. A. brings an action against C. The first count of the declaration was for distraining for more rent than was due, with an allegation that it was done maliciously, but without any allegation of damage. There were four other counts, one being in trover. Verdict for the plaintiff on the 1*st*, 2*nd*, 3*rd, and* 4*th counts, with entire damages of* 289*l.* 12*s.*; on the 5*th, verdict for the defendant. At the trial evidence was given to show that A. obtained and procured the goods by way of fraudulent preference, and that B. caused the goods to be taken in execution with intent to defeat or delay his creditors, being at the time indebted to an amount sufficient to constitute a good petitioning creditor's debt; and that, after the commencement of the action, the assignees gave notice to A. that they meant to treat the execution and purchase of the goods as void; and also gave notice to C. not to pay the value of the goods distrained by him to A.:*

Held, first, that an act which does not amount to a legal injury cannot be actionable because it is done with a bad intent, and that therefore the insertion in a count of the word "maliciously" does not make it good, if without such allegation it would be bad (a count similar to the first count in all respects, with the exception of the allegation of malice, was held to be bad by the Ex. Ch. in Tancred v. Leyland, 20 L. J. 316, Q. B.), and that, the first count being bad, and damages being assessed generally, there must be a venire de novo.

Secondly, that, where a trader, under statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 41 (the statute 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106 not having come into operation till the 11*th Oct.* 1849), filed a declaration of insolvency, and was adjudicated a bankrupt on his own application and not on the petition of a creditor, the act of bankruptcy on which the petition was to proceed was the declaration of insolvency, and that there could be no relation back further than to that act; and the assignees could not treat the alleged fraudulent preference or taking in execution as an act of bankruptcy; and although they might, if they chose to do so, treat the transaction as fraudulent, yet the fact of it being fraudulent did not make it absolutely void, but voidable only, at their option. That the property therefore in the goods passed to A., and that he was entitled to sue for all injuries done to them up to the time of the interference of the assignees, unless that subsequent interference had relation back to the original delivery, and made the transaction void ab initio.

Thirdly (dissentiente Erle, J.), that the subsequent interference by the assignees did not take the property out of A. at the time of the distress, and that the issue on the plea of not guilty should have been found for him.

Quære, whether, if the adjudication had taken place on the petition of creditors, though the fiat had issued on the petition of the bankrupt, there would not have been a relation back to the time of the fraudulent preference?

Semble, that a fraudulent preference may be impeached as voidable by the assignees, though at the time there was no petitioning creditor's debt.

Semble, also, that under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 96, ss. 93, 101, where a trader files a declaration of insolvency, and is adjudicated a bankrupt on his own petition, there can be no relation back to any prior act of bankruptcy.

Quære, whether the assignees could not sue A. for the fraud, as a party defrauded can a party guilty of the deceit?

This was an action of trespass on the case. The declaration contained five counts. The first was against the defendants for maliciously distraining for more rent than was due; the second, for an excessive distress; the third, for selling before the expiration of five days; the fourth, for selling for less than the best price; the fifth was in trover. The defendants (plaintiffs in error) severed in their pleading. Stevenson pleaded not guilty by statute to the whole declaration. Wood, the other defendant, in addition to that plea, pleaded to the count in trover that the plaintiff was not possessed. The case was tried before JERVIS, C.J. sitting at Westminster after Trinity Term, 1851. The jury found for both defendants on the trover count, and on the four first counts for the plaintiff, giving 289*l.* 12*s.* as the entire damages on those counts. It appeared from the evidence given at the trial for the plaintiff, that on May 24, 1849, one Samuel Watkins Saunders was indebted to one Richard Matthew Marshall in the sum of 62*l.* 6*s.* and upwards, and to the plaintiff below in a sum of 600*l.* and upwards; and being so indebted to the plaintiff, gave to the plaintiff, to wit, on Feb. 8, 1849, a warrant of attorney for securing the payment of his debt; that an action was commenced by Marshall to recover his said debt of 62*l.* 6*s.*, and that judgment therein was signed, and a writ of fi. fa. thereupon, on May 29, 1849, issued to the sheriff of the county of Surrey, and was on the same day duly lodged with the sheriff, and that judgment was also duly signed on the said writ of attorney, and a writ of fi. fa. thereupon duly issued on May 25, 1849, founded on the said judgment, and was on the same day lodged with the said sheriff; and that on May 25, 1849, the sheriff seized the goods then in the possession of the said Samuel Watkins Saunders, and on the 21st day of June, by bill of sale, in consideration of 600*l.*, sold the said William Newnham, the plaintiff below, the said goods, which had been appraised at the said sum of 695*l.*; and that at the time of the execution of the said bill of sale, the said William Newnham paid to the said sheriff the sum due to the said Richard Matthew Marshall under the said writ of fi. fa. And that on the 5th Oct. following, the defendants (plaintiffs in error) distrained upon and seized the goods. The defendants gave evidence to prove that Saunders, being a trader, and subject to the bankrupt laws, and being indebted as such trader in a sum sufficient to constitute a petitioning creditor's debt, and to other persons in divers sums of money; the then plaintiff, Newnham, obtained and procured the goods from Saunders as and by way of a fraudulent preference, in contemplation of the bankruptcy of Saunders; and that Saunders procured the said goods to be taken in execution with the intent of defeating and delaying his creditors; and the counsel for the said defendants contended that the defendant would be entitled to the verdict of the jury, should they be of opinion that Newnham obtained and procured the goods by way of a fraudulent preference, or if Saunders had procured the goods to be taken in execution with intent to defeat or delay the creditors. There was also evidence that on the 5th Oct. 1849, Saunders filed a declaration of insolvency, and petitioned the Lord Chancellor, and that a fiat in bankruptcy was thereupon awarded against him on the 8th Oct. 1849, under which fiat he was duly adjudged and declared a bankrupt; and that afterwards, and after the commencement of this suit, to wit, on the 8th April, 1850, John George Graham and John Cottrell were duly appointed assignees; and on the 14th June 1851, as such assignees, served on Newnham a notice in writing that they elected to treat the warrant of attorney of the 16th Feb. 1849, as void as against them as assignees, as also the judgment and execution thereon, and that they should claim against Messrs. Stevenson and Wood, any goods which they had wrongfully or improperly taken under their distress, and the value of which goods were not included in the damages given by the jury in an action against them at the suit of the assignees tried on or about the 22nd Feb. 1851. And it was also proved that the assignees served the defendants with a notice to the like effect. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the prima facie case of the plaintiff was not answered by the defendants, and that under the circumstances of the case, and on the facts proved, the defendants could not set up the title which the assignees of Saunders might have to the goods. The Lord Chief Justice, in summing up, directed the jury that the prima facie case of the plaintiff was not answered by the defendants, and that under the circumstances of the case, and on the facts proved by the defendants, could not set up the title which the assignees of Saunders might have to the goods, whether they claimed the same upon the ground that Newnham obtained the said goods and chattels from Saunders as and by way of fraudulent preference in contemplation of bankruptcy, or upon the ground that Saunders procured the goods to be taken in execution, with the intent of defeating and delaying his creditors; and to this ruling of his Lordship the counsel for the defendant Stevenson excepted.

This cause was originally tried before the late Lord Chief Justice Wilde at the sittings after Trinity Term, 1850. On that occasion his Lordship allowed the defendants (the plaintiffs in error) to set up the jus tertii of the assignees of Saunders (the assignees assisted the defence as much as they could), and the defendants obtained a verdict. This was afterwards set aside by the C. P., reported in 20 L. J. 111, C. P. As the C. P. in their judgment held that the mere fact of the assignees of Saunders having brought an action against Newnham was no evidence of their election to treat as void the warrant of attorney given to Newnham, on the ground that the same was given by way of fraudulent preference (or in contemplation of bankruptcy), the assignees gave specific notice of such their intention subsequent to the issuing of the writ. The cause went down for trial a second time at the sittings after Trinity Term, 1851; and Jervis, C. J., holding that the service of the notices by the assignees made no substantial difference, refused to allow the defendant's counsel to go into evidence of the warrant of attorney having been given either by way of fraudulent preference, or in contemplation of bankruptcy.

H. Hill, Q. C. for the plaintiff in error. The first point is, the judgment for entire damages is erroneous: the first count being bad: (Leyland v. Tancred, 20 L. J. 316, Q. B. overruling Taylor v. Hemmeker, 12 Ad. & Ell. 486.) The only difference between the first count in this case and the count in Leyland v. Hemmeker is that it contains the word "maliciously." But the insertion of the word "maliciously" in a count for doing a thing not unlawful per se does not make the count good. Legal damage must be alleged: (Per Williams, J. in Cottered v. Jones, 21 L. J. 2, C. P.) Secondly, the plaintiff (in error) is entitled to judgment on the bill of exceptions. When this case was before the C. P. (20 L. J. 111, C. P.) the facts were different. There is now the additional fact of the interference of the assignees. But without that their title to the goods would relate back to the fraudulent preference; and if the defendant below was a wrongdoer, the right of action was in the assignees. The assignees represent the creditors, and may claim all goods which have been disposed of by the bankrupt contrary to the Bankrupt Laws: and the fact of the trader having been made a bankrupt upon his own petition makes no difference. They are in the same position as if a petitioning creditor had made him a bankrupt. If that were not so, and any goods, as in this case, had been obtained by way of fraudulent preference, they might be sold to another person knowing all the circumstances, and he would be protected against the assignees. Hancock v. Caffin, 8 Bing. 358, is all-fours with this case. Leake v. Loveday, 4 M. and G. 972: Hardman v. Wilcock, 9 Bing. 382, n. I submit that where a party takes goods by way of fraudulent preference, and an injury is done to those goods by which their value is diminished, if the assignees elect afterwards to avoid the transfer, the party doing the injury is liable to an action at the suit of the assignees; and if the party is sued by the person to whom the fraudulent transfer was made, he may set up the jus tertii of the assignees. Hall v. Wallace, 7 M. & W. 353. Ex parte Phillpott, 1 De Gex, 346. Though a trust deed cannot be impeached under a bankrupt's own fiat, if there had been a petitioning creditor it might. Here the assignees do not stand in the position of the bankrupt, but represent the creditors, and may avoid the transfer. (It was upon the suggestion of Crompton, J., taken by consent, that Newnham on the 11th Sept. placed a man in possession of the goods, and was entitled to sue if the assignees were not, and also that an action of trover was brought by the assignees against Newnham on the day after the fiat.)

Pashley (with him Prentice).—There were two writs with the sheriff. [PARKE, B.—The only point is whether the disaffirmance and demand by the assignees has operation back under the old Act of Parliament, the transaction between the bankrupt and Newnham not being an act of bankruptcy under that Act, so as to divest the property in the goods from the beginning.] There is no authority for carrying back the operation of disaffirmance so far. In Hardman v. Willcock notice was given to the defendant before the sale, and he was the mere agent of the plaintiff. Leake v. Loveday is distinguished by the C. P. Suppose judgment had been recovered before disaffirmance, would not the plaintiff below be entitled to execution? The grievance of the plaintiff below might not be coextensive with that of the assignees, for he might be entitled to possession of the goods until disaffirmance, and the measure of damages might be different. [ERLE, J.—Suppose a wrongdoer has obtained damages, can he be allowed to keep the amount of the damages, or could the assignees recover it from him?] I don't see how they could.

H. Hill, Q.C. in reply, referred the court to White v. Garden, 10 C. B. 919; Butler v. Baker, 2 Coke's Rep. part 3, fol. 253, p. 26; Mansell's case, 6 Coke, part 13, fol. 19, p. 416. [PARKE, B. referred to 1 Summer (American Reports), 509.]

JUDGMENT.

Friday, Jan. 28.—PARKE, B.—I have to deliver judgment in the case of Stevenson v. Newnham, which was argued before my brothers Coleridge, Wightman, Erle, Platt, Martin, Crompton, and myself. In this case we have already intimated our opinion that there must be a venire de novo. The doubt is on the four first counts. It is first necessary to state what the pleadings were. It was an action on the case by the defendant in error, Newnham, against the plaintiff in error, Stevenson; the declaration stating that the plaintiff Newnham, the plaintiff in that action, being entitled to certain premises, seized the goods in question for a distress, on an allegation that more rent was due than really was due. The second count is for taking an unreasonable distress; the third count for selling before five days had elapsed; the fourth count for not selling at the best price; and the fifth count is in trover. Pleas, the general issue by statute, and also to the count in trover that the plaintiff was not possessed, on which issue was joined, and a verdict was found on all the pleas for the plaintiff; and the question comes before the Court on a bill of exceptions. In this case we have already intimated our opinion that there must be a venire de novo; the damages on the four first counts having been assessed generally, and the first count being bad. This count can only be distinguished from that which was held bad by the Ex. Ch. in the case of Tancred v. Leyland, 20 L. J. 816, Q.B. by the immaterial circumstance that it contains an averment that the distress for too much rent was "maliciously" made. An act which does not amount to a legal injury cannot be actionable because it is done with a bad intent; but though it would be sufficient for us to decide this point, we think it right, in order to save the expense of another trial, and a further discussion of the important question in the case upon another bill of exceptions, to give our opinion upon the principal point which was argued before us. That opinion is in favour of the defendant in error. The material facts are these: The plaintiff below brings his action for an excessive and also for an irregular distress upon his goods, made upon the 5th Oct. 1839. The plaintiff below obtained them by a purchase from the sheriff under a writ of fi. fa. at his own suit, founded on a warrant of attorney for 600*l.*, given by one Saunders to him. The writ was put into the hands of the sheriff on the 25th May, 1839, and a bill of sale given by the plaintiff to the sheriff on the 21st June for 600*l.* On the 29th May another writ against Saunders was put into the sheriff's hands at the suit of one Marshall for 62*l.*, and the plaintiff paid him off; and the assignment to the plaintiff was under both writs. In the view, however, that we take of the question, that circumstance need not be considered. The plaintiff took possession of the goods, and, on the 5th Oct. 1849, the distress of those goods of which the plaintiff complains, for rent due from Saunders and another to the defendant, took place; and, on the same 5th Oct. Saunders filed a declaration of insolvency, and thereby committed an act of bankruptcy; and, on the 8th Oct. 1849, a fiat was obtained on that act of bankruptcy, under which assignees were appointed. Evidence was given to show that the plaintiff obtained and procured the goods by way of fraudulent preference, and that Saunders caused the goods to be taken in execution with intent to defeat or delay his creditors, being then indebted to some in a sufficient sum to constitute a good petitioning creditor's debt; and, on the 14th June, 1851, long after the commencement of this suit, the assignees appointed under the fiat gave notice to the plaintiff that they meant to treat the warrant of attorney, judgment, and execution as void, and should claim the goods against the defendant as being wrongfully taken under a distress. They also gave a notice to the defendant stating that they had brought an action against the plaintiff to try the validity of the warrant of attorney, and had recovered 230*l.*, being the value, with certain deductions, of the goods seized under the plaintiff's writ of execution, and requiring the defendants not to pay the value of the goods distrained by them to the plaintiff, and claiming from them the damages for the illegal distress, the subject of this action. The Lord Chief Justice, in summing up the evidence given in the cause to the jury, gave his opinion that the prima facie case of the plaintiff was not answered by proof as above set forth, and that under the circumstances of the case and on the facts proved, the defendant could not set up the title which the assignees of the said bankrupt might have had in the said goods, whether they claimed the same upon the ground that the said plaintiff obtained the said goods and chattels from the said bankrupt, by way of fraudulent preference of the said plaintiff, in contemplation of the bankruptcy of the said bankrupt, or upon the ground that the said bankrupt procured the said goods to be taken in execution with the intent of defeating and delaying his said creditors. This summing up was according to the decision of the court on a motion for a new trial in this case, as reported in 10 C. B. 913; the additional matter given in evidence on the second trial not making any difference in the opinion of the Chief Justice. We think that this summing up was perfectly correct. The first question in this case is, whether the receipt of the goods by the plaintiff under the circumstances stated would have been a mere fraudulent preference, to be treated simply as such in this action, or as an act of bankruptcy. A fraudulent delivery of goods, or the causing them to be taken in execution, with intent to defeat or delay creditors, is an act of bankruptcy; and if in this case the assignees under this fiat could have resorted to such an act of bankruptcy, we should have thought that their title would have related back to the delivery of the goods, or the fraudulent execution itself, as an act of bankruptcy; and the property in the goods would thereby have vested in the assignees from that moment, and so the plaintiff would not have been entitled to sue for the part of his alleged cause of action, the loss of the temporary possession, or for the excess in taking more than ought to have been taken as a distress; and if the fiat had been issued upon the petition of any of those creditors to whom the bankrupt was indebted at the time of the transfer of the goods to the plaintiff, in a sufficient sum to make them good petitioning creditors, the assignees under that fiat would have had a title to the goods by that very transfer. But on the 8th Oct. 1849, when the fiat issued, the old bankrupt law, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, was in force—the new statute, the 12 Vict. c. 106, did not come into operation until the 11th Oct. 1849, and under the former statute, sect. 41, the L. C. can grant a fiat on the petition of the trader himself only when he has filed a declaration of insolvency, which is made an act of bankruptcy by 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 6. A very important question in the case arises upon the construction of that clause. It provides, "That the L. C. shall have power upon petition made to him in writing, by any trader who shall have filed a declaration of insolvency in manner and form prescribed by the statute in that case made and provided, &c. to issue a fiat in bankruptcy against such trader, and to authorise the prosecution thereof in the Court of Bankruptcy in London or in any District Court of Bankruptcy, and that it shall and may be lawful for such court, so authorised as aforesaid, upon the application of such trader, and upon the proof of the trading, and of the filing of such declaration, or upon the application of any creditor or creditors of such trader to such amount as by the said statute required for a petitioning creditor's debt, and upon proof of the matters requisite to support a fiat issued upon the petition of the creditors, to make the adjudication of bankruptcy under such fiat; and all other further proceedings under such fiat shall be thenceforth prosecuted and carried on in like manner as if such fiat had been issued and adjudicated upon on the petition of a creditor of the bankrupt." It may be collected from the bill of exceptions in this case that the adjudication was made upon the bankrupt's own application, not on that of creditors, to the amount sufficient to constitute a petitioning creditor's debt, who might have obtained that adjudication. It seems to us that, in such a case the act of bankruptcy on which the petition is to proceed is the declaration of insolvency, and that there can be no relation back further than to that Act. It possibly might have been otherwise if the adjudication had taken place on the petition of the creditors, though the fiat had issued on the petition of the bankrupt, for then, as in the case of an ordinary commission or fiat, there may perhaps be a relation back to any act of bankruptcy which can be proved to have been committed previous to the petitioning. The provision at the close of the section, that the proceedings may be prosecuted and carried on in like manner as if the fiat had been issued and adjudicated upon on the petition of a creditor, was merely added for the purpose of providing that all the meetings, examinations, &c. should take place in the same way as any ordinary fiat or commission, this section being the first by which a fiat can issue on the bankrupt's own petition. It would appear from the report of the case in 1 De Gex, 528, Ex parte Norton, that Lord Justice Knight Bruce, then V. C., expressed an inclination of opinion that fraudulent preferences might be impeached under a fiat on a bankrupt's own petition, if there was a sufficient creditor's debt at the time of such fraudulent preference. They certainly might be so impeached, even without the circumstance of there being such a creditor, as voidable, but whether as an act of bankruptcy is a different question; and the cautious manner in which the V. C. expressed himself shows that he had formed no decided opinion upon the subject. Whether it would be otherwise under the recent stat. 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, we need not inquire; from the sections 98 and 101, it would rather seem not. Under the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 41, we think that the declaration of insolvency, at all events where the adjudication proceeds upon the plaintiff's application, is the only act of bankruptcy to which there can be a relation. Our opinion being such upon this somewhat doubtful point, it follows that the assignees under the fiat in this case could not treat the alleged fraudulent preference or taking in execution as an act of bankruptcy; but they were entified in treating it as a fraudulent preference or an act of bankruptcy procured by the bankrupt in contemplation of bankruptcy under the old law, 6 Geo. 4, c. 16. Such acts, when voluntary and in contemplation of bankruptcy, cannot be valid against the assignees if they choose to avoid them: they are on the same footing as the obtaining goods by one person from another person by fraud and deceit. Though in cases of fraudulent preference, they may be avoided where the party obtaining them may be perfectly innocent. The right of the assignees to avoid such a transaction is founded on the policy of the bankrupt law, which favours the equal division of the bankrupt's property. But we entirely agree with the learned Lord Chief Justice and the court of C. P. that the effect of this, as in the case of an ordinary fraud, is not absolutely to avoid the contract or transaction which has been caused by that fraud, but to render it voidable at the option of the party defrauded; the fraud only gives a right to rescind. In the first instance, the property passes in the subject-matter. An innocent purchaser from the fraudulent possessor may acquire an indisputable title to it, though it is avoidable between the original parties. This was decided in the recent case of White v. Gordon, 10 C. B. 919, and had been so before in the case of Parker v. Patrick, 5 T. Rep. 175; in 1 Sum. Rep. (Mr. Justice Story's decision), page 309; by Lord Kenyon, in Wright v Lewis, 4 Esp. 82; and in Lord v. Green, 5 M. & W. 219, 221; and Campbell v. Fleming, 1 A. & E. 41. It must be considered, therefore, as established that fraud only gives a right to avoid a contract or purchase; that the property vests until avoided; and that all the mesne dispositions to persons not parties, or at least not conversant of the fraud, are valid. The property having passed, the person in possession is, until the party defrauded interferes, entitled to sue for all injuries to his property, and the plaintiff in this case has an undoubted right of action, unless the subsequent interference of the assignees has relation back to the original delivery, and avoids the transaction ab initio, so that they would have a right to bring an action against third persons for the same unlawful distress for which the plaintiff has recovered. In the ensuing part of this opinion Mr. Justice Erle does not concur. I must, therefore, be considered as speaking the opinion of the other judges who heard the case. We cannot find any authority for the position that there is a relation back, and we are at a loss to discover any principle upon which it can rest. On the other hand, we have the authority of the decision in Nixon v. Jenkins, 2 H. Bl. 135, where the court held that the assignees could not recover in trover goods, fraudulently sold by the bankrupt, in order to cheat his creditors, without a demand and refusal. They held that the parties when the sale was made were competent to contract. There was no unlawful taking of the goods, though the transaction was liable to be impeached by the assignees; they might either affirm or disaffirm the contract, and if they thought proper to disaffirm it they ought to have demanded the goods, and then a refusal to deliver would have been evidence of the conversion. It may be inferred that the mere bringing the action of trover was not considered as having any relation back. In this case, the goods at the time of the seizure by the defendant were the plaintiff's property, and nothing has occurred to divest that property, and make the goods at that time the property of the assignees; and therefore the issue of not guilty, involving the plaintiff's title at that time, ought to be found for the plaintiff. Whether the assignees could not sue the plaintiff for this fraud, as the party defrauded could the party guilty of the deceit, is another question, with which we need not trouble ourselves in this inquiry.

ERROR FROM THE EXCHEQUER.

Wednesday, Feb. 2.

(Before Coleridge, Wightman, Erle, Williams, Talfourd, and Crompton, JJ.)

The London and South-Western Railway Company v. The South-Eastern Railway Company.

Railway company—Agreement for use of line by another company—Assignment of the benefit of that agreement to a third company.

The Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company and the London and South-Western Railway Company applied to Parliament for leave to make certain lines of railway, both companies requiring six miles thereof in the same direction; both companies obtained Acts of Parliament for their respective lines of railway on the same day, the Reading Company's Act giving power to them to lease their line to the South-Eastern Railway Company, and the six miles required by both the Reading and South-Western Companies the South-Western Company were to make, &c.; but they were to agree with the Reading Company for the use by the Reading Company of that six miles portion of the line required by the Reading Company, upon terms to be agreed upon by the Reading Company and the South-Western Company, and, in case of difference, the terms were to be settled by arbitration. An agreement (16th April 1847) was entered into between those accordingly, upon terms of paying thirty-five per cent. calculated upon the gross amounts to be received by the South-Western for such part of the traffic of the Reading Company as should pass over all or any part of the continuous line. Subsequently (15th March 1850) the Reading Company leased their line to the South-Eastern Railway Company for 1000 years, together with all benefit and advantage of the agreement of the 16th April 1847 made by them with the South-Western Company. The South-Western Company declined to give the advantage of their agreement with the Reading Company to the South-Eastern Company, but claimed to be paid differently, a much larger sum than would be payable to them under that agreement:

Held, that the South-Eastern Railway Company were, under the terms of the Acts of Parliament and their lease, entitled to the benefit of the agreement (16th April 1847) by the Reading Company with the South-Western Company; and that the South-Eastern Company could maintain an action of debt for the money received by the South-Western Company for the South-Eastern Company, allowing such deductions only as would accord with the terms of that agreement.

This was an action in debt for money had and received, brought against the London and South-Western Railway Company to recover 4740*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* alleged to be due to the South-Eastern Railway Company for passenger-money in respect of tickets sold to passengers for the latter company by the London and South-Western Railway Company at the Guildford railway station, and also in respect of certain charges for the carriage of goods, &c.

The defendants below pleaded—first, never indebted; and, secondly, a set-off of 5798*l.*, the amount of toll claimed to be payable by the plaintiffs below to the defendants below.

The cause came on for trial before Pollock, C.B. at the sittings in London after Hilary Term 1852, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiffs for the whole amount of their claim, with leave to the defendants to move to enter a verdict for them instead, or a nonsuit, or to reduce the damages; with leave also to either party to tender a bill of exceptions; it having been agreed that the question should be argued before the court below, and that their view should be taken as that of the ruling of the learned judge at the trial, and that either party might then tender a bill of exceptions.

The case was accordingly argued before the court below; and their opinion being that the defendants below were indebted to the plaintiffs, and that the set-off pleaded ought not to be allowed, and that consequently the plaintiffs were entitled to the judgment of the court, the defendants below, in pursuance of the above arrangement, tendered a bill of exceptions.

The facts were these:—After the passing of the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. clxxi. &c.), the London and South-Western Farnham and Alton Branch Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. clxxiii.), and the Guildford Extension of Portsmouth and Farnham Railway Act (10 & 11 Vict. c. cxlv.), an agreement was entered into on the 16th April, 1847, between the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company and the London and South-Western Railway Company (the plaintiffs), by which, after reciting several Acts of Parliament, and the powers conferred by them upon the respective parties to the agreement, it was contracted or agreed that the Reading Company should have the rights to use and work over in perpetuity, with their own engines and carriages, the continuous line between the actual point of junction in Worplesdon and the point of junction in Arlington, and to use the station in Guildford of the continuous line, and all other stations and warehouses, works and conveniences between such points of junction, for the purpose of carrying and accommodating all the traffic of the Reading Railway requiring to pass over the continuous line, and also over all or any part of the Reading Railway. For this use of their line the Reading Company were to pay the plaintiffs a sum equal to 35 per cent. calculated upon the gross amounts to be received by the former for such part of their traffic as should pass over all or any part of the continuous line. It was further agreed that, in every case of difference between the parties to the agreement as to the foregoing stipulations, or any of them, either in regard to construction or otherwise, such difference should be referred to arbitration, as provided by the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. On the 15th March, 1850, the Reading Company leased their line to the defendants, the South-Eastern Company, on the usual terms, for a period of 1000 years, at the annual sum of 33,000*l.* all benefit and advantage of the agreement of 16th April, 1847, being also by the lease demised and granted to the defendants. The amount of the plaintiffs' set-off was calculated at the rate of 2*d.* per mile for each passenger, which they charged under their account, by which they have power to charge for six miles where the traffic passes over a less distance; whereas if they were only entitled to charge the defendants under the agreement of April 1847, their claim would be limited to 35 per cent. upon the gross amounts.

The Reading Company were incorporated by 9 & 10 Vict. c. clxxi., for making a railway from the Great Western Railway at Reading, to join the London and Brighton and South-Eastern Railway at Reigate. At the time the Reading Company were applying to Parliament for leave to make the railway, the plaintiffs were also applying to make a branch railway to Farnham and Alton; and, inasmuch as the Reading Company would, for a distance of six miles, pass over nearly the same ground as the plaintiffs' branches, Parliament directed, by the South-Western, Farnham, and Alton Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. clxxiii., that the latter alone should make the railway over these six miles, and that the Reading Company should run over that portion upon such terms and conditions as might be agreed upon between the two companies. The agreement of April 1847 was accordingly entered into.

Butt, for the plaintiff in error, contended that the agreement of 16th April 1847 was not mutually binding upon both parties to it; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to charge the defendants the full toll authorised by the statutes. He referred to the several Acts of Parliament of the two companies; the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act (8 Vict. c. 20) particularly sects. 112 and 113, which Act was incorporated into their special Acts; the lease by the Reading company to the South-Eastern company; and to the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company v. The East Lancashire Railway Company, 21 L. J. 62, Ex.

Sir F. Kelly, for the defendants in error, argued that the plaintiffs were not, in any view of the case, entitled to more than 729*l.* by way of set-off, and that only by virtue of or under the agreement of April, 1847; that if not so entitled in that way, they could not claim any set-off, no settlement of the amount by arbitration having taken place; and that the intention of the Legislature was to give the defendants the same rights as were given to the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Company, under whom the defendants claimed. The West London Railway Company v. The London and North-Western Railway Company, decided by the Court of Error from the Common Pleas a few days since only, upon a bill of exceptions tendered to the ruling of Jervis, C. J., was in principle precisely similar to the present case, and was conclusive upon that part of it. (He was then stopped from arguing the other point.)

Butt in reply. Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 7.—Wightman, J. delivered judgment.—The question for the decision of the court in this case was whether the plaintiffs in error had an available set-off against the defendants in error to a greater amount than 729*l.*; and there was no doubt that they had not, if the plaintiffs in error were bound as between them and the defendants in error, by an agreement made between the plaintiffs in error and the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company, and if the defendants in error were entitled to stand in the place of the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company in respect to that agreement, and to insist on the fulfilment with them of the terms and conditions contained in it, although they were not originally parties to it. It appears by the bill of exceptions, and the statutes therein referred to, that in 1846 a projected company, called the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company, to make a railway from Reading to Reigate through Guildford, was formed; and that the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway was to join the London and Brighton, the London and South-Western, and the South-Eastern Railways; and at the same time the London and South-Western Railway Company proposed to make a branch railway to Farnham and Alton. It also appeared that the line proposed to be made by the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company ran so nearly in the same direction with part of the branch line then proposed to be made by the London and South-Western Railway Company, that it was proposed that the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company should for that space adopt the line to be made by the London and South-Western Railway Company. Both parties obtained Acts of Parliament on the same day, the 16th July, 1846. The Act for making the railway from Reading through Guildford to Reigate is the 9 & 10 Vict. c. clxxi.; and, by sect. 50, the company are empowered to lease their railway to the South-Eastern Railway Company upon such terms and conditions as should be or may have been agreed upon between them. The Act for enabling the London and South-Western Railway Company to make a branch to Farnham and Alton is the 9 & 10 Vict. c. clxxiii.; and by section 17, after reciting that between certain points mentioned in the Act it had been proposed that the traffic of the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway should adopt the line authorised by that Act, it was enacted that it should be lawful for the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company to use the railway by that Act authorised to be made between the stated points, and the station, warehouses, works, and conveniences belonging thereto, for the purpose of accommodating the traffic of the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway requiring to pass between those points, subject to such reasonable regulations, and upon such terms and conditions, as might from time to time be agreed on, or as might have been already agreed on between the London and South-Western Railway Company and the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company. The Railway Clauses

Consolidation Act, 8 Vict. c. 20 (which is by reference incorporated into both the special Acts), sections 112 and 113 say, where a railway company shall be authorised by a special Act to lease the railway or any part thereof to any company, "such lease shall entitle the company or person to whom the same shall be granted to the free use of the railway or portion of the railway comprised therein; and during the continuance of any lease all the powers and privileges granted to and which might otherwise be exercised and enjoyed by the company by virtue of the special Act, with regard to the possession or enjoyment and management of the railway, or of the part thereof comprised in such lease, and tolls to be taken thereon, shall be exercised and enjoyed by the lessee and/or such regulations and restrictions as are by the Act or the special Act imposed on the company." After the two special Acts had been passed, an agreement was made on April 16, 1847, between the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Company of the one part, and the London and South-Western Railway Company of the other part, by which the terms and conditions on which the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Company should have the right to use for their traffic the part of the line of the London and South-Western Railway Company before referred to, and the stations, warehouses, &c. belonging thereto, were settled and adjusted; and it was agreed that the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company should have such right in perpetuity. On the 15th March 1850 the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company, by an indenture of that date between them and the South-Eastern Railway Company, reciting all the Acts of Parliament relating to that railway, and the agreement with the London and South-Western Railway Company, demised to the London and South-Eastern Railway Company for a thousand years the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate railway, and all the undertaking of the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company, with the free use of the railway and stations, &c. and all the powers and privileges which might be exercised and enjoyed by the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company, and all the benefit and advantage of the agreement of the 16th April, 1847, and subject to the obligations and liabilities imposed upon the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company. Now, the London and South-Eastern Railway Company contend that the London and South-Western Railway Company are bound to fulfil to them the terms and conditions of the agreement of the 16th April, 1847, though not made with them, but with the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company; and that, by the lease and the Acts of Parliament before referred to, the rights and privileges of the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company, as well as their liabilities under that agreement, are transferred to and vested in the London and South-Eastern Railway Company. Upon consideration of the clauses in the statutes referred to, and of the lease and agreement, we are of opinion that the ruling of the learned judge is right, and that the plaintiffs in error are not entitled to a greater amount of set-off than 729*l.*; and that the defendants in error were entitled to all the privileges given to the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company under the agreement of the 16th April 1847. At the time of the making of the agreement the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company had obtained their Act of Parliament, with a clause authorising them to lease their railway to the London and South-Eastern Railway Company; they had, however, no continuous line of their own; but for a certain distance were empowered by the 17th section of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. clxxiii. to use that part of the line which the London and South-Western Railway Company were authorised to make under that Act, and subject to such regulations and upon such terms and conditions as might be agreed on between the two companies. Accordingly, in order to make their line continuous and available for the purpose of traffic, the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company, and the London and South-Western Railway Company, in pursuance of the Act for making the branch to Farnham and Alton, entered into the agreement of the 16th of April 1847, for allowing the use of that portion of the railway of the latter, and of their stations, &c. in perpetuity, on the terms and conditions therein contained; for without the agreement and the powers and privileges given by it, the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway would be comparatively useless and of little value; and the 17th section of the last-mentioned statute removes the disability, by expressly authorising the making of the agreement, and providing a mode at the end of the section by which the terms may be settled, in case the companies do not agree. The agreement, which, when made under the authority of the Act of Parliament, bound the two companies as to the right to use that portion of the line of railway of the London and South-western Railway Company, by the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway Company, in perpetuity, on the terms and conditions agreed on between them both, neither could the traffic be carried over it, because it was only by force of that agreement that the rights and privileges contemplated by the 17th section of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. clxxiii. could be effected. Unless the rights and privileges given by the agreement, with all its terms and conditions, went with the railway, the leasing power would hardly be consistent with the 17th section of the last-mentioned statute, or the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act; and the lessees would not have the power or privilege which was clearly contemplated by the 36th section of the Special Act, which would be necessary for the proper and efficient working of the line. It is not necessary to consider how far the agreement and the terms of it would be binding on the parties to this suit at common law, as we are of opinion that the effect of the clauses in the statutes before referred to is to vest in the lessees of the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate Railway, all the rights and privileges granted by the agreement, without which their lease would be of little value, and, indeed, could not be carried into full effect at all until the South-Eastern Railway Company had effected some new arrangement with the London and South-Western Railway Company. The case depends so entirely on the effect to be attributed to the Acts of Parliament to which reference has been made, that it is scarcely to be expected that any case can be found in the books sufficiently in point upon all the circumstances to assist us in coming to a conclusion on the point in question in this case. The opinion we have formed is upon the consideration of the Acts of Parliament, and the documents themselves. There was another question proposed to be raised by the defendants in error, in case our judgment should be against them on the first point; to which we do not think it necessary to advert, as on the first point we think the judgment of the court below should be affirmed.

REG. v. DALE.

Stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 26—Application of penalties under the Alehouse Act—Conviction by borough justices—When penalty to be paid to county treasurer, and when to borough treasurer.

By sect. 26 of 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, it is provided, that so much of any penalty imposed under that Act, as is not awarded to the prosecutor, is to be paid to the treasurer of "the county or place" for which the justice was acting when the penalty was imposed:

Held, that the word "place" in that section means a place for which a court of quarter sessions is held.

Where, therefore, a penalty was imposed by two justices of a borough, which had a commission of the peace, but no court of quarter sessions, and a moiety only was awarded to the prosecutor, the treasurer of the county was held entitled to the remaining moiety.

At the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace of our Lady the Queen held at Alnwick, in the county of Northumberland, on the 20th Oct. in the sixteenth year of the reign of our Sovereign Lady Victoria of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith, and in the year of our Lord 1852, before her Majesty's justices of the peace assigned to keep the peace of the said county, the following case was agreed upon (that is to say):—

At the last Midsummer Quarter Sessions, an indictment, of which the following is a copy of the first count, and an extract from the second, was found by the grand jury to be a true bill.

"Northumberland, } The Jurors, &c. present that to wit. } on the 19th May, in the year of our Lord 1851, in the borough of Tynemouth, in the county of Northumberland, one Joseph Gibbon was convicted, before Alexander Bartleman and Solomon Mease, Esqrs., then and there being two of her Majesty's Justices assigned to keep the peace in and throughout the said borough of Tynemouth, for that on, &c. he, the said Joseph Gibbon, being then and there an alehouse-keeper, and duly licensed to sell exciseable liquors by retail in his house and premises there situate, did wilfully permit disorderly conduct in his house and premises by then and there suffering persons, to the number of twenty and more, to remain fighting, drinking, and making a great noise and disturbance there at a late hour in the night, to wit, at twelve o'clock at night, against the tenor of his said licence, and contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided; and the said Alexander Bartleman and Solomon Mease in and by the said conviction then and there adjudged the said Joseph Gibbon, for his said offence, to forfeit and pay the sum of 2*l.* 10*s.*, to be paid and applied according to law; and also to pay to Robert Mitchell, the complainant, the sum of 10*s.* for his costs in that behalf; and the said Alexander Bartleman and Solomon Mease did by the said conviction then and there order that if the said several sums were not paid forthwith, the same should be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the said Joseph Gibbon; and, in default of sufficient distress, the said Alexander Bartleman and Solomon Mease did, by the said conviction, then and there adjudge the said Joseph Gibbon to be imprisoned in the house of correction at Morpeth, in the said county of Northumberland, there to be kept to hard labour for the space of one calendar month, unless the said several sums, and all costs and charges of the said distress, and of the commitment and conveying of the said Joseph Gibbon to the said house of correction, were sooner paid. And the jurors aforesaid upon their oath aforesaid do further present that the said Alexander Bartleman and Solomon Mease did, at the time of making the said conviction, award one moiety of the said penalty to the use of the said Robert Mitchell, the said complainant, and the prosecutor of the said Joseph Gibbon for the said offence. And the jurors aforesaid upon their oath aforesaid do further present that the said Joseph Gibbon did thereupon afterwards, to wit, on the day and year first aforesaid, pay the said sum of 2*l.* 10*s.* to one Henry Dale, late of the borough aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, gentleman, and who then was and still is clerk of her Majesty's said Justices assigned to keep the peace of our said Lady the Queen, in, for, and throughout the said borough; and the sum of 2*l.* 10*s.* was so paid to the said Henry Dale, and he then received the same as such clerk as aforesaid, and for the purpose and in order that it should forthwith be paid by him to the parties to whom the same was to be paid, in pursuance of and according to the said conviction, and the statutes in such case made and provided, to wit, one moiety to the said Robert Mitchell as such prosecutor as aforesaid, and the remainder to the treasurer of the said county. And the jurors aforesaid on their oath aforesaid do further present that the justices of our said Lady the Queen assigned to keep the peace of our said Lady the Queen, in and throughout the said borough, were at the time of making the said conviction, and thence hitherto have been, acting and empowered to act within the said borough by and under a commission of the peace from our Lady the Queen, which said commission did not nor does contain any grant of a court of quarter sessions of the peace for the said borough, and our said Lady the Queen had not then, or at any time since, granted that a separate court of quarter sessions of the peace for the said borough should be holden in and for the said borough, nor were there then or at any other time any separate general or quarter sessions of the peace holden in or for the same. And the jurors aforesaid, on their oath aforesaid, do further present that, after the said sum of 2*l.* 10*s.* was so paid to the said Henry Dale as aforesaid, it became and was his duty to pay one moiety of the said sum of 2*l.* 10*s.* to one William Fenwick Blackett, Esq. who at the time of the making of the said conviction was, and from thence hitherto hath been and still is, treasurer of the said county of Northumberland, according to law, and to the statutes in that case made and provided. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said Henry Dale, well knowing the premises, although a reasonable time for his paying the said moiety of the said sum of 2*l.* 10*s.* to the said treasurer had elapsed long before the day of taking this inquisition, and although the said treasurer hath at all times been ready and willing to receive and give him a receipt for the same, hath yet hitherto unlawfully and contemptuously neglected and refused to pay, and still neglects and refuses to pay, the said moiety of the said sum of 2*l.* 10*s.* or any part thereof to the said treasurer, and he wrongfully and unlawfully detains the same and every part thereof from him, contrary to his duty in that behalf, against the form of the statute in that case made and provided, and against the peace of our Lady the Queen, her crown and dignity."

There is a second count in the indictment, the same with the first, word for word, with this addition: "And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said Alexander Bartleman and Solomon Mease, in the making of the said conviction, acted as such justices as aforesaid for the said county."

The usual process for that purpose having been issued, the defendant entered into a recognizance to appear at the next quarter sessions to try and answer to the said indictment.

At the Michaelmas Quarter Sessions, held 20th Oct. 1852, the said indictment was tried, and the jury found the defendant guilty. Whether the defendant is guilty or not depends upon the construction which may be put upon the public Acts of Parliament relating to this question, and which are to form part of this case.

The borough of Tynemouth was incorporated by royal charter, dated 5th August, in the year of our Lord 1849, and a commission of the peace was granted to certain persons therein named, dated 20th March, in the year of our Lord 1850; but no court of quarter sessions was thereby granted. It is admitted for the purposes of this case that the defendant had paid over the moiety of the said fine to the treasurer of the borough of Tynemouth. Upon this counsel for the defendant moved in arrest of judgment, contending that, upon the true construction of the statutes, he had duly discharged himself by paying over the money to the treasurer of the borough of Tynemouth. On the other hand, counsel for the prosecution contended that he had not discharged himself, as it was his duty to pay the moiety of the said fine to the treasurer of the county of Northumberland, the borough of Tynemouth being part and parcel of the county, and there being no grant of a court of quarter sessions to that borough.

Accordingly no judgment was passed, and the court postponed all further proceedings to the next sessions, and granted a case for the opinion of the Justices of either Bench or the Barons of the Exchequer under the statute. The question for the opinion of the court is:

Whether the defendant is properly found guilty upon the indictment for neglecting and refusing to pay over one moiety of the said fine to the treasurer of the said county of Northumberland. If he is, the court will at the next sessions pronounce judgment against him. If he is not, he will be discharged from the said indictment.

The 26th section of 9 Geo. 4, c. 61 (the Alehouse Act), enacts that it shall be lawful for any justice before whom any penalty shall be recovered under the provisions of this Act to award, if he shall think fit, any portion of the same, not in any case exceeding one moiety thereof, to the use of the prosecutor, and the remainder to the treasurer of the county or place for which such justice shall then act; and the said treasurer shall place the same to the credit of such county or place, and shall duly account for the same.

By section 83 of the same Act it is enacted, "That every justice before whom any such conviction shall have been made, shall return the same, or cause it to be returned, to the general or quarter sessions of the peace holden for the county or place wherein the offence shall have been committed, and it shall be then and there delivered to the clerk of the peace or other person acting as such, to be by him filed or enrolled amongst the records of the said court; and the certificate of the clerk of the peace of such conviction, which he is hereby required to grant, on demand, upon payment of a fee of one shilling, shall be legal evidence of every such conviction.

By sect. 87 (interpretation clause), reciting—"And in order to remove doubts as to the meaning of certain words in the Act, be it enacted that the word 'justice' shall be deemed to mean justice of the peace, and that the words 'treasurer of the county or place' shall be deemed to include any officer acting in such capacity, or charged with the receipt and expenditure of moneys from and out of which the cost of public prosecutions have been usually defrayed; and the words 'clerk of the justice' shall be deemed to include any person acting as such; and the words 'county or place' shall be deemed severally to include any county, riding, division of the county of Lincoln, hundred, division of a county, liberty, division of a liberty, county of a city, county of a town, city, cinque port, or town corporate: and the words 'division or place' shall be deemed to include any division of a county or riding, liberty, division of a liberty, county of a city, county of a town, city, cinque port, or town corporate."

By the 126th sect. of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, "An Act to provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," passed 9th Sept. 1835, it is enacted, "That when by any Act any penalties or forfeitures are or shall be hereafter made recoverable in a summary manner before any justice or justices of the peace, and by such Acts respectively the same are or shall be limited and made payable to his Majesty, or to any body corporate, or to any person whomsoever, save and except the informer, who shall sue for the same, or any party aggrieved, in every such case the same, if recovered and adjudged before any justice of any borough in which a separate court of quarter sessions of the peace shall be holden as aforesaid, shall, notwithstanding anything in such Act respectively contained, be recovered for and adjudged to be paid to the treasurer of such borough for the time being, to the credit and on account of the borough fund of such borough; and no such penalty or forfeiture, or share of such penalty or forfeiture, shall in any case be recovered by, or adjudged to be paid to, any other person than the said treasurer, unless such person be the informer, or the party aggrieved.

By sect. 81 of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, it is enacted, "That in every warrant of distress to be issued as aforesaid, the constable or other person to whom the same shall be directed shall be thereby ordered to pay the amount of the sum to be levied thereunder into the clerk of the division in which the justice or justices issuing such warrant shall usually act; and if any person convicted of any penalty or ordered by a justice or justices of the peace to pay any sum of money shall pay the same to any constable or other person, such constable or other person shall forthwith pay the same to such clerk; and if any person committed to prison upon any conviction or order as aforesaid for nonpayment of any penalty, or for any sum thereby ordered to be paid, shall desire to pay the same and costs before the expiration of the time for which he shall be so ordered to be imprisoned by the warrant for his commitment, he shall pay the same to the gaoler or keeper of the prison in which he shall be so imprisoned, and such gaoler or keeper shall forthwith pay the same to the said clerk, and all sums so received by the said clerk shall forthwith be paid by him to the party or parties to whom the same respectively are to be paid according to the directions of the statute on which the information or complaint in that behalf shall have been framed; and if such statute shall contain no such directions for the payment thereof to any person or persons, then such clerk shall pay the same to the treasurer of the county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place for which such justice or justices shall have acted, and for which such treasurer shall give him a receipt without stamp; and every such clerk and every such gaoler or keeper of a prison shall keep a true and exact account of all such monies received by him, of whom and when received, and to whom and when paid in the form (T) in the schedule to this Act annexed, or to the like effect, and shall once in every month render a fair copy of every such account unto the justices, who shall be assembled at the petty sessions for the division in which such justice or justices shall usually act, to be holden on or next after the first day of every month, under the penalty of forty shillings, to be recovered by distress in manner aforesaid; and the said clerk shall send or deliver every return so made by him as aforesaid to the clerk of the peace for the county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place within which such division shall be situate, at such times as the court of quarter sessions for the same shall order in that behalf.

Saturday, Nov. 13. (a)—Pashley for the defendant.—This question turns upon the meaning of the words "county or place" in 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 26; and it is submitted that "place" includes a town corporate, and that the penalty mentioned in the case was consequently payable to the treasurer of the borough of Tynemouth, and not to the treasurer of the county of Northumberland. In other parts of the statute "place" evidently has that meaning (he referred to ss. 1, 3, 4, 7, 21); and there is no reason for supposing that it has not an equally extensive sense in sect. 26. The interpretation clause, sect. 37, still uses the same words "county or place," and only extends the enactment to persons acting in the capacity of treasurers, though not so called. [JERVIS, C. J.—It is obvious from that clause that the intention was that the penalty was to go to a fund, out of which the costs of public prosecutions are defrayed; and that would be the county rate, where the borough has no court of quarter sessions.] If the borough has no quarter sessions, it contributes to the county rate; and Tynemouth was the place for which the justices who imposed the penalty in this case were acting. (He referred to 13 & 14 Vict. c. 91, s. 9; and R. v. Stainsbury, 4 T. R. 451.)

Otter, contrà.—The defendant could only discharge himself by paying over the penalty to the county treasurer. The word "place" in sect. 26 must mean a place having a separate court of quarter sessions; and no difficulty is created by the words "for which the justice is acting," because in truth the borough justices within the borough have the same jurisdiction as the county justices, and may be described as acting for the county. It is supposed, that if the conviction is made by borough justices the penalty goes to the borough—if by county justices, then to the county; but in Tynemouth, the borough and county justices have concurrent jurisdiction; so that the conviction might be by one borough and one county justice. In that case, where would the penalty go? (sects. 101 and 111 of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76.) The difficulty is avoided if the place is held to be a place of exclusive jurisdiction: (R. v. Amos, 2 B. & Ald. 533; R. v. Taylor, Salk. 343.) In other parts of the statute "place" must mean a place having a separate court of quarter sessions: (sects. 4, 7, 22, 27, 29.)

Saturday, Jan. 22.—JERVIS, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—Whether the defendant is guilty or not guilty in this case depends upon the construction of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 61; and we are of opinion that, upon the proper construction of that statute, the defendant is guilty, and was properly convicted. The penalty, for the nonpayment of which to the treasurer of the county of Northumberland the defendant has been convicted, was in this case imposed under the Alehouse Act, 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, by justices acting for the borough of Tynemouth, which has a commission of the peace, but no court of quarter sessions; and the question is, whether that penalty ought to be paid to the treasurer of the county, or to the treasurer of the borough on account of the borough fund. By the 26th section of the Alehouse Act, so much of the penalty as is not awarded to the prosecutor is to be paid to the treasurer of the "county or place" for which the justice was acting when the penalty was imposed. The defendant's counsel contends that the word "place" must be understood in its ordinary sense; and that, inasmuch as the justices were acting for the borough of Tynemouth when the penalty was imposed, the treasurer of that borough is the person who ought to receive the penalty, and that it ought to be applied to the borough fund, under the provisions of the stat. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 126. On the other hand, the prosecutor asserts that the word "place," as used in that section, means a place for which a court of quarter sessions is held. This, we think is the right construction. In many of the sections in which the words "county or place" are used, it is manifest that the latter word applies only to places where quarter sessions are held. For instance, by the 27th section, parties aggrieved may appeal to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace of the "county or place" wherein the cause of complaint arose; and by the 83rd section the conviction is to be returned to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace of the "county or place" wherein the offence shall have been committed. The interpretation clause shows further, that it was intended that these penalties should be applied towards the costs of public prosecutions, and not to a borough fund, because it explains the words "treasurer of a county or place" to mean an officer acting in such capacity, or charged with the receipt and expenditure of moneys from and out of which the costs of public prosecutions have been usually defrayed. The person to receive the penalty is to be an officer acting in the capacity of treasurer of moneys for and out of which the costs of public prosecutions have been usually defrayed. In the same spirit the justices in quarter sessions are, by the 29th section, authorised to indemnify the justices from their costs upon an appeal in certain cases, and to order the treasurer of the "county or place" in and for which the justices acted to pay the amount. At the time the Alehouse Act passed corporations had private property, but no borough fund, properly so called, over which the Legislature could with justice exercise a control. The treasurer of the place meant in this section must clearly be the treasurer of a place having a court of quarter sessions—an officer under the control of the justices making the order, with a fund under their control. It would be strange that the same words should give to one fund, the borough fund, all the penalties for good convictions, and charge upon another fund, the county rate, all the costs for convictions which could not be sustained. For these reasons we think the conviction right. Conviction affirmed.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS COURT.

Reported by DAVID CATO MACRAE, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

PROTECTION CASE.

Monday, January 31.

(Before Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS.)

Re ROBERT LOCKWOOD.

Trader debtor.

Held, that debts barred by the Statute of Limitations must be included in reckoning the amount of a trader debtor's liabilities, and if together with the debts not so barred, the amount is above 300l. there is no jurisdiction.

This insolvent came up for his examination upon his interim order.

Jones opposed for a creditor who had a County Court judgment. The debts in the schedule, and in respect of which the insolvent required protection, amounted to 67*l.* odd; but, it appearing that there were other debts owing by the insolvent, who was a trader, which he had omitted from the schedule, as they were barred by the Statute of Limitations, he was ordered to prepare an amendment to the schedule, in which these debts were set forth; and, it appearing that the debts which were barred by the Statute of Limitations, being added to the debts in the schedule, amounted to above 300*l.*, the petition was dismissed.

Re STEPHENS.

Petition filed without jurisdiction—Practice as to dismissal before hearing.

A petition having been filed in this court, and it being subsequently discovered that it had been filed in the Metropolitan district by mistake, and should have been filed in an adjoining County Court district:

Held, that the Court may dismiss the petition forthwith, direct the petitioner's books and papers to be handed out of court, and order the provisional assignee and the broker of the court to be restrained from selling or disposing of the property of the petitioner.

Although an insolvent's residence be within twenty miles of the General Post-office, yet, if the parish church of the parish within which it is situated be beyond that distance, an insolvent must petition in the County Court district in which the parish church is situate.

Insolvent resided at Warley, in Essex, and filed his petition in London, believing that he resided within the Metropolitan District. Subsequently it was deemed prudent to have the distance of the parish church of Warley from the Post-office measured, when it was discovered that the parish church was nearly twenty-two miles from the Post-office, and therefore that the petitioner did not reside within the London District.

Dowse now moved that the petition be dismissed, the papers be handed to petitioner's attorneys, and that the provisional assignee and the broker of the court be restrained from selling or disposing of the property of the petitioner; and submitted that the application was reasonable, as upon the hearing the petition would be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. In that event an execution creditor would step in and seize upon property which the petitioner was anxious should be for the benefit of all the creditors, as he would now file a petition in the proper district.

Re JANE TROTTER.

Prisoner arrested on mesne process—1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 36—Creditor's petition.

Held, that a vesting order upon a creditor's petition under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 36, obtained against a prisoner who is only in custody upon mesne process upon a capias, is void ab initio.

This insolvent had been arrested and lodged in Whitecross-street prison on the 17th Oct. 1852 by virtue of a writ of capias issued out of the Exchequer. On the 14th Oct. Mr. William Unwin, a creditor of Mrs. Trotter, obtained a judge's order to hold her to bail, upon the ground that she was about to quit England, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 3, 4. Mrs. Trotter was, as already stated, arrested thereunder and taken to the debtors' prison in default of giving bail. Mr. Unwin proceeded no further with his action, but on the 4th inst. last filed the usual petition and affidavit, and obtained a vesting order under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 36. The prisoner, having found bail, had been since discharged, and now wished to get rid of this creditor's petition.

Cooke applied, under these circumstances, for a rule upon the creditor to show cause why the vesting order should not be pronounced null and void, the same having been obtained on a false affidavit that Jane Trotter was charged in execution, whereas she was only arrested on mesne process, at the suit of W. Unwin. It was true the Act of Parliament declared that the vesting order upon a creditor's petition should not be vacated without the consent of the creditor; but he apprehended that referred to a vesting order duly obtained according to the statute, from which it appeared that a vesting order upon a creditor's petition could only be legally granted as against a prisoner "charged in execution for any debt, damages, or any costs or sum or sums of money, or committed for or by reason of any contempt of any court whatsoever, for nonpayment of any sum or sums of money, or of costs, taxed or untaxed, either ordered to be paid or to the payment of which such prisoner would be liable in purging such contempt, or in any manner in consequence or by reason of such contempt." Mrs. Trotter did not come within this definition; and therefore he submitted that the creditor's proceedings in this court were void ab initio.

Mr. Commissioner LAW was clearly of this opinion, and indorsed the following order upon the proceedings:—"The vesting order drawn up and issued in this case was a nullity ab initio, the debtor not being in custody in execution at the suit of the petitioner."

Rule absolute, there being no jurisdiction ab initio.

Re JOSEPH AILKINS.

Trader debtor.

Debts, although secured by a mortgage, must be reckoned in the amount of a trader debtor's liabilities.

This insolvent came up for his first examination, and was opposed by Macrae, for a creditor.—The amount of debts in the schedule was 268*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.*; but it appeared that he had mortgaged two leasehold houses at Hoxton in 1851, to a Mr. Hocker, for 450*l.* Being unable to pay the interest agreed upon, he assigned the houses to a relative for 150*l.* subject to the mortgage.

Macrae submitted that although the debt of 450*l.* was secured, it was still a debt until it was paid or released, consequently his debts were above 300*l.*

Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS dismissed the petition.

Re GEORGE MEANDER.

Parting with property within three months of the date of the petition.

Held, that a petitioner, who has assigned all his property to a trustee for his creditors generally within three months of the date of the petition, has no locus standi under the Protection Acts.

The insolvent appeared for his first examination upon his interim order, when he was opposed by Cooke upon the ground that he had parted with his property within three months of the date of his petition. The learned counsel gave, in support of the opposition, evidence that the insolvent had assigned all his property to a trustee for his creditors on the 30th Nov. 1852, and that the date of the petition was 28th Jan. 1853. That was clearly a parting with property not within the exceptions in the form of the petition.

Dowse, for the petitioner, admitted the truth of the evidence offered, but submitted that it was done to prevent one creditor seizing it under an execution.

Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS said the reason alleged was not one of the exceptions admitted in the petition, which must therefore be dismissed. He ought at once to have petitioned the court.

Prisoner—Discharge—Warrant.

A. was taken under a ca. sa. and confined in York Castle, and another detainer was lodged against him. He petitioned the Insolvent Court, and a warrant of remand for twelve months was granted. He was afterwards transferred by habeas to the Queen's Prison, but a copy of the warrant only was sent. At the end of the twelve months, the defendant, the Governor of the Queen's Prison, refused to discharge him without a judge's order. For this detention an action was brought; the defendant pleaded detention under the writs of ca. sa.; the plaintiff now assigned, stating the warrant of the Insolvent Court and the detention after its expiration; the defendant traversed that the warrant was lodged with him:

Held, that the defendant was entitled to a verdict, unless a lodging of the original warrant was proved.

The action was in trespass for false imprisonment. Plea, that the defendant, as Governor of the Queen's Prison, detained him under two writs of ca. sa.

New assignment, that the plaintiff petitioned the Insolvent Court, and that the court remanded the plaintiff for twelve months, which expired on the 12th April 1852; and that the warrant for the remand was lodged with the defendant, averring a detainer subsequent to the expiration of the remand. The defendant traversed that the warrant was lodged with him modo et formâ.

The plaintiff being in York Castle petitioned the Insolvent Court, and a warrant, remanding him for twelve months from April 12th, 1851, was made and was lodged at the Castle. The plaintiff was afterwards transferred by habeas to the Queen's Prison, and the Governor of York Castle, retaining the original warrant, sent with the prisoner a copy; under this copy the defendant received and detained him in the Queen's Prison, and upon this copy he had always acted. The plaintiff, shortly before the expiration of the twelve months, was told by the Deputy-Governor that it would be necessary for him to have a judge's order before he could obtain his discharge. The plaintiff accordingly applied to a judge at chambers, but was told that the order was not necessary; he was still advised by the Deputy-Governor to apply again, but he said that he should take no further steps: he was, in consequence, detained for three days after the expiration of the twelve months. For this detainer the action was brought.

Watson, Q.C. contended that the defendant was entitled to a verdict, as it was clear that the original warrant had never been lodged with him; without it he could not judge of the nature of the commitment or of the proper time for the plaintiff's discharge. Besides, a judge's order had usually been considered necessary; and he was therefore justified in acting as he had done in requiring it.

Parry, for the plaintiff, urged that the defendant having received the plaintiff under the copy, and having always acted upon it as the warrant, was now concluded from saying that it was not the warrant.

The facts were left to the jury, and they returned a verdict for the plaintiff. Damages 20*l.*

ERLE, J. said,—I shall direct the verdict to be entered for the defendant, on the ground that there was no legal warrant in his hands; but the plaintiff has leave to move to enter the verdict as found by the jury.

Parry and Macnamara, for the plaintiff.

Watson, Q.C. and Unthank, for the defendant.

ROBINSON v. DEAR.

London—Small Debts Act—Jurisdiction—Certificate.

The Small Debts Court for the City of London has, by its Act, exclusive jurisdiction to the amount of 50l.; at least, a person suing in the Superior Courts, and recovering not more than 50l. in assumpsit, will be deprived of costs unless he obtains a certificate from the presiding judge.

The action was in assumpsit for the price of a horse, and the plaintiff recovered a verdict for 42*l.* 15*s.*

Hawkins, on behalf of the plaintiff, asked for a certificate that this was a proper cause to be tried in the Superior Court. The Small Debts Act for the city of London, 15 & 16 Vict. c. lxxvii. deprived the plaintiff of costs when the debt recovered by him did not exceed 50*l.* It was a departure from the general County Court Act, and doubtless a mistake, but the enactment was clear upon the point. Sect. 118 enacted "that all actions and proceedings which before the commencement of this Act might have been brought in any of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record, where the plaintiff dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant, or where any officer of the court holden under the provisions of this Act shall be a party, except in respect of any claim to any goods and chattels taken in execution of the process of the court, or the proceeds or value thereof, may be brought or determined in any such Superior Court, at the election of the party suing or proceeding, as if this Act had not been passed". And sect. 119 provided "that if any action shall be commenced after the commencement of this Act in any of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record, for any cause other than those lastly hereinbefore specified, for which a plaint might have been entered in the court holden under the provisions of this Act, and a verdict shall be found for the plaintiff for a sum not more than 50*l.*, if the said action is founded on contract, or less than 5*l.*, if it be founded on tort, the said plaintiff shall have judgment to recover such sum only, and no costs," &c.

LEVY v. HOOK.

Bill—Insolvent—Discharge—Schedule—Mistake.

A. in his schedule filed in the Insolvent Court, described a bill as drawn by B. and accepted by himself:

Held that, if he knew who was then the holder of the bill, this was an insufficient description, and he was not discharged from the claim of the holder.

If he knew that it had left the hands of the drawer, and was at the time of filing the schedule out in the world, he is bound to show some effort to ascertain the holder, otherwise he is not discharged.

The bill was described as for 58l. instead of 50l.:

Held, that if the jury were of opinion that the error was in consequence of the culpable negligence of A. he was not discharged from liability on the bill.

This was an action by the indorsee of a bill of exchange for 50*l.* against the acceptor.

Plea, that the defendant was discharged under the Insolvent Debtors Act.

The defendant had obtained his discharge from the Insolvent Court; but in his schedule he described John Collette as holding bill of exchange dated 5th May 1847, drawn at three months for 58*l.* by John Collette on the insolvent, accepted by the insolvent—due August 8, 1847.

The schedule was filed July 1, 1848, and the defendant was discharged on July 22 in the same year. The bill was for 50*l.*

Peterdorff, for the defendant, contended that, as the defendant did not know at the time of filing his schedule that the bill had left the hands of the drawer, he was discharged. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 75, provides that the discharge should extend to debts, &c. due "to the several persons named in his schedule as creditors, &c. and as to the claims of all other persons, not known to such prisoner at the time of such adjudication, who may be indorsees or holders of any negotiable security set forth in such schedule so sworn to as aforesaid." The plaintiff was a holder not then known to the insolvent. As to the misdescription of 58*l.* for 50*l.* it was cured by sect. 93, unless there was "any culpable negligence, or fraud, or evil intention" on the part of the defendant in so misdescribing it.

Wilkins, Serjt. for the plaintiff, urged that, as the defendant had accepted the bill in order that it might be negotiated, he must be presumed to have known that it was so used, and that it had left the hands of the drawer; if so, he incorrectly described him as the holder, and was not discharged. Lambert v. Smith, 20 L. J. 195, C. P., showed that where the insolvent described the bill as drawn by A., but did not name the payee, or allege that the holder was unknown, he was not discharged as to the payee; and Pugh v. Hookham, 5 Car. & P. 370, was to the same effect. The insolvent might easily have ascertained from the drawer who was the holder, but he did not take the trouble to inquire.

Temple, on the same side.—He had good reason to believe that the drawer was not the holder; and if so, he was wrong in so describing him.

Evidence was then given for the plaintiff, to show that the defendant knew that the drawer had indorsed it over, and that the plaintiff was the holder.

Hance, in reply, urged that Lambert v. Smith did not apply to the present case, because there the name of the plaintiff was in the body of the bill, which was sufficient notice to the insolvent.

TALFOURD, J.—I shall ask the jury whether the defendant knew that the plaintiff was the holder? If not, whether he knew that John Collette was not the holder? for if he thought that the bill was out in the world, he should have taken some pains to ascertain the holder, and should not have described John Collette as the holder. I shall ask them a third question, whether the misdescription of 58*l.* for 50*l.* was in consequence of any culpable negligence of the insolvent?

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Hance cited Rayner v. Lambert, 1 Beav. & Cross. 214, as to the first point, and, as to the last, contended that the insolvent must be shown to have been guilty of culpable negligence, and in a matter which would mislead the creditor.

TALFOURD, J.—To the jury.—Is the defendant discharged by his insolvency from the claim of the plaintiff upon this bill? It is admitted that he described in his schedule John Collette as the holder of the bill, and that it is misdescribed as a bill for 58*l*. Now the insolvent is bound to give fully and truly the information which he possesses, in order that the proper notice may be given to the creditors. The defendant has inserted Collette as the holder, and he now swears that he believed Collette to be the holder. The question for you will be, what was the state of mind of the defendant when he made his schedule? In the first place, did he know that Levy, the present plaintiff, was the holder? The defendant swears he did not; but evidence has been given on the other side to show that he did know it. If he knew it, he clearly cannot succeed in protecting himself by the schedule against the plaintiff's claim. But if you should be of opinion that he did not know of the plaintiff's holding, you will then consider whether he knew that the bill had left the drawer, and that it was out in the world. Now would not that be likely? The bill was accepted for the accommodation of Collette, and the very object would be to negotiate it. The defendant could hardly think that Collette would shut it up. If then the defendant knew that the bill had been negotiated and was out in the world, he should have made some inquiry for the holder, and has improperly described Collette as the holder. The third question which you will consider is whether, inasmuch as the bill is incorrectly described as a bill for 58*l*. there was culpable negligence in so misdescribing it. If there was, your verdict will be for the plaintiff.

Verdict for the defendant.

Wilkins, Serjt. and Temple, for the plaintiff.
Peterdorff and Hance, for the defendant.

NEATHWAY v. REED.

Construction—Surviving children.

A. bequeathed to B. for life the interest of her funded property, after certain legacies were paid, and after her death to be equally divided between her surviving children; and, after providing for the payment of the legacies out of a particular fund, declared that the remainder of such fund should be made use of to her said sister, and to her surviving children as before-mentioned:

Held, that such only of the children as were surviving at the death of B. were entitled to take under the bequest.

This was an appeal from a decree made by the V.C. Stuart on a claim.

The testatrix, after bequeathing certain pecuniary legacies to her sister's surviving children, gave and bequeathed unto her sister, Catherine Neathway, "the interest of her funded property, whatsoever might be remaining after those legacies were paid, for and during her natural life; and after her decease such property to be equally divided between her surviving children. She also desired that the money which would be derived from the funds at her decease by the will of her late husband, with the money she might have at the savings bank at Southampton, should be first used in paying the before-mentioned legacies, and which moneys her executors were thereby authorised and empowered to take for that purpose: and if those moneys should not be sufficient to do so, then they were to sell out from the Three per cent. Consols. enough to defray that expense; the remainder then left in the Three per cent. Consols. was to be made use of to her sister Catharine Neathway and to her surviving children as before mentioned.

The point was, whether the "surviving" children at the death of the testatrix, or those at the death of her sister, were to take under the bequest.

The V. C. decided in favour of the latter construction, and this was an appeal from his decision.

Cairns appeared for the plaintiff.

Their LORDSHIPS, who delivered their judgments seriatim, confirmed the decree of the Court below, and dismissed the appeal with costs.

MORGAN v. MORGAN.

Specific performance—Powers, defective execution of—Contract—Railway company—Price of land to be ascertained by "arbitration or by a jury."

Lands were settled to such uses as A. and B. should, by a joint deed, executed in the presence of witnesses, appoint, and, in default of appointment, to uses in strict settlement, A. and B. being the first tenants for life in succession. In 1845 the South Wales Railway Company contracted with A. and B. for the sale of certain parts of the lands; but the price was not fixed. In 1846 the company advanced part of the consideration money to them on their joint receipt, in which it was stated that the money was "in respect of the lands part of our estates required for the South Wales Railway." Before any formal exercise of the joint power by A. and B., A. died. After A.'s death other parts of the settled lands were contracted to be sold to the company. The price, including as well those parts of the land which had been contracted to be sold before, as those after the death of A., was agreed upon at 20,000l. On a bill filed by B. against the railway company for the specific performance of their contract:

Held, that the contract was such an one as could not be enforced against B.

Held, also, that the receipt was not such a defective execution of the power as would be aided by a court of equity.

The court will aid the performance of an agreement to sell at a fair valuation; but where parties have agreed that the price shall be ascertained by a particular arbitrator or by arbitration generally, in either of those cases, if the arbitration does not proceed, and the price is not so ascertained, the court will not make a contract different from that which the parties have entered into, or compel them to ascertain the price in a different mode.

A valid contract to sell, which can be enforced against a donee of a power independent of any conduct on his part, will in equity be binding on the remainderman.

A mere intention to sell under a power cannot, in the absence of a contract binding the donee, by force of contract prevail against a remainderman.

This was an appeal from a decree of the late V. C. Turner.

The suit was instituted by Sir Charles Morgan Robinson Morgan for the specific performance of a contract entered into with the South Wales Railway Company.

The facts were briefly these:—By a settlement dated 1844 the estates of Sir Charles Morgan were settled to such uses, &c. as Sir Charles and his son (the plaintiff) should jointly appoint, and in default to trustees for 500 years; then to the late and present Sir Charles Morgan successively for life, with remainder to the sons of the present Sir Charles Morgan in tail. There was a power in the settlement for the trustees, with the consent of the late and present Sir Charles Morgan, or the survivor of them, to agree with any canal or railway company for the sale of any part of the settled estates, and for the consideration to be paid for taking the same, and as to any compensation for the loss or damage that might be caused thereby. The settlement also contained the usual power of sale and exchange, and the moneys to arise from such sale were to be laid out in the purchase of other lands to be settled to the same uses as the settled estates; so also as to the purchase-moneys of lands to be taken by any such companies under the above power. In December 1845, the South Wales Railway Company being about to pass through these estates, the late Sir Charles Morgan authorised his solicitor to negotiate with the company for any part of the land it might require for the undertaking. In March 1846 the company gave the usual notices to take part of the land. A surveyor valued the part proposed to be taken at 8000*l*., but the company offered only 7500*l*. Pending this valuation Sir Charles Morgan's solicitor wrote to the company's solicitor as to the title which the company would require, and he stated in such letter the joint power of appointment, and said "he hoped, therefore, there would be no objection to the late and present Sir Charles Morgan receiving the purchase-money without it being requisite to obtain the consent of any mortgagee thereto." The company in answer required a full abstract to be furnished, and shortly afterwards requiring possession of the land, it was agreed that they should deposit in the bank of Messrs. Glyn and Co. the sum of 8000*l*. as a security for the ultimate payment of the sum which should be awarded or agreed; and that thereupon they should be let into possession: the total amount of the purchase-money was to be afterwards settled either by arbitration or by a jury. The company subsequently required other parts of the estates, which were valued; but, as to the amount to be paid the parties could not agree. Sir Charles claimed 15,500*l*., and, being desirous of having part of the purchase-money paid to him, his solicitor requested that the sum of 8000*l*. which had been so deposited might be paid at once to Sir Charles Morgan and the plaintiff. This the company refused to disturb, but afterwards intimated that 7500*l*. would be paid to him on his receipt. Accordingly the following receipt (signed by the late Sir Charles Morgan and the plaintiff) was delivered to the company, viz.:—"Received this day, of the South Wales Railway Company, the sum of 7500*l*. on account of the compensation-money to be ultimately fixed, and to be paid by the said company in respect of the lands, part of our estates, required for the South Wales Railway." The 7500*l*. was then placed to the credit of the late Sir Charles Morgan at the bank of Coutts and Co. The abstracts of the title to the lands were afterwards delivered.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Sir Charles and the plaintiff had intended to exercise the joint power of appointment in their own favour, with the view of requiring the fee in such parts of the land as the railway company required.

Nothing further was done anterior to the death of Sir Charles in December 1846. After his death the company required other parts of the settled estates, and it was agreed that the sum of 20,000*l*. should be paid as well for those contracted to be sold before as those after Sir Charles's death.

The company refused to complete except under a decree of the court. The plaintiff, as the executor of his father and one of the donees of the joint power of appointment, contended that, notwithstanding there was no formal exercise of the joint power of appointment, the estate was bound, and that he was entitled to have the purchase completed against the company and against the parties interested in remainder under the limitations of the settlement. The question was, was he so entitled or not? or was there at any time in the lifetime of the late Sir Charles Morgan a contract for the sale of the lands in question, which could have been enforced against him and against the plaintiff independently of the company's possession of the land, by virtue of the delivery up of possession which might have operated as a part performance of the contract, if the two parties had been seised in fee?

Turner, V. C. decided that there was not a binding contract. The nearest approach to a contract, his Honour added, was the receipt for 7500*l*., and there was some difficulty in founding a contract upon that document, from the lands which were intended to be referred to not being described in it. Whether the words, "in respect of lands, part of our estates, required for the South Wales Railway," meant any lands which the company might at any time require, or the lands only for which the notices had been given, or all the lands comprised in the agreement, was a matter of uncertainty. No parol evidence was receivable; and the receipt was so connected with the notices, that the notices could not be brought in aid of the receipt, for the purpose of explaining the meaning of that expression. Without reference to that difficulty, the contract evidenced by the receipt was to sell at a price to be ultimately fixed; that price was not fixed in the lifetime of Sir Charles Morgan; and at no time during his lifetime could a bill have been maintained against him or against the plaintiff merely for specific performance. The remainderman therefore could not be bound by the contract. From that decision the plaintiff now appealed.

Rolt, Elmsley, and Woolley, appeared for the appellant, and cited Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 284; Blagden v. Bradbear, 12 Ves. 466; Campbell v. Leach, Amb. 749.

Glasse and Milman appeared for the parties claiming under the settlement.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The equity which is sought in this case is an equity, in substance, calling upon the court to aid the defective execution of a power, against parties who are entitled in default of that execution. That is a jurisdiction which the court does exercise, in many cases which are well ascertained, and amongst others in favour of purchasers for value. In order to entitle the court to interfere, there must have been an execution or an intended execution, though defective. One question, and that of great nicety and importance, is whether, if there has been no execution at all other than that which is to be declared from the conduct of the parties,—a parol contract evidenced, or at least supported by subsequent acts, which, as against an owner in fee, would have entitled the court to interfere,—that is such a defective execution as entitles this court to interfere in favour of a purchaser. I do not think it necessary to give any distinct opinion upon that subject; indeed, if it had been necessary to have done so, I should have required further time to look into the authorities; but I must say that I think there is a great deal of force in the doubt (to put it no stronger) expressed upon that subject by Sir William Grant, by Lord Redesdale, and subsequently by Lord Plunkett, because when the principle upon which the court interferes in such cases is considered,—namely, that it would be a fraud upon the part of the person insisting, upon the statute of Frauds, to insist upon it,—I think it is extremely doubtful whether such a case is applicable to the doctrine of enforcing such a parol contract against remainderman. However, I do not think, for the reasons I will now proceed to state, that it is necessary to decide that point. The ground upon which I proceed here is this, that there has been no contract proved, either written or parol. There is no complete contract, the terms of which had ever been ascertained. No doubt it has been ascertained that certain lands were required by the company for the purpose of their railways, all of which they were entitled to take, and would be taken; all that remained therefore to be ascertained was, that which alone had been left in doubt, namely, the sum of money to be paid for them. Now was that so? The original agreement states that the company, within one month after they had first taken possession, were to proceed without any delay to get the amount of compensation settled, "either by arbitration or a jury," as Sir Charles Morgan should choose. Now Sir Charles
